AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, January 4, 1969 | No. 1

Peace, National Progress Pressed as Labor's Goals

Open for Business:

Leadership Battles Stir 91st Congress

By Duane Emme

The 91st Congress opened for business looking much like a carbon copy of its predecessor with few new faces and a little-changed liberal-conservative division.

Democrats control, as they have in 34 of the last 40 years. But with the inauguration of Pres. Richard M. Nixon on Jan. 20, this becomes the first Congress since the 86th to operate under Democrats while a Republican occupies the White House.

In a pre-opening session, the Democratic House caucus nominated John W. McCormack (Mass.) as Speaker, a post he has held since the death of Sam Rayburn in 1962. He was returned to the post over opposition from Rep. Morris K. Udall (Ariz.).

Rep. John B. Anderson (Ill.) was selected as chairman of the House Republican Conference, succeeding former Rep. Melvin R. Laird (Wis.), Nixon's choice for secretary of defense.

The conference, composed of all House GOP members, is the governing policy and research organization of the party in the House. Anderson won the post in competition with Rep. Jackson E. Betts (O.) and Rep. Albert H. Quie (Minn.).

In the Senate, both parties also had contests for top leadership roles, which were to be decided a few hours before Congress convened on Jan. 3.

Of major interest was the challenge by Sen. Edward M. Ken-

(Continued on Page 8)

Medicare Premium Held at $4

Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen has announced there will be no increase at this time in the $4 monthly premium that persons over 65 pay for physicians' services under Medicare.

There had been pressures within the government to raise the $8 premium, shared equally by the elderly and the government, but Cohen said no increase was needed.

To up the premium, he emphasized, would further "fan the flames of inflation" throughout medicare and work an undue hardship among 18.6 million older Americans, including 5.6 million below the poverty level.

He coupled his announcement with a warning to doctors to stop raising fees that have been spiraling

(Continued on Page 3)

Controls Sought to Halt Medicaid Profiteering

The AFL-CIO has called effective controls on illegal, unethical activities the answer to high Medicaid expenses.

Federation Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman urged such a program as preferable to slashing needed health services for the poor. He declared that certain professionals are now bilking millions annually from Medicaid and he said an effective cost control system could stop this.

Seidman made his remarks in a statement submitted to Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen, who is conducting hearings on Medicaid around the nation. Medicaid is the program through which the federal government helps finance state plans for providing comprehensive health care for the poor and low-income or "medically indigent" families.

"It would be the height of injustice," Seidman wrote, "to penalize the poor by barring them from needed health care while continuing to line the pockets of greedy providers who view the program as a get-rich scheme for doctors, nursing homes and pharmacists."

Seidman's statement noted that there is clear evidence that the present lack of cost controls has enabled unethical persons in those professions to drain the program of huge amounts of money.

He recalled an investigation by the California attorney general which revealed that false claims, kickbacks, over-servicing and other abuses in that state are siphoning from $6 to $8 million annually from the California program alone.

(Continued on Page 7)

"IT DIDN'T HURT," this youngster seems to indicate after receiving a flu shot in Phoenix, Ariz. A two-shot series, sponsored by the Community Services committee of the Phoenix-Maricopa County AFL-CIO, inoculated some 14,000 persons.

Prices Continue Climb:

Buying Power Sags Below Level of 1967

The buying power of the nation's rank-and-file workers declined sharply again in November, dropping below the level of a year ago, as the cost of living continued upward, the Labor Dept. reported.

The increase in prices—four-tenths of 1 percent—sent the Consumer Price Index to 123.4 percent of the 1957-59 base period. This means that goods and services that cost $10 then now cost $12.34.

The November index was 4.8 percent above November 1967 and Arnold Chase, assistant commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, estimated that the December index will show a 4.7 percent increase for the year as a whole.

That would make the rise in prices for 1968 the highest since 1951, when the index went up 5.9 percent.

Gross average weekly earnings of non-farm production workers dropped by $1.17 over the month to $109.21 due to a four-tenths of an hour drop in the average workweek.

Weekly take-home pay for the worker with three dependents averaged $96.33 in November, a drop of 89 cents from October. For the worker with no dependents the drop was 86 cents to an average of $87.43.

After adjustments for the November price increase, real spendable earnings were down $1.04 for the worker with three dependents and 99 cents a week for the worker with no dependents.

Compared with November 1967, real spendable earnings were down five-tenths of 1 percent, BLS said. The decline in purchasing power prevailed in all major industries except mining, with the sharpest drop being registered in construction.

(Continued on Page 7)

Meany Sets Course For New Year

Organized labor faces the year ahead with "a spirit of determination to push for progress at home and honorable peace in the world," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in a New Year's statement.

Noting that 1969 finds a new Administration and a Congress of a different political viewpoint being called upon to work together, Meany pointed out that only time will tell how well this "division of power" works out.

"But all Americans, no matter what their political beliefs, owe it to their country to support responsible efforts of the new Administration and the 91st Congress to meet the problems of our times," Meany added.

And as far as the labor movement is concerned, he emphasized, "We will do our utmost to help solve the tremendous problems which face America's people, her cities and her future." (Text of statement on Page 4.)

In Congress, Meany said, labor will work for measures to "house the homeless, feed the hungry, succor the sick," protect the consumer, educate the young and provide the aged with a life free from fear.

Further, he stated, the AFL-CIO will seek legislation to "continue the march toward full equality and improve the lot of the nation's workers and their unions."

Meany reaffirmed labor's determination to support "with all our strength" the efforts of exploited farm workers "to achieve the protections and benefits that workers have a right to enjoy in a free society."

"The farm workers and the

(Continued on Page 8)

'68 Labor Contracts Yield 6.6% Increase

Union contract settlements in 1968 were the largest in recent years, with median wage and fringe benefit increases rising to 6.6 percent, the Labor Dept. reported.

In a year-end report the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said that in settlements for at least 4.5 million of the 10.7 million workers covered by major contract agreements, all measures of change in wage and benefit improvements were larger than in preceding years.

When actual timing of the changes is taken into account, BLS said, the median increase of 6.6 percent was up 1 percent from the median for 1967.

Considering wage rates separately from fringes, the BLS reported that the settlements provided a median first-year wage boost of 7.5 percent of straight-time hourly earnings, compared with 5.6 percent for 1967.

Major fourth-quarter settlements, BLS said, included several in the aerospace and other metalworking industries. Earlier in the year, significant settlements were concluded in the steel, can, aluminum, copper,

(Continued on Page 3)

Alaska Senate Seat Is Filled By Republican

Theodore F. Stevens, Republican majority leader of the Alaska House of Representatives, has been named to fill the Senate vacancy left by the death of Sen. E. L. Bartlett (D-Alaska).

The appointment was made by Republican Gov. Walter J. Hickel, who is the secretary of interior-designate in the Cabinet of Pres.-elect Richard M. Nixon.

Stevens, a 45-year-old Anchorage lawyer, will serve until a special election is held in 1970 to fill the remainder of the term, which expires in 1972.

Meanwhile, Lt. Gov. Thomas F. Eagleton of Missouri was sworn in as that state's new Democratic senator.

The resignation of Sen. Edward V. Long (D-Mo.), the man Eagleton defeated in the state's primary election last year, paved the way for Eagleton to get a jump in seniority on other newly-elected senators.

In other developments:

Nixon named Charles W. Yost, 61, a career diplomat until his retirement in 1966, as chief U.S. representative to the United Nations. A Democrat, Yost headed a study group on international relations for Vice Pres. Humphrey's campaign.

One of the few men who have won the lifetime title of "career ambassador," Yost was in the foreign service for 36 years. He was deputy chief of the U.S. mission to the UN from 1961 to 1966.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) has conceded the election of Republican Robert W. Packwood as U.S. Senator from Oregon in a close November contest. A recount showed that Packwood's margin was 3,263 votes out of more than 800,000 cast.

PORTRAIT of Hunter P. Wharton was presented to the president of the Operating Engineers in ceremonies held at the union's headquarters in Washington. The artist was Charles J. Fox, who has painted many notables. From left, Mrs. Wharton, Wharton and IUOE Executive Vice Pres. Richard H. Nolan.

Cabinet Panel Urges Profits 'Guideposts'

For the first time since the federal government began focusing on a need for price stability in the 1950's, one of its panels has recommended "guideposts" for profits.

At the same time, Pres. Johnson's Cabinet Committee on Price Stability called for wage settlements in 1969 that average "a little below 5 percent."

Johnson authorized release of the committee's recommendations to him, but he did not endorse them.

Chairman of the committee is Arthur M. Okun, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers. Its members include the secretaries of treasury, commerce and labor, and the director of the budget.

Meanwhile, Pres.-elect Nixon's choice for secretary of labor, George P. Shultz, rejected the use of guidelines as a means of controlling inflation.

Shultz, dean of the University of Chicago's Graduate School of Business, told a meeting of the Industrial Relations Research Association in Chicago that "the American economy is much too complex and market forces much too powerful for the application of a single wage-price guideline."

He suggested also that "the experience of other countries does not seem transferable to our decentralized system for wage and price setting."

The major theme of Shultz's address was "priorities" in the labor field, and he put finding jobs for slum dwellers, particularly disadvantaged Negroes, at the top of his list.

Johnson's Cabinet committee contended that "voluntary restraint" and "mutual short-term sacrifices" by business and labor are essential in achieving price stability.

These restraints, it stressed, must be "voluntary" and combined with effective fiscal-monetary policy and "continued efforts to improve the structure of the economy."

For businesses, the committee recommended that they accept "lower profit margin targets" by agreeing to absorb increases up to 1 percent of any higher costs incurred in 1969 from labor, materials or other factors.

Responsible Pricing

Further, businesses were called upon to base price decisions upon a standard of attaining a profit margin no greater than the average achieved in 1967-68.

"In general," the committee said, "responsible pricing requires that businessmen focus on margins before tax and not attempt to pass the temporary corporate tax surcharge on to the consumer."

In calling for wage settlements this year to average "a little below 5 percent," the committee said this would be about halfway between the average of 6.5 percent in 1968 and a long-run productivity standard of 3.2 percent.

It acknowledged that "given the recent history and outlook for the cost of living, labor cannot be expected to accept wage increases in 1969 limited to the trend growth of productivity."

The committee also urged business, labor and government to pursue a "dialogue" aimed at developing "acceptable standards of responsible price and wage behavior in the years ahead."

Luigi Antonini, 85, Dies; Garment Union Pioneer

New York—This city's garment workers paid farewell tribute here New Year's Day to Luigi Antonini, who co-founded Italian Dressmakers' Local 89 and helped make it the largest single local in the Ladies' Garment Workers.

Antonini died at 85 a few months after retiring as first vice president of the ILGWU. He was buried after a funeral mass in St. Barnabas Church, the Bronx.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a message of sympathy to Local 89 members, "you have lost a great leader and I have lost a great friend." Noting that Antonini was "an unusual man, a true believer in democracy" and unionism, Meany added: "We in the AFL-CIO join in mourning a true humanitarian and a fine gentleman."

Garment workers from Antonini's Local 89 and others filed past his bier Jan. 1 at Roosevelt Auditorium and then joined for a memorial service at which the story of his life was eloquently told.

ILGWU's international executive board paid him this tribute in newspaper death notices:

"Luigi, for 34 years our first vice president; a founder in 1919 of our Local 89; champion all his adult life of humanity and freedom.

Free Unions

"When few had courage to do so he lashed out against fascism; with freedom regained, he linked American trade unions to the rebuilding of free unions in Italy."

In the early days of World War II Antonini helped found the Italian American Labor Council, "joining Old and New World Italian communities in a common cause," the notice recounted.

"His eloquence, courage and idealism symbolized the ILGWU faith in freedom and democracy," it continued. "Recognizing no limits of nationality, color, race or creed, in the forefront of its historic battles, he contributed directly to ILGWU victories and the advance of the garment workers."

Born near Avellino, Italy, in 1883, Antonini came to this country after service in the Italian Army and became a dress presser. He helped rally his fellow nationals in the general strike of waistmakers in 1913, and afterwards spent much of his time in organizing and community relations.

Foe of Fascism

He was an early foe of fascism and Benito Mussolini, its spokesman in Italy. A fraternal organization expelled Antonini for his outspokenness but later readmitted him and cited him as an outstanding anti-fascist.

Antonini led a drive after the war to collect hundreds of thousands of dollars from labor for Italian war victims. He helped found one of the largest European vocational schools for orphans, the Franklin D. Roosevelt Institute in Mondello, Palermo. In 1956 a stadium was named for him in Haifa, Israel, and on his 80th birthday, Mayor Robert F. Wagner of New York gave him a city medal of honor.

5 Years of Progress:

Sec. Cohen Charts HEW Gains, Goals

A compilation of landmark achievements in health, education and welfare over the past five years, with a list of goals for the nation in these areas, has been submitted to Pres. Johnson by HEW Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen.

Cohen said the accomplishments—through legislative and administrative actions—"are unprecedented in their significance for human well being."

The gains, along with the suggested goals, are set forth in a chart-laden, 163-page report, "Health, Education & Welfare: Accomplishments, 1963-68, Problems and Challenges, and a Look to the Future."

As great as the progress has been, Cohen noted, "the whole story cannot be told today. It will be told in years to come in improvements in the health, in better education opportunity and in the well-being of all of our people."

Dealing extensively with future needs, the report sets specific "goals for 1976," the 200th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Cohen cited 102 laws enacted between 1963 and 1968 which involve functions of HEW. Also, he adds, there were "some dozen or so" enactments to improve health, education and welfare programs administered by other departments and agencies.

Listed among legislative accomplishments for the 1963-68 period are:

Medicare, Medicaid, three laws to improve elementary and secondary education, five laws covering higher education, three laws bolstering vocational education, two "Partnership for Health" Acts to aid state and community health programs.

Also, the social security amendments of 1965 and 1967, three laws to provide more funds for hospitals; legislation to provide research into prevention and cures of heart disease, cancer and stroke; four laws to improve vocational rehabilitation; and economic opportunity, consumer protection and civil rights measures.

Many of the laws "are the culmination of years of effort by many groups and several Administrations," the report pointed out, adding that their impact for bettering lives "has already been felt in many ways."

As an example of immediate results, Cohen singled out the fact that legislation extending the Hill-Burton hospital program resulted in nearly 123,000 new and modernized hospital beds between 1963 and 1968.

In a number of areas, the report emphasized that increased federal funds have greatly stimulated state and local governments, along with private agencies, to develop and extend education, health and welfare programs.

As proof of this, the report contains figures showing that public and private social wefare expenditures from all sources totaled $163 billion in 1968, 63 percent more than the 1963 amount of $100 billion.

It was noted that the percentage of expenditures provided by the public sector—federal, state and local governments—remained constant at about 66 percent in both years.

Nation's Objectives

Among future objectives that the report suggests the nation should seek to achieve are:

- An increase in median family income, in terms of 1968 dollars, from the current $8,017 to $12,500.
- Continued expansion of medical research and "comprehensive health insurance, private and public, combined with availability of high quality medical service for all Americans."
- "More diversified and improved quality of education at all levels," including the availability of pre-school services, high school, vocational and college education to all who want them.
- Elimination of all forms of discrimination; abolition of poverty; a social security system that guarantees a decent living for all older Americans; new consumer safeguards; and a "satisfying and productive job for everyone able to work."

"America must dream big dreams, set high goals and work to achieve them if our commitment to human well being is to be honored," Cohen concluded.

A. L. Hepworth to Head CLC Education Dept.

Ottawa, Ont.—A. L. Hepworth is the newly named director of the educational department of the Canadian Labor Congress, succeeding Max Swerdlow, now with the Intl. Labor Organization. Hepworth has been a member of the Railway, Transport & General Workers' brotherhood since 1935.

Social Security Tax Rise Pays for Better Benefits

Employes and employers are now paying slightly more for social security but workers and their families also are getting more and better protection than ever before.

The social security contribution for both employe and employer was increased by four-tenths of 1 percent to 4.8 percent on wages up to $7,800 a year, effective Jan. 1.

The slight increase in contributions results from a number of improvements made in the Social Security Act in 1967, including a 13 percent across-the-board increase in benefits. These improvements will also mean higher benefits and better protection in the future for workers and their families when the breadwinner retires, dies or becomes seriously disabled.

Meanwhile, the contribution for employes and employers alike under railroad retirement also went up, effective Jan. 1, from 8.90 to 9.55 percent on the first $650 of each month's earnings.

The contribution increase under this system follows legislation enacted in 1968 which boosted retirement benefits to levels about 10 percent higher than comparable benefits under social security. Other improvements also were made.

6.6% Median Gain:

1968 Labor Pacts Best in Recent Years

(Continued from Page 1)

apparel and glass industries and, in nonmanufacturing, the telephone, transportation and construction industries.

BLS issued a separate report on the bargaining calendar for 1969. Contracts involving some 2.4 million workers on airlines, railroads, and in the oil and manufacturing industries are among those which will be open for negotiation this year, the report said.

Strikes Authorized

Some 60,000 oil workers employed by 435 firms head the list. Their contracts were due to expire at midnight Dec. 31 with no acceptable agreement in sight. Strike authorizations were voted by union members long ago.

Also prepared for strikes were 137,000 members of six railroad shopcrafts, and more than 35,000 machinists on eight major airlines; but all are subject to the strike-delaying processes of the Railway Labor Act.

The Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics said bargaining activity this year will be relatively light, compared with that of most years, but a record number of workers will get deferred increases under contracts negotiated earlier.

BLS said major contracts provide deferred hikes for 6.1 million workers during 1969 as against 2.7 million workers whose contracts expire or have wage reopeners. Last year approximately 5.1 million workers got deferred wage boosts and 4.9 million got negotiated increases.

Deferred increases in 1969 are scheduled in autos and automotive parts, farm and construction equipment, steel, trucking, construction, aerospace, railroads, telephone, men's and boys' coats and suits, meat packing and rubber.

BLS said bargaining activity in 1969 will be about evenly divided between manufacturing and nonmanufacturing industries. It said new contracts in electrical products, men's shirts and cotton garments, petroleum refining, lumber, and West Coast paper will dominate the manufacturing sector.

Negotiations are already in progress for air line machinists, and some contracts in maritime, gas and electric utilities and anthracite mining are open for talks.

The median deferred wage increase scheduled for 1969 is 4.1 percent, the highest on record. In 1968 the corresponding figure was 3.8 percent, BLS reported.

It noted that the average of all 1969 wage hikes is likely to be smaller than in 1968 because an unusually large proportion of workers will receive deferred increases, which tend to be smaller than newly-negotiated first-year increases.

Major negotiations for AFL-CIO unions in 1969, besides those previously listed, include the following:

March, 45,000 members of the Retail Clerks in Southern Califorina.

June, 27,000 members of the National Maritime Union and 25,000 Seafarers.

September, 18,000 Insurance Workers at Prudential; 23,000 members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers at three Western Electric Co. locations; nearly 150,000 members of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp.

A WASHINGTON CONFERENCE developed plans for a 50-cities drive to recruit, train and find jobs for the hard-core unemployed. The program is being carried out by the Human Resources Development Institute (HRDI), the AFL-CIO and Dept. of Labor. From left, Otto Pragan, assistant director, AFL-CIO Dept. of Education; Orieanna Syphax of Health, Education & Welfare Dept.; Julius Rothman, associate director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Urban Affairs and president of HRDI; Robert McConnin, Dept. of Labor; Merlin Taylor, HRDI executive director, and Thomas F. Royals, Labor Dept.

'Human Resources' Jobs Plan Gets Under Way in Nine Cities

The AFL-CIO's campaign to get union members more involved in manpower programs for the hard-core unemployed is now under way in nine cities—Atlanta, Boston, Cincinnati, Houston, Pittsburgh, New York, Los Angeles, New Orleans and St. Louis.

These are the first of 50 metropolitan areas in which organized labor will have a full-time manpower representative operating under the direction of the new Human Resources Development Institute in Washington.

HRDI is a non-profit corporation set up by the AFL-CIO to mobilize the resources of the labor movement in a nationwide program to recruit, train, employ and upgrade the unemployed and the underemployed. Federation Pres. George Meany is chairman of the HRDI board and Julius Rothman, associate director of AFL-CIO's new Dept. of Urban Affairs, is president.

The institute was set up with the aid of a Labor Dept. grant of $1.5 million.

"The AFL-CIO has consistently said that the road out of poverty is a good job at decent wages," Rothman pointed out. "We feel that the proper role for labor unions in helping to achieve this goal is to get involved in the actual training of the disadvantaged unemployed worker for a place in our economic system."

Already on board with HRDI, Rothman reported, are a fulltime director and four staff representatives in the national office plus fulltime representatives in the nine pilot cities.

HRDI's executive director is Merlin L. Taylor of New Orleans. A former bricklayer and stone mason, Taylor was president and business manager of his local union for three years, during which he developed and taught an extension course for journeymen for the State Dept. of Vocational Education. He also attended an AFL-CIO Community Services course and studied at Loyola University's Institute of Industrial Relations. Taylor, 39, comes to HRDI from the Labor Dept., where he had major responsibilities in developing manpower programs.

Also in HRDI's Washington office are James D. Boyle, Olga Corey, C. R. Hollowell and Alfred P. Love. The field staff includes Peter Babin III in New Orleans, Charles E. Bradford in St. Louis, Donald W. Bridges in Houston, John T. Burnell in New York, R. J. Butler in Atlanta, Eddie Campbell in Cincinnati, Mrs. Minona J. Clinton in Pittsburgh, Paul J. Flynn in Boston and George M. Garland in Los Angeles.

All HRDI staff members have a background in the labor movement, Taylor noted, plus a variety of experience in civil rights, anti-poverty programs, political action and other civic involvement. The staff will be thoroughly integrated, says Taylor, and already includes two women and six minority group members.

HRDI recently concluded a one-week training session in Washington at which top representatives from the AFL-CIO, the Labor Dept. and the National Alliance of Businessmen briefed the staff on manpower and related problems. A second conference will be held in February for new field representatives in the next cities to be staffed.

At the Washington conference, Taylor emphasized the key role that HRDI was expected to play in the AFL-CIO's total effort to help resolve what he called "the single most critical domestic problem facing the United States today—helping the hard core to acquire full economic citizenship."

"Unless we begin to successfully recruit the disadvantaged men and women in our ghettos, train them and place them in good jobs at decent wages," said Taylor, "we cannot begin to solve the crisis that is plaguing our cities. Organized labor can play a major role in creating a realistic, creative climate for developing training and placement programs."

Eulogies Cite Courage Of Norman M. Thomas

New York—Norman M. Thomas, who carried the Socialist Party banner for two decades, was hailed at his death as "a voice for the voiceless, a shield for the defenseless."

The tribute came from Pres. James B. Woods of the Newspaper Guild, Thomas' union since 1949. Other messages of regret and esteem came from leaders whose admiration the doughty campaigner for social justice had won—Pres. Johnson, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and numerous others. (See Page 5.)

Thomas was 84 when he died at a Long Island nursing home, a year after suffering a crippling stroke. His three daughters, two sons, a brother and two sisters were among those who attended memorial services for him at Community Church here.

Thomas started his public life as a Presbyterian minister, like his father and grandfathers. Born in Marion, O., in 1884, he attended local schools, Bucknell University and Princeton, where he graduated as class valedictorian in 1905. His first job was as a social worker at the Spring Street Settlement House here, where his conservative outlook collided with the realities of life in what he later described as a "wretchedly poor" neighborhood.

At Union Theological Seminary, where he achieved a divinity degree in 1911, he was influenced by the writings of Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch, theologian who emphasized the social responsibility of Christians. Thomas lived and worked in an East Harlem Italian neighborhood, joined a pacifist group and the Socialist Party, later resigned his ministry to work for peace and social justice.

He walked the textile workers' picket lines in Passaic, N.J., in 1919 and 1926, and was arrested but never prosecuted. After that he worked in numerous labor and social causes, ran for New York governor in 1924, twice for mayor of New York City, and for President in six successive elections starting in 1928. His aim, he said, was to win a "realistic political realignment based on principle."

Pres. Johnson said after Thomas' death that he was a "humane and courageous man who lived to see many of the causes he championed become the law of the land." They included public employment for the jobless, low-cost housing, slum clearance, the five-day week, unemployment insurance, old age pensions, health insurance, minimum wages and an end to child labor.

AFL-CIO Pres. Meany called him "the friend of workers and their unions" and a far-sighted and courageous man.

Pres. Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, who is vice chairman of the Norman Thomas Endowment Fund at the New School for Social Research, said his early efforts on behalf of labor "rank him among the immortals of American history."

Cohen Holds Line at $4 On Medicare Premium

(Continued from Page 1)

beyond average price increases and increases in workers' earnings.

Unless physicians exercise restraint, he said, "I can only believe that Congress will do something more, and it may be something they do not like."

The AFL-CIO voiced strong support for Cohen's decision to keep the monthly premium at $4 for Medicare coverage of physicians' services. The federation, in a telegram to Cohen from Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman, said that holding the line on the premium not only will forestall "a greater financial burden on the elderly . . . but will also help to stem the tide of rapidly escalating medical fees and thereby benefit all Americans. . . ."

Cohen made his announcement on Dec. 31, the deadline established by law for the secretary of health, education and welfare to set the premium rates effective from July 1, 1969, through June 30, 1970.

At a news conference, Cohen repeatedly spoke of the need to find ways to "limit the financial liability of the Medicare program."

Not only did the secretary bar an increase in the premium at this time, he further called for scrapping the entire premium plan so that that the aged would not be burdened with any of the cost of doctors' bills.

Instead, Cohen said, Congress should combine coverage of doctors' fees with Medicare's hospitalization coverage that is paid for through payroll tax contributions by employers and employes.

In five years before the advent of Medicare, Cohen observed, doctors fees increased at an annual rate of 2.6 percent. Since its arrival, he added, the annual increase has been 7 percent.

By comparison, he noted, the average increase in prices since Medicare has been 2.8 percent annually and hourly earnings have been increasing at a rate of 4.3 percent.

Furthermore, he pointed out, physicians' median income has increased greatly—by 11 percent in 1966 over 1965 and by 8 percent in 1968 over 1967.

These figures make it evident, Cohen concluded, that "physicians have not been economically disadvantaged by Medicare."

Labor's Determination

AMERICAN LABOR faces the new year in a spirit of determination—determination to continue to push for progress at home and an honorable peace in the world.

On the domestic and international scene, the future is uncertain. A new, untried Administration and a legislative branch of different political viewpoint are being called on to work together for the nation's benefit. How effective this division of power will be, only time will tell. But all Americans, no matter what their political beliefs, owe it to their country to support responsible efforts of the new Administration and the 91st Congress to meet the problems of our time.

The labor movement will do so. We will do our utmost to help solve the tremendous problems which face America's people, her cities and her future.

At the collective bargaining table, the unions of the AFL-CIO will be seeking contracts that guarantee to workers their fair share of the fruits of enterprise.

In the halls of Congress, we will work on behalf of sound measures to house the homeless, feed the hungry, succor the sick, protect the consumer, educate the young, provide the elderly with an old age free from fear, continue the march toward full equality and improve the lot of the nation's workers and their unions.

We intend to support, with all our strength, the efforts of the most exploited workers in our nation—the farm workers—to achieve the protections and benefits that workers have a right to enjoy in a free society. The farm workers and the AFL-CIO will not rest until this goal has been won.

THAT MEANS WE will seek new programs where necessary, urge the broadening of existing programs that are too narrow to be effective and insist upon the adequate and proper financing of such measures.

In the state legislatures, AFL-CIO central bodies will be seeking adequate unemployment and workmen's compensation laws, adoption of state consumer-protection laws, modernization of factory and mine safety legislation, as well as the elimination of election and registration procedures designed to deny the ballot to citizens.

On the international scene, the AFL-CIO will continue its support of this nation's pursuit of peace with honor and its defense of freedom. We will continue to work in the developing countries with free, democratic trade unions secure in the belief that by helping build strong, free democratic institutions we are simultaneously helping build democracy and freedom for all.

It seems to me proper to add to these views of the coming year, labor's high regard for a great American who is about to lay down the burdens of office, Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson.

No President has ever done more for the poor, the homeless, the elderly; no President has achieved more in the fields of education, civil rights or health care; no President has suffered so many unfair, unjustified attacks.

The American labor movement owes Pres. Johnson a deep debt of gratitude and, on behalf of the AFL-CIO, I am honored to acknowledge it.

—New Year's statement
AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

*George M. Harrison	David Dubinsky	Joseph Curran
M. A. Hutcheson	Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky
A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton
Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	Paul Hall
Herman D. Kenin	*John J. Grogan	I. W. Abel
P. L. Siemiller	David Sullivan	Hunter P. Wharton
Paul Jennings	A. J. DeAndrade	Ralph Helstein
William Pollock	Max Greenberg	John H. Lyons

Deceased*

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme — Eugene A. Kelly
John R. Oravec — David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, January 4, 1969 No. 1

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO

'Let's Get to Work'

Could Change the World:

Successful Flight of Apollo 8 Advances Brotherhood of Man

The following is excerpted from an editorial in the Washington Sunday Star entitled "Six Days That Could Change the World."

MAN'S FIRST VENTURE into the boundless ocean of space, his first brief taste of freedom from the prison of earth's gravity, marks the beginning of a new era. The opening of this final and limitless frontier could effect a profound and rapid change on the course of events on this planet.

The technical brilliance of the lunar orbit mission is self-evident. However staggering the fact may be, man has now fulfilled, in large part, what may be the oldest and wildest of his dreams. He has traveled to the moon. He has sailed around that lonely desert satellite, and returned safely to earth. Man's technical progress has compressed the transition from the horse-and-buggy era to the space age within the span of a human lifetime. Less than 11 years ago, the United States—after a series of humiliating failures and two Russian successes—was congratulating itself on hurling the 18-pound, grapefruit-sized Explorer I into orbit. Last week, a 44-ton payload was placed in an orbit around the moon.

It was, beyond question, the greatest achievement of the space age to date—one that will in all probability overshadow the first landing of men on the lunar surface. It was one of the great adventures of all time. And it is now an historical fact, duly recorded and catalogued in minute detail in the chronicles of human achievement.

But Apollo 8 was much more than the achievement of Frank Borman, James Lovell and William Anders, or of the thousands who supported their mission, or the tens of thousands whose vision pointed the way. Like the navigational discoveries of Columbus and Magellan, like the scientific and technical achievements of Newton, Edison, Fermi and Einstein, the flight of Apollo 8 is no isolated milestone in the path of man's progress. It is an epochal event that must, to some extent, touch every man.

The event is still too close for any sure judgment as to the shape of the change that has been wrought, or to know for certain how profound that change will be. But we should not have too long to wait. For this time, word does not have to pass slowly around that the new world has been reached. There is no secrecy such as that which kept Fermi's arrival into the atomic age hidden until the searing revelation of Hiroshima. This time the impact was immediate, total and worldwide. We were there.

THE ESSENTIAL THING that man has gained as a result of Apollo 8 is a new vision of himself. There is no revelation, it is true, in the knowledge that the earth is a small planet, a speck of dust in the vastness of space. That is an intellectual concept that man has accepted, or tried to accept, since Galileo glimpsed infinity more than 300 years ago. But never before has the earth seemed so fragile—or so precious—as it looked from the edge of that boundless night.

Already there is evidence that men of different views have reacted to what Pope Paul has called this millennial event with a realization that human life and the earth itself are vulnerable to man's wildly accelerated technical progress, and that they are, taken together, eminently worthy of preservation.

The world will not change overnight. The millennium has not arrived—nationalism will be with us yet a while. But the direction of history may have shifted course ever so slightly toward ultimate sanity. And perhaps the first concrete result will be a greater degree of cooperation between Russia and the United States in future space explorations. Such a possibility was strongly hinted in a recent warm message of congratulations sent to the United States space team by Leonid I. Sedov, a leading Soviet space scientist. "This event," Sedov said in part, "goes beyond the limits of a national achievement and marks a stage in the development of the universal culture of earthmen."

But it was, perhaps, a poet who was best able to grasp the essential meaning of the achievement and to communicate that meaning. Archibald MacLeish, writing in the New York Times, had this to say:

"The medieval notion of the earth put man at the center of everything. The nuclear notion of the earth put him nowhere—beyond the range of reason even—lost in absurdity and war. . . .

"To see the earth as it truly is, small and blue and beautiful in that eternal silence where it floats, is to see ourselves as riders on the earth together, brothers on that bright loveliness in the eternal cold—brothers who know now they are truly brothers."

Prophet on Social Reform:

Zealous Norman Thomas Lived To See His Concepts Embraced

IN 1964 WHEN Norman Thomas was 80 years old, bent and hobbled by arthritis, hard of hearing and unable to read without the aid of a magnifying glass, several thousand friends gave him a birthday reception at the Astor Hotel. When it was over a young reporter asked the gaunt, dignified, white-haired guest, "What will you do now, sir?"

The reply was unhesitating: "The same thing I've always done."

For Mr. Thomas "the same thing" was to serve as the Isaiah of his times, the zealous and eloquent prophet who for a half-century warned his countrymen of "the evils of capitalism" while pointing out to them what he considered the pathways of social, economic and political justice.

Once scorned as a visionary, he lived to be venerated as an institution, a patrician rebel, an idealist who refused to despair, a moral man who declined to permit age to mellow him.

Times changed, but Norman Thomas appeared steadfast. He spoke to the mind; he appealed to ethical sensibilities; he thundered at malefactors; he counseled with doubters; he goaded the lethargic and chided the faint of heart; he rallied the committed.

If his moralism was stern, his manner was gentle and his words were good-humored. But the message—and Mr. Thomas always had a message—was the need for reformation of American society.

The general toleration, even acceptance and respectability, that Mr. Thomas achieved in his long career had a number of explanations. Passionate critic though he was, he lived within the accepted social order and conformed to most of its standards of propriety: he used perfect English, had excellent table manners, lived in or near fashionable Gramercy Park, had a family life that was a model of decorum and possessed a captivating personality. Esteem for him was personal to the point where he conferred a certain cachet on dissent.

Mr. Thomas, who was anti-Communist and anti-Soviet to a marked degree, wrote extensively on what he regarded as the shortcomings of Marxism. One of his favorite arguments was expressed in question form: "Can a generation which has had to go far beyond Newtonian physics or atomic chemistry or Darwinian biology be expected to find Marx, who was also the child of his time, infallible?"

In his own philosophy, Mr. Thomas seemed ultimately to lean to democracy, albeit a radical one by some standards.

"For the believer in the dignity of the individual," he once declared, "there is only one standard by which to judge a given society and that is the degree to which it approaches the ideal of a fellowship of free men. Unless one can believe in the practicability of some sort of anarchy, or find evidence there exists a superior and recognizable governing caste to which men should by nature cheerfully submit, there is no approach to a good society save by democracy. The alternative is tyranny."

There was irony in the fact that Mr. Thomas lived to see many of his specific prescriptions for social ills filled by other parties. Running for President in 1932, in one of six such races, Mr. Thomas had a platform calling for such Depression remedies as public works, low-cost housing, slum clearance, the five-day week, public employment agencies, unemployment insurance, old-age pensions, health insurance for the aged, minimum-wage laws and the abolition of child labor.

Each of these then-radical proposals is now a generally accepted part of the fabric of American life. Mr. Thomas once acknowledged this state of affairs. "It was often said by his enemies that [Franklin D.] Roosevelt was carrying out the Socialist party platform," he said in a bitter moment. "Well, in a way it was true—he carried it out on a stretcher."

Mr. Thomas later explained what he had in mind. "You know, despite the fact that the New Deal took over many of the ideas we Socialists campaigned for, I have been profoundly disappointed," he said. "Some of our major concepts have not been accepted, but time has not changed my advocacy of them.

"I still heartily yearn for the nationalization of the steel industry, for example. In fact, I'm for public ownership of all natural resources. They belong to all the people and should not be for the private enrichment of the few."

Mr. Thomas summed up his alternative to capitalism as "the cooperative commonwealth." Its main features were public ownership and democratic control of the basic means of production as well as long-range economic planning.

TOWARD THE END of his life, he was asked what he thought he had achieved. He replied:

"I suppose it is an achievement to live to my age and feel that one has kept the faith, or tried to. It is an achievement to be able to sleep at night with reasonable satisfaction.

"It is an achievement to have had a part, even if it was a minor one, in some of the things that have been accomplished in the field of civil liberty, in the field of better race relations, and the rest of it.

"It is something of an achievement, I think, to keep the idea of Socialism before a rather indifferent or even hostile American public. That's the kind of achievement I have to my credit, if any. As the world counts achievement, I have not got much."—New York Times, Dec. 20, 1968

Answering to Needs:

Wurf Stresses Improved Pay, Conditions for Public Employes

ADVICE FOR PUBLIC officials: Stop worrying about strikes and start worrying about what causes public workers to threaten strikes.

That was the counsel of Jerry Wurf, president of the 400,000-member State, County & Municipal Employes, as he hit out at the "anti-strike syndrome" that "distorts the whole mechanism of the law and makes collective relationships more difficult." Wurf leveled the charges on the nationwide radio interview, Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

Attempts to ban strikes by law can actually bring them on, Wurf contended, as a union seeks to "prove its militancy and loyalty to the members."

The union president urged public officials to face up to the inequities their employes suffer, "instead of standing on a soapbox and sanctimoniously and piously crying out against strikes." He listed lower wages, poorer working conditions and lagging retirement systems as areas in which the inequities are especially acute. These are also the main reasons that hospitals and other public institutions find it so hard to recruit and hold good workers, he added.

WURF SAID THAT working with employers and aided by federal programs, the union has been able to upgrade the skills and jobs of ghetto residents in Cleveland. Baltimore, Milwaukee and other cities, with both the institutions and the workers benefiting.

He said the effort not only provides the institutions with a better supply of the trained and more permanent workers they need, but it also gives "people who could only hope for the most elementary jobs—elevator operators, floor moppers and so on"—the chance to do "useful, important work, and gets them a decent wage."

Dealing with the needs of the growing service industry, Wurf said, is an effective way of easing some of the nation's most serious problems. He urged more effort to "give these jobs real dignity and real economic and social status," instead of the "bottom rung — the last hope of people before they go on the relief rolls."

Reporters questioning him were Frank Swoboda of United Press Intl. and Stanley Levey of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE BELIEF that the Nixon Administration will not be inclined to push far-reaching programs holds as the 91st Congress convenes. There are no plans to stir up legislative revolutions or to turn the clock back. Neither Nixon nor any of his new Cabinet appointees are speaking in legislative terms.

When Sec. of Labor-designate Charles Shultz held his first press conference here, Nixon's "communications director" Herb Klein set the ground rules and one was that no questions on legislation or "specific programs and policies" would be discussed.

Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare-designate Robert H. Finch, at his news conference said that he sees little need for legislation in areas under the jurisdiction of his department.

Finch left the impression that the problem of his term would be to "rationalize and implement" the legislation now on the books.

On the other hand, incumbent Secretary of HEW Wilbur J. Cohen is working up a whole series of legislation recommendations in health, education and, particularly, welfare.

Transportation Sec. Alan S. Boyd is rushing to complete a number of proposals in such areas as traffic congestion and highway development. Meanwhile, his successor, John A. Volpe, is cleaning up his desk in Rhode Island.

Nixon met with Republican congressional leaders here and left them pretty much in the dark on what legislative line his Administration would take. Republicans contacted after the meeting said Nixon felt it was too early to discuss the size and extent of his legislative program.

Senate Minority Leader Everett Dirksen and House Minority Leader Gerald Ford said that no firm programs would be drawn up until some basic decisions are made on the size of the federal budget and whether or not the 10 percent surtax should be dropped after its due expiration date, June 30, 1969.

PRES. JOHNSON will submit the fiscal 1970 budget to Congress before he leaves the White House. However, Robert Mayo, the Chicago banker who is Nixon's designated budget director, has access to the work of the Budget Bureau and should have a pretty good idea of what kind of budget will be proposed.

Dirksen expressed the view that the Senate might be asked to approve the non-proliferation treaty which was an issue in the campaign. Johnson and Humphrey wanted such action in the 90th Congress. Nixon, while saying he supported the treaty, said that the Senate should not act then in light of the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia.

The proposal by Dirksen does not put the Nixon Administration on the spot but leaves it free to act if it so desires.

Another proposal involves the reorganization of the Executive Branch. This may be undertaken by the President but is subject to veto by Congress. The idea of the Labor and Commerce departments merger is being advanced ever so slightly. There is talk about Agriculture and Interior joining to become the Dept. of Natural Resources and bringing HUD and HEW together as the Dept. of Human Resources.

This has not gone beyond the talking stage—and perhaps won't—but the Nixon people are seeking reaction.

One of the big issues in the campaign was "law, order and justice." A GOP congressional task force has made a recommendation that the Justice Dept. set up a special division to combat organized crime.

However, to date nothing is in the works to meet the problems involved in the ghetto crises and crime in the streets.

It may be too early to expect a blueprint on legislation or, at least, direction markers. We may be seeing the most cautious President since the New Deal. At least these are the signs.

STOP WORRYING about strikes and start worrying about what causes public employes to threaten strikes, Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes, center, advised on Labor News Conference. Questioning him on the AFL-CIO produced public service program broadcast by Mutual Radio were Frank Swoboda, left, of United Press Intl. and Stanley Levey of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

1968 Proved Year of Shock, Struggle

Labor's Balance Sheet Shows Overall Progress Toward Goals

By Harry Conn

It was a year to remember, 1968. For most of the year, organized labor was engaged in grim, uphill battles—in political action, in legislation, on the organizing front, at the bargaining table and in strike situations.

The loss of Vice Pres. Humphrey to Richard M. Nixon in the race for the White House, was a major setback. But the mass outpouring of labor votes, especially in the industrial East, helped Humphrey to the point that only a few thousand more votes could have brought him victory.

Labor lost some friends in the Congress, but in the total picture the 91st Congress is not likely to be greatly different in its makeup than the 90th.

Part of the shock of 1968 was the assassination of two national leaders — Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. and Sen. Robert F. Kennedy. These episodes of violence, plus the disorders in the urban areas, centered attention on lawlessness but also on the need for social justice.

In legislation, labor did not achieve the goals of on-the-job-safety and placing farm workers under the labor law. But it scored gains in housing and consumer legislation.

At the bargaining table, union-won gains were on the upswing, reaching 6.6 percent the first year of new contracts. Major settlements were in steel, aerospace.

The year 1968, too, was the year of major changes in union leadership. No less than 20 international unions elected new presidents to replace those who died, retired or who were defeated in office.

Following is a month-by-month review of the year from the files of Press Associates, Inc.

January

Senior Citizens push for major social security improvements in 1968 . . . Noted labor mediator Cyrus Ching dies . . . AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany calls on labor to elect liberals in 1968 . . . Second session of 90th Congress meets; faces big back log of unmet needs . . . Labor mourns death of UAW's Roy Reuther . . . Paul Phillips resigns as Papermakers' president; Harry Sayre named successor . . . Johnson, in State of the Union message, outlines broad plan to uplift cities . . . Hundreds from the Carolinas rally to support J. P. Stevens strikers . . . LBJ asks new manpower program to help hard core unemployed . . . Four operating rail unions push merger plans.

February

Budget for 1969 would slow pace of social programs . . . Revolving credit covered in strong House Truth-In-Lending bill . . . Safety-on-the-job legislation pushed in Congress . . . Meany, Johnson in conversation at White House, call for forward push on domestic, foreign fronts . . . 35,000 Glass Bottle Blowers strike over wage demands . . . Unemployment drops to lowest level since 1953 . . . Steelworkers reach key can industry settlement . . . Copper strike continues . . . Unions support on-the-job-safety . . . Professional strikebreakers moved into West Coast by Hearst . . . Construction trades pledge "affirmative action" for Negro apprentices . . . AFL-CIO Executive Council rejects compulsion in public employe disputes . . . Humphrev tells AFL-CIO choice this year will be between reaction and progress . . . AFL-CIO calls on unionists to help defeat copper barons . . . Registration drive mapped by COPE.

March

Johnson proposes $4.6 billion housing program for 1969 . . . Memphis sanitation workers, members of State, County & Municipal Workers determined in strike . . . San Francisco Hearst strike settled; Los Angeles strike-lockout continues . . . Civil rights filibuster chocked off in Senate . . . UAW asks for special AFL-CIO convention, threatens disaffiliation . . . Wurf, six others get terms in Memphis strike . . . AFL-CIO Council rejects UAW "ultimatum." AFL-CIO backs major housing bill . . . 14-union, Phelps-Dodge agreement is breakthrough on copper strike . . . Robert Kennedy enters presidential race; contests McCarthy . . . Conglomerate mergers set record . . . Steelworkers vote defense fund of $25 million . . . Rockefeller withdraws from GOP contest . . . 4,000 building tradesmen at Washington legislative conference hear LBJ . . . 51-day Glass Bottle Blowers strike ends . . .

April

Johnson declines to seek new term; dedicates self to unity, peace . . . Labor backs Urban Coalition program to provide 2.1 million jobs . . . Murder of Martin Luther King mourned by organized labor . . . 30,000 in Memphis rally for strikers in King memorial . . . Meany, other unionists urge Humphrey to declare for President . . . Congress passes fair housing legislation . . . Memphis strikers win recognition in great victory . . . CWA strikes Bell System . . . ILGWU's Zimmerman named head of Jewish Labor Committee . . . AFL-CIO Community Services contributes to aiding riot-torn cities . . . HEW Sec. Wilbur Cohen receives Murray-Green Award . . . Wurf says Negro-labor-church coalition won in Memphis strike . . . Mail Handlers vote merger with Laborers.

May

Union leaders hail Humphrey entry into presidential race . . . ILA's Gleason honored for work unclogging Viet Nam ports . . . CWA acclaims "substantial victory" in Bell strike . . . AFL-CIO drives to save social welfare programs in Congress . . . 11,000 Metropolitan insurance agents win gains in strike . . . Homebuilding hit by "tight money" . . . 10 percent income surtax passes Congress; U.S. spending to be slashed by $4 billion . . . Service Employes, United Textile Workers first union conventions to endorse Humphrey . . . Msgr. Higgins blasts U.S. Chamber for "lies" on safety bill . . . Steelworkers endorse Humphrey . . . Gilligan in Ohio upsets Lausche with labor help . . . AFL-CIO suspends UAW for non-payment of per capita . . . Abel, Keenan head National Labor Committee for Humphrey . . . IUD's Conway resigns . . . AFL-CIO urges wider grape boycott . . . Supermarket parking lots opened to picketing by Supreme Court . . . Clothing Workers win record three-year contract . . . Metropolitan Life agents reject contract; strike continues . . . Carpenters, Job Corps launch plan to aid deprived youth.

June

Labor editors get in-depth briefing from LBJ Administration officials . . . Johnson accepts budget cuts as price for 10 percent surtax . . . ILGWU convention endorses Humphrey . . . Apprenticeships reach 19-year peak . . . Court awards 550 Darlington, S.C., Textile Workers 12 years back pay . . . TWUA endorses Humphrey . . . Steelworkers open bargaining with Big Steel; strike aluminum plants . . . Robert Kennedy murdered in California, labor mourns death . . . Supreme Court upholds minimum wage for state employes . . . Supreme Court rules out all housing bias . . . Abel elected president of IUD, replacing Reuther . . . Doll Workers Pres. Harry Damino dies; replaced by Louis Isaacson . . . NMU, Marine Engineers win portable pensions . . . CWA endorses HHH.

July

Kenin re-elected Musicians president . . . Fortas, Thornberry get strong backing for Supreme Court posts . . . 250,000 visit Union Industries Show in Philadelphia . . . Minimum Wage Law marks 30th year; 43 million now benefit . . . N.Y. hospital workers win $100 weekly minimum . . . Labor hails passage of Housing bill . . . UAW "formally" disaffiliates from AFL-CIO . . . Meat Cutters, Packinghouse Workers merge; Lloyd, Gorman leaders . . . A. R. Lowery succeeds George Leighty as head of Transportation-Communications Union . . . IBEW pact marks end to 8½-month copper strike . . . Howard Jenkins re-named to NLRB . . . California grape growers admit strike, boycott hurts them . . . Selden wins AFT presidency; Cogen retires.

August

Steelworkers win "biggest ever" contract from Big Steel . . . Three unions strike Campbell Soup . . . Housewright wins RCIA presidency as Suffridge becomes board chairman . . . Hallbeck re-elected president of Postal Clerks . . . Meany testifies before Republican platform committee . . . Farm workers stage "Boston Grape Party" . . . GOP labor plank in platform ignores Meany's recommendations . . . BLF&E re-elects Gilbert . . . Republican Convention nominates Nixon, Agnew . . . Insurance Workers settle with Met . . . Steelworkers hail Humphrey; push for more political action . . . Labor denounces Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia . . . Rademacher new head of Letter Carriers . . . Meany testifies before Democratic platform committee . . . McClennan elected head of Firefighters; strike ban dropped.

September

Humphrey, Muskie nominated by Democrats . . . Labor hails HHH, Muskie labor records . . . Democratic convention overhauls structure . . . Meany calls Democratic platform "welcome contrast" to GOP's . . . Long Detroit newspaper strike ends . . . Liberal Rep. Elmer Holland dies . . . Humphrey leads massive New York Labor Day parade . . . Four Los Angeles unionists tour nation telling truth of Hearst press strike . . . AFGE convention retains strike ban clause; Griner re-elected . . . Freeman resigns IBEW presidency; Pillard named to post . . . Alabama unionists blast Wallace . . . Shipbuilders' Grogan dies; was AFL-CIO vice president . . . Humphrey acclaimed by IAM convention . . . Study shows labor costs minor part of home building . . . IUE convention backs HHH . . . AFL-CIO General Board endorses Humphrey . . . AFL-CIO sets up urban affairs department . . . Nixon avoids face-to-face debate with Humphrey . . . Luna re-elected Trainmen head . . . N.Y. Teachers strike on again, off again, on again . . . National Council of Churches backs grape boycott . . . Johnson invokes Taft-Hartley to block Longshoremen's strike . . . Bommarito re-elected by Rubber Workers . . . Mitchell dies after being re-elected by Chemical Workers; Boyle named to replace him . . . IBEW backs HHH . . . Shipbuilders elect Pettis.

October

Conservative coalition blocks Fortas confirmation in Senate . . . Number of Negroes in apprenticeships doubles in 18 months . . . IAM wins pact for 68,000 at Boeing . . . Humphrey acclaimed by Iron Workers . . . 90th Congress ends on sour note; session did accomplish some things but forgot safety, among others . . . Friends acclaim Gordon Freeman, retiring IBEW president . . . Wall Street Journal says union wage contracts not responsible for price rises . . . Insurance Workers back HHH . . . Laborers endorse Humphrey . . . Meany urges unionists to give HHH, Muskie heavy vote.

November

Right of unions to select own negotiators upheld by NLRB in coordinated bargaining victory . . . Living costs rise slows down . . . IAM retains bargaining rights for 22,000 McDonnell Douglas workers in St. Louis . . . Nixon edges Humphrey for presidency, Wallace support thin . . . Democrats hold on to House and Senate . . . Humphrey praised for "gallant" campaign . . . Kircher confident that labor will be able to organize under Nixon . . . After 42 years Moreschi retires as Laborers president; Fosco named . . . Johnson backs labor move to beat "seasonality" in construction . . . O'Hara, House liberal, promises to fight anti-labor moves in 91st Congress . . . 23 labor members in new House . . . Teachers strike ends in New York . . . Supreme Court upholds full crew law.

December

J. P. Stevens back pay to Textile Workers reaches $680,000 . . . Air Line Pilots convention pushes for air safety . . . Urban League honors SCME's Wurf . . . 78 dead in mine explosion . . . Labor mourns passing of AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George Harrison of Railway Clerks . . . World textile, garment union leaders map expanded organizing . . . Kayser-Roth strike over; boycott ends . . . Senate probers expose gouging on auto repairs . . . Four operating rail unions merge; Charles Luna president . . . Railway Clerks, Rail Patrolmen merger set Jan. 1 . . . George Shultz named to become Secretary of Labor by Nixon . . . Unemployment drops to record 14-year low . . . AFL-CIO calls on ICFTU for specific, definite stand rejecting UAW application . . . Minneapolis becomes 100th city to pass law curbing professional strikebreakers.

The Winners

'I Have a Dream'

Fire Fighters Host Widows, Children

New York—Widows and children of firemen killed in line of duty were guests of Fire Fighters Local 94, AFL-CIO, at the union's annual Christmas party.

Start Now, Humphrey Urges:

Democratic Leaders Press Campaign to Rebuild Party

A call for the rebuilding of the Democratic Party has been issued by three of its top leaders—Vice Pres. Humphrey, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie and Lawrence O'Brien, chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

The three, in separate articles in the party's official publication, The Democrat, set forth a program for electoral reform, broad grass-roots participation and a vigorous national organization.

Humphrey declared that the party "must start building and working now for victory" in the congressional contests in 1970 as well as in the presidential election in 1972.

"It is now or never for the Democratic Party," he stressed, and asked that three steps be taken:

- Open the party to the fullest public participation "because the people are the ultimate source of political strength in our democracy."

Humphrey noted that "important strides" in this direction were taken at the 1968 Democratic National Convention which "despite the turmoil and tragedy which accompanied it was one of the most open in history."

He called for new steps including "perhaps even a party-wide conference prior to the 1970 elections."

- Take the lead in pressing for electoral reform.

The Vice President urged a constitutional amendment to prevent recurrence of "a serious danger" that the will of the majority would be thwarted in the election of the President, either in the Electoral College or in the House of Representatives. He would eliminate obstacles to voter registration and proposed "a system among the states for a permanent franchise which qualifies a voter anywhere in the nation or overseas for every national election."

- Assure that the party is adequately financed and staffed to serve as a center of Democratic leadership.

Despite its 1968 campaign deficit, Humphrey said the national committee should "allocate a substantial budget to support expanded research and candidate support operations as well as efforts at fund-raising to help pay off the debt."

The Vice President said that "the next great test for the Democratic Party—the decisive test—will come in 1970" when 25 Democratic senators will be up for re-election along with the entire House of Representatives, and many of the large states will be choosing a governor.

"These elections are a great challenge and a great opportunity for Democrats," Humphrey said. "We must start building and working now for victory. We must be ready to offer meaningful support to all Democratic candidates, at all levels. . . ."

In his article in The Democrat, Muskie asked for full implementation of all the party reform steps approved by the Chicago convention.

"The Democratic Party has always been the party of the future," the Maine senator wrote. "That involves a capacity to learn from the past and a willingness to adapt our programs and our institutions to meet challenging conditions."

He said that as a national political party, the Democrats "have an obligation to develop and offer constructive alternatives to policies and programs of the new Administration."

Muskie also asked that the base of the party be broadened and that it engage in a "constant process of reform in its selection of leadership and in the ways in which it involves party members in its decision-making on issues and operations."

He said that the reform must take place at all levels of the party to be meaningful, that state and local organizations must match the steps taken by the national party.

O'Brien expressed the view that the Democratic Party emerged from the 1968 elections "strong, robust and ready for victory in the 1970's."

He said high priority should be given to voter registration and campaign financing and asked that a top goal be "future election to regain control of state houses and legislatures, particularly in the crucial, big-vote states."

O'Brien said that "the man who did the most to revive the strength and vitality of the Democratic Party is Vice Pres. Humphrey. He refused to believe that defeat was inevitable."

HEALTH CARE SERVICES for Erie, Pa., are expanded with the presentation of a portable kidney machine to Hamot Hospital by representatives of Machinists Local 101. Members of the IAM purchased the machine and gave it to the hospital after learning the problems of patients suffering kidney failure when John C. Campbell, the local's financial secretary, was stricken with kidney disease last year.

Oil Industry Continues Talks Covering 60,000

Denver—The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers extended a Jan. 1 strike deadline for 60,000 employes of 435 companies but warned managements that the union will have no choice except to strike unless company offers are improved.

OCAW Pres. A. F. Grospiron, who has been voted the authority to call strikes against some or all of the oil firms, said as the AFL-CIO News went to press that he still hopes to reach satisfactory agreements.

"This is a matter not only of economics, but of self-respect on the part of our oil members," he said.

OCAW presented its proposals in mid-July but at the deadline, Grospiron reported that "some companies have not come forth with a single counterproposal nor offered a red cent in improvements."

Other major oil companies have offered "roughly a third" of what the union asked in wage and benefit improvements, said Grospiron. He added:

"This is ridiculous. This highly-favored industry, petted and pampered by government and public, the most profitable of major industries, is offering to spend less money on its workers than less profitable industries, and even nonprofit enterprises, are spending."

The union has proposed that each of the companies sign 23-month contracts retroactive to Jan. 1, 1969. It wants wage hikes of 72 cents an hour in three steps; additional increases of 25 cents an hour for skilled craftsmen in two installments; increased premium pay for night work; full company payment of the cost of improved pension, insurance and hospitalization plans; time and one-half pay during vacations to provide a vacation bonus, and other improvements on the two-year contracts now due to expire.

In addition to these mandatory proposals, an OCAW committee recommended that locals seek to get joint labor-management safety committees, with power to enforce health and safety rules in each workplace; and full income protection for those affected by any plant shutdown or relocation.

The union's proposals were approved by a vote of more than 90 percent of the affected members, OCAW said. Most of the covered employes work in oil refineries.

You can build on UNION MADE PRODUCTS & SERVICES
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Fraud Charged in 3rd Election at Pan Am

The Railway & Airline Clerks have urged the National Mediation Board to impound all ballots in a current representation election at Pan American World Airways, pending an investigation of fraud charges.

The election, involving some 8,000 workers, represents the third round in a dispute in which the Teamsters are trying to raid BRAC's representation.

Two previous elections, in 1966 and 1967, were ruled invalid when forged documents and other fraudulent acts were uncovered. In both instances, BRAC charged the acts were directed at disadvantaging it in the balloting.

In the latest election, in which employes have been voting via mail since November, BRAC charged that "forged, fraudulent and misleading" propaganda letters have been sent to a number of Pan Am workers.

Walter R. Williamson, director of BRAC's Air Transport Division, described the alleged fraud in a letter to Thomas Tracy, NMB's executive secretary.

He said the letters, which carried "an approximation" of the signature of BRAC Pres. C. L. Dennis, told Pan Am employes they could best help the union by not voting in the election.

Williamson said the "sentiments expressed were opposite to our publicly stated position," the letters carried the "wrong initials of our organization" and neither the letterhead nor the envelopes carried the printing trades union label.

In asking the board to impound the ballots, Williamson said "it is impossible on this short notice for me to contact our membership on Pan Am and repudiate this fraudulent letter" in time to halt its impact on the election.

"The full force of the government's investigation machinery should be used to find out, and to make public, who is printing these forgeries and who is mailing them," he added. "The public, and Pan Am employes who are directly involved, have a right to know."

Controls Sought to Halt Medicaid Profiteering

(Continued from Page 1)

The probe showed that some physicians are guilty of over-servicing, submitting claims for patients they did not treat or for treatment not actually given, over-prescribing drugs and laboratory examinations, and charging fees.

Many California nursing homes abuse the program by accepting duplicate payments or submitting claims for services rendered to patients who had died or been discharged before the period covered in the billing, the investigation revealed.

It also showed that a great number of druggists violate regulations by charging the state higher prices than those charged the public for the same drugs.

"These abuses clearly indicate the need for cost control in the form of federally regulated fees and charges," Seidman said.

He cited California only because that state's investigation had been most detailed.

"We have no doubt," he added, "that similar investigations in other states would reveal equally shocking abuses which have added untold millions of dollars to the cost of the program."

Seidman said the AFL-CIO considers particularly sound a number of recommendations made by the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. These proposals for increasing the efficiency and reducing the unduly high costs of Medicaid services deserve to be implemented as rapidly as possible, he suggested.

The AFL-CIO, he said, specifically supports the commission's proposals for reimbursing hospitals contingent upon their operating under an acceptable standard of management efficiency, payment for physicians' services on a basis other than usual and customary charges and improved techniques of utilization review.

Seidman described Medicaid as "an epoch-making commitment that needed health care would be the right of all Americans regardless of income."

This commitment, he said, "must be fulfilled. Therefore, we urge that while every effort be made to reduce unnecessary costs, there must be no restriction on the right of low-income Americans to obtain comprehensive health care."

Buying Power Drops Below Level of 1967

(Continued from Page 1)

On the price front, increases in the cost of nearly all products and services more than offset a seasonal decline of one-tenth of 1 percent in retail food prices.

Among products, apparels increase three-tenth of 1 percent; furniture prices climbed seven-tenths of 1 percent; selling prices of new cars soared 1 percent higher; and costs of gasoline, motor oil and appliances all rose slightly.

Among services, the costs involved in owning and maintaining a home jumped eight-tenths of 1 percent; rents averaged three-tenths of 1 percent higher; utility rates and public transportation leaped by nine-tenths of 1 percent; and medical care was up six-tenths of 1 percent.

The Wholesale Price Index in November was 109.6, up five-tenths of 1 percent from October and 3.2 percent over the year, BLS reported. It attributed the rise mainly to advances of 1.9 percent for farm products and three-tenths of 1 percent for processed foods and feeds.

Preliminary data for December point to a rise again in the index for December, according to BLS. An increase in the index often precedes a rise in consumer prices.

About 142,000 workers will receive pay increases as a result of escalation based on the November Consumer Price Index, with over half of them—75,000 in the meat packing industry—receiving 8 cents an hour more.

For workers in other industries, the department said, increases will range from 1 to 8 cents an hour based on quarterly, semi-annual, or annual changes in the national and city indexes.

Labor Dept. Lists Reports by Unions

More than 51,000 labor organizations, most of them locals of international unions, have filed reports required by the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act.

The Labor Dept. has compiled the list of all reporting unions in a new Register of Reporting Labor Organizations, available at $2.50 a copy from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D.C. 20402.

Few New Faces:

Little Change Seen As Congress Opens

(Continued from Page 1)

nedy (Mass.) against Sen. Russell B. Long (La.) for the Democratic Whip post which Long has held since 1965.

Another key race saw Sen. Hugh Scott (Pa.), liberal, pitted against conservative Roman L. Hruska (Neb.) for Republican Whip to succeed former Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.), who was defeated in the California primary.

In a third contest, Sen. Robert P. Griffin (Mich.) challenged Sen. Gordon Allott (Colo.) for chairman of the GOP Policy Committee, a position previously held by retiring Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper (Iowa).

Top Senate leaders in the 91st Congress, as in the 90th, are Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.), and Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.).

On the House side, the principal leaders in addition to McCormack are Majority Leader Carl Albert (Okla.), Minority Leader Gerald R. Ford (Mich.), Majority Whip Hale Boggs (La.) and Minority Whip Leslie C. Arends (Ill.).

There are no immediate changes in sight among committee chairmanships in the House, where the GOP made only a four-seat gain in the elections, leaving the Democrats with a 243-192 majority.

In the Senate, where the Republicans have made a net gain of six seats to leave the Democrats with a 57-43 margin, the important Labor Committee will be under a new chairman. Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.) is expected to succeed to the post formerly held by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), who was defeated in November.

There are four Democratic vacancies on the key Senate Appropriations Committee, caused by the retirement of Senators Carl Hayden (Ariz.) and Lister Hill (Ala.), the defeat of Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (Okla.) and the death of Sen. E. L. Bartlett (Alaska). Kuchel also was on this committee.

Following organization of the new Congress, the House was slated to take up the certification of the electoral vote in the presidential election as its first order of business.

A bipartisan group of liberals in the Senate immediately revived efforts to rewrite the rules to make it easier to cut off filibusters. The move was led by Senators Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) and Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.).

The Senate's long-standing Rule 22 requires a vote of two-thirds of the senators present to cut off debate. It has enabled filibusters, or the threat of them, to prevent a vote on repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act and consideration of civil rights measures, among other proposals.

Two years ago, a similar attempt to ease the rule was blocked by a filibuster even though a test vote showed a majority of the Senate supported the change.

Certain to come up in the 91st Congress are Senate consideration of the Nuclear Non-prolifieration Treaty, the ratification of which has been urged by both Pres. Johnson and Dirksen, and action on the tax surcharge, which expires in June.

The new Administration has not made its position clear on either of these issues.

Continuous battles for extending and funding vital programs aimed at resolving the nation's urban crisis—such as model cities, urban renewal, rent supplements and aid to education—will once again be before Congress.

Other key issues will center on the war in Viet Nam, the nation's military and foreign aid commitments and proposals to combat crime.

The outlook appears to be for some progress in legislation, compromise and study in many areas and tough battles on funding current programs.

ELECTRICAL WORKERS attending IBEW's Industrial Atomic Energy Institute view facilities used to handle highly radioactive materials at Argonne National Laboratory in Illinois. The visit was part of an intensive two-week course on atomic safety which qualifies trainees as instructors for members of their own locals.

Third Quarter Profits Soar Above '67 Mark

Manufacturing sales and profits in the third quarter of 1968 soared sharply above those of the same period of 1967, according to the latest government figures.

Sales of U.S. manufacturers totaled $155.7 billion in the July-September period, up 10 percent over the same quarter in 1967, according to the quarterly report of the Federal Trade Commission and Securities & Exchange Commission.

The total profit take, after taxes, rose even more—14 percent to $7.6 billion, the report revealed. Net earnings were down 8 percent from April-June, but this decline was less than normal for the period.

Profit margins after taxes came to 4.9 cents per dollar of sales during the third quarter of 1968, compared to 4.7 cents for the third quarter of 1967. Profit ratios—annual rates of profit on stockholders' equity — increased from 10.8 to 11.4 percent over the year on an after-tax basis.

During the third quarter, durable goods manufacturers' profits showed a year-to-year rise of 19 percent to $3.7 billion. Producers of non-durable goods reported after-tax profits of nearly $4 billion, up 4 percent from 1967.

Among industry groups registering the largest gains in profits over the year were: motor vehicles, up 105 percent; lumber and wood products, 75 percent; nonferrous metals, 40 percent; rubber and miscellaneous plastics, 39 percent.

Producers of apparel and electrical machinery showed gains of 19 and 12 percent respectively.

Other groups showing sizable profit increases were instruments and related products; stone, glass and clay products; transportation equipment; electrical machinery; printing and rubber.

Cash dividends paid by manufacturers in the third quarter of 1968 totaled $3.3 billion, an increase of $200 million over the same quarter in 1967.

The comparison of the nine-month statistics for 1968 and 1967 in the SEC-FTC report showed that manufacturers have so far felt little impact from the 10 percent surtax on corporation profits that took effect Jan. 1, 1968.

Total after-tax profits for January-September 1968 were $23.3 billion, compared to $21 billion for the same months the year before.

Profits per-dollar of sales after taxes ran higher in each of the three quarters of 1968 than in 1967; cash dividends paid for the first nine months of the year were $10.1 billion, compared to $9.6 billion for the 1967 period; and retained earnings rose by $1.7 billion to $13.2 billion.

Steelworkers List Contests For Key Posts

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Local unions of the Steelworkers have nominated 50 candidates for international union office in the referendum to be conducted Feb. 11, election tellers reported.

Incumbent Pres. I. W. Abel was nominated by 2,212 locals and Emil Narick of the headquarters staff by 326 locals as opposing candidates for president. Narick, of USWA Local 3657, served in the union's legal department for several years and now is in the research and contract department.

Nominated without opposition for four-year terms were Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Burke, 2,384 locals, and Vice Pres. Joseph P. Molony, 2,372 locals. Both have served since June 1, 1965, when Abel replaced former Pres. David J. McDonald.

Contests for director are slated in 11 districts, where more than one candidate was nominated. No candidate filed against William Mahoney, Canadian national director, or these incumbent directors: Roy H. Stevens, Worcester, Mass.; Lawrence F. Sefton, Toronto, Ont.; Hugh P. Carcella, Philadelphia, Pa.; William Moran, Bethlehem, Pa.; William J. Hart, Tarentum, Pa.; John S. Johns, Canton, O.; Charles Younglove, Detroit; Harry O. Daugherty, Indianapolis; Joseph Germano, East Chicago, Ind.; Lloyd McBride, St. Louis; M. C. Weston, Jr., Atlanta, Ga., and James E. Ward, Houston, Tex.

The tellers reported that representatives of the Labor Dept. and the Honest Ballot Association were invited to witness the processing of all nominations, and did so.

1-4-69

Meany Pledges Drive For Peace, Progress

(Continued from Page 1)

AFL-CIO will not rest until this goal has been won," he said.

In summary, labor's objectives in Congress will call for new programs where necessary, broadening of programs that now are too narrow to be effective and "adequate and proper financing" of all programs, Meany stressed.

He then centered on three other areas that will receive major attention from labor in the year ahead:

Collective bargaining — AFL-CIO unions will strive for new contracts "that guarantee to workers their fair share of the fruits of enterprise."

State legislatures—Unions will seek adequate unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits, consumer-protection laws, modernized job-safety laws and elimination of procedures that deny the ballot to some citizens.

The international scene — "The AFL-CIO will continue its support of this nation's pursuit of peace with honor and its defense of freedom."

In this area, Meany also said that the federation will continue its role of helping to strengthen free unions in the developing nations "secure in the belief that by helping build strong, free democratic institutions we are simultaneously helping build democracy and freedom for all."

Meany concluded his statement by expressing labor's high regard for and gratitude to "a great American who is about to lay down the burdens of office, Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson."

"No President," Meany declared, "has ever done more for the poor, the homeless, the elderly; no President has achieved more in the fields of education, civil rights or health care; no President has suffered so many unfair, unjustified attacks.

"The American labor movement owes Pres. Johnson a deep debt of gratitude and, on behalf of the AFL-CIO, I am honored to acknowledge it."

Washington Monument

Negotiations Suspended in Dock Strike

New York—Longshoremen in more than 20 ports walked picket lines as union contract negotiators waited for dock managements to resume bargaining.

Wage talks were suspended Dec. 29 when mediators reported no change in the refusal of "outer port" employers to accept all the terms agreed to in the master contract for the port of New York.

An ILA spokesman charged the companies are not bargaining in good faith. The union wants uniform wage rates, hours and rules for containerized cargoes at all ports, with local issues to be settled locally. Some firms are not willing to agree, the ILA said.

The strike of ILA members started Dec. 21 in ports from Searsport, Me., to Brownsville, Tex., after an earlier strike of 75,000 dockers was halted by a Taft-Hartley injunction.

Engineering Unit Picks IUE in Vote

Kearny, N.J.—A big white collar unit of workers at the Western Electric plant and offices here chose to be represented by an AFL-CIO union in a National Labor Relations Board election. The vote was 373 for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and 294 against.

IUE said that engineers and technical workers in the unit of more than 700 employes make up the largest such group organized in recent years.

IUE Pres. Paul Jennings said that 450 engineers in the unit voted for a combined unit with engineering assistants. The combined group has been chartered as IUE Local 368. The Kearny plant makes telephone servicing equipment in one of Western Electric's pioneer locations.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, January 11, 1969 | No. 2

Labor Helps Finance Plan To Rebuild Ghetto Homes

TOKEN OF APPRECIATION, respect and admiration from the Steelworkers awaited Pres. Johnson when he dropped in at a meeting of the union's executive board. The cuff links set was presented by Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel, right. USWA Vice Pres. Joseph P. Molony applauds.

Program to Train, Hire Area Poor

St. Louis — Labor, management, a neighborhood group and the government have joined in a ghetto-rebuilding program financed in part by the AFL-CIO and designed to be a pace-setter for cities across the nation.

The goal is to rehabilitate 300 dilapidated houses in a 200-square block slum area over a 2-year period at a cost of about $4 million, with area residents doing most the rebuilding. Many of them now are unemployed.

Under contracts involving 14 building trades organizations and five contractors' associations, the residents will be trained to the extent necessary and given an opportunity to become members of the unions.

Dir. John E. Evans of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Urban Affairs was among representatives of government, labor and management on hand to announce the project at a press conference here.

He reported that the AFL-CIO Mortgage Investment Trust Fund has agreed to furnish interim construction mortgage financing to the amount of $650,000 to Jeff-Vander Lou, Inc., a neighborhood non-profit organization that initiated the project.

The Dept. of Urban Affairs oversees the operations of the fund, which was created by the AFL-CIO in 1964 to help finance the construction of necessary and socially desirable housing.

Jeff-Vander Lou gets its name from the fact that the area involved is bounded by Jefferson, Vandeventer, St. Louis and Delmar streets. Most of the residents of the area are Negroes.

Evans said his office has been working with Jeff-Vander Lou and other agencies here since June to set up the program. He indicated that the organization's close ties

(Continued on Page 8)

Senate Foes Of Filibuster Open Drive

By David L. Perlman

A new rules reform drive got under way in the Senate with bipartisan sponsorship and labor support.

Its goal is to curtail filibusters by changing the Senate's Rule 22 to impose "realistic limitations on debate."

The present rule requires a two-thirds vote to limit debate. It allows 34 of the 100 senators to talk a bill to death. That has been the fate, in recent years, of the bill to repeal the open shop Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act, important civil rights legislation, and the confirmation of a Chief Justice of the United States.

Senators Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) and Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), co-leaders of the rules reform drive, said in a letter to their colleagues that the mere threat of a filibuster has been used to weaken as well as defeat bills and the inability to bring legislation to a vote has subjected the Senate to "ridicule."

The fight for rules reform, they said, must be made at the start of a new Congress because that is the one time that a majority of the Senate can act on a rules change without being frustrated by a minority filibuster.

Senators supporting rules reform face an uphill fight to convince a majority of the Senate to use its power to act or, alternatively, to convince two-thirds to use the cloture procedure of the old rules to break a filibuster and bring rules change proposals to a vote.

Both courses were tried unsuccessfully in 1967, at the start of the 90th Congress.

The background of the dispute goes back even further.

Rules reform leaders have argued over the years that at the start of a new Congress a majority of the Senate has a constitutional right to adopt new rules and close debate by majority vote.

Richard M. Nixon, when he was Vice President in the 1950s, supported this argument in advisory opinions given in his role as presiding officer of the Senate. But at that time reform advocates were unable to muster a majority to take advantage of the opportunity.

When Lyndon B. Johnson was

(Continued on Page 7)

Year-End Review:

Jobless Rate for '68 Dips to 15-Year Low

By Duane Emme

The nation's unemployment situation improved in 1968 with the jobless rate dropping to a 15-year low although the gain in total employment was less than in two of three previous years.

These were highlights of a "year in review" analysis released by the Labor Dept. along with a December report showing the jobless rate for the month unchanged from November at 3.3 percent.

Unemployment in December was 2.4 million, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said. The figure represented a decrease of 150,000 over the month.

Nonfarm payroll employment increased by 265,000 more than seasonally expected in December to a record 70 million, marking the third consecutive month of job gains.

The review section reported that the jobless rate averaged 3.6 percent in 1968 for the lowest yearly average since 1953. The rate averaged 3.8 percent in 1966 and 1967.

Unemployment rates for adult men edged down from 2.3 to 2.2 percent between 1967 and 1968. For adult women, the rate dropped from 4.2 to 3.8 percent. The high jobless rate for teenagers remained virtually unchanged at 12.7 percent.

Although the non-white unemployment rate dropped more sharply than that for whites in 1968, the non-white rate continued to be more than double the white rate, as it has been in recent years.

The non-white rate fell from 7.4 percent in 1967 to 6.7 percent in 1968, while the white rate declined from 3.4 to 3.2 percent.

Unemployment averaged 2.8 million in 1968, a drop of 150,000 from the 1967 average. All of the decline occurred among adult workers, BLS said, noting that there had been no noticeable drop in teenage joblessness for the last 3 years.

The number of workers unemployed 15 weeks or longer averaged

(Continued on Page 2)

Court Finds Stevens Still Union-Busting

J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., has "persisted in maintaining an anti-union atmosphere" in its textile plants in spite of all court orders to the contrary, a federal appeals court has held in two new rulings against the giant chain, a major government contractor.

A three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond, Va., enforced orders of the National Labor Relations Board for the reinstatement of 20 members of the Textile Workers Union of America at three Stevens plants in Greenville, S.C., Rock Hill, S.C., and Roanoke Rapids, N.C.

Stevens fired the 20 employes and seven others in 1965 and 1966 as part of a continuing campaign to destroy all interest in union membership. The decision brings to four the number

(Continued on Page 3)

Medicare Coverage Urged for Disabled

Extension of Medicare coverage to persons receiving disability benefits under social security has been called for by a Health, Education & Welfare advisory council and HEW Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen.

The council—composed of leaders in business, education, medicine and labor—made the proposal a key recommendation in a 63-page report submitted to Cohen.

In a letter to Congress sent with the report, Cohen said he "wholeheartedly" supports the extension and urged prompt action by lawmakers in the matter.

He wrote House Speaker John W. McCormack that the additional Medicare disbursements would amount to about $2 billion a year for 2 million disabled people—"workers, widows and widowers, and adults disabled since childhood."

The report was prepared by the Advisory Council on Health Insurance for the Disabled which was set up by the 1967 amendments to the Social Security Act.

The council was headed by Henry H. Kessler, director of Kessler Institute for Rehabilitation. Its labor representatives were AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman; Anthony G. Weinlein, assistant to the president, Service Employes Union, and William O. Kuhl, research director, Boilermakers. Kuhl replaced Morris Brand, medical director of the Sidney Hillman Health Center, New York, who died before the council completed its work.

The council recommended that the "full range" of Medicare protection be made available to disabled persons on the basis of a three-month waiting period, instead of the six-month yardstick for disability benefits under social security.

Cohen not only supported the recommendation but also urged Congress to cut the waiting period for cash disability insurance benefits to three months to conform with

(Continued on Page 6)

Struck Refineries Held Hazard to Public Safety

The oil industry's determination to "break a legitimate strike" of 60,000 employes has created a grave danger to public safety, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany charged as the strike of Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers moved into its second week.

"At the expense of public safety," Meany said, "the companies are operating 80 to 90 oil refineries and other installations with a few supervisors, and some clerks assigned strike-breaking duties."

The properties—always "hazardous work places—are today dangerously undermanned," said Meany, who pointed out that "those manning the jobs are untrained, unskilled and unable to cope adequately with the risks involved."

The federation president said OCAW has "repeatedly and publicly warned of the dangers in these installations even under ordinary circumstances."

Last year, he said, when the labor movement was "pleading with the

(Continued on Page 2)

Coordinated Talks Produce Revere Pacts

Five years of patient effort toward "true coordinated bargaining" at Revere Copper & Brass, Inc., produced contract settlements totaling 93 cents an hour over three years for members of four unions, the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. announced.

IUD first reached agreement with Revere at New Bedford, Mass., then applied the terms to other Revere contracts. Unions involved are the Machinists at Baltimore, Md., Clinton, Ill., and Oneonta, Ala., the latter after a 40-day strike; the Steelworkers at Los Angeles and the Auto Workers at Chicago, Detroit and New Bedford.

All the contracts now have a common expiration date—Oct. 31, 1970—which applies also to contracts negotiated earlier by the IAM at Newport, Ark., and by the Mechanics Educational Society of America.

The IUD said it expects that in future Revere management will negotiate the economic package for all the coordinating unions at a single bargaining table.

Coordination at Revere began five years ago with an information center through which the various unions exchanged reports on separate bargaining sessions. Two years later, functional coordination was reached union by union. This time, coordinated committees met with management one by one in the same location, and in effect arrived at a common agreement at substantially the sime time, the unions reported.

Despite some employer resistance, the National Labor Relations Board has upheld the right of unions to choose their own negotiators, including those from other unions.

NEWSPAPER GUILD members in Washington, D.C., picket the Associated Press—but make clear in a companion picket sign that their quarrel is not with the Machinists, whose union headquarters are in the same building. AP staffers Lee Garrett and Gardner Bridge carry the joint message.

Jobless Rate for '68 Down to 15-Year Low

(Continued from Page 1)

400,000 in 1968, down 50,000 from the previous year. This figure, too, was a low since 1953.

Total employment averaged 75.9 million last year, 1.5 million higher than in 1967. This represented a slightly greater advance than occurred between 1966 and 1967, but was substantially lower than the gains in 1966 and 1965, BLS reported.

Nonfarm payroll employment averaged 68.1 million for the year, a gain of 2.1 million from 1967. The increase was slightly above that of the previous year, but about 1.1 million less than was shown between 1965 and 1966.

All major industry divisions registered employment growth in 1968, but services, trade and government accounted for about four-fifths of the total advance.

Manufacturing employment increased by 300,000 in 1968 to an average of 19.7 million for the year, a record high. Although the increase was greater than registered in 1967, it was below the average 485,000 annual increase for 1961-1968.

Gross weekly earnings for the nation's rank and file workers averaged nearly $108 in 1968, up $5.89 from 1967. The increase, 5.8 percent, was the largest since 1951. The gain was due entirely to an increase in hourly earnings, as the average workweek in 1968 was 37.8 hours, down two-tenths.

In manufacturing, the workweek departed from the overall trend of 1968. It was 40.7 hours, a one-tenth of an hour increase from 1967. Overtime in manufacturing averaged 3.6 hours a week in 1968, up two-tenths of an hour.

The total civilian labor force reached 78.7 million in 1968, a pickup of 1.4 million over 1967, BLS said. The 1968 rise was the second largest in the 1960s but about 200,000 below the record gain of 1967.

These were some further details of the report for December:

The jobless rates for married men and full-time workers declined to 1.4 and 2.7 percent, respectively. Unemployment rates for adult women (3.5 percent) and teenagers (12.6 percent) were not significantly changed. The rates for non-white and white workers were 6 and 2.9 percent, respectively, both down from November.

Nearly all major industry division shared in the employment advance for the month. Construction and state and local government categories had seasonally adjusted job gains of 80,000 each, while manufacturing and services each increased by 60,000. Employment in transportation and public utilities declined slightly over the month.

Average weekly hours of work for rank-and-file employes rose by one-tenth of an hour from November to 37.6 hours, seasonally adjusted, with the increase attributed primarily to a sharp rise in the workweek in construction.

Average hourly earnings rose 1 cent from November to $2.93 and average weekly earnings were up $1.25 to $110.75, with the largest gain—$10—occurring in construction.

At 79.1 million, the civilian labor force was 425,000 less than seasonally expected.

Struck Refineries Held Hazard to Public Safety

(Continued from Page 1)

Congress to adopt federal factory safety standards, the OCAW testified to dangerous undermanning and improper maintenance of refineries and other installations under normal conditions."

Congress "failed to act; our pleas went unheeded, and now the companies are compounding the risk each day they operate these facilities without skilled, trained workers," Meany declared.

Meany said "this arrogant display of indifference to the public welfare is typical of the manner in which this industry treats its employes." Noting that the companies waited "until the 11th hour of negotiations to make any offer, and then made one that was patently inadequate," he added:

"This industry is one of the most profitable in America, and has been favored by Congress with special tax consideration beyond any other group in our society. Yet it spurns the needs of its employes and contemptuously endangers the public in its pursuit of ever greater profit."

Approximately a third of OCAW's total U.S. and Canadian membership is on strike. Members of oil locals, along with members of AFL-CIO craft unions, struck Jan. 4, three days after 435 contracts with most of the 20 major firms, and numerous smaller ones, had expired.

OCAW Pres. A. F. Grospiron said the union presented its proposals last July but "it was well into December before the first company proposals were made. The companies offered about a third of what we proposed, and would not move up from that position."

"Workers with any self-respect could not tolerate that," Grospiron stressed.

Most strikers work in oil refineries, which make gasoline, fuel oil and other products from petroleum. When they walked out, supervisory, professional and clerical workers were ordered by management to operate the refineries.

Metal Trades Council members struck the Cities Service refinery at Lake Charles, La. At several places, craft unions have joined the OCAW strikers in halting work for the duration of the dispute.

OCAW said the wage and benefit increases sought by the union would not compel consumer price increases because raises would be offset by increased productivity. The total labor cost of refining gasoline is 1 and one-twentieth cents per gallon, the union reported.

It said this is the first general oil strike since 1952. It reported "generally excellent" cooperation from other unions, and expressed appreciation to all of the unions which cooperated.

Union committees have held some meetings with managements since the walkout began and are ready to resume talks "anywhere, anytime," OCAW said.

Operations of NLRB Described in Pamphlet

Services performed by the National Labor Relations Board are described by the board in a new pamphlet titled "To Protect the Rights of the Public."

NLRB representation elections each year total more than 8,000, with upwards of 500,000 workers participating.

Basis of U.S. Policy:

Job Guarantee Urged By Manpower Panel

A panel of prominent university economists has urged a "guaranteed employment" policy as a foundation for the nation's manpower programs.

It called also for consolidation of the nation's scattered job training programs with "one-stop" service centers in local communities.

It rejected tax credits, tax incentives or guaranteed income plans as a substitute for "sustained, federally supported and comprehensive manpower services" to aid the disadvantaged.

The study was made by the National Manpower Policy Task Force, a nonpartisan private group financed by foundation and government grants. It is headed by Harvard University Prof. John T. Dunlop.

The task force presented its findings to George P. Shultz, who will be secretary of labor in the Nixon Cabinet. Shultz, himself a noted university economist, was at one time a member of the study group but did not take part in preparing its current report.

Existing manpower programs, scattered among various government agencies, "must be assessed, adjusted and coordinated; but their goals and impetus must not be lost," the report stressed. It added:

"Additional funds would of course be desirable. What is needed even more is an orderly commitment of resources to allow states and communities to plan and implement their manpower programs according to their own needs and contributing their own funds, but with additional resources and under minimal standards provided by the federal government."

The report warned that restrictive monetary and fiscal policies intended to control inflation would "almost certainly" increase the national unemployment rate, "with disproportionate increases in unemployment among the less-skilled and less-educated members of the labor force and among those who are heavily concentrated in the central cores of the big cities."

It expressed strong support for "national minimum standards of income maintenance at an adequate level for all of those who cannot or should not work." But for the able-bodied, the report stressed, the answer is full employment in both the private and public sectors.

The task force questioned the practicality of tax credits. It noted that credits would both result in loss of government revenue and require detailed safeguards "to prevent subsidization of training that would have been undertaken even in the absence of the tax credit, to insure that opportunities are opened for the disadvantaged, and to prevent other possible abuses."

The "single most important condition for a successful manpower policy," the report declared, is "a high level of effective demand, maintained through appropriate monetary and fiscal policies."

It urged the new Administration to look ahead to the job impact of returning Viet Nam servicemen and possible reduced military production.

"If, as all of us hope, the Viet Nam war is phased out, the labor market outlook is for rising competition for available lower-level jobs and increasing hardships for those who, in a peacetime economy, are among the last hired and the first fired."

In addition, the report cautioned, "communities concentrating on military production will also face substantial problems of adjustment."

Rights Group Sets Humphrey Tribute

A dinner celebrating the 20th anniversary of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and honoring Hubert H. Humphrey will be held in Washington, Jan. 28.

The Leadership Conference, a coalition of 115 national labor, civil rights, religious and civic groups, has mobilized national support for all the major civil rights bills of the last two decades. It has also organized national campaigns in support of minimum wage, housing, education and a number of labor and social welfare bills.

IAM Steps Up Talks At McDonnell Douglas

St. Louis—The Machinists stepped up the pace of bargaining with the McDonnell Douglas Corp. here after winning certification as bargaining agent for 20,000 hourly employes of the big aerospace manufacturer.

Union and management representatives had been meeting regularly but contract talks on money items were postponed until the question of representation was settled, IAM District 837 Pres. Lou Brock reported.

Employes will meet Jan. 12 to hear reports on negotiations and set the future course of action, Brock said.

The National Labor Relations Board certified the IAM as the legal representative of McDonnell Douglas workers and overruled all pending objections to three representation elections that had delayed negotiations. The objections had been filed by Technical Employes of Aerospace Manufacturers (TEAM), a rebel union organization at the plant which had sought the aid of the Teamsters.

In the first of three recent elections, the Auto Workers polled the lowest vote and were eliminated. A runoff election resulted in a tie vote for the IAM and TEAM. In the final election, the vote was 9,262 for District 837 and 8,853 for TEAM. A few ballots were challenged but did not affect the results.

Four objections by TEAM were overruled by the NLRB regional director on the ground that his investigation disclosed no evidence to support the charges.

While negotiations continue, District 837 members may dial a "hot line" number to IAM headquarters for progress reports on the talks.

At least once daily, a two-minute message on negotiations is recorded by Brock. Members may get the message on one of 10 telephones reached by dialing the number. For further information on major points a member can call district headquarters directly, Brock said.

McDonnell Douglas employes are working under an extension of the IAM contract that was scheduled to expire Nov. 3.

Court Upholds NLRB:

J.P. Stevens Found Still Union-Busting

(Continued from Page 1)

of court rulings against the Stevens chain. Two other cases await decision.

TWUA Pres. William Pollock, noting that all the cases have been before the NLRB and the courts for more than five years, called on the government to "take drastic steps to bring such wilful defiance to a halt." This could be done, Pollock said, by a presidential order denying government contracts to flagrant law violators such as Stevens.

"Once again," Pollock said, "we have a dramatic example of the inequity of a law which allows an employer to reap the benefits of his violations while employes whose rights have been violated suffer the extreme penalties of joblessness."

Judge John D. Butzner, Jr., who wrote the decision in the two latest Stevens cases, said the board found substantial evidence of company wrongdoing and acted within its rights in most respects.

Enforcing the NLRB order for reinstatement of 20 fired workers, the court also took note of the fact that Stevens had twice before been found guilty of breaking the labor law. It sustained an NLRB order requiring Stevens to:

- Mail notices that it intends to comply with the NLRB cease-and-desist order to all employes of the plants involved, and read such notices at plant meetings on company time.
- Give the TWUA access to bulletin boards of all its Carolina plants for a year.
- Furnish the union with address lists of all employes in the plants involved.

The court found the evidence of Stevens' illegal conduct "substantial." Prohibited conduct, the judges said, included "threats of reprisal, promises of benefits, interrogation, creating the impression of surveillance, and attempting to coerce an employe to remove union insignia."

'Ominous' Trend

Judge Herbert S. Boreman dissented from the majority's finding on remedies. Requiring Stevens to give the union access to company bulletin boards and provide the names and addresses of employes he called "an ominous trend in newly devised directives." He did, however, concur in other findings of illegal conduct by Stevens.

The rulings involve company union-smashing attempts between Apr. 16, 1965, and August 1966. Two previous findings against the firm were denied review by the Supreme Court, and some illegally fired employes have been recalled with backpay of more than $800,000. The NLRB upheld union charges in a fifth Stevens case, and an NLRB trial examiner found management guilty of unlawful acts in Stevens No. 6.

HANDICRAFT INSTRUCTION for retarded youths at the School for Social Development in Minneapolis is one of several programs operated by the Senior Aides of the Minneapolis AFL-CIO. Visiting the school's workshop on an inspection tour are officials of the central labor body, from left, Organizer Tom Loberg, Pres. Jerry Froehlig and William Minish, Senior Aide Project director. Senior Aide handicraft instructor Margaret Wold is seated second from right.

AFGE Files Charge Against Defense Aide

Unfair labor practice charges have been filed by the American Federation of Government Employes against a high-ranking Defense Dept. official accused of retaliation against a local union president and refusal to meet with the union.

AFGE Pres. John F. Griner asked the Defense Dept. to remedy both the reprisal action and the basic issue involved in the dispute—the replacement of civilian by military officers in top jobs of the department's public affairs division.

Griner said AFGE Local 2, which holds exclusive bargaining rights for the public affairs employes, had sought without success for a 10-month period to meet with the assistant secretary of defense for public affairs, Phil G. Goulding, to discuss the issue.

The union contract specifically calls for regular meetings "for the settlement of outstanding problems," Griner noted.

Instead, he said, Local 2 Pres. William McNamara was transferred from the Defense Dept. to the Dept. of the Army—with his previous duties to be taken over by a military officer.

Griner said the AFGE considers the dispute a national issue because it violates laws and department directives designed to prevent the use of military personnel as substitutes for civilian employes.

100 Cities Pass Laws Curbing Strikebreakers

Minneapolis—A milestone in labor's fight to restrict professional strikebreakers was passed when this city became the 100th U.S. community to approve a Citizens' Job Protection ordinance.

The statute, enacted by the city council, makes it illegal to use professional strikebreakers in local labor disputes. It was introduced by Alderman Lloyd C. Anderson, member of the Typographical Union.

The ITU and other printing trades unions are pressing the drive to enact such ordinances in cities across the country. Previously they had convinced neighboring St. Paul to pass a similar measure, and after Minneapolis acted, Lincoln, Ill., made it 101.

Earlier, Danville, Ill., had become the 98th city to enact an anti-strikebreaker ordinance. Typically it makes it illegal to "recruit, procure, supply or refer" any person who customarily and repeatedly offers himself for employment to replace a worker involved in a labor dispute.

Also in violation, under the ordinance, is the person, agency, partnership, firm or corporation which hires or recruits a strikebreaker in such a dispute. Violators may be fined up to $500 for each day on which they continue to violate the law.

Dock Strikers Pause To Load Relief Ship

New York—Striking members of the Longshoremen reported for duty at a Brooklyn pier to help load the S.S. Forra with food and supplies for citizens of war-ravaged Biafra.

A food and fund-raising drive headed by Abe Nathan, Israeli plane pilot who has flown numerous "peace missions," is under way here to gather about 2,800 more tons of supplies. The ship already carried 400 tons of food from the Netherlands and Great Britain when it arrived at Pier 4, Bush Terminal.

John Vissell of ILA Local 1814 said his men are as united in their willingness to load the relief ship as they are to maintain the strike until they win acceptable terms.

The Biafra drive is sponsored also by Catholic Relief Services, CARE, the Intl. Rescue Committee, the Biafra Christmas Ship Fund of Canada and other groups in Israel, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom.

The strike of ILA members in 20 ports on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts started Dec. 21 after an earlier walkout of 75,000 ILA members had been halted by a Taft-Hartley court injunction. Talks were suspended Dec. 29 and this week the New York Shipping Association asked Pres. Johnson in a telegram to recommend that Congress intervene in the strike. The union in turn urged management to bargain in good faith.

Meaningful progress has been held up by the refusal of some "outport" employers to accept the uniform wage rates, hours and rules for containerized cargoes agreed to by New York employers, according to the union. The shipping association has been unwilling, or unable, to get agreement from employers in other ports on basic contract terms, the union said.

IUD President Puts Emphasis On Services

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. is moving toward a future "more meaningful than its past" by concentrating on its purpose rather than its "image," IUD Pres. I. W. Abel has emphasized.

Abel's look to the future came in a message accompanying the first issue of IUD Newsletter, a publication to be distributed monthly to some 20,000 local and national officers of IUD affiliates.

Abel reported that IUD's "ongoing operation" in bargaining and organizing is achieving "marked success." But, he emphasized, "this is not good enough. We are going to do better . . . by concentrating our whole attention on the real purpose of the IUD—service to the industrial unions which comprise it, all of them, small and large alike."

Among developments reported by the newsletter was the appointment of Elliot Bredhoff, a veteran union attorney and former member of Arthur Goldberg's law firm, as IUD general counsel.

Birchers Using 'Housewife' Facade In Attempt to Crush Grape Boycott

If there are any housewives in an organization called Housewives United to Protect Food Supply, you'll probably find them at a local cell meeting of the John Birch Society.

It's all part of a desperate attempt to counter the effectiveness of the labor-church boycott of struck California grapes.

Openly identified with the "buy grapes" campaign are the National Right to Work Committee and the Farm Bureau Federation—long-time allies in union-busting campaigns.

The Birch Society, however, is apparently hiding behind the front name of "Housewives United" to do its part to discredit the boycott.

Identical leaflets in several cities, signed by the mysterious "housewives" group charge that the grape boycott is inspired and financed by the Communists and claim that food prices will "skyrocket" if it is successful.

Leaflets distributed in the New York area bear only a Post Office box number in Larchmont, N.Y. But the same leaflet, signed by the same Housewives United group, passed out in front of Atlanta supermarkets, carried a local address for the organization — 3081 Maple Drive, NE, in Atlanta.

AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Oliver Singleton, who is based in Atlanta, drove out to the address.

He found there an American Opinion Book Store, one of the chain of John Birch Society bookstores throughout the nation.

It carried the usual assortment of right-wing extremist literature—and stacks of leaflets attacking the grape boycott.

A hint of the reason for the stepped-up right-wing attack on the grape boycott came in an editorial reprinted in the national newsletter of the Right to Work Committee.

The editorial, appropriately, was from the Los Angeles Herald Examiner, the struck Hearst newspaper which has waged a union-busting campaign against its workers for more than a year.

Complained the Herald Examiner: "The boycott has cut the pickers' workweek from a normal six days at the season's peak to four days."

The boycott, of course, is the result of a refusal by California grape growers to recognize the right of their workers to union representation—and the fact that farm workers don't have the protection of the National Labor Relations Act.

But the "work" committee quotes a "loyal" grape worker it sent on a nationwide tour to counter the boycott as telling his audiences, "the root of our problem is lack of a right to work law."

THOMAS R. DONAHUE, assistant secretary of labor, will return to the Service Employes Union as executive secretary, a new post. Donahue had been executive assistant to the president of the SEIU before he was named to the Labor Dept. position by Pres. Johnson in 1967.

Thomas R. Owens Dies, Rubber Union Pioneer

Thomas R. Owens, former miner who helped build the Rubber Workers and served as its Washington legislative representative until his retirement in 1956, died after a lengthy illness. He was a brother of Sec.-Treas. John Owens of the Mine Workers.

The union's 1956 convention said of T. R. Owens in a resolution adopted by unanimous vote that "his advice, guidance and counsel during the infancy of the URW was of great value because of his experiences in the struggle of the Miner's Union to establish unionism."

For a Responsive Congress

THE OPENING DAYS of the first session of the 91st Congress hold out the hope that the country's mood of impatience and the search for positive change has found its way up to Capitol Hill.

The election by party caucuses of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) and Sen. Hugh Scott (R-Pa.) as party whips was a bracing tonic for the liberal forces in the Senate and throughout the country. What it will produce in terms of substantive and progressive legislation is still to be seen. But men of liberal persuasion in leadership posts is a definite gain for the nation.

The challenge to the Electoral College system—specifically the freedom of an elector to cast his vote as he pleases without regard to the popular vote in the state—also is a plus. Though the challenge went down to defeat it spotlighted a serious defect in the country's democratic electoral structure and renewed hopes for change and reform.

The pay raise voted by the House for the office of the President and the strong likelihood of pay increases for members of Congress and high government officials is also a positive change for the better, for it will create a greater degree of financial independence and compensate public officials in terms of the responsibilities they shoulder.

UPCOMING is the continuing battle to amend the Senate's filibuster rule, to lessen the ability of a minority to impede and block action on vital legislation supported by a majority of the Senate.

On the House side the Republicans have in a sense brought new and younger men into leadership while the Democrats are moving towards making the congressional wing of the party perhaps more responsive to new approaches and ideas through monthly party caucuses.

All this adds up to Congress responding mildly in a structural and party sense to the continuing need for change. There are obviously many more and deeper changes needed if the Congress is to respond in modern terms to the needs of our times.

These changes involve a general legislative reorganization of Congress—the last major reorganization was effected in 1946; restoration of the 21-day rule in the House Rules Committee; financing of presidential and other campaigns; reduction in the voting age; provisions for television debates.

The 1968 elections produced only minor changes in the makeup of the 91st Congress in terms of its predecessor. But Congress, despite its complex structures and traditions, is a responsive body and the opening days have indicated a change in tone—if not in substance.

The change is hopefully indicative that the liberal forces will be a mite better organized and better able to articulate their position as the legislative issues move onto center stage.

In the continuing struggle with the conservative coalition any strengthening or improvement in the liberal bloc is a gain.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

*George M. Harrison	David Dubinsky	Joseph Curran
M. A. Hutcheson	Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky
A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton
Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	Paul Hall
Herman D. Kenin	*John J. Grogan	I. W. Abel
P. L. Siemiller	David Sullivan	Hunter P. Wharton
Paul Jennings	A. J. DeAndrade	Ralph Helstein
William Pollock	Max Greenberg	John H. Lyons

Deceased*

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, January 11, 1969 No. 2

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO

Where It Hurts

Claim Voter Mandate:

Conservatives Pressure Nixon To Gut Progressive Programs

THE EXTREME CONSERVATIVES in the Republican party are getting worried that Pres.-elect Richard M. Nixon is going to be too "liberal" for their taste and already are warning him that they want an open war on the Democratic programs of the past 36 years.

What they are dreading, they declare, is a return to the type of Administration that Pres. Eisenhower gave the nation—an Administration which they claim made the "New Deal" acceptable to the American people instead of killing it.

In fact, the American Conservative Union already is telling Nixon that unless he does as they think he should, he may turn out to be "the first President since Herbert Hoover to be denied reelection to a second term."

All these dire warnings are contained in a pamphlet written by highly conservative Dr. Philip Crane and issued by the ACU which thinks that Nixon got a conservative "mandate" during the November election and is determined not to let him off the conservative hook.

For Dr. Crane, the Eisenhower Administration was a sadly missed boat, a gorgeous opportunity to undo the New and Fair Deals which failed because of Eisenhower's attachment to the liberal wing of the Republican party. Nor does Dr. Crane ever forget that Nixon was a part of the Eisenhower Administration which so far as Dr. Crane is concerned was a "disaster."

Dr. Crane and the ACU want Nixon to restrain inflation without paying any attention to the "new economics" and the responsibility of government to "manage" the economy.

They want him to crack down on the Supreme Court through legislation that would control the court's appellate jurisdiction and they want Nixon to appoint members to the court who will be "hard-line constitutionalists." They figure that there will be at least four vacancies in the court during the next four years and that Nixon will be able to re-make it along lines dear to conservatives.

AGAIN CRANE and the ACU complain that the Republican platform has too many references to "Education," "Jobs," "The Poor," "Health," "The Elderly" for conservatives "to be comfortable." They want complete repudiation of the New Deal premise that the national government has responsibility in these fields.

Furthermore, they inveigh at "such economic injustice as minimum wage laws" and the "social injustice of urban renewal."

What they really like, Crane and the ACU reveal, is the kind of philosophy enunciated by Gov. Ronald Reagan of California who wants the United States to turn to "the best brains of industry" and private enterprise to solve all its problems.

By combining the Wallace vote with the Nixon vote, the ACU pamphlet insists that Nixon now has a "conservative mandate" to kill all the progressive legislation of the past. Yet, in the same pamphlet, the ACU complains that the Republican platform gives the "uneasy feeling . . . that the Republicans tried again to ask for votes on the 'me-too' basis of a claim that they could do a better job of managing the 'Great Society'."

We have here then the totally contradictory claim that Nixon has a conservative "mandate" on the one hand and that, on the other, he won the election on a "me-too" platform, promising to carry out the liberal "Great Society" better than the Democrats.

This contradiction, however, doesn't seem to bother either Dr. Crane or the ACU. Nor does the true meaning of Herbert Hoover's defeat in 1931 seem to have sunk in, either. Both apparently are determined to plunge ahead in their war against progressive legislation.

Nixon is scarcely a flaming liberal. That he will follow the ACU blindly is doubtful. But the American voter might just as well discover how far back into the past some American conservatives want him to go. (PAI)

Senior Citizens Council Cites Sec. Wilbur Cohen

Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen has been cited by the National Council of Senior Citizens for "magnificent efforts to make a better life for the nation's poor, infirm and elderly."

The citation will appear on the NCSC's Aime Forand award to be presented to Cohen at the council's eighth annual convention in June. The award is named for the retired Rhode Island congressman who led early legislative battles for Medicare.

In announcing the award, the NCSC's executive board said the retiring HEW secretary will also receive the council's first lifetime gold card membership.

Shultz Stresses Adaptability:

Collective Bargaining System Tested by Fresh Challenges

The following is excerpted from the presidential address by George P. Shultz, secretary of labor-designate, to the annual winter meeting of the Industrial Relations Research Association in Chicago.

IN A FUNDAMENTAL SENSE, the field of industrial relations is concerned with the constructive management of change in the work place, the labor market, and at the bargaining table. The great achievement of personnel management and collective bargaining in this country has been the development of orderly procedures for the determination of wages and working conditions and for the resolution of day-to-day grievances.

These procedures have not worked without friction, nor have they eliminated the recurrence of problems that appear to defy rational solution. Perfection is as elusive a goal in industrial relations as it is in other areas of organized human activity. Nonetheless, the existing system of industrial relations has generally performed well and has helped to facilitate institutional changes which, in other nations, have been marked by widespread conflict and enduring schisms in society.

In the past decade, the economy has been transformed by pervasive technological and structural changes and the composition of the labor force is rapidly shifting in age, sex, education, and residential patterns. With a few notable exceptions (and I'll probably be much more conscious of these exceptions a year from now) the parties have managed the change with skill and the absence of destructive conflict. Seniority systems have been altered to reallocate employment opportunities, new systems of consultation have evolved, and a varietv of fringe benefits have been devised to cushion the impact of change on the workers.

By and large, the parties have succeeded in balancing equity with efficiency so that no Luddites have come forth to destroy the machines. Even in major confrontations, there has been a general willingness to abide by implicit rules of behavior which limit the scope and intensity of the dispute.

These achievements do not constitute a cause for self-congratulation nor the dismantling of institutes for the study of industrial relations. As in other sectors of society, labor-management institutions are now under intense pressure both from within and without. As a dean, I can look back with nostalgia on the days when we complained about apathetic students. In labor-management relations as well, there is evidence of change and conflict which we have yet to identify and fully understand.

The emergence of conglomerate firms and the pressure for coalition bargaining are giving a new face to collective bargaining in many important sectors of the economy. The upsurge of union organization in the public sector at all levels has been accompanied by distressing strikes and will have a profound effect on public administration and the allocation of public resources.

WITHIN THE UNIONS themselves, the apparent increase in the number of contracts negotiated by the leadership but rejected by the rank and file provides evidence that established procedures for decision-making in collective bargaining may require some adjustments to reflect the divergent interests of the membership.

Within the plants and the labor market, black workers, civil rights groups, young workers, lady workers, and craft workers are all seeking changes in the rules that have governed our behavior over a long period of time.

And within government, the acceptance of new responsibilities, particularly in the manpower area, means that existing administrative arrangements will have to be continually reviewed in order to permit the maximum and efficient attainment of legislative goals.

These challenges to the policymaker should constitute both a goad and an opportunity to researchers in industrial relations. For example, there is an immediate need to study methods of handling union-management relations in the public sector. We must determine the extent to which private sector experience is transferable and can be sufficiently creative to develop procedures adapted to the complexities of public administration.

Some accepted concepts of collective bargaining must also be modified or redefined. For many years, we have viewed collective bargaining essentially as a two-party situation, carried out by monolithic institutions. Such a simplified notion no longer stands the test of reality, if it ever did. Instead coalitions and sub-groups exist on both sides and many external groups seek a "piece of the action" at the bargaining table, particularly in the public sector. What methods can be devised to permit the expression of special group interests within the work place and at the bargaining table? What is the relationship between the structure of collective bargaining and the incidence of strikes and contract rejections? What will be the effect of coalition bargaining and expanded employer alliances?

Essentially, the problem is one of opening new channels for the expression of diverse interests in collective bargaining and in the labor market and of re-examining those government policies that make it difficult for the parties to recognize diversity of worker interests. In the absence of such channels, frustration and conflict will result.

The essence of the American system of industrial relations has been its capacity for developing procedures for change while keeping conflict at tolerable levels. These new challenges, to policymakers and to those engaged in academic research, will test this capacity and require creativity in modifying the structure and conduct of bargaining.

Coupled With Jobs, Wages:

Manpower Programs Set Stage For Curing Unemployment Ills

THE SOLUTION to hard-core unemployment is the solid prospect of "decent jobs at decent wages," a union manpower expert declared. That, he contended, is the motivation needed to get the disadvantaged to enter and complete training programs.

Lacking education and job experience, "you have to start from scratch in propelling" them toward jobs, said Julius Rothman, president of the Human Resources Development Institute, recently established by the AFL-CIO.

But, Rothman cautioned, "you can't deal with this group in terms of dead-end employment" at menial tasks for "wages so low that they offer no real hope." He stressed the need to develop "job ladders," so that these new workers will be able to move up as they gain skill and experience.

Rothman was questioned by reporters on the AFL-CIO-produced public affairs program, Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

The unionist said the initial aim of HRDI will be to help draw together the many existing manpower programs in 50 urban centers around the country, see that they are operating as they should, as well as "move organized labor — our local unions—in the direction of promoting manpower programs on their own." He said the effort is already under way in 10 cities, that 25 more will be in operation by mid-February and the other 15 by April 1.

ROTHMAN PRAISED the international and local unions, building trades councils and other union groups for the "excellent cooperation" they are giving the institute's program — "something they needed and wanted." They are "particularly happy to be able to get more deeply involved in manpower operations," he said.

Heretofore, he said, unions have "sort of felt that manpower programs were business' responsibility, and that while they have been consulted, it's been a sort of second cousin type thing—at arms length."

"From now on," he declared, "we are going to be involved directly, and immediately, and closely in the manpower programs at the local community level."

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE TIME IS FAST approaching when the Senate of the United States will "advise and consent" on the appointments of Pres.-elect Nixon.

Traditionally, Presidents-elect have had little trouble getting their new Cabinets approved by the Senate. In fact, in our entire history as a nation, only seven Cabinet appointments have been rejected by the Senate.

The most recent case was in 1959 when Pres. Eisenhower's appointment of Lewis Strauss for secretary of commerce was rejected by a roll call vote of 46 to 49.

There were a number of reasons for the opposition to Strauss. He had served as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and public power advocates felt that his tie-in with the Dixon-Yates private power combine was a move to undermine the Tennessee Valley Authority.

In 1925 Calvin Coolidge was both President and President-elect. He sought to name a new attorney general, a Michigan attorney, Charles Warren.

It was disclosed by the liberal members of the Senate that Warren was "extremely close" to the American Sugar Refining Co. and the "sugar trust."

Questions were raised about conflict of interest and whether Warren was fit to administer the anti-trust laws. Supporters of Warren said that the President should have "free choice" in the selection of his advisers.

However, the Senate did not agree and Warren was rejected by a 40 to 40 vote. Coolidge resubmitted the nomination and it was turned down the second time by 46 to 39.

These two important tidbits of recent history should weigh heavily on the mind of Nixon as he seeks to win confirmation of his own choices.

Already conflict of interest allegations have been raised against two of his appointees.

The most serious is against Gov. Walter J. Hickel of Alaska, designated as secretary of interior.

The Interior Dept. has the responsibility of safeguarding the nation's natural resources. Some senators have contended that Hickel is too close to the oil interests, that he advocates giving them more control over natural resources and that he is not sufficiently concerned with conservation.

There is some unhappiness, also, with his approach on national standards in the fight against water pollution.

Some opposition has been raised, too, against Gov. John Volpe of Massachusetts, named as secretary of transportation. The contention is that the former construction executive has been too close to highway interests.

THE SERIOUSNESS with which the Senate weighs Cabinet appointments these days and the vital role that Cabinet members play in the Executive Branch of government—in administration if not in policy—is in marked contrast to the early role of the Cabinet.

There is no use of the term "Cabinet" in the Constitution, which says only that the President shall name personal assistants or secretaries to offices created by acts of Congress and that these must be confirmed by the Senate. The first time the word "Cabinet" appeared in federal law was in an act passed on Feb. 26, 1907.

Pres. Washington originally turned to members of the Senate for advice as a kind of privy council. However, he dropped this plan when it created friction and tension with other senators.

He then turned to three secretaries or department heads—State, War and Treasury—who along with his chief legal adviser became the first Council of Four.

Today the Presidents can determine how important their Cabinet may be. The Eisenhower Cabinet operated differently than those under either Kennedy or Johnson.

But Nixon says that his Cabinet will be a vital part of his Administration. And the Senate will weigh its responsibility to "advise and consent" with a high degree of seriousness.

SOLID PROSPECTS for "decent jobs at decent wages" is the solution to hard-core unemployment, Julius Rothman, center, president of the AFL-CIO's Human Resources Development Institute, said on Labor News Conference. He was questioned by Neil Gilbride, left, of the Associated Press and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc.

ONE FOR THE ROAD—coffee, that is—is sampled by members of the Columbia Typographical Union at a New Year's hospitality stand set up by the ITU local in the Washington, D.C. area. The local dispensed more than 500 cups of coffee to New Year's celebrants from 8 a.m., Dec. 31, to 8 a.m., Jan. 2. From left are William Graves, Robert Isemann, Robert E. Petersen, CTU Pres. Charles F. Hines, John A. O'Brien, and Steven Greer.

Congress Sets Nixon Pay Raise, Wrestles Over Electoral Balloting

Congress decided to give Pres.-elect Nixon one less electoral vote than the election returns indicated, but it prepared to double his pay to $200,000 a year.

The two items were not, of course, related although both involved constitutional issues.

Under the Constitution, a President's pay can't be increased during his term of office. So, since just about everyone agreed that a presidential pay hike was long overdue, the House quickly passed a salary increase and the Senate was certain to approve it before the Jan. 20 inauguration deadline.

The electoral vote decision in effect expressed the view of the House and Senate that a constitutional amendment is the only way to prevent shenanigans in the archaic Electoral College system.

The founding fathers conceived that each state would choose its wisest and most respected citizens who, in turn, would elect the President.

But the development of political parties quickly scrapped that concept. Technically, voters in each state ballot for electors pledged to a party's candidates although in most states, including North Carolina, only the candidate's name is on the ballot.

North Carolina went for Nixon in the Nov. 5 election. But one of the Republican electors—a John Birch Society member—cast his Electoral College vote for George Wallace, the third party candidate. He said he didn't like some of Nixon's appointments.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.) and Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.) challenged the Wallace vote cast by the "faithless elector."

They argued that an 1877 law gave Congress the right to reject a vote improperly cast.

Their goal was also to point up the need for Electoral College reform. And in this they succeeded, even though the House rejected the challenge, 229-169, and the Senate turned it down, 58-33. Members of both parties who opposed the challenge took the floor to urge electoral reform through a constitutional amendment—although differing as to what such an amendment should provide.

The immediate result, however, was to make the official electoral count 301 for Nixon, 191 for Vice Pres. Humphrey and 46 for Wallace.

The Constitution was also brought into the opening day House debate over the seating of Rep. Adam C. Powell who, two years ago, had been denied a seat in the 90th Congress.

Since then, his Harlem district in New York has been without representation. After the first exclusion, Powell was re-elected in a special election but did not try to claim his seat. Last November, he was again elected to Congress.

Powell, once the flamboyant chairman of the House Education & Labor Committee, initially lost his seat after a special committee held that he had misused some $40,000 in public funds through payroll padding and use of government money for private travel.

The committee had recommended lesser penalties than exclusion, but the House rejected the advice of party leaders and refused to seat him.

Compromise Adopted

After a long parliamentary battle on opening day, the House this year approved a compromise motion seating Powell as a freshman congressman but fining him $25,000 to be deducted from his salary over the two years of his current term.

Powell took his seat under those conditions, but his attorneys already have a suit pending before the Supreme Court challenging the constitutionality of the earlier exclusion and seeking back pay.

House and Senate committees are functioning with holdover members, but vacancies are still to be filled and some congressmen and senators will seek transfer to other committees.

In the House, the Ways & Means Committee makes the Democratic assignments to other committees, subject to approval of the party caucus. But first the caucus must fill a vacancy on the Ways & Means Committee. The chief contenders are two Florida congressmen—liberal Sam M. Gibbons and conservative Don Fuqua.

In the Senate, Democratic and Republican leaders are consulting to work out new party ratios on most committees. Republican gains in the election, plus the appointment of a Republican from Alaska after the death of Sen. E. L. Bartlett, narrowed the Democratic majority to 57-43 and gave the GOP a strong argument for greater committee represenation.

Nixon Steps Up Pace Of Key Appointments

With little more than a week until it takes office, the Nixon Administration stepped up the pace of appointments to key sub-Cabinet posts and top-level agencies.

The President-elect filled out his Council of Economic Advisers with the appointment of a 44-year-old Harvard expert on international economics, Henrik Houthakker.

At a news conference, Houthakker said the Nixon Administration "will, on the whole, deal favorably" with the foreign investments of U.S. concerns.

Earlier Nixon had named Paul McCracken of the University of Michigan as chairman and Herbert Stein of the Brookings Institution as the other council member.

Nixon named Elliot L. Richardson, the attorney general of Massachusetts, as Under Sec. of State, and career Ambassador Alexis Johnson to the Number 3 post of Under Sec. for Political Affairs.

He appointed his 1960 running mate, Henry Cabot Lodge, now ambassador to West Germany, as chief United States negotiator at the Paris talks on Viet Nam. Lodge served twice under Pres. Johnson as ambassador to South Viet Nam and was ambassador to the United Nations under Pres. Eisenhower.

Defense Sec.-designate Melvin R. Laird announced the choice of the three civilian chiefs of the armed services.

He said Army Sec. Stanley R. Resor will continue in the post. Former Rhode Island Gov. John H. Chafee will be secretary of the Navy, and Dr. Robert C. Seamans, Jr., former Number 2 man in the National Aeronautics & Space Administration, will become secretary of the Air Force. All three are Republicans.

Earlier, California industrialist David Packard was designated deputy defense secretary.

Cohen Backs Proposal:

Medicare Benefits Urged for Disabled

(Continued from Page 1)

the proposed waiting period for Medicare coverage.

The council also recommended that additional workers in the age 55-64 bracket should be eligible for Medicare if they are disabled according to a proposed "occupational definition of disability."

The definition would be that workers are disabled if "they can no longer engage in substantial gainful activity in their regular work or in any other work in which they have engaged with some regularity in the recent past."

Under social security, workers under 65 are eligible for disability benefits after the six-month waiting period and a determination that the disability can be expected to last for one year.

Cohen told a press conference that the council's less restrictive definition of disability for Medicare coverage "has a great deal of merit" but he made no recommendation on it in his letter to Congress.

The extension of Medicare to the disabled, the council said, should be financed by contributions of employers, workers and the self-employed, with half the total cost to be met by the federal government. Cohen made no recommendation to Congress on the subject of financing the additional Medicare coverage.

The council, which examined data on the disabled gathered by a 1966 Social Security Administration survey, found that recipients of disability benefits under social security are "in special need of Medicare protection."

It said they "use seven times as much hospital care and three times as much physicians' services as does the entire population" and their median income "is less than half that of the non-disabled population."

Further, the council reported that hospital utilization is more than three times greater for the disabled than it is for the aged, while the disabled's use of physicians' services is more than twice that of the aged.

"It is appropriate, feasible, and desirable to use the social insurance approach to help finance the health costs of the disabled," the council declared.

Through the social insurance system, it continued, people can make contributions during working years, when incomes are relatively high, "and build protection against hospital and medical costs in the event they become disabled."

Reliance on the system to provide Medicare for the disabled, the council added, can reduce the need for public assistance and permit federal-state assistance programs "to better fill their role as backstop to private efforts and social insurance."

The principle of Medicare coverage for the disabled was supported by 11 to 1 among council members, with Daniel W. Pettengill, vice president of Aetna Life & Casualty Co. casting the only vote against it.

He recommended a program of disability benefits to be handled through a partnership of private enterprises and government, with federal subsidies to certain designated carriers who would assume risks represented by the disabled.

He also joined three other council members who filed minority views supporting a 12-month, rather than a three-month, waiting period for extension of Medicare to the disabled. They further advocated that employers and workers, on a 50-50 basis, pay the entire cost of the Medicare extension.

Bruno Rantane Dies, Served Labor, VISTA

Bruno Rantane, veteran trade unionist who served for three years as labor liaison man and director of volunteer information for Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA), died at 61 of a heart ailment.

Rantane served with the Textile Workers Union of America in New England for 15 years; as director of Connecticut State Employes Council 16 of the State, County & Municipal Employes in Middleton, Conn., and as an SCME international representative.

Maryland Panel Urges Public Employes' Rights

Baltimore—The right of Maryland state employes to organize into unions and bargain collectively should be guaranteed by law, the Governor's Task Force on Public Employe Labor Relations has recommended.

The 11-member body signed a report that included a section saying state employes should have the right to strike unless a court finds that such a strike would imperil public health and safety.

The task force also proposed that a new state agency, the Maryland Public Employe Labor Relations Board, be formed to supervise representation elections, assist in negotiations and mediate contract disputes.

A majority of the task force agreed that only a court should have the right to decide when a strike is illegal.

In line with this reasoning, the majority said "automatic penalties" should not be imposed on striking state employes, as they are in some states where all public employe strikes are prohibited.

Task Force Chairman Louis Aronin, trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board, said the group believes the facts in each strike situation should govern. New York State's Taylor Law and other sweeping no-strike laws in other states have failed to bring peaceful dispute settlements, he said.

The task force made no recommendations as to city, county and school employe bargaining rights except to advise that police and firemen should be forbidden to strike under any circumstances.

Former Gov. Spiro T. Agnew appointed the study group last March but took no action on its report before resigning Jan. 7 to prepare for his new post as Vice President in the Nixon Administration.

The group held hearings and heard witnesses including Robert Hastings, executive assistant to Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes and Pres. Ernest Crofoot of the union's District Council 67 here.

Labor witnesses had urged that all public employes be given the full protection of a new state law. Their needs are just as urgent as those of state employes, union spokesmen said.

Party Whips Chosen:

Liberal Wing Gains In Senate Contests

Senate Democrats and Republicans alike turned to the liberal wings of their parties to fill key leadership posts for the 91st Congress.

Neither Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield nor Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen were opposed for re-election in their party caucuses.

But tooth-and-nail battles were fought in both parties for the Number 2 leadership spots—party whip, as the assistant leader is known.

In each contest the more liberal candidate won.

Democratic senators voted 31-26 for Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts who, at 36, made the jump from a low-seniority back row seat in the Senate to front row, center.

Kennedy ousted Sen. Russell B. Long of Louisiana, who had served as party whip since 1965. Long, although a moderate by southern standards, operated primarily from his power base as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee rather than as a spokesman for his party.

Republican senators chose Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, 23-20, over Nebraska's conservative Roman L. Hruska.

Hruska had the backing of Dirksen. But Scott successfully maintained the precedent of representation for the GOP's moderate-to-liberal faction in the party leadership.

The whip's post had been held by former Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel, a California liberal who lost out in the Republican primary last spring.

If Hruska had won the vote, he would have been strongly favored as the eventual successor to the 73-year-old Dirksen. His defeat brought into greater prominence the party role of Sen. Gordon Allott of Colorado, who won the chairmanship of the Republican Policy Committee. Allott, a conservative, beat Robert P. Griffin of Michigan for the Number 3 job in the Senate Republican leadership. The post was vacated by the retirement from the Senate of Iowa's Bourke B. Hickenlooper.

Although both party caucuses voted by secret ballot, there was general agreement that Scott's victory was clinched by the vote of most of the junior senators, including newcomers elected this year.

Most of the attention was on the Democratic caucus where Kennedy took a bold plunge for leadership after Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine decided not to make the race.

The two men have been prominently mentioned as possible Democratic presidential candidates in 1972. Muskie, in fact, gave as one reason for not seeking the post a desire to leave himself free to test the presidential waters.

Muskie nominated Kennedy and actively campaigned for him. Mansfield and Vice Pres. Humphrey gave the Massachusetts senator tacit support.

Apart from the glamour of the Kennedy name, the new Democratic whip had going for him a reputation as a hard-working, conscientious senator who won the respect of his seniors during the past six years.

Mansfield said he was delighted with the choice and gave Kennedy the ultimate compliment of the Senate's inner circle as "a real Senate man."

In winning election, however, Kennedy successfully bucked the influential southern "establishment" and won the votes of most of the liberals.

One northern vote he did not get was that of Minnesota's Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, who announced his support of Long.

LEADERSHIP ROLES in the Senate were won by Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) and Hugh Scott (R-Pa.) in party caucus contests. Kennedy was elected Democratic whip, or assistant floor leader. Scott won the equivalent post on the Republican side.

Filibuster Rules Fight Under Way in Senate

(Continued from Page 1)

Vice President in 1963, he held that the question of constitutional interpretation could only be decided by the Senate—but the Senate was prevented by a filibuster from deciding the issue.

Two years ago, Vice Pres. Humphrey came up with a formula which would have permitted a majority to act—if it wished.

A supporter of rules reform moved to close debate and Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen promptly raised a point of order.

Following Johnson's precedent, Humphrey said the point of order would have to be decided by the Senate. But he indicated that a motion to table the point of order would be proper—and not subject to debate.

If the point of order were tabled, Humphrey said, the effect would be to uphold the claim that a majority of senators can halt debate on a rules change proposal.

But the Senate establishment—the Democratic as well as the Republican leadership—opposed this parliamentary shortcut and the tabling motion was badly beaten, 61-37. The Senate then went on to uphold Dirksen's point of order.

A final effort to bring about a rules change vote through cloture won 53-46 approval, but failed because it fell short of a two-thirds margin.

Theoretically, the rules change battle would block any other legislation from being considered by the Senate until the matter is disposed of. But in the clublike Senate, the debate is expected to be interrupted to take up other matters from time to time by unanimous consent.

25% Pay Increase Proposed by NMU

New York—The National Maritime Union submitted proposals for a 25 percent wage increase and other contract improvements to the owners of 520 U.S. vessels, and asked them to start negotiations not later than Jan. 15.

The NMU represents 38,000 crewmen on ships of 65 companies. Current four-year contracts expire next June 15.

The union wants a raise in base pay that now averages $444 a month, and a change in the overtime rate to put it at time and a half; increases in pension benefits from the present $250 a month to $300 or $350; vested pension rights after 10 years of service instead of the current 20; a guaranteed annual wage, and a dental care plan along with improved medical and hospital benefits.

NMU Pres. Joseph Curran said the proposals are keyed to the needs of union members and conditions in the maritime industry.

Democratic Governor Elected in Maryland

The Democrats picked up another governorship but lost two state legislative houses in a post-election shuffle.

The new Democratic governor is Marvin Mandel, who was elected by the Maryland legislature to succeed Republican Spiro T. Agnew.

Agnew resigned in preparation for taking office as Vice President and Maryland has no lieutenant governor. A joint session of the House and Senate elected House Speaker Mandel to fill out the two years remaining in Agnew's term.

Mandel, an easy victor in the heavily Democratic legislature, declared that he will be an active governor, not a "caretaker." He told the legislature that the state "cannot mark time" and promised new programs on health, education, law enforcement, pollution, transportation and other pressing issues.

Republicans took over the Tennessee House when a retired farmer who won election as an independent cast his tie-breaking vote for the Republican candidate for Speaker of the House. The Democrats control the state senate and the governorship.

In California, the death of a Democratic senator broke a 20-20 party tie in the state Senate to give the Republicans at least a temporary edge. However Republicans may pass up the chance to name their own candidate for president pro tempore and continue the incumbent, a conservative Democrat who supported the Nixon ticket in the presidential campaign.

California's Gov. Ronald Reagan had the chance to name his own lieutenant governor when Robert H. Finch resigned after having been designated Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare in the Nixon Cabinet.

Finch, by Republican standards, was considered a moderate.

To replace him, Reagan named a 45-year-old Republican congressman, Ed Reinecke, who is starting his third term. By COPE standards, Reinecke has had a congressional record of 25 wrong votes and one right vote.

Reagan told newsmen that he and Reinecke are "philosophically in agreement on the aims and goals of the creative society," the phrase Reagan coined to describe his Administration's objectives.

Labor to Train 4,000 In 11 Appalachian States

The AFL-CIO Appalachian Council will train 4,000 jobless and underemployed workers in depressed urban and rural areas of the 11 states in the Appalachian region under a Labor Dept. contract.

Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz said the federal government will invest almost $4 million in two training programs being developed by the council.

States affected by the project are Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia.

The AFL-CIO proposals for both projects are coupled programs, covering on-the-job and classroom training. A variety of employers will cooperate in the programs throughout the region.

The larger of the two programs will aid 3,000 people in nonrural sections with an investment of $2,648,500 in Manpower Development & Training Act funds.

The second proposal calls for training opportunities for 1,000 rural residents with an investment of $1,256,160 in MDTA funds.

The jobless or underemployed workers will be drawn from the Neighborhood Youth Corps, the Job Corps work experience programs and from the ranks of the disadvantaged unemployed. Trainees will receive wages and fringe benefits in accordance with existing bargaining agreements.

Acting as prime contractor, the Appalachian Council will negotiate subcontracts with private employers throughout the 11 states to hire and train workers.

The programs will be directed by Miles C. Stanley, chairman of the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council, and Richard L. Wilkes.

Film Exchange Employes Win 22% Pay Boost

New York—Film exchange employes in 33 cities will get wage increases of approximately 22 percent under a new three-year agreement between the Stage Employes and 11 film distributing companies.

IATSE Pres. Richard F. Walsh said the union won raises of 8 percent the first year, $5 a week the second year and another 8 percent the third year for all covered employes.

Effective Dec. 1, 1970, the workweek will be reduced from 37.5 hours to 35—seven hours a day, Monday through Friday.

Employer payments into the IATSE pension fund were raised from 15 cents an hour to 18 cents on Jan. 1, 1969, go to 20 cents a year later and 23 cents at the start of 1971.

The companies agreed also to give employes who retired at age 65 on or after Dec. 1, 1968, employer-paid life insurance of $500, increasing to $1,000 a year for those retiring a year later. They raised their contribution to Blue Cross-Blue Shield insurance to 70 percent this year, 85 percent next year and 100 percent thereafter. Night differential was raised to a straight $5 a week and top severance pay also was hiked.

The parties also agreed that branch managers' secretaries hired after Dec. 1, 1968, will become part of the IATSE bargaining unit at Columbia, Metro Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Twentieth Century Fox, United Artists, Universal, Warner Brothers, Allied Artists, Buena Vista, National Film Service and National Screen Service, all parties to the contract.

Court Hearing Delayed On L.A. Hearst Ballots

Los Angeles—A court hearing on a disputed representation election among more than 1,500 striking and locked-out employes of Hearst's Herald-Examiner has been postponed to Jan. 20.

Strike Dir. William R. Robertson of the joint strike-lockout council said the National Labor Relations Board requested a continuance from Jan. 6 to further prepare its case on the legality of NLRB elections held last Dec. 12-14.

Hearst management sought a court order to halt the balloting. The petition was denied but ballots were put under lock and key until the court rules on the issue.

Meanwhile official media reports in Editor & Publisher showed the Her-Ex continuing to lose advertising in the face of a nationwide labor boycott. For the first nine months of 1968, the paper lost 7.1 million lines. For November the loss was 953,261 lines, second highest for any month during the year.

Total ad linage losses for the strikebreaker-produced Her-Ex climbed far above the 10 million mark as Hearst management still refused to engage in any meaningful bargaining. The Newspaper Guild and the Machinists struck Dec. 15, 1967, and members of eight other unions were locked out by management.

Only a handful of strikebreakers voted in the NLRB election. Virtually all ballots were cast by union members at the one-time flagship paper of the Hearst chain.

Management challenged every ballot cast by strikers and locked-out workers on the ground that their jobs no longer were available.

"We are convinced the ultimate result of this fight will be an overwhelming victory for free trade unionism in southern California and the newspaper industry," said Robertson.

Eight AFL-CIO unions representing idled Herald-Examiner employes petitioned for the election to stop Hearst from taking possible decertification action.

The strike-lockout put 2,000 workers on the street. Hearst has published the daily, once the largest evening paper in the nation, with the aid of imported professional strikebreakers and supervisors.

Labor Supplies Funds:

Ghetto Renewal Plan Keyed to New Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

with the neighborhood were instrumental in making the project possible.

Evans also praised the St. Louis Building Trades Council and the contractors' associations for their work and cooperation in helping to plan the project.

He reported that building trades unions and contractors' associations in Boston have also signed agreements to train ghetto residents in rebuilding slum houses, and are expected to launch specific projects here soon.

Similar agreements are under discussion in Baltimore, Chicago and Gary, Ind., Evans said.

The principal enabling contracts in the project involve locals of the Operating Engineers, Plasterers, Cement Masons, Carpenters, Stone Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Plumbers, Painters, Bricklayers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Laborers and Teamsters, and district councils of the Laborers and Carpenters.

The St. Louis employer groups involved are Associated General Contractors, Sheet Metal & Air Conditioning Contractors, Plumbing Contractors, Mason Contractors, the National Electrical Contractors Association, and Sharks General Contractors.

Labor Grant

The training of at least 150 workers is covered by a $176,500 grant from the Labor Dept. to Construction Job Opportunities, Inc., formed by general contractors in the St. Louis area.

A craft selection committee with equal representation from labor and management will review job applications and classify workers for the project.

Workers hired will be classified as qualified workmen, advanced trainees or trainees, according to previous experience.

Qualified workers will receive the current negotiated pay rate for their particular crafts. Advanced trainees will receive from 60 to 90 percent of journeyman pay, depending upon degrees of skill. The starting rate for trainees will be $3 per hour.

Trainees will be allowed to work across jurisdictional lines as helpers for six months after which they will be assigned to a trade as an advanced trainee. Union membership will be made available not later than the completion of the advanced trainee training period.

Area Ratio

The craft selection committee will determine the ratio of nonresidents to residents of the area to be hired, except that in no case will the ratio in the advanced trainee or trainee classifications be less than 1 resident to 3 skilled journeymen.

Michael L. Galli, director of the St. Louis Federal Housing Administration office, described the project as one that "we hope will be adopted in other neighborhoods and urban areas throughout the nation."

He said rehabilitated homes will be sold to residents of the area, using FHA below-market-rate interest programs. Most completed homes will be of the three- or four-bedroom size, selling at an average price of $13,000, with down payments as low as $200 and monthly payments as low as $60.

8 Rail Unions In Canada Win 2-Year Pact

Montreal—For the first time in their bargaining history, eight railroad unions and Canada's major railroads have reached agreement on a new contract before the old one expired.

The settlement, coming nine days before a previous 3-year pact ran out, provides 75,000 non-operating workers with a 6.5 percent across-the-board wage boost, effective Jan. 1, 1969, and another 6.5 percent next Jan. 1.

The new two-year contract, negotiated over a three-week period with aid from a federal mediator, also provides for a new job security program, advance notice on job changes due to technological improvements, and retraining benefits.

The agreement was negotiated by Maintenance of Way Employes, Railway & Airline Clerks, Transportation-Communication Employes, Firemen & Oilers, Signalmen, Sleeping Car Porters, United Telegraph Workers and the Railway, Transport & General Workers.

Negotiations are still under way in two other disputes—one involving eight railroad shopcraft unions and the other, the Railroad Trainmen, now merged into the new United Transportation Union.

Stop the Drain

VISITING JAPANESE UNIONISTS, members of the Department Store Workers Union (DILA), discuss relations between the U.S. and Japanese labor movement during a stop in Washington. From left are Masayuki Takano, Shigneobu Sonoda, Naoji Hatanaka, Mrs. Ann Sutter of the Retail Clerks and ICFTU Women's Consultative Committee, Harry Goldberg and Ronald Van Helden of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, and Kesao Arai. The RCIA sponsored the foreign union team on its tour of the United States.

Labor Evaluates 90th Congress

A detailed report on the record of the 90th Congress covering 97 legislative issues is now available from the AFL-CIO.

The report, "Labor Looks at the 90th Congress," prepared by the federation's Dept. of Legislation, covers the economy, the urban crisis, welfare, education and health, consumer protection, conservation and natural resources, labor legislation, civil rights and civil liberties, elections and congressional reform and foreign policy.

Single copies of the publication, 77J, are available free. Bulk copies can be ordered from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division at 15 cents per copy or $13.50 per 100 copies.

Meat Strikers Picket Neuhoff Mansion Estate

Roanoke, Va. — Striking Meat Cutters from four states picketed the palatial home of Lorenz Neuhoff here during the holidays to call public attention to their struggle for union contract benefits at Neuhoff meat packing plants.

The strikers braved heavy rain and near-freezing temperatures to remind Neuhoff of his refusal to bargain with their union. Led by Earl Grant, executive assistant to union Pres. Thomas J. Lloyd, the group included local union members along with strikers from Neuhoff Packing Co. plants in Montgomery, Ala., and Clarksville, Tenn., and employes from Kinston, N.C.

Parading before Neuhoff's columned southern mansion, the strikers carried signs relating their requests for union contracts and better conditions. The demonstration was part of a year-long union effort to bring Neuhoff and his family to the bargaining table.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany recently called on all union members to support a consumer boycott against Neuhoff Packing Co. meats including Frosty Morn, Valleydale and Reelfoot products that labor calls unfair.

The strike at the Neuhoff plant in Clarksville began last Apr. 16; at Montgomery, Ala., Sept. 21, and at Quincy, Fla., Sept. 28.

Abel Finds UN Unfair In Its Rebuke to Israel

Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel expressed concern in a letter to Sec. of State Dean Rusk that the United Nations "is being used to serve the cause of propaganda" instead of the cause of peace in the Arab-Israeli dispute.

"As a former member of the American delegation to the UN," Abel said, "I am distressed by the substance and tone of the discussion in the Security Council on the complaint relating to Israel's attack on the airport at Beirut."

Abel, in Washington for a meeting of the union's executive council, wrote that representatives of most governments, including the United States, seem to be more concerned about Lebanon's complaint than previous Arab attacks within Israel.

"Moreover," he added, "these representatives give the appearance of being more concerned about property values than they are about people."

The Steelworkers' president noted that all reports in the press indicate that the Arabs have "directed their campaign against civilians, while the Israelis took every precaution to limit their response to material."

Pointing out that not a single person was reported killed or injured at the Beirut airport, Abel said it was evident that "the Israelis clearly planned it that way," adding:

"They did not rely on aerial bombing with all of its inaccuracies. They used methods which involved great risk to their own lives, but only a minimum of danger to Lebanese."

Abel deplored the fact that the Security Council was called into a special session to condemn Israel, when at least three specific examples of Arab attacks in Israel have not drawn the council's attention.

He listed them as a machine-gun attack on an Israeli passenger plane, killing one passenger; a bomb planted in a Jerusalem market that killed 12 persons and wounded 50; the hijacking to Algeria of an Israeli airliner and the imprisonment of its crew and passengers.

"The sad fact is that neither these events nor numerous other Israeli charges of Arab violations of the UN ceasefire have had hearings before the Security Council," Abel emphasized.

In his letter, Abel went on to say that these developments indicate "that the United Nations is straying from its original purpose. Instead of serving the cause of peace, it is being misused to serve the cause of propaganda."

The Israel-Arab conflict, he wrote, has become so complex and deep-rooted that no isolated action, particularly one in which no lives are lost, should be singled out for council criticism, "while so many other actions are permitted to go unnoticed."

Abel said it is evident that Arab propaganda in the UN, in this case, is carried out not to influence world opinion against Israel but to "induce the United States to cancel its agreement to sell 50 Phantom jet fighters to Israel."

However, he concluded, "We are confident that the government will carry out its commitment to help restore the balance of power in the Middle East, for any other course would guarantee a new war based on overwhelming Soviet supplies to the Arab nations."

69-11-1

Gerhard Colm Dies, Employment Act Author

Gerhard Colm, widely known economist and an architect of the Employment Act of 1946, died in Washington, D.C., at the age of 71. At the time of his death he was the chief economist for the National Planning Association, a private, non-profit, non-partisan research institute.

Colm was one of the pioneers in advocating use of the federal budget and economic and fiscal policies to combat economic downturns and otherwise stablize the economy.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, January 18, 1969 | No. 3

LBJ Praises Labor's Role In 5-Year Legislative Gains

100 PENS USED BY PRES. JOHNSON to sign into law 100 landmark legislative measures during his five years in the White House are presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as a tribute to labor's cooperation in helping to achieve the progressive legislative program.

Meany Calls Him 'One of Greatest'

Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson paid a farewell visit to AFL-CIO headquarters to thank the nation's working people for their support of his Administration and to present them with "a symbol of what the last five years has been all about."

That symbol was a glass-enclosed case containing 100 pens used in signing into law 100 landmark legislative measures enacted during his Administration, all of them with the active support of organized labor.

The President turned the case over to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a ceremony, Jan. 13, in the lobby of the federation building across Lafayette Park from the White House.

It was a frankly sentimental occasion for both Johnson and Meany—and for the Executive Council members, AFL-CIO staff and guests who filled the lobby for a final, personal tribute to the President before he closes out his Administration.

Meany accepted the case and the pens "on behalf of the AFL-CIO, its leadership, its millions of members, and on behalf of the many, many millions more who will be beneficiaries of the legislation which you signed into law. . . ."

He predicted that "Lyndon Johnson will go down in history as one of our greatest chief executives." (Text of Johnson's and Meany's remarks, Page 7.)

That evening, at a dinner dance in New York honoring the President and Mrs. Johnson, Meany was one of 21 prominent Americans who presented the President with a capsule history of the LBJ years in the White House.

Meany called Johnson a "friend of all workers everywhere; a man who devoted his life without stint to public service, attaining the highest office, yet holding common bond with those he served. . . ."

(Continued on Page 12)

Oil Giants Balking on Pattern Pact

Denver—Striking oil workers agreed to contract terms with one major company and several small independents but the great bulk of the 60,000 strikers continued to walk picket lines from coast to coast.

Pres. A. F. Grospiron of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers said most of the big oil firms are still balking at settlements in line with a "pattern" agreement between OCAW and the Union Oil Co.

"This is still a major and very serious strike," said Grospiron.

OCAW members struck Jan. 4 at about 100 refineries and other oil installations after working without a contract since Dec. 31. The union had 435 separate agreements with 20 major oil firms and numerous independents who together produce about 6.5 million barrels of petroleum products daily.

The first break in the strike came Jan. 12 when Union Oil offered a package of benefits valued by OCAW at 69.6 cents an hour over a two-year period.

The offer ended the strike at two refineries in California, and other

(Continued on Page 2)

Final State of Union Message:

Johnson Calls on Congress To Press Social Advances

By John M. Barry

Lyndon B. Johnson went to Congress and the American people for the last time as President to deliver his farewell State of the Union message, summing up the accomplishments of his Administration and urging the nation to follow through on the commitments they represent.

The President's nationally televised address was given to a joint session of Congress, where he had spent so much of his public life.

The members of Congress welcomed him as one of their own with a standing ovation of more than three minutes and repeated interruptions for applause.

The President's speech, delivered in subdued tones, was a mixture of pride in the major social advances achieved during his five years in office, regret over the failure to win peace in Viet Nam, and open sentiment recalling the struggles and associations of a lifetime in the nation's service.

"I hope it may be said, a hundred years from now," he told Congress, "that together we helped to make our country more just for all its people—as well as to insure the blessings of liberty for our posterity.

"I believe it will be said that we tried." (Excerpts, Page 6.)

But Johnson's sixth State of the Union message, for all its valedictory nature, looked ahead as well as backward. The President outlined a number of proposals to extend and expand domestic programs, including a 13 percent rise in social security benefits, sharp increases in funds for the mode' cities program and for job training, appropriations to permit construction of 500,000 housing units for needy families in the next fiscal year, and creation of an urban development bank to provide capital for community improvements.

These proposals and others were spelled out in detail in the President's budget for fiscal 1970, sent to Congress the following day. The budget, which his aides described as "very tight," is aimed at meeting pressing domestic and foreign needs and calls for continuation of the 10 percent income tax surcharge. (Story, Page 4.)

Later in the week, the President also sent Congress his annual economic message, forecasting a year of continued prosperity and growth,

(Continued on Page 12)

Wirtz Urges $2 Floor For All Hourly Wages

Every worker in the United States should receive a minimum wage of $2 an hour "to maintain himself and his family decently," Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz told Congress in his final report on the operations of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Universal minimum wage coverage at $2 an hour would cut in half the number of persons living "in poverty," presently estimated at 22 to 26 million, Wirtz said.

Noting that in contrast to the number of persons at the poverty level, unemployement is only between two and three millions, the secretary concluded that more than half of those living in poverty do so not because the head of the family is unemployed but because he doesn't get a decent living wage

(Continued on Page 10)

Textile Workers Win Long Darlington Battle

The Supreme Court ended a 13-year legal battle by refusing to disturb a National Labor Relations Board ruling that Deering Milliken, Inc., closed its Darlington, S.C., plant unlawfully to "chill" union organizing in the other 45 plants of the giant textile firm.

The high court declined to act on the corporation's petition to review a 1968 finding by the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond, Va., that the NLRB applied the law correctly.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Pres. William Pollock of the Textile Workers Union of America both hailed the end of the union's long fight for justice on behalf of 510 Darlington workers whose jobs were abolished by Deering Milliken after a majority voted in 1956 for the union.

Pollock said that, while the end of the Darlington case will "finally bring these workers reemployment opportunities and backpay" of several million dollars, "there is no justification for any society to allow justice to drag along for nearly 13 years."

Meany congratulated the union on behalf of the AFL-CIO for its perseverance in continuing to fight

(Continued on Page 2)

5 Unions Plan New Building In Washington

Five international unions pooled their resources to find a site for a joint headquarters building in downtown Washington, and will erect an eight-story building at 18th St. and New York Ave. N.W., a block from the government's Executive Office Building.

The property, owned by the federal government, was obtained through the General Services Administration in an exchange of property plus an undisclosed amount of cash.

The five union landlords have incorporated themselves in the District of Columbia as United Unions, Inc. They are the Painters, Iron Workers, Fire Fighters, Bookbinders and Sheet Metal Workers. All now occupy rented quarters in Washington, and the Iron Workers' main office is in St. Louis.

Corporation officers are three union presidents— S. Frank Raftery of the Painters, president; John H. Lyons, Jr., of the Iron Workers, treasurer, and William H. McClennan of the Fire Fighters, secretary.

Acquired by Trade

The five AFL-CIO affiliates first acquired the Wiscon Building on Wisconsin Ave., Bethesda, Md., and traded it for the Walker-Johnson Building on New York Ave. adjoining the Corcoran Museum.

The Walker-Johnson Building and four smaller structures will be demolished before construction begins, some time this year, for occupancy in 1970. Raftery said the five unions will occupy approximately two thirds of the 175,000 gross square feet in the new structure.

RHODE ISLAND UNION OFFICIALS Thomas M. Buckley, Jr., left, and Francis E. Doherty have been appointed by Gov. Frank Licht to posts in the state government. Buckley, northeast regional vice president for the Newspaper Guild, has been named the governor's press secretary. Doherty, recording and corresponding secretary of the Providence AFL-CIO since 1949, is the new director of the Rhode Island Dept. of Labor.

2 Emergency Boards Named in Rail Disputes

Two three-member emergency boards have been named by Pres. Johnson to investigate and make recommendations in wage-benefits disputes involving three unions and the nation's railroads. The action blocked potential strikes for a 60-day period.

One board will hear a dispute involving the Conductors & Brakemen, now merged into the AFL-CIO United Transportation Union, and a separate dispute involving the Locomotive Engineers, a non-affiliated union.

The unions have been locked in negotiations for many months over wages, workloads, expenses, home terminal time and vacations. They have exhausted negotiation and mediation procedures under the Railway Labor Act.

In each case, the railroads demand that the unions accept "pattern" settlements negotiated previously with other rail unions. However, Conductors & Brakemen and Engineers' leaders contend their members are entitled to separate settlements to correct "inequities."

The second board was named to look into a dispute involving the Railroad Signalmen and the carriers over wages, guaranteed annual income, job assignments and unemployment benefits. This union, too, has rejected the "pattern."

If the emergency boards had not been established, the Engineers would have been free to strike on Jan. 14, the Conductors & Brakemen on Jan. 15, and the Signalmen on Jan. 16.

The President's action in naming the boards blocks strikes or the imposition of new wages and rules by the railroads for a period of 60 days from the date on which the boards were appointed, Jan. 13.

The three men appointed to the BRT and ORCB board are the Rev. Leo C. Brown of St. Louis University, chairman; Paul Guthrie, head of the University of North Carolina economics department, and Abram Stockman, a New York attorney.

Named to the Signalmen's board were Laurence E. Seibel, chairman, and Rolf Valtin, both of Washington, D. C., and both arbitrators, and Jacob Seidenberg, a Falls Church, Va., labor relations consultant.

In another development, the U.S. District Court in Nashville, Tenn., issued a temporary restraining order to halt a strike by Railroad Trainmen, also now part of UTU, on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. The court scheduled a hearing, Jan. 22, on whether the injunction should be made permanent.

The temporary order was issued a few hours after the BRT struck upon expiration of a 60-day "cooling-off" period under an earlier emergency board procedure.

The board, in mid-December, had submitted recommendations that both sides return to bargaining on a crew-size issue. Negotiations followed but the union accused management of "putting up roadblocks" to any equitable settlement.

"We have obeyed all the procedures of the Railway Labor Act and we are legally free to strike," a BRT spokesman said. "In the circumstances, we feel it is unjust for the courts to take away our right to strike."

The National Mediation Board called both sides into Washington, and talks got underway in a renewed effort to reach a settlement.

Coordinated Program Urged on Food for Poor

A coordinated program for feeding the poor is needed to wipe out the hunger and malnutrition that exists in the nation, Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare told Congress. He urged a wholesale reorganization of the "fragmented" programs now in operation.

Cohen testified before the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition & Human Needs that hunger cannot be eliminated simply by "stuffing more food down people's gullet."

He further suggested that federal food programs for the poor be switched from the Agriculture Dept. to HEW because it could do a better job. HEW, he said, "unlike Agriculture, is not subject to interference or domination by the congressional committees or outside interests or agricultural producers."

Hunger and malnutrition will continue unless the federal government takes over all welfare programs and embarks on a broad coordinated program of health education, food technology, and aid in family planning for the poor, Cohen declared.

His ideas for curbing the "fragmentation" in the federal nutrition field, Cohen said, would be left over for secretary-designate Robert H. Finch "as something to achieve."

Cohen recommended creating within HEW a human nutrition administration which would do more than "focus on health, agricultural production, or even the poor."

"We need," he continued, "an agency that can bring to bear resources in education, marketing strategy economics, public welfare and related programs."

The nutrition administration would have the responsibility for food distribution programs and an "innovative" food stamp program.

Earlier, Agriculture Sec. Orville L. Freeman told the Senate committee that it would cost an additional $1 billion a year to close the nutritional gap and end hunger.

Freeman listed two main obstacles in the war on hunger and malnutrition—the refusal of Congress to appropriate sufficient funds and the reluctance of more conservative counties to participate in federal food programs.

From a meager start eight years ago, food aid programs have grown to a $1 billion-a-year operation. About half the money goes to school lunch programs. The other half is for the food stamp program so poor families can make purchases in grocery stores with the stamps.

Meanwhile, price support payments to farmers have been running between $3 billion and $4 billion annually.

Freeman, in his farewell testimony, was critical of Congress for cutting appropriations for the food program last year.

He also criticized the "token funding" for the child nutrition program. As a result, he said "there are still more than 2.5 million children who should be receiving free or reduced price lunches, but who will not."

13 Years in Courts:

Textile Union Wins Darlington Battle

(Continued from Page 1)

for the rights of the stranded workers "and for its continuing effort to win gains for workers" in other southern cotton mills. He added:

"Though it is doubtful that full justice will ever be done" for Darlington employes, "one great step forward has been taken. One more loophole through which antiunion employers such as Deering Milliken can slip has been closed."

In other labor cases, the Supreme Court refused to review 11 lower court decisions. By unanimous vote, the justices overruled two lower courts to reinstate a suit by eight Negroes and five whites against the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway Co. at the Birmingham, Ala., yards.

Discrimination Charged

The employes complained that their promotion from carman helper to carman had been blocked by racial discrimination. The high court said they should not have to go through all the steps of the grievance procedure under the railroad's contract with the Railway Carmen because such a remedy would be "absolutely futile" in this case.

The Deering Milliken case goes back to the middle 1950s, when TWUA sought to organize mill workers at Darlington and other company plants in the Carolinas.

During the campaign, management told Darlington workers the plant would be closed if they voted for the union. They did, and company directors soon approved an order by Roger Milliken, the head of the chain, to close the plant and sell the equipment piecemeal. That prevented any purchaser from continuing operations at Darlington, the union charged.

After long hearings the NLRB ruled that Darlington and Deering Milliken were commonly controlled. It ordered the corporation to pay lost wages and bargain with TWUA about re-employment of the fired workers at other D-M mills.

Decision Upset

The appeals court at Richmond, however, upset the NLRB decision by ruling that an employer has the right to go out of business at any time for all or part of his operations. The Supreme Court reversed the appeals judges and sent the case back to the NLRB for further hearings.

An employer has the "absolute right" to terminate its entire business at any time, the high court reiterated, but a partial closing was held to be unlawful "if motivated by a purpose to chill unionism" in other company plants.

After further hearings the NLRB concluded that Darlington and Deering Milliken constituted a single employer and that closing the Darlington mill was "at least in part the product of a desire to discourage unionism at other Deering Milliken mills."

The board found that Darlington was one of 17 corporations owned and controlled by the Milliken family. Again it ordered the company to bargain with the union and reinstate the workers who lost their jobs. That time the 4th Circuit voted to enforce the board's order, but the corporation again refused to comply and filed its review petition with the Supreme Court.

Major Oil Firms Balk At Breakthrough Pact

(Continued from Page 1)

plants of Union Oil and its Pure Oil division in the East have since settled on similar terms. The union said it believes most Union and Pure plants will have reached agreements by week's end.

Other Offers Awaited

Grospiron said no other major company has offered to settle on similar terms, although it is traditional practice for the major producers to wait until one big firm has made an acceptable offer.

"Certainly they cannot claim lack of money," said Grospiron. "Why should they balk?"

Several small firms—Golden Eagle, Powerline and Beacon of California, Delta Refining Co. in Memphis—have agreed to benefits equal to, or better than the Union-Pure settlement, according to Grospiron.

The Union Oil settlement was described by the OCAW as "a combination of direct wage increases and reduced employe payments toward the cost of pension plans and medical-hospital insurance coverage."

Wages alone were reported to average 41 cents an hour over the term of the contract.

OCAW said the strike is the first general strike in the oil industry since 1952. Last year its wage policy committee voted to seek a wage boost of at least 72 cents an hour to bring wages more in line with productivity and the increasing profitability of the oil industry.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany warned when the strike started that the industry's determination to resist the just objectives of its workers had created a grave danger to community safety. The struck firms are operating 80 to 90 refineries with untrained and unskilled workers at considerable risk to public safety, Meany said.

Challenges Lifted On RCIA Election

The Labor Dept. has dismissed all challenges to the June 1968 election for officers of the Retail Clerks and in effect certified the results.

RCIA Pres. James T. Housewright said the dismissal of charges brought by defeated candidates "confirmed our judgment" that the balloting was legal and democratic. The union now can step up its organizational activities "with this burden removed," he said.

Winning candidates in the June election at more than 7,000 polling places were chosen by margins of more than 40,000 votes. Besides Housewright they are: Sec.-Treas. William W. Maguire and Vice Presidents Samuel J. Meyers, Earl D. McDavid, Peter L. Hall, David A. Wade, Ivan M. Morriss, Donald E. Carter, William A. McGrath, Thomas G. Whaley, Ronald L. Meeker and Thomas M. Russow.

Bargaining, Organizing Cited:

IUD Reports Growth In Finances, Services

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. is growing in size and financial stability and intends to strengthen its programs of service to members, with special emphasis on coordinated bargaining and organizing, its president reported.

Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers, who took over the IUD presidency last June 14, announced after a departmental executive committee meeting that the Operating Engineers had recently reaffiliated for 60,000 members. Abel said IUD net worth has increased by $100,000 to a figure in excess of $1 million and that bargaining and organizing services will be expanded to meet the needs of affiliates as income permits.

With big business firms merging to form ever-larger conglomerate companies, IUD will concentrate on coordinated bargaining programs. But there will be no slackening in IUD efforts to organize on a cooperative basis, Abel said.

He announced the election of Pres. David Selden of the Teachers to the IUD board, with another mail ballot authorized on seating Pres. Charles H. Pillard of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, both to succeed retiring officers of their unions.

The next department convention will be held Sept. 25-26 in Atlantic City, Abel said.

At a press conference, Abel criticized financial experts and columnists who would check inflation by trading off employment for price stability—in other words, he said, "taking it out of the hides of the workers."

The "inflation fighters have said nothing about price concessions, or a few million less profits for the big corporations such as General Motors or U.S. Steel," Abel noted.

He announced that in its search for more social and economic progress, IUD will press for reinsurance of pension programs, improvements in the amount and coverage of the federal minimum wage law, liberalized social security and medical insurance programs, and other legislative objectives of the AFL-CIO.

The IUD executive committee adopted policy statements supporting the strike-lockout of 2,000 union members against Hearst's Los Angeles Herald-Examiner, now entering its 14th month, and urging the Senate to modify Rule 22, which permits unlimited debate.

The committee also praised Pres. Johnson as one who "spoke and fought for those we also champion — the underpaid and underprivileged, the submerged and the oppressed, the old and the young, and all who suffer the handicaps of poverty and discrimination."

"There are some who have forgotten all this. We have not, and we never will," the statement declared.

Another statement promised support to the incoming administration for "every sound and forward-looking effort" to carry on the "endless struggle for a better society."

The Nixon administration, the IUD said, takes power in a nation which "for the first time in history, has been free of economic recession for eight years." It can "demonstrate that the prosperity and progress now enjoyed by most Americans can be extended to every American."

Despite problems caused by war and inflation, the Administration and Congress must revise and strengthen the remedies which have proved inadequate, not abandon them, the IUD committee declared.

James L. Doyle Dies, Led Coopers 50 Years

Roslindale, Mass.—Pres.-Emeritus James J. Doyle of the Coopers, who died here at 84, devoted his working life to the union movement and his 50-year record as head of the Coopers "stands as a monument to his memory," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a message of sympathy to his wife Ann and their four daughters.

Doyle was president until 1965, when he retired to "rest and travel." During those years he attended every convention of the AFL and the AFL-CIO. He joined the Coopers in 1901, Pres. Ernest D. Higdon, his successor, reported.

FOOD FOR STARVING BIAFRANS is loaded in Brooklyn on the S.S. Forra by members of Longshoremen's Local 1814 who interrupted their strike against New York shipping owners to load the relief ship. Sources of the donated foodstuffs included the Transport Workers, below, shown hauling sacks of rice onto one of four trucks used in the union's "mercy caravan." TWU members donated more than 5,000 pounds of canned goods and rice for the Biafra relief expedition.

Garment Union Sets Up Mail-Order Drug Plan

New York—Members of the Ladies' Garment Workers should be getting prescription drugs by mid-1969 at a fraction of the cost they now pay. Their medicine bills will be cut by a mail-order drug plan instituted by union and employer trustees.

Each order—limited to a 30-day supply of medicine—will cost members $1. The plan will pay the rest, including the cost of mailing.

It's estimated that the average cost to members will be 25 percent of normal retail drugstore prices.

The plan will be financed through modifications of an agreement between the ILGWU and employers governing contributions to the union's Unemployment Benefits Fund.

These modifications provide that instead of employers paying one-half of 1 percent of payroll to the SUB fund, three-eights of that 1 percent will go to the union's new Health Services Plan. The other one-eighth of 1 percent will continue to be paid into the SUB fund.

ILGWU Pres. Louis Stulberg praised the employers for showing foresight and concern in approving the additional service benefit for garment workers. Stulberg had first proposed the drug prescription plan at the union's convention last May.

Trustees of the plan estimate that more than 2 million prescriptions will be filled each year at a cost to the plan of nearly $5 million.

A number of pharmacies designated to fill the orders for the medicines also are expected to make available to members a list of selected non-prescription items at reduced prices.

Administrator of the fund is Louis Rolnick, director of the union's Welfare & Health Benefits Dept.

5 Food Chains In Atlanta Halt Sale of Grapes

Atlanta — Five big food store chains in Atlanta have discontinued the sale of California grapes at the urging of local clergymen and a citizens' committee set up to support the boycott campaign of the AFL-CIO Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

The food chains acted in defiance of a "buy grapes" counter-campaign led by the John Birch Society and the National Right to Work Committee.

Leading the grape boycott drive were the Atlanta Committee to Support the California Farm Workers and the Concerned Clergy, made up of 50 local ministers, priests and rabbis. Their efforts led to halting of grape sales by the A & P, Big Apple, Colonial, Kroger and Winn-Dixie stores.

Earlier, major chains in Chicago and Detroit announced they would no longer carry California grapes and mayors of Chicago and Philadelphia joined with the chief executives of other major cities in halting purchase of California grapes by city institutions.

The boycott, launched by the Farm Workers after California table grape growers refused to recognize the right of their workers to union representation, has the backing of the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

Teachers Add 18,000 New Members

Three more groups of classroom instructors joined the American Federation of Teachers to put the 1968 total of new members over the 18,000 mark—in Wake Island, West Haven, Conn., and Wilmington, Del.

The West Haven AFT defeated a National Education Association affiliate in a runoff election, 234-225. Wilmington union teachers defeated the local NEA affiliate, 417-325, in the AFT's first Delaware victory. The Wake Island AFT got a charter as new Local 1929 to join other overseas locals of school employes at U.S. installations.

Dock Strikers Reach Accord in New York

New York—Longshore negotiators voted unanimous approval of language in a new three-year dock agreement for this port and then sought to win approval of similar contract terms in more than 20 other Atlantic and Gulf ports where ILA members have been on strike since Dec. 20.

The strike by 75,000 dock workers is not over, ILA Pres. Thomas W. Gleason warned en route to South Atlantic port negotiations in Miami.

"So long as one port is down, all ports are down," Gleason said. He announced that when negotiations are completed, all contracts will be ratified and signed on the same day. Only then will strikers go back to work, he emphasized.

The New York settlement, subject to membership vote, will bring dockworker wages from a base rate of $3.62 an hour to $4.60 by the third year.

Wages in the New York settlement will total 98 cents over the contract term, with an additional 68 cents applied by steamship firms and stevedore companies to pensions, health and welfare benefits, vacations and holidays.

Special Mediator David L. Cole reported to the White House and Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz that the key step toward final settlement has been achieved here. Two associates, Daniel Fitzpatrick and Robert E. Kennedy of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, will now turn to the problems of the "outports" in the South Atlantic, and Gulf ports from Tampa to Brownsville, Tex.

Cole said the settlement here will make it unnecessary for the President to ask Congress for any additional authority to resolve the longshore dispute.

The New York "package" totaling $1.60 an hour over three years calls for wage increases of 38 cents an hour the first year, 25 cents the second and 35 cents the third.

Representatives from all North Atlantic ports met here to approve the printed contract language, subject to later ratification by ILA members. Union and management in the "outports" now will try to apply the holiday, vacation, guaranteed workweek and container language to each port, the union said.

New York employers have agreed to retain a work guarantee of 2,080 hours a year, or a full 52 weeks. Until now, only Philadelphia has had a similar but lower guarantee.

Another major issue is the job-protection clause affecting "stripping and stuffing" of freight containers within a 50-mile radius of each port.

Social Agency Cites Late CWA Leader

New Orleans—Leon Duplantier, former president of Communications Workers Local 3410, will posthumously receive the annual Merit Award to Labor given by the Association for Retarded Children, Inc., of Greater New Orleans.

Duplantier, who died in February 1968, was active in United Fund drives in a number of capacities, including a role as special assistant of community services representing the president of the Louisiana AFL-CIO.

He gave many hours of his time to promoting the welfare of the mentally retarded.

Budget Totals, 1968-1970

Appliance Makers Told To Improve Warranties

Appliance manufacturers and repairmen have been warned that they must improve the quality of appliance service and warranties within a year or face regulation by federal legislation.

The warning was contained in the report of a presidential task force on appliance warranties and service released by Betty Furness, special assistant to the President for consumer affairs.

Her office coordinated the work of the task force which included Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz, Commerce Sec. C. R. Smith, Chairman Paul Rand Dixon of the Federal Trade Commission, and other top government executives.

Miss Furness said the gist of the report and its recommendations is that manufacturers "get some of the garbage out of their warranties, and get more guarantee into them."

Dixon's recommendation in the report were that FTC "intensify its efforts" to halt deceptive advertising of appliance guarantees and consider issuing "guidelines" for warranties.

He also proposed consumer education on warranties and guarantees, an end to "disclaimers" of warranties by manufacturers, "clear and simple" language in warranties and an end to manufacturers trying to pass on to the consumer the cost of replacing defective parts.

Smith recommended that the appliance industry provide the consumer with point-of-sale product information to aid shopping for appliances and reduce misunderstanding of guarantees.

Wirtz called for a continuing study of the appliance industry's manpower aspects by the government with a view toward improving repair service and the training and qualifications of repairmen.

The task force, created by Pres. Johnson in his 1968 consumer message to Congress, pointed to numerous examples of misleading, unclear warranties and guarantees, failures to live up to them and costly repairs of appliances.

The task force did not specify exactly what form legislation should take, if its warning isn't heeded, but suggested that the measures might be patterned after several bills introduced in the 90th Congress.

Generally, they were shaped to crack down on deceptive guarantees, give the consumers more remedies against them and set compulsory standards for warranties and guarantees.

ILA Medical Center Marks First Decade

Brooklyn, N.Y.—Local Longshoremen and their employers began a second decade of service at the Brooklyn Longshoremen's Medical Center with a report predicting continued growth.

In the last two fiscal years the medical and dental care center added two new floors to the Anthony Anastasio memorial wing and enlarged other center facilities, Trustee Chairman M. E. Knabe and Pres. Anthony Scotto reported.

In 10 years since the center's founding, they noted that 140,922 patients made 774,596 visits to the center and received nearly 1.5 million services.

The center has grown from a pilot project to a medical and dental care complex second to none, Medical Dir. Francis V. Mitchell and Business Administrator Bart Di Mattina said in a tribute to the directors and the staff. Trustees include ILA Pres. Thomas W. Gleason and Vice Pres. Scotto.

Surplus Anticipated:

'Very Tight' Johnson Budget Retains 10% Tax Surcharge

By David L. Perlman

The outgoing Johnson Administration submitted to Congress a "very tight" budget designed to meet America's most pressing needs at home, fulfill the nation's commitments abroad—and return a surplus to the Treasury.

Until peace in Viet Nam allows a reduction in military spending, the President told Congress, the 10 percent tax surcharge should be continued and present excise taxes on automobiles and telephone calls should be extended.

Johnson predicted that a continued growing economy will provide the extra revenue needed to expand high priority health, education, housing and job training programs. It will leave enough left over, he said, to achieve a budget surplus for the second successive year.

The President's budget anticipates that the federal government will take in $198.7 billion during the fiscal year beginning next July 1, and pay out $195.3 billion—for a surplus of $3.4 billion.

He estimated that the current fiscal year, ending June 30, will close with expenditures totaling $183.7 billion and income adding up to $186.1 billion—for a $2.4 billion surplus.

The previous fiscal year showed a massive $25.2 billion deficit—partly, Johnson said, because Congress delayed so long in raising taxes to meet the Viet Nam war cost.

Included in the President's budget for the 1970 fiscal year is a new proposal for increases in social security benefits, along with higher payroll taxes and a higher taxable wage base to pay for the improved benefits.

The Johnson Administration proposal would:

- Extend medicare to nearly 2 million disabled persons between 50 and 65 and ease the restrictions on social security disability benefits.
- Provide an average 13 percent increase in social security retirement benefits, with at least a 10 percent raise for the nearly 25 million persons on the benefit rolls. The minimum benefit would be raised 45 percent to $80 a month and everyone who worked 20 years in covered employment would be guaranteed at least $100 a month at retirement age.
- Raise the taxable wage base for social security from $7,800 to $9,000 a year and advance by one year—to Jan. 1, 1970—the scheduled rise in the tax rate to 5.2 percent each on employer and worker.

The new Administration, of course, is not committed to this proposal—or to any other feature of the budget. Pres.-elect Nixon did, however, announce his support of Johnson's request to extend the income tax surcharge if conditions remain unchanged by this spring.

Outgoing Treasury Sec. Joseph W. Barr—the official who described the budget as "very tight"—said the surplus this year and next year will ease the money and credit "crunch" by taking the government out of the competition for credit and making it, instead, a supplier of credit.

Johnson said his spending proposals represent "our minimum requirements" and warned that any major cuts—by the new President or by Congress—could jeopardize the long record of prosperity the nation has enjoyed.

He said he was handing over to his successor a "strong . . . solvent . . . compassionate" government which has brought the nation "unprecedented economic growth."

Among the specifics Johnson proposed in his budget message were:

- An increase of nearly $500 million for job training and other manpower programs, including a virtual doubling of funds for the Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) program, operated through the National Alliance of Businessmen.
- A $759 million increase in federal spending for all education programs to a total of $9.8 billion—as compared with about $2 billion eight years ago.
- A new federally-assisted Urban Development Bank to help cities finance capital improvements. Such a bank was proposed by Vice Pres. Humphrey during his campaign for the presidency.
- Full funding by Congress of grants to state and local law enforcement agencies authorized last year in the Safe Streets & Crime Control Act.
- Stepped-up funds for civil rights enforcement and strengthening of enforcement powers of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.
- A new program of comprehensive health care for expectant mothers from low income families, including medical care for their children through the first year of life.

As in all budgets, prepared nearly two years in advance and subject to congressional oversight, changing priorities and changing conditions, the money figures are far from firm. When the President submitted his last budget, for example, he foresaw spending totaling $186.1 billion and revenue adding up to only $178.1 billion, for an $8 billion deficit.

If the Treasury Dept.'s current estimate holds up, the revenue will be $8 billion more than anticipated last year, while spending—largely because of congressional cutbacks—will be $2.4 billion less.

There is a contingency fund in the budget proposal to allow the incoming Nixon Administration more leeway in financing programs and shifting priorities.

But, as Johnson said in his budget message, "a substantial part of every budget reflects the continuing momentum of program decisions made in past years, by past Presidents and Congresses."

He stressed that "our domestic programs are increasingly focused on urgent national problems—inadequate educational opportunities, slum housing, increased crime, urban congestion and decay, pollution of our air and water, lack of proper health care, and hunger and malnutrition."

The President declared that his final budget "continues to place the greatest emphasis on progress in overcoming these ills."

Congress, Government Officials In Line for Major Salary Increases

Top government officials—including members of Congress, the Cabinet and the Supreme Court—will receive major salary increases next month unless either the House or Senate takes action to block the increases.

The pay raises were submitted by Pres. Johnson along with his budget under a 1967 law which spells out a procedure for adjusting the salaries of high-level government officials every four years.

The President's proposals would:

- Raise the salary of the Chief Justice of the United States from the present $40,000 a year to $62,500 and the salaries of associate justices of the Supreme Court from $39,500 to $60,000.
- Increase the pay of Cabinet members—the heads of the 12 government departments—from $35,000 to $60,000.
- Raise the salaries of congressmen and senators from $30,000 to $42,500.

Also at the $42,500 level would be heads of major non-Cabinet agencies, appellate court judges and the comptroller general. Under secretaries of departments, federal district judges and others at the current Level 3 pay scale of $29,500 would go to $40,000. Level 4, including assistant secretaries, would go from $28,750 to $38,000 and Level 5 bureau chiefs would advance from $28,000 to $36,000.

A blue ribbon commission, headed by Frederick B. Kappel and including AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, recommended substantial increases in the salaries of government executives in a report submitted to the President last month.

Under the 1967 law, such a committee is set up to study pay adjustments every four years—but the President is not bound by its findings in his recommendation to Congress.

In fact, as Johnson disclosed in his State of the Union address, the commission had recommended a $50,000 salary for members of Congress and for appointive positions traditionally linked to the congressional pay scale.

But congressional leaders told the President that an increase that large would pose too great a political risk—and might lead to rejection of the entire package. The $42,500 compromise was then worked out.

Congress must still go through the legislative process, however, to raise the pay of the Vice President, the Speaker of the House and the majority and minority leaders of the House and Senate.

Meanwhile Congress gave final approval to a bill doubling the salary of the President of the United States to $200,000 a year. It was speeded to final passage before Inauguration Day because the Constitution bars a President from receiving a pay increase enacted during his term of office.

If the congressional and executive pay raises are not vetoed by the House or Senate, it will be good news for thousands of career federal employes in the upper civil service grades.

In Economic Report:

President Foresees Year of Prosperity

By Saul Miller

A year of continued prosperity and economic growth with the unemployment rate remaining below 4 percent was forecast for 1969 by Pres. Johnson in his final economic report.

But the President warned that the "biggest remaining overall economic challenge facing the nation" is to combine prosperity with price stability.

His Council of Economic Advisers looks for a 7 percent rate of economic growth in 1969 with a slowing of expansion in the first half of the year and a more rapid rate in the second half. Overall economic growth will be at a "more moderate rate" than in 1968.

Of the $60 billion rise in the gross national product—the total value of all goods and services produced — the council anticipates half of the economic growth will be in terms of higher prices and half in real output.

The President stressed that the nation stands at a "critical turning point" on the problem of price stability. He discarded as harmful an "overdose of fiscal and monetary restraint," mandatory controls on prices and wages or a do-nothing policy and called for a coordinated program including improved productive efficiency and voluntary cooperation by labor and management on wage and price decisions.

He said:

"It is understandable that, with living costs rising sharply, labor cannot now accept wage agreements limited to the rise in productivity. It is also understandable that, with production costs increasing, business cannot now hold prices entirely stable.

"But the process of deceleration must take hold for both prices and wages. The demands for incomes by business and labor combined must be brought more closely into line with the amount of real income the economy can generate."

The CEA restated in its section of the report the recommendations of the Cabinet Committee on Price Stability that the average wage increase should be "a little below 5 percent" and that profits should be no higher than the average of the years 1967-68.

The President cited the record of achievement in his Administration. Pointing out that the nation is in its 95th month of continuous economic advance, he declared: "No longer do we view our economic life as a relentless tide of ups and downs. No longer do we fear that automation and technical progress will rob workers of jobs rather than help us to achieve greater abundance. No longer do we consider poverty and unemployment permanent landmarks on our economic scene."

Reviewing the gains in 1968, the President commented "in some ways 1968 was too big a year," citing the 4 percent rise in consumer prices, wage increases of 7 percent and the congressional delay in enacting the 10 percent tax surcharge.

To ensure greater flexibility in the economy the President urged discretionary authority voted by the Congress to the President to initiate limited changes in tax rates, subject to congressional veto, to avoid the "threat of fiscal stalemate" in the future. He urged also changes in the selection of Federal Reserve Board members.

In other areas the President recommended the establishment of an urban development bank to provide low-cost interest loans to state and local governments; the training of more construction workers through federally assisted manpower programs in cooperation with unions and contractors; an urban mass transportation trust fund financed by a portion of the automobile excise tax.

He called again for action on "an urgently needed" occupational safety and health bill, federal action on standards for state workmen's compensation laws and to improve the unemployment compensation programs; an increase in social security benefits and minimum payments, and medicare coverage for the disabled.

Extension of manpower training programs and of the anti-poverty programs of the OEO, resources for the new housing programs and a thorough review of income support programs also were urged.

The economic report included also a report from the Cabinet Coordinating Committee on Economic Planning for the End of Viet Nam Hostilities. The report noted that "prosperity has not depended on the defense buildup and will not need high military spending to support it in peacetime."

When peace comes in Viet Nam, the committee said, there will be a peace-growth dividend which could be used to liberalize social insurance and other cash benefits, the full funding of existing civilian programs and expansion of existing programs or new programs.

The tax reduction also merits consideration, the report said, but besides allowing for expiration of temporary taxes now in effect, the committee said it would not recommend further large-scale federal tax reductions in the years immediately following the end of hostilities because of "the urgent needs of the public sector."

A MINUTEMAN BRAND is presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in recognition of labor's cooperation in the U.S. Savings Bond program. Reno Odlin, who heads the Savings Bond Volunteer State Chairmen, displays the calf skin depicting the symbol of the bond drive. Less than 100 copies of the brand are being presented to organizations supporting the Savings Bond program.

Machinists on Strike At McDonnell Plant

St. Louis—Rejecting management contract offers as inadequate, members of the Machinists voted 5,261-3,517 to go on strike at the big McDonnell Douglas aerospace plant in nearby Hazelwood.

The nation's first major aerospace strike in more than a year affects some 18,000 hourly-paid employes who work on the F4 Phantom plane. Production employes at Conductron Corp. in St. Charles, 10 miles from Hazelwood, also joined the strike. The subsidiary firm makes flight simulators and electronics equipment for McDonnell Douglas.

Picket lines are holding firm and morale is high at both locations, IAM District 837 leaders reported. No meetings have been scheduled but the union notified the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service its negotiators are willing to meet at any time to discuss settlement terms.

No IAM member has crossed picket lines since the walkout started Jan. 13, Grand Lodge Rep. James Malott said.

District 837 won a long and bitter fight to retain bargaining rights after three separate representation elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board. Its contract with McDonnell Douglas expired Nov. 3 but was extended. The NLRB certified the IAM as the exclusive bargaining agent after Machinists' supporters outvoted adherents of the unaffiliated Auto Workers and the expelled Teamsters.

Because of the elections, negotiations started late. At a membership meeting Jan. 12, IAM members turned down an offer that included wage hikes of 6 percent the first year and an additional 3 percent in each of the two following years.

The consensus of members was that it should have been 8, 4 and 4 percent with improvements also in company offers on health and life insurance coverage, premium pay, holidays and pensions.

West Coast plants of McDonnell Douglas voted last July to accept new three-year pacts with annual wage hikes of 6, 3 and 3 percent; additional raises of 3 to 25 cents an hour for high-skilled workers; dental care benefits and other union-sought improvements.

The St. Louis wage rates have a higher base than the West Coast rates—from $2.47 to $3.98 an hour, the union said.

Labor Backs Wirtz Plan on Alien Wages

The AFL-CIO has endorsed a proposal by Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz to require employers bringing alien workers into the United States to pay them at least the $1.60 an hour federal minimum wage or the local prevailing wage, whichever is higher.

Present regulations require only that alien workers be paid at least the prevailing wage—which sometimes is as low as $1 or $1.25 an hour.

Wirtz announced his intent of using the federal minimum wage as a basic floor, declaring that any lesser amount would have an adverse effect on wages of American workers "even though the wages prevailing in the industry are less."

He invited comments from interested parties before making a final decision.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote Wirtz that the proposed regulation "has the strong support" of the federation.

He noted that the federal wage floor is the amount Congress has determined is needed for a "minimum standard of living."

The AFL-CIO, Biemiller said, urges that the proposed regulation be put into effect "at the earliest possible date."

Labor Board Names 2 Regional Directors

The National Labor Relations Board named two new regional directors—Charles M. Henderson, 57, to head NLRB's Seattle office, and Francis Sperandeo, 41, at Denver.

Henderson was transferred from Albuquerque, N.M., regional director's post to replace Thomas P. Graham, Jr., retired. Sperandeo, regional attorney at Denver, succeeds the late Clyde F. Waers.

The Seattle office serves Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana and Alaska. Denver is headquarters for the region that includes Colorado, Wyoming and Utah.

Lonnie Johnson Elected to Head Mail Handlers

The Post Office Mail Handlers' executive board announced the election of Vice Pres. Lonnie L. Johnson, 36, as president and called for the implementation of the merger with the Laborers voted by the union's 1968 convention.

Johnson, of Chicago, succeeds the late Harold McAvoy. He said most members of the union and the board support the merger because "our best hope as a small union rests with LIUNA."

The board also reduced officers' salaries to provide an additional $55,000 a year for organizing and servicing. It voted to suspend Sec.-Treas. Lester Moody and Administrative Aides Andrew Carniato and Jesse Brownlee pending an investigation of charges made against them. Vice Pres. Norman Orenstein, Boston, was named acting secretary-treasurer and Vice Pres. Al Kinsey, Miami, acting aide.

The president's salary was reduced from $26,000 to $16,000 a year. The salary of the secretary-treasurer was cut to $10,400 and that of the administrative aide to $11,500 instead of twice that figure, as before, the union said.

E. C. Hallbeck, 66, Dies, Postal Clerks' President

E. C. "Roy" Hallbeck, president of the Postal Clerks since 1960 and chairman of the AFL-CIO Government Employes Council since 1961, died unexpectedly Jan. 14 at his suite in a downtown Washington hotel.

He was 66, serving his fifth consecutive term as head of the big postal union and its 6,776 locals. His associates said he had been given medical attention after an illness last summer at the union's convention in Minneapolis, but returned to work.

Death came, apparently from a heart attack, as he sat in a chair reading a newspaper. Hallbeck and his wife Elizabeth had just returned from dinner after a day-long session of the union executive board.

Funeral services were to be held at 2 p.m., Jan. 17, in Gawler's Funeral Home, with burial in National Memorial Park Cemetery in nearby Falls Church, Va.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a message of sympathy to the family that "his passing is a tragic loss to you, to the entire trade union movement and particularly the United Federation of Postal Clerks, which he served so long and well."

Hallbeck's accomplishments over the years will, Meany said, "serve as a lasting monument to his memory."

Meany also sent condolences to the union through Sec.-Treas. Owen H. Schoon. Hallbeck's "many years in the labor movement were marked by his great determination, leadership and dedication. He was a true trade unionist," Meany wrote.

Born in Chicago in 1902, Hallbeck started work in the Chicago post office as a teen-ager 48 years ago. He joined the union within a few weeks and by 1926 was secretary of Local 1, then as now the union's largest local.

Hallbeck was Local 1 president from 1934 through 1936, and rejected frequently-offered promotions to supervisory status to remain in the union. He entered the national union scene in 1940 as a vice president, and served intermittently as a legislative assistant until 1946, when he became national legislative director. In that capacity he met and consulted with every President since Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The union said death cheated Hallbeck of his most cherished goal, reunification of the Postal Clerks with the National Postal Union, now believed close to achievement. He was a moving spirit also in consolidation of the Clerks with three other unions in 1961, his associates said.

His wife and a daughter, Mrs. George Cobert of Towson, Md., survive, along with a brother and sister.

E. C. HALLBECK

Thank You, Mr. President

IN THE FINAL DAYS of the Johnson Administration the news media—especially the press—are apparently trying to redress the torrent of criticism, and in some cases abuse, that they have aimed at Lyndon Baines Johnson.

In summing up the five years of the Johnson presidency the editorialists, the interpreters, the columnists have discovered—or perhaps rediscovered—the tremendous Johnson record on civil rights, education, fighting poverty, conservation, consumer protection, health, aid to the cities, manpower and the real increase in income and purchasing power that stemmed from government economic policies.

The AFL-CIO was proud to have had a hand in helping build that record. It repeatedly called attention to the breakthroughs and benchmarks set by the Administration on behalf of all Americans. But the critics waved that aside along with the concrete accomplishments, and concentrated on a negative, carping theme geared to a dislike for the President's style, all the while ignoring or downplaying the substance.

An editorial in Memo from COPE notes that "the quieter facts of the Johnson presidency are without equal in our history." It adds that "no single administration will or can clear up all the problems of a society as vast and complex as our own. But Pres. Johnson was willing to challenge our problems on more fronts than anyone who has served in the office, and his success in many fields has been remarkable."

The Johnson record is imprinted in bold letters in the nation's lawbooks. Over the next few years that record will have an increasingly important impact on the development and the quality of American life.

The belated recognition by the news media of the substance of the five years of the Johnson presidency is welcome now because it will provide a yardstick to measure the new Administration.

For his dedicated efforts on behalf of all Americans we join the nation in a heartfelt "Thank you, Mr. President."

Testimonial to Democracy

SHORTLY AFTER NOON on Jan. 20, Richard Milhous Nixon will become the 37th President of the United States in a moment of solemn oath-taking that celebrates a triumph of a system of government.

The inauguration of Pres. Nixon demonstrates to a watchful world that an opposition party can present its case to the citizens in a democratic system and emerge victorious at the polls; that on a designated day an administration that has held power for five years peacefully and in an orderly manner turns over the reins of power to the victor.

This is a testimonial to the strength of the democratic system, to the maturity of the democratic process in the United States. It is of extreme importance in terms of the new nations searching and groping for an effective system of government.

The ultimate demonstration of democratic strength—the peaceful transfer of power to a new administration—is something that all Americans, regardless of political views or philosophy, can celebrate on this Jan. 20.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

*George M. Harrison	David Dubinsky	Joseph Curran
M. A. Hutcheson	Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky
A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton
Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	Paul Hall
Herman D. Kenin	*John J. Grogan	I. W. Abel
P. L. Siemiller	David Sullivan	Hunter P. Wharton
Paul Jennings	A. J. DeAndrade	Ralph Helstein
William Pollock	Max Greenberg	John H. Lyons

Deceased*

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, January 18, 1969 No. 3

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Like It Was

Johnson's Valedictory:

Commitments of Past 5 Years Must be Carried Forward

The following is excerpted from Pres. Johnson's last State of the Union message to the 91st Congress.

ALTHOUGH THE STRUGGLE for progressive change is continuous, there are times when a watershed is reached—when there is, if not really a break with the past, at least the fulfillment of many of its oldest hopes and a stepping forth into a new environment to seek new goals.

And I think the past five years have been such a time. We have finished a major part of the old agenda. Some of the laws that we wrote have already, in front of our eyes, taken on the flesh of achievement. Medicare, that we were unable to pass for so many years, is now a part of American life. Voting rights and the voting booth that we debated so long back in the 50s, and the doors to public service—are open at last to all Americans regardless of their color.

Schools and school children all over America tonight are receiving federal assistance to go to good schools. And pre-school education—Head Start—is already here to stay. And, I think, so are the federal programs that tonight are keeping more than a million and a half of our cream of our young people in the colleges and universities of this country.

Part of the American earth—and not only in description on a map, but in the reality of our shores and our hills and our parks and our forests and our mountains—has been permanently set aside for the American public and for their benefit. And there's more going to be set aside before this Administration ends.

Five million Americans have been trained for jobs in new federal programs.

And I think it's most important that we all realize tonight that this nation is close to full employment, with less unemployment than we've had at any time in almost 20 years. And that's not in theory, that's in fact.

Tonight the unemployment rate is down to 3.3 percent. The number of jobs has grown more than 8.5 million in the last five years. And that's more than in all the preceding 12 years.

These achievements completed the full cycle—from idea, from enactment, and finally to a place in the lives of citizens all across this country.

I wish it were possible to say that everything that this Congress and the Administration achieved during this period had already completed that cycle. But a great deal of what we have committed needs additional funding to become a tangible realization.

And yet, the very existence of these commitments, these promises to the American people made by this Congress and by the Executive branch of the government, are achievements in themselves, and failure to carry through on our commitments would be a tragedy for this nation.

This much is certain: No one man or group of men made these commitments alone. Congress and the Executive branch, with their checks and balances, reasoned together and finally wrote them into the law of the land. And they now have all the moral force that the American political system can summon when it acts as one.

They express America's common determination to achieve goals. They imply action. In most cases, you have already begun that action. But it is not fully completed, of course.

* * *

I REJECTED, and rejected, and then finally accepted the congressional leadership's invitation to come here to speak this farewell to you.

I did that for two reasons. One was philosophical. I wanted to give you my judgment, as I saw it, on some of the issues before our nation, as I view them, before I leave.

The other was just pure sentimental. Most of my life—most of all my life as a public official has been spent here in this building. For 38 years, since I worked in that gallery as a doorkeeper in the House of Representatives, I have known these halls and I have known most of the men pretty well who walked them. I know the questions that you face; I know the conflicts that you endure; I know the ideals that you seek to serve.

I believe deeply in the ultimate purposes of this nation—described by the Constitution, tempered by history, embodied in progressive laws, and given life by men and women that have been elected to serve their fellow citizens.

Pres.-elect Nixon, in the days ahead, is going to need your understanding, just as I did, and he is entitled to have it.

And I hope every member will remember that the burdens he will bear as our President will be borne for all of us.

And now it's time to leave. I hope it may be said a hundred years from now that by working together we helped to make our country more just—more just for all of its people as well as to insure and guarantee the blessings of liberty for all of our posterity. That's what I hope. But I believe that at least it will be said that we tried.

Meany Salutes LBJ:

Johnson Lauds Labor's Help In Achieving Legislative Gains

Following is the text of remarks by Pres. Johnson and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at the ceremony in the lobby of the AFL-CIO building at which the President made a presentation to Meany and the AFL-CIO.

PRES. JOHNSON

Woodrow Wilson said labor is not a commodity, it is a form of cooperation. And before I leave this town, I asked for the privilege to come here and to talk briefly with you when I wasn't asking anything of you, not even cooperation.

I wanted to tell you, on behalf of myself, my family and the American people how much I think we all owe you for the leadership that I have seen you exert during my five years in the presidency.

I looked over my diary last night and I have met with Mr. Meany and his assistants many times, but with Mr. Meany himself, 49 times, in personal meetings either in my office, the Oval Room or in the mansion.

In addition to that, he has called me, or I have called him, 82 additional times. We have had some rather extended conversations in those telephone calls.

Now, during this period of five years, our general goal has been the greatest good for the greatest number. We have tried to improve working conditions; we have tried to improve wages; we have tried to see that profits were reasonable.

We passed minimum wage bills and things of that nature that directly applied to labor. But the thing that we have borne down on is the education of our young, medical assistance for our old, conservation of our resources—human and natural.

I know of no living single group that I think has been more responsible for the advances that have been made in this field in the last five years than the AFL-CIO, headed by George Meany, and supported by millions of men and women throughout this country.

The President of the United States and the president of the AFL-CIO have not always agreed on procedure or on method. I think we have always agreed on purpose and objective.

When Mr. Meany hasn't agreed, he said so in a friendly and firm manner. And I have tried to do that also.

I remember how disappointed I was when he came to the Cabinet room and told me that he regretted it about as much as anything he had done that year but he couldn't go along with my suggestions to merge the Commerce Dept. and the Labor Dept. That disappointed me.

But I was really disillusioned when he brought about half a dozen other fellows like Joe Beirne with him to pound the table and just say, "Thou shalt not pass."

But if that was a disappointing morning, there were many, many other happy events.

And I am sure that my grandchildren and your grandchildren are going to live in a more peaceful, more prosperous and better world because of the leadership you people have given the American people.

So I said to Mr. Meany, in one of our little social chats not long ago: "I am going to invite myself to come over to your office. I don't think that will break tradition or precedence because I would remind you that you have invited yourself to come to my office many times."

I made a little investment and I want to bring you, from the hundreds of measures that we have passed, the 100 landmark measures that the Cabinet presented me, with a little plaque and pen set before I left.

I would like to present to the working people of this country and to their gallant, able and trusted leaders, a symbol of what the last five years has been all about.

GEORGE MEANY

Mr. President, on behalf of the AFL-CIO, its leadership, its millions of members, and on behalf of the many, many millions more who will be beneficiaries of the legislation which you signed into law and which is represented by the pens and titles of the various bills enacted over the last five years, I want to thank you.

Now, I am not going to take a long time—I could take quite a bit of time discussing the war on poverty, civil rights, hospital and medical facilities, conservation, social security, Medicare, urban housing, redevelopment, minimum wages and manpower training and many, many other things.

But I would like to concentrate just on one phase of the Lyndon Johnson record for the past five years because I feel that in the years to come, our grandchildren and their children will be beneficiaries of the education legislation passed in the last five years.

Long after we are gone, future generations will benefit from this type of legislation.

If nothing else had happened in these five years except the education program, this Administration would have gone down in history as one of the greatest since the establishment of the republic.

I am not going to read the list, it is too long. But I would like to perhaps summarize it by saying in fiscal 1960—just eight years ago—there were $600 million authorized in funds for federal aid to education. In fiscal 1969, for federal aid to education, education funds authorized add up to $6 billion. In other words instead of $600 million, we have $6 billion for education in fiscal 1969.

During the darkest days of the Civil War, Pres. Lincoln signed a Land Grant College Act to provide federal land for construction of state colleges. This gave education a tremendous boost. And students today are beneficiaries of what Pres. Lincoln did 106 years ago during the dark days of the Civil War.

It is my opinion that our children, the children of all Americans—not just the children of trade unionists but the children of all Americans and their grandchildren, will be beneficiaries of the last five years of the Administration of Lyndon Johnson in the White House.

They will be beneficiaries through greater educational opportunities, greater leadership because leadership and learning complement one another and in today's world, an uneducated citizenry would mean truly a backward nation.

In this field alone, in addition to all of the other things that happened and in which we are interested in the last five years, I think that Lyndon Johnson will go down in history as one of our greatest Chief Executives.

To Ease Financial Woes:

Income Tax for States, Cities Held More Equitable to All

FULLER USE of the income tax by state and local governments would ease financial needs of "crisis proportions" and make tax systems more "equitable," an AFL-CIO tax expert advised.

Pointing out that 15 states now have no tax on personal incomes, Arnold Cantor, an economist in the AFL-CIO's Dept. of Research, said that "very few" of those that do "really take full advantage" of its potential, despite growing needs and demands in "education, public assistance, health care and pollution problems."

Cantor said income taxes based on the ability to pay put a fairer share on wealthier families than the now widely-used state and local property and sales taxes. This is so, he said, because low-and moderate-income families spend "a much greater proportion" of their income on housing and consumer goods than wealthier families do.

Cantor said there is also a "continuously increased need for federal assistance through grants-in-aid," because "certain areas, no matter how imaginative their tax systems, cannot go it alone and provide necessary public services." He pointed out that because of the "mobility of our population" and other factors, "what may at one time be a local problem tends to be a national problem," calling for federal expenditures "in line with national priorities."

By Press Associates, Inc.

CONSERVATIVE BUSINESSMEN who desperately want to get rid of the National Labor Relations Board and hope that perhaps they will succeed with a Republican in the White House claim that the current board has been pro-labor.

Is the claim really justified?

One way to determine whether it is or not is to check the record of NLRB decisions in the nation's courts which have had occasion to rule on them.

For as controversial a field as that of labor-management relations and a field in which the courts themselves have been notoriously conservative the record is surprisingly good and far from justifying the charges that the board has been unfair to management.

For the fiscal year 1967—the latest available—there were 244 cases carried to U.S. appellate courts on petitions for review or enforcement of the board's orders. The courts affirmed the board in full on 152 cases; affirmed the board with modifications in 43; sent 13 cases back to the board for further consideration or clarification; partially affirmed or remanded 3, and in only 33 cases were NLRB cases set aside.

Before the U.S. Supreme Court, the board's record was astonishingly good: of seven cases the board was sustained in six and only one was sent back to the Court of Appeals.

Actually the five-member board, about whose heads so much conservative wrath has centered, is by no means a powerful, dictatorial body of men deciding labor-management cases on their own. While it has great policy influences, the National Labor Relations Act, Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin have hedged it in to a considerable degree.

The highly important decision of whether a complaint that a representation election was unfair or an employer or union guilty of an unfair labor practice warrants NLRB investigation stems from the NLRB's general counsel, and the regional directors under his direction. The general counsel, by law, is independently appointed by the President and operates independently.

THE HIGHLY INFLUENTIAL trial examiners, 111 of them—who hold hearings and make their findings and recommendations public—do not work for the board although they are paid from its budget.

For reasons that are obvious in the statistics, enemies of the NLRB don't want to depend on the nation's regular courts to keep the NLRB from going off on pro-labor and anti-management kicks. They want special "labor courts" instead.

Quite apart from the strong likelihood that such "labor" courts would be staffed by men with little experience in labor-management relations, they would represent turning back the clock to half a a century ago.

For the average worker a return to the court system would be catastrophic. Under the NLRB, the general counsel, in effect, becomes the plaintiff's lawyer. Lawyers representing the general counsel play the role of prosecuting attorney in presenting the case before the trial examiner.

Under the "labor court" proposals, a worker would have to provide his own lawyer to present his case. This, in itself, would place him at an immense economic disadvantage versus his employer. In addition, the entire structure of the nation's labor-management machine would be tossed away and would overload the nation's judiciary system disastrously.

What is becoming more and more apparent is that critics of the NLRB are not so much concerned with the structure of the board itself as they are opposed to the whole concept of the National Labor Relations Act, an act which by statute makes it the policy of the American government and its institutions to encourage and protect the right of workers to form their own unions freely and without coercion.

STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENTS can do more to ease their financial needs of "crisis proportions" and put more "equity" into their tax systems through fuller use of income taxes, AFL-CIO economist Arnold Cantor, center, told reporters Alan Adams, left, of Business Week magazine and Sam Sharkey of the Newhouse Newspapers on Labor News Conference. The AFL-CIO-produced public service interview is broadcast Tuesdays on the Mutual Radio Network.

How to Buy:

Betty Furness Proved Effective In Role of Consumers' Advocate

By Sidney Margolius

ONE OF THE BIGGEST surprises to many people was the highly effective job Betty Furness did in representing consumers as the President's consumer assistant.

And one of the main concerns now is that there probably won't be anyone with the determination and ability of Miss Furness or her predecessor, Esther Peterson, to represent at the White House the cheated or even just disappointed consumers.

When Miss Furness was appointed consumer assistant to Pres. Johnson two years ago, a lot of people thought she was just a glamorous actress. Actually, as we pointed out at the time, she was much more—a highly-intelligent, outspoken woman with a great deal of sympathy for the underdog (exactly what the consumer is nowadays).

As the government's top consumer representative, she spoke her mind frankly at congressional hearings. She took to the road to tell business organizations what was troubling consumers, and to tell consumer groups what they needed to do to get protective laws. She made 90 speeches in less than two years.

Congressmen especially were surprised. They had not expected such expert testimony from the former movie and TV star. In all, Betty Furness helped get 11 consumer bills passed in the time she was in office.

Before she left Washington, she told this writer what she felt she had learned most in two years of battling for consumers. "The most important insight I got is that consumer problems are bigger, deeper and more complicated than I had, and probably most people had, realized," she confided.

"In the beginning I honestly thought that industry was trying to please the consumer. I am not so sure anymore. Now I think there is more manipulating than pleasing.

"I did not have a full concept of the degree of frustration many consumers undergo, like the family that buys a car, finds serious defects, but the dealer won't make good and the family is left with half a car."

Are consumer complaints on the whole justified? "Totally," Miss Furness answers with conviction. "Manufacturers tend to blame product difficulties on consumers themselves. They say, 'Did they read the instructions? Are they doing it right?' But the difficulties most often are not the fault of the consumers."

She has told manufacturers the unvarnished truths as she found them. In one of her last speeches, to the National Association of Manufacturers, she warned: "You may be rejoicing over the approach of a Republican Administration, but I can tell you if consumer problems are left unattended over the next four years—and I hope and assume they won't be—the remedial action taken by some future Administration and some coming Congress will be even more severe than it would be if the problems are solved as they come up."

But Betty Furness believes that it is the aroused consumers themselves who are going to make it impossible for any Administration now to turn its back on consumers.

COMPLAINTS ABOUT home appliances, their warranties and repairs brought the most letters into her office, Miss Furness reports. Many warranties or guarantees tell the consumer what the manufacturer will do, but not what he won't do. Some warranties put an "unreasonable" time limit on the manufacturer's responsibility.

Sometimes, too, the warranty can be invoked only by "unreasonable effort or expense on the part of the buyer," Miss Furness points out.

Since she has left office, she has turned down a fortune in offers from manufacturers and sellers to do commercials and sponsor their products. She refuses to be involved in automatic payoffs.

"I won't do it," she told me. "I want to be free to comment. I wouldn't sponsor any product I could not investigate myself."

She is going to lecture, and is considering doing some writing. She probably also will be back on the air.

Copyright 1969 by Sidney Margolius

EXCHANGING CONGRATULATIONS are Edmund P. Tobin, right, and Rudolph Ellis of Union Labor Life Insurance Co. The firm, in which 57 AFL-CIO affiliates own stock, elevated Tobin from president to board chairman and named Ellis, an executive vice president, as president.

In 3 Years:

7 Million Poor Rise Above Poverty Line

THE WAR ON POVERTY may become a prime issue in the 91st Congress but reports issued by both the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare and the Office of Economic Opportunity indicate that the "war" has not been unsuccessful.

HEW Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen said that while official figures will not be out until spring, preliminary statistics show that an estimated 4 million Americans climbed above the poverty line in 1968 alone.

In August, acting OEO Dir. Bertrand Harding told a White House Cabinet session that more than 7 million Americans had escaped poverty in three years—1965-67, with 1967 accounting for nearly one-half of the total.

The OEO, in its year-end report declared:

"These numbers mean that millions more who still are poverty-stricken are finding not only 'hope' but measurable progress through the systems that deliver services in the legal, medical, educational, housing and job training fields."

Following is OEO's summary of the progress in the War on Poverty in 1968:

Community Action Program—Some 6 million people participated in programs administrated by some 1,012 locally-controlled agencies . . . 1.7 million young people and children enjoyed benefits of summer and recreation programs . . . nearly 1 million served through health centers . . .

Upward Bound—Aids urban and rural youngsters from poverty background to go to college . . . almost two-thirds of Upward Bound graduates have enrolled in college . . . 11,000 students now in colleges . . .

Head Start—700,000 youngsters from impoverished homes served by program for early-childhood pre-school training . . . supplementary training program started to train professionals in this field . . .

Health—A million people were served by OEO health centers during the year . . . total of 24 full-time health centers opened in neighborhoods, plus 17 offering limited services . . . 300,000 received advice for family planning and 500,000 people benefited from 234 food and health grants . . .

Legal Services—Some 500,000 cases were handled and groups representing thousands of other poor people got counsel and representation from OEO legal service units around the country.

Rural—591 rural Community Action agencies covering 1,505 counties in operation . . . in past two years 131 poor people's cooperatives funded—ranging from credit unions to production, marketing and consumer cooperatives . . . other rural programs . . .

Indians—Some 323,000 Indians belonging to 114 tribes in 20 states benefited from OEO programs . . . construction skills given to 2,500 Indians who repaired or built homes for 75,000 family members . . . Head Start, health, training, legal and other programs in operation . . .

Migrants—In all, 250,000 migrant workers and their families were served in 1968 . . . 7,200 workers and families received better housing and 1,100 temporary housing . . . day care for 13,200 children enabled parents to work . . . 1,000 high school dropouts prepared for college . . .

Elderly—About 550,000 elderly helped by OEO over the year . . . programs set up in 101 communities in 42 states—health care, transportation, consumer education, day care provided . . .

Job Corps—More than 67,000 out-of-school, out-of-work young men and women 16 to 21 received Job Corps training in 1968 . . . number of youth returned to the community since Job Corps began in January 1965 rose to 193,000, of whom 135,000 are in jobs, school or military service.

VISTA—Recruited volunteers with specialized skills to offer communities they serve . . . some 650,000 people helped on a regular basis in 1968. (PAI).

Soup to Nonsense:

Science Encroaches on Areas That Only Mother Knows Best

By Jane Goodsell

SCIENCE, THE OLD SPOILSPORT, has done it again—demolished a long-cherished belief. This time it has announced that people don't catch colds from sitting in drafts and getting their feet wet. I won't say that science doesn't know what it's talking about because I know better than to argue with scientists who can win any argument by pointing smugly to a bunch of statistics compiled under "controlled laboratory conditions." On second thought, I will argue because right there is the crux of the problem—controlled laboratory conditions are as remote from real life as the adventures of Paddy the Beaver.

I, personally, know dozens of instances in which people have caught not merely colds but double pneumonia from sitting in drafts; and my Uncle Henry spent two weeks flat on his back in the hospital as a result of walking around all day in wet shoes. As my Aunt Harriet said, it never would have happened if he'd worn his galoshes as she'd told him to. And just the other day, I read a book about George Washington which stated right there in black and white that he caught his death from riding horseback in a wet rain.

So you see? In real life, people do catch colds from sitting in drafts and getting their feet wet—and no ivory tower scientist can convince me otherwise. I know better and so, I believe, do most sensible people and most particular mothers. For it is, of course, mothers who have for centuries assumed the responsibility for keeping their loved ones out of drafts and dry-footed.

This is what really worries me about that latest bombshell which science has flung at us: its demoralizing effect on mothers. (The fact that it will also result in a lot more people catching a lot more colds seems to me less serious. Thanks to antibiotics, pneumonia isn't the threat it once was.) Mothers, on the other hand, have never been in a worse position to receive the body blow which science has dealt them.

I WON'T PRETEND that mothers succeeded more than one time out of 20 in persuading anyone to wear galoshes or to move out of a draft, but it made a mother feel worthwhile and important just to hear herself delivering such sensible advice. And better yet was the good-all-over satisfaction one got from saying, "See? I told you you'd catch cold if you didn't change your socks." These vindications may have been petty, but they earned Mother a modicum of respect in the household, giving her a much-needed opportunity to prove herself right about something.

And now science has ruined all that forever. O Mom, poor Mom!

Goldfinger Warns:

High Interest Rates Threat to Economy

The danger of an economic recession has emerged with the record-high prime interest rates instituted by the nation's big banks and the resulting credit squeeze, warned labor economist Nathaniel Goldfinger.

The new 7 percent prime interest rate—the amount banks charge to their biggest and best credit risks—was viewed by Goldfinger as too severe for the national economy, which has been running briskly for the last three years.

"Slapping on the brakes all of a sudden is very dangerous because there is a possibility of going through the economic windshield," the director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research declared.

It is much wiser to slow down the economy, Goldfinger declared.

"If the monetary managers of the Federal Reserve System wanted to act in the monetary area, they could increase the reserve requirements on banks," he said, which would have a more gradual slowing effect.

He said that the board's action raising its discount rate was unnecessary because the temporary income tax surcharge, along with the "very strong lid on the increase of government expenditures" and other economy-dampeners were already slowing the rapid rise in sales, production and employment.

The higher prime rates will not only be felt by the richest and biggest borrowers, but throughout the nation, Goldfinger noted.

A 7 percent rate for the big corporations like General Motors or General Electric is really an understatement, he said, "because on big loans, the banks also require that 20 percent of the loan remain in the bank as an interest-free deposit."

This 20 percent deposit added to the 7 percent interest rate adds up to an effective rate of 8.4 percent, Goldfinger pointed out.

"I don't think it takes much imagination to see what kind of interest rates medium-sized businesses and small businesses, farmers, home buyers and consumers will pay," Goldfinger added.

Noting that mortgage rates were running at 7.25 and 7.5 percent at the end of 1968, he predicted the rates will go up toward 8 percent for the country as a whole.

Meanwhile, the interest rates for smaller business will move even higher than the 8 to 10 percent rates of recent months.

"And interest rates on installment loans to consumers, which have been running around 12 and 18 percent, will move a lot higher," he added.

"The sad part," the federation's top economist said on Labor News Conference, is that these interest rates "get built into the price structure so they increase the price of everything you buy . . . they are an inflationary factor."

Goldfinger said that many economists feel the surtax, which siphons about $11 billion in additional revenues from consumers and businesses, would gradually slow down the economy a bit and slow down the rate of price increases.

He noted that the surtax is bringing the federal budget toward a surplus.

"Because of that factor, many economists believe that gradually, economic expansion would begin to slow down on an orderly basis" and price pressures would ease over a period of time, he added.

He further cited the fact that military expenditures, which showed rapid increases over the past three years, have now leveled off. The number of consumer loans also have begun to taper off, he noted.

For economists, the higher interest rates have made the future of the national economy uncertain. Goldfinger said that while some predict a continued rapid growth in sales, production and employment, others look for a slowdown in expansion in the first half of 1969 and a tapering off of the price rise in the second half.

"Still others see a recession in the months ahead," he said.

"I don't think that we are heading into a recession at the moment," Goldfinger said, but there is a danger of recession and much uncertainty because on top of the surtax and cutbacks in government spending, "we now have this money squeeze and rising interest rates."

NEW TEAM of Labor Dept. officials is introduced by Pres.-Elect Nixon and incoming Labor Sec. George P. Shultz at a news conference in New York. From left: James D. Hodgson, who will be Under Sec. of Labor; Shultz; Nixon; Mrs. Elizabeth D. Koontz, designated to head the Women's Bureau; Geoffrey H. Moore, who will be Commissioner of Labor Statistics, and Arnold Weber, named Assistant Sec. of Labor for Manpower.

Pay Gains In Millinery Pact Avert Walkout

New York—A three-year contract giving millinery workers their first cost-of-living escalator clause in more than 50 years was ratified at a packed meeting of some 4,000 union members in the Hotel Diplomat here.

The workers are members of Locals 24, 42, 57 and 90 of the Hatters, Cap & Millinery Workers. By rising vote they accepted contract improvements offered just short of a strike deadline.

Members of two employer associations agreed to intensify efforts to provide more jobs in the industry by a sales promotion campaign stressing "hats for every season," Joint Board Manager Nathaniel Spector and Sec.-Treas. Murray Zuckerman reported.

The employers agreed to raise wages of piece-workers by 7 percent as of Jan. 1, 1969, plus an additional 6 percent next Jan. 1; and of week-workers by $7 and $6 a week at the same yearly intervals.

Contributions Increased

The employers agreed to raise their contributions to the health and welfare fund by one-half of 1 percent immediately, and to raise their retirement fund contributions by an additional 2 percent this year, plus another 1 percent next Jan. 1.

The cost of living formula provides an automatic increase in wages for all workers, keyed to a rise of from 2 to 4 percent in the Consumer Price Index in 1970.

The parties agreed also that those who work on a legal holiday will get 2.5 days' pay instead of the former 2 days.

Joint board officers said the increase in pension fund contributions will insure the solvency of the fund and make it possible for more than 2,000 retirees to continue receiving monthly benefits.

The union had asked for larger benefits to cushion members against higher living costs but agreed to compromise for the sake of all concerned, Spector said. Employers pay 2 percent of payroll into sales promotion fund sponsored by the Millinery Institute of America but the drive was not effective, due chiefly to the failure of retail store owners, general merchandise managers and sales personnel to cooperate in promoting the sale of women's hats, he said.

Shultz, Nixon Announce Key Labor Dept. Aides

A Lockheed Aircraft Corp. executive will serve as Under Secretary of Labor in the Nixon Administration and a close associate of incoming Labor Sec. George P. Shultz will head the department's high priority Manpower Administration.

Shultz and Nixon announced the designation of James D. Hodgson as under secretary and three other top appointments at a New York news conference.

Hodgson, 52, is a Lockheed vice president who served for six years as the company's industrial relations director and has taught industrial relations at UCLA. He had a major role in Lockheed's training programs for the disadvantaged.

Dr. Arnold R. Weber, 39-year-old industrial relations professor and research director of the University of Chicago's Graduate School of Business, will be Assistant Sec. of Labor for Manpower.

Shultz is dean of the graduate school and the two men have collaborated on books and studies in the manpower and automation field. He was brought to Washington by Shultz to handle the problems of transition to the new Administration.

To serve as Commissioner of Labor Statistics, Shultz turned to Dr. Geoffrey H. Moore, vice president of the National Bureau of Economic Research in New York.

Moore, who will be 55 next month, is the immediate past president of the American Statistical Association. The BLS commissioner does not normally change with each Administration but the post has been vacant since the resignation of Arthur M. Ross some months ago.

The new head of the Women's Bureau will be Mrs. Elizabeth D. Koontz, 49, a Salisbury, N. C. teacher who is serving this year as president of the National Education Association.

Mrs. Koontz, who has served on state and federal advisory councils, was the first Negro named to the Nixon Administration.

Past precedent would indicate that Assistant Sec. for Intl. Affairs George L-P Weaver will stay on at least until June, when his term as head of the governing body of the Intl. Labor Organization expires.

Among top posts still to be filled are assistant secretaries for labor standards and for labor-management relations and the department's solicitor.

The appointees are all subject to Senate confirmation but approval was expected to be routine. The designation of Shultz brought widespread praise from people who have worked with him over the years—including outgoing Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz.

Kenin Urges 'Dialogue' On Labor's Role in Arts

New York—Labor's participation in the arts depends upon a "growing dialogue" between union members and the institutions which present the arts, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Herman Kenin declared here.

Kenin, president of the Musicians and of the Council of AFL-CIO Unions for Scientific, Professional & Cultural Employes, made the point in an address prepared for the Intl. Association of Concert Managers' convention.

In defining "the limits and the potentialities" of unions' involvement in the arts, Kenin pointed out that "labor cannot create art and it cannot fill a hall; it can only help the artist and assist you in building audiences."

Before a union can become a patron of the arts, Kenin stated, "its members must want it to be a patron."

"And for this to happen, you must enlist the individual union member as a ticket buyer, a subscriber, and eventually a financial contributor to cultural activities," he continued.

Furthermore, Kenin said, arts institutions must give the worker a greater voice in planning subscription drives and fund raising for artistical events.

Arts institutions also can be helped in enlisting the support of union members by union staffs and officers, Kenin said—that is, "if you are willing to listen to them and face some challenging questions."

Two of the questions, he added, might be: Why are matinees held on weekday afternoons when workers cannot attend? Why are events not scheduled early in the evening so people who work can get home early and relieve an expensive babysitter?

"You may be told also," he concluded, "that receptions for the craftsmen who build a new concert hall or culture center are marvelous, but why are they invited to the 'open houses' and then never again?"

Major Job Areas Show '68 Pickup

Six of the nation's 150 largest manpower centers were in the substantial unemployment classification—a jobless rate of 6 percent or above—at the close of 1968, the Labor Dept. reported.

It said this is the lowest number for the end of the year since the department began its present system of classifying unemployment in populous areas in 1955.

Vote Cleared For Employes Of N.Y. State

New York—Public employe unions hailed as timely a State Supreme Court decision clearing the way toward a representation election among more than 125,000 state employes.

Justice T. Paul Kane of the court's Albany division dissolved a temporary stay of the election and dismissed a petition by the Civil Service Employes Association aimed at lumping all employes into one bargaining unit instead of five. CSEA said it plans to appeal.

District Council 50 of the State, County & Municipal Employes, representing 69 local unions of state employes, said it will accept the decision of the State Public Employment Relations Board to set election dates for these separate units of state employers:

Administrative services, affecting about 40,000 employes; institutional services, 35,000; professional, scientific and technical employes, 25,000; operational services, 17,500; security services, 7,500.

District 50 represents employes in all groups. Last month four of its state hospital locals struck briefly for union recognition but returned to work when PERB ruled they could pick their own bargaining agent. The civil service group has been fighting that ruling ever since.

BUNDLED IN THEIR WARMEST WOOLENS, White House reporters and photographers—on strike against the Associated Press—took time off from the picket line to say farewell to Pres. Johnson. The Wire Service Guild strikers met the Chief Executive at the AFL-CIO headquarters where he made a presentation. With the President are, from left, Frances Lewine, Charles W. Harrity, Bob Schutz, Harvey Georges and Robert A. Daugherty.

Guild Strikers Vote to Accept AP Proposal

A seven-day strike against the Associated Press ended when a majority of the 1,374 Newspaper Guild members voted to accept an improved management offer.

Guild negotiators submitted the "sweetened" contract proposal to a nationwide membership referendum. The negotiators recommended that it be turned down because "this proposal does not achieve the goals for which our members voted to strike." But they added that the offer "does represent the greatest gain which could be made at the bargaining table at this time."

The new contract will bring the minimum pay for experienced newsmen and photographers to $250 a week in the final year of the three-year contract, reduce hours for night workers and provide improvements in pensions, vacations, holidays and health insurance.

Members of the Guild's nationwide wire service local went on strike Jan. 9 and posted pickets at most AP offices. In a number of small bureaus, other union members in the community volunteered picket help. Stanton E. Smith, AFL-CIO coordinator of state and local central bodies, wrote local labor councils urging assistance in manning picket lines.

The strike was the first in the history of AP-Guild negotiations. The news service did not shut down but it limped along on a reduced flow of copy largely turned out by supervisors.

Inflation Trade-off Termed 'Dynamite'

Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz warned in a farewell press conference that those who think that the economy can be cooled down by the layoff of a quarter of a million to a million workers are playing with a "dynamite notion."

"It will not work," Wirtz declared, asserting that such a policy "will result in repercussions beyond anything we have seen before."

The idea that inflation can be traded off for more unemployment ignores social reality, Wirtz said. It would mean the layoff of hundreds of thousands of "hardcore disadvantaged" or the layoff of others to protect the disadvantaged and "neither group would take it," he warned.

Wirtz Urges $2 Floor For All Hourly Wages

(Continued from Page 1)

for the work he does.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany hailed Wirtz's report as "correct and courageous," declaring that "it deserves prompt, favorable consideration."

Meany said Wirtz has "pinpointed a major cause of poverty in America and his prescription for its solution is just, sensible and achievable."

He noted that the AFL-CIO already has announced its determination to fight in the 91st Congress for a $2 minimum wage with universal coverage.

"The Wirtz report and recommendations will be of great value in that effort," Meany said. "The secretary's action is a fitting climax to his term in office. He is a compassionate man, a true humanitarian and his recommendations are a demonstration of these qualities."

Wirtz noted in the report that under the 1966 amendments to the minimum wage law, taking effect in 1967 and 1968, employment has increased in the areas affected by extensions of the coverage. He said also that increased minimum wage levels have not contributed to the current inflationary spiral "to an extent which permits reasonable questioning of their net value in strengthening both the position of low-paid workers in particular and the economy in general."

On future extension to universal coverage, the secretary proposed $2 an hour effective in 1971 for all jobs covered by the wage-hour act prior to 1966, with an intermediate step of $1.80 an hour starting in 1970.

For all other jobs, including those on farms, the $2 minimum would be effective by 1975 with intermediate steps taken during the intervening period.

Wirtz recommended also that overtime payment after eight hours in a day and 40 hours in a week apply to all industries and all workers. He urged also federal reimbursement in situations where the payment of subsistence wages is impossible economically as in the case of employment of the handicapped workers in a "sheltered workshop."

He called finally for subsequent adjustment of the $2 minimum to keep the minimum wage level in proper relationship to changing prevailing wage levels.

If these recommendations were to be appraised in terms of traditional concepts of the minimum wage law, said Wirtz, they would be rejected because that thinking never got beyond the concept of what the enterprise could afford and placed stability above humanity in the "scale of national values."

He added:

"I respectfully urge that a significantly different reaction comes from an appreciation of the significance and relevance of the new national purpose to eliminate poverty and the new philosophy of the minimum wage law already adopted by the Congress in its 1961 and 1966 amendments."

Those amendments, the secretary said, "went a long way toward the development of a philosophy of that act consistent with its relevance to the attack on poverty."

He also noted that despite extension of coverage in recent years there is a "significant coincidence" between those who work in jobs not covered by the minimum-wage law and those still earning less than poverty-level incomes.

Wirtz stressed that it is important that action be taken on the state level for encouraging supplementary coverage for those jobs not within the reach of federal authority.

Yarborough New Chairman:

Senate Labor Panel Stays Firmly Liberal

The Senate Labor & Public Welfare Committee will remain firmly liberal in the 91st Congress.

Its new chairman is Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.) whose voting record by AFL-CIO COPE standards was 100 percent "Right" on 12 key issues during the 90th Congress.

Its six holdover Democratic members are all northern liberals with solid records in support of labor-backed legislation.

The three new Democratic members, all newly-elected senators, are the same breed. They are Senators Thomas F. Eagleton of Missouri, Alan Cranston of California, and Harold E. Hughes of Iowa.

Continuing as senior Republican member of the committee is a GOP liberal, Sen. Jacob K. Javits of New York, with a moderate—Vermont's Sen. Winston L. Prouty—as the second ranking Republican.

The GOP gained a committee member as the party distribution of the committee shifted from a 10-6 to a 10-7 Democratic majority. But changes in the Republican membership replaced conservatives with moderates.

Senators Paul J. Fannin (R-Ariz.) and Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.) dropped off the committee to take other assignments this year.

Fannin, an extreme conservative, was sponsor last year of a bill to bar the National Labor Relations Board from granting recognition to a union on the basis of a card check.

Labor Court Sponsor

Griffin, who in the House was co-author of the Landrum-Griffin Act, sponsored a bill to replace the NLRB with a so-called Labor Court.

The new Republican members are freshmen Senators Richard S. Schweiker of Pennsylvania, Henry Bellmon of Oklahoma and William B. Saxbe of Ohio. Schweiker and Saxbe are considered in the moderate-to-liberal wing of the GOP. Bellmon, although regarded as more conservative, as governor of Oklahoma openly opposed efforts by the National Right to Work Committee to petition an open shop law to referendum after it had once been rejected by the voters.

Yarborough, who chaired the subcommittee on Labor last year, will serve as chairman of the Health subcommittee. That's the post last year's committee chairman, retired Sen. Lister Hill of Alabama, had held.

Sen. Harrison A. Williams (N.J.) will become chairman of the Labor subcommittee; Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.) will serve as chairman of the subcommittee on Employment, Manpower & Poverty, and Sen. Claiborne Pell (R.I.) will head the Education subcommittee. The Veterans' Affairs subcommittee goes to Sen. Gaylord Nelson (Wis.) and the Railroad Retirement subcommittee to Sen. Walter F. Mondale (Minn.). The committee's ranking Democrat, Sen. Jennings Randolph (W.Va.) is chairman of the Senate Public Works Committee and therefore passed up a subcommittee chairmanship.

In other major committee changes in the Senate, Richard B. Russell, conservative Democrat from Georgia, moved up to the chairmanship of the Appropriations Committee, vacating the chairmanship of the Armed Services Committee to John Stennis of Mississippi.

Gale W. McGee of Wyoming advanced to the chairmanship of the Post Office & Civil Service Committee and Joseph D. Tydings of Maryland became chairman of the District of Columbia Committee. Sen. Alan Bible of Nevada, who had been District Committee chairman, gave it up to head the Small Business Committee.

Fewer changes were expected in the reshuffle of House committee assignments which were delayed—on the Democratic side—by the need to elect a new member of the Ways & Means Committee. Democratic members of the Ways & Means Committee in turn recommend the Democratic members of other committees.

A liberal southerner, Rep. Sam Gibbons of Florida, was chosen for the Ways & Means vacancy at the Democratic caucus. A battle over the filling of the vacancy had been expected. But other candidates dropped out and Gibbons was elected by acclamation.

After the committee members make their recommendations, another Democratic caucus will be called to approve the selections.

SEN. YARBOROUGH

New Interpretations Set On Age Discrimination

New interpretations of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act have been issued by the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Divisions of the Labor Dept.

The law, which was enacted by Congress in 1967 and became effective last June, prohibits arbitrary age discrimination in employment with regard to persons from 40 to 65.

One interpretation holds that discriminatory activities committed within the geographic areas covered by the act are illegal even though the discrimination is applied to employment outside these areas.

Another interpretation will not allow an employer to duck the law by advertising or specifying that he is hiring only persons receiving social security benefits.

A third makes it illegal for an employer to reduce the wage of one employe to cover up, or attempt to correct, illegal discrimination in the wages he is paying another worker.

In other interpretations, the Labor Dept. ruled that:

- Age limitations for entry into bona fide apprenticeship programs were not intended to be affected by the law.
- An employer is not required to provide older workers with the same pension, retirement, or insurance benefits he provides younger workers if the differential does not violate any benefit plan.
- The law authorizes involuntary retirement irrespective of age if such retirement meets the terms of a bona fide pension plan. The authorization does not, however, apply to workers under 65 not participating in the pension program.
- Although use of a validated employment test does not violate the law per se, tests that are used as the sole tool or controlling factor in hiring will be carefully scrutinized to make sure they do not discriminate against older persons.

The new interpretations were published in the Federal Register and the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Divisions said they will soon be available to the public.

Filibuster Foes Lose:

Senate Backs Off From Rules Shift

The Senate passed up a clearcut opportunity to change its rules to make it easier to break filibusters—the device the conservative coalition has used to block vital legislation.

It refused to back up Vice Pres. Humphrey, the Senate's presiding officer, when he issued a ruling that it took only a majority vote—not the two-thirds required under the Senate's Rule 22—to limit debate on a motion to change the Senate's rules at the start of a new Congress.

A 51-47 majority of the Senate had voted to limit debate on the rules change motion.

Humphrey, following the procedure he had announced in advance, ruled that the cloture motion had carried, even though it lacked a two-thirds vote.

If his ruling had been accepted, each senator would have been able to talk for one more hour. And then the rules change proposal would have been either passed or defeated. The proposal itself was a compromise—to reduce the requirement for closing debate from a two-thirds to a three-fifths majority.

But Humphrey's ruling—based on the constitutional rights of the Senate to act on its rules by majority vote—was appealed.

A majority of the Senate refused to back up the Vice President's interpretation of its rights. The ruling was overturned on a 53-45 vote.

As a result, 34 senators will still be able at any time to prevent the Senate from voting on legislation they oppose.

The AFL-CIO strongly supported this year's rules reform drive, as it had the similar efforts made in past Congresses.

Andrew J. Biemiller, the federation's legislative director, urged all senators to support the rules change effort.

"It is our firm belief that the people of these United States expect their senators to decide the major issues of our time," Biemiller said. "They expect that the majority will win and the minority will lose."

Humphrey braved the wrath of the Senate's Dixie contingent and of Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen when he announced that he would rule the cloture motion carried if it received majority support.

Mississippi's Sen. John Stennis charged that Humphrey was trying to "crucify" the principle on which the Senate rests, of being a deliberative body. "God save us from the day," he implored.

Dirksen, arms waving and hair flying, deplored "the arrogant tyranny of the majority." He reminded his fellow Republicans, "Don't forget we're still a minority."

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield, as he has in the past, supported cloture but opposed the concept that the two-thirds rule doesn't apply to a rules change proposal in a new Congress.

On the first ballot, 34 Democrats and 17 Republicans voted to end debate on the filibuster rules change proposal. Opposed were 21 Democrats and 26 Republicans.

On the crucial vote to sustain or overturn Humphrey's ruling, the Vice President was supported by 32 Democrats and 13 Republicans. Voting to overturn his decision were 23 Democrats and 30 Republicans.

Supporters of a rules change indicated they might continue their efforts to bring about a vote. But realistically they saw no way to do this in the face of the Senate's action and the issue was expected to be shelved—until the start of the 92nd Congress in 1971.

The odds were strongly against acceptance of Humphrey's ruling, based on past voting patterns of senators. But the Vice President persisted, declaring that the Senate had "danced around" the issue long enough and that it was time to face up to a decision.

He admitted that the ruling differed from one he made four years ago, when he first took office, but stressed that he had reached his present decision after long reflection and without considerations of politics.

Humphrey gave the Senate its chance. But it muffed it.

A JOB UPGRADING program initiated by the State, County & Municipal Employes to develop new skills among hospital workers in three cities is signed into existence by Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz, as SCME Pres. Jerry Wurf and his assistant, Betty Miller, look on.

State-County Launches Hospital Job Upgrading

The path to better jobs will be opened to hospital employes in three cities under an upgrading program initiated by the State, County & Municipal Employes.

The program, contracted between SCME and the Departments of Labor and Health, Education & Welfare, has a goal of upgrading 1,000 workers at eight hospitals in Boston, Cleveland and Milwaukee.

The two departments will fund the $1,217,855 program, to be carried out over the next 18 months. SCME Pres. Jerry Wurf said the program's aim is to give "people who could only hope for the most elementary jobs . . . the chance to move to useful, important work, at a decent wage."

"Giving workers the opportunity to advance through their own ability and desire is one way of providing social and economic justice," he added.

The program was developed by Betty Miller, assistant to Wurf. She also emphasized that it will bring promotions to workers who have rarely achieved them in the past.

For example, nurses aides and orderlies will become licensed practical nurses and dishwashers will become dietitians, it was pointed out.

Another "highly significant" aspect of the program, Mrs. Miller said, is that it will continue after government aid has ended. "Hospitals will have the staff, the materials and the method to conduct training of employes for an indefinite period beyond the original venture."

The program will benefit hospitals and patients, too, the union pointed out, in that the hospitals will gain needed skills and patients will receive services now lacking for the want of skilled hands.

While the training involves only current employes, the union also foresees the program creating openings for the unemployed as workers move up the advancement ladder.

SCME will survey jobs and their structures in each of the participating hospitals and then, in cooperation with the hospitals, choose five "target" jobs for which there is a critical need that can be filled through training employes.

The union and the hospitals will select trainees. They will be taught in the hospitals. Seniority, ability to learn and an employe's need will be main factors in selecting trainees.

Hospitals will pay trainees for a full day's work, though the trainees will spend half of each day acquiring academic and on-the-job knowledge and skill.

Academic teaching will account for about half the total training time. When the trainee's academic duties are fulfilled, he will get a pay increase placing him half-way to the rate of the job he is working toward. When he successfully concludes his on-the-job training, he will be graduated into the new job at the pay scale negotiated for it.

Through a training organization, SCME will prepare hospital employes to become teachers for both this program and similar ones that may follow. Special training materials and methods will be developed to help the hospitals continue the upgrading operation after the initial program has expired.

Hospitals involved in the program are three operating as the Boston City Hospital; Metropolitan General, Highland View and Sunny Acres hospitals in Cleveland; and County General Hospital and Mental Health Center in Milwaukee.

Harris Chosen As Chairman Of Democrats

Sen. Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma assumed the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee with a pledge to seek constructive alternatives on "the three great moral issues of our time—peace, race and poverty."

Harris, who had been a key adviser to Vice Pres. Humphrey during the presidential election campaign, was Humphrey's choice for the chairmanship, and the national committee honored his request. Harris succeeds Lawrence F. O'Brien, who has joined an investment firm.

Reviewing the campaign, Humphrey told the committee that the strength of the "goals and objectives" of the Democratic Party was reflected in the strong upsurge of support for its national ticket. The party, he said, "was not defeated" in the election. "We defeated ourselves."

He cautioned Democrats not to "fall into the weakness of being a regional party," and pointed the party toward "its next great test" in the congressional elections of 1970. Unless it makes gains then, he warned, the party's prospects for recapturing the presidency in 1972 will be dim.

The committee agreed to add to the party's $6.1 million deficit the preconvention deficits of both Humphrey and the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, as well as those of Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy and Sen. George S. McGovern if they so desire.

Besides the debt, among the immediate and pressing tasks facing Harris are the appointment of members and staff for the new Democratic Policy Council set up by the national committee and two commissions established by the convention to overhaul the party's internal procedures.

The policy council would include party members representing all levels of government and diverse areas of national interest.

Iowa U. Study Will Focus On CWA History

An in-depth historical study of the founding and growth of the Communications Workers has been launched by the University of Iowa Center for Labor & Management.

The wide-ranging project will cover the period from the early days of modern telephone unionism through the present, said Glenn W. Watts, CWA executive vice president.

Written records, letters and publications of the union will be supported by taped interviews with active and retired members—and many who had been instrumental in the growth of the organization. The interviews will begin next month.

Prof. Harry Graham, who is directing the long-range project, said: "Our aim is to provide a full-length history of a labor union that is indeed a part of the American scene in a way that will be interesting to both scholars and the average citizen."

Hickel Woos Senate With Promises Of Cooperation and Conservation

Pres.-Elect Nixon's most controversial Cabinet choice tried to assure members of the Senate Interior Committee that he really believes in conserving America's natural resources.

Alaska's Gov. Walter J. Hickel, Nixon's choice for Secretary of the Interior, also strongly hinted that he won't make a major move without touching base with the committee and its House counterpart.

Hickel admitted ruefully that some of the things he had said to reporters sounded as though he weren't very enthusiastic about conservation or federal water pollution standards.

Some of the positions he had taken as governor, he conceded, were based on a more limited viewpoint than he would have to have in exercising "the vastly different responsibilities" of Secretary of the Interior.

Since his designation to the Nixon Cabinet, Hickel has been quoted as opposing "conservation for conservation's sake," expressing concern that if water standards are set too high, "you might easily hinder industrial development," and commenting on action by incumbent Interior Sec. Steward L. Udall regarding federal lands in Alaska, "What Udall can do by executive order, I can undo."

These and similar comments resulted in what Committee Chairman Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) described as "an unprecedented volume of communications from citizens throughout the country with reference to this nomination."

It also brought an overflow crowd of the curious and concerned to the committee hearing, attended by all members of the committee and visiting senators from other committees with an interest in Interior Dept. programs.

Hickel, who has a reputation for a short-fused temper, was mild-spoken and acquiescent in the first day of committee questioning.

He in effect confirmed reports that Pres. Nixon will nominate a prominent conservationist, Russell E. Train, as under secretary and said he had "recommended" the appointment, although the announcement would have to come from the President-elect.

He agreed with virtually all the comments made by senators about the importance of safeguarding resources, mine safety and preventing pollution.

If confirmed, Hickel said, he will look to the committee and other members of Congress "for advice and consent in the future so that we can attempt to solve the problems in a spirit of constructive cooperation."

Earlier he had gone to the office of Rep. Julia Butler Hansen (D-Wash.) to apologize in person for a "foot-in-the-mouth" comment he had made in a Seattle interview.

Replying to a reporter's question involving Mrs. Hansen, Hickel had retorted, "Who's Julia Butler Hansen?"

Having learned who the lady is, he went to her office because, he said, "I wanted you to hear how embarrassed I am about that quote."

Mrs. Hansen, as the Alaska governor found out, is chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee that goes over the budget requests of the Interior Dept.

Federal Project Job Rights Listed

Wage rights and various other legal protections for workers on federal or federally financed construction projects are set forth in an eight-page pamphlet released by the Labor Dept.

Copies of the pamphlet, WHPC publication 1241, may be obtained from the Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Divisions, Washington, D.C., or from local WHPC offices.

LBJ Pays Farewell Tribute to Labor

A PERSONAL FAREWELL to the people of the labor movement is delivered by Pres. Johnson during his final visit as President to AFL-CIO headquarters. On hand for the address in the lobby of the headquarters building were hundreds of AFL-CIO staffers, union officials and guests.

Stresses Major Role In Legislative Gains

(Continued from Page 1)

He said the President had "fought unceasingly" to bring the poor "more jobs, better wages, a better life," and he cited such accomplishments as aid to education, Medicare, and stronger, expanded minimum wages.

Johnson's legislative program and labor's legislative program, Meany noted, were "all but identical and, working in close harmony with him, goals became realities and dreams were achieved."

In presenting the case of pens at the headquarters ceremony, Johnson reminisced over his personal meetings with Meany at the White House and the scores of telephone conversations they had engaged in.

"During this period of five years," the President recalled, "our general goal has been the greatest good for the greatest number. We have tried to improve working conditions; we have tried to improve wages; we have tried to see that profits were reasonable.

"We passed minimum wage bills and things of that nature that directly applied to labor. But the thing that we have borne down on is the education of our young, medical assistance for our old, conservation of our resources—human and natural.

"I know of no living single group that I think has been more responsible for the advances that have been made in this field in the last five years than the AFL-CIO, headed by George Meany, and supported by millions of men and women throughout this country."

Meany, in his response, touched on the legislative high points of the Johnson Administration but focused particularly on its education measures, declaring that "if nothing else had happened in these five years except the education program, this Administration would have gone down in history as one of the greatest since the establishment of the Republic."

He likened the impact of the aid to education laws enacted under Johnson to the Land Grant College Act that Pres. Lincoln signed during the Civil War. In fiscal 1960, Meany noted, only $600 million was authorized for federal aid to education, whereas the total for fiscal 1969 is $6 billion—a ten-fold increase.

"It is my opinion," Meany said, "that our children, the children of all Americans—not just the children of trade unionists, but the children of all Americans and their grandchildren—will be the beneficiaries of the last five years of the Administration of Lyndon Johnson in the White House.

"They will be beneficiaries through greater educational opportunities, greater leadership because leadership and learning complement one another, and in today's world an uneducated citizenry would mean truly a backward nation.

"In this field alone, in addition to all of the other things that happened and in which we are interested in the last five years, I think that Lyndon Johnson will go down in history as one of our greatest chief executives."

Fittingly, the list of landmark legislation symbolized by the pens presented by Johnson starts with the Higher Education Facilities and Vocational Education Acts of 1963. The list winds up with the Manpower Development & Training Act Amendments of 1968.

The inscription accompanying the pens, signed by Johnson, states that the presentation is made "in recognition of labor's contributions to legislation beneficial to all Americans."

1-18-69

Final State of Union Message Cites Commitment to Progress

(Continued from Page 1)

with the unemployment rate staying below 4 percent. (Story, Page 5.)

As he took leave of Congress, Johnson called upon it to give Pres.-Elect Nixon its "understanding."

"He is entitled to have it," the President said. "The burdens he will bear as our President will be borne for all of us. Each of us should try not to increase them for the sake of narrow personal or partisan advantage."

The President took note of his own trials during the past five years.

"Every President lives," he said, "not only with what is, but with what has been, and what could be.

"Most of the great events of the presidency are part of a larger sequence extending back through several decades and administrations.

"Urban unrest, poverty, pressures on welfare, education and law enforcement, the continuing crisis in the Middle East, the conflict in Viet Nam, the dangers of nuclear war, and the difficulties of dealing with Communist powers, all have at least this much in common: They or the causes that gave rise to them, have existed for many years. Several Presidents have already sought to deal with them. One or more Presidents will try to resolve or contain them in years to come."

He stressed that the departure of an administration "does not mean the end of the problems it has faced. The effort to meet them must go on, year after year, if the momentum we have mounted together in this decade is not to be lost."

The President referred to the five years of his Administration as a "watershed," which saw completion of "a major part of the old agenda." He cited Medicare, the Voting Rights Act, Head Start and federal aid to education, conservation measures, and job training for 5 million workers.

"Most important," he declared, "the country is close to full employment—not in theory, but in fact. Tonight the unemployment rate is down to 3.3 percent. The number of jobs has grown by more than 8.5 million in the last five years—more than in all the preceding 12 years.

These accomplishments, he noted, do not complete the cycle, since "much of what we have committed needs additional funding to become a tangible reality."

"Yet the very existence of those commitments—those promises to the American people—is a kind of reality in itself.

"Breaking those promises would be a tragedy for our country."

Reviewing the international situation, the President urged prompt ratification of the nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and a search for "areas of agreement with the Soviet Union where the interests of both nations, and of world peace, are served."

He declared that there "must be a settlement of the armed hostility" in the Middle East, which he said threatens "not only Israel and the Arab states, but the entire world."

On Viet Nam, Johnson voiced regret that peace has not yet been restored there, the quest for which he dramatized last March 31 by renouncing any ambition for another term as President. But, he added:

"The prospects for peace are better today than at any time since North Viet Nam began its invasion with its regular forces more than four years ago. The free nations of Asia know what they were not sure of at that time—that America cares about their freedom, and its own vital interests in Asia and the Pacific.

"The North Vietnamese know that they cannot achieve their aggressive purposes by force. There may be hard fighting before a settlement is reached; but it will yield no victory to the Communists."

Blueprint for Progress

Pressmen Move Offices to D. C.

The Printing Pressmen announced that national union headquarters have been moved to 1730 Rhode Island Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C., and that an injunction which delayed the move has been dissolved.

A majority of union members voted in 1967 to move national offices from Pressmen's Home, Tenn., where they had been since 1910. But a "dissident" group from the nearby Knoxville local challenged the results and secured a U.S. District Court injunction at Greenville, Tenn.

The complaint has been dismissed, the union said in the first issue of a new monthly tabloid, News and Views.

Meany Urges Cessation Of Terrorism in Mideast

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called for cessation of all acts of terrorism and retaliatory measures they inspire in a cable to the National Council of Lebanese Trade Unions which had sought support for United Nations' action against Israel.

The Lebanese cable read:

"Perfidious attack by Israel on Beirut Intl. Airport constitutes grave assault against UN charter and rights of man. Peace dangerously compromised. We appeal for your fraternal support to alert public opinion and to have government support the application of the Security Council resolution for safeguarding peace."

The AFL-CIO answer read:

"Re your cable, AFL-CIO deeply deplores all acts of terrorism and the retaliatory measures which those acts inevitably incur. Freedom and well-being for all the peoples in the Middle East urgently demand total cessation such hostile acts which destroy life and property and gravely jeopardize prospects for just and lasting peace between Republic of Israel and its Arab neighbors."

Service Employes Win $25 Raise

New York—Service Employes in 2,000 office buildings here will get wage increases of $25 a week over three years in a new contract negotiated by SEIU Local 32B.

The agreement climaxes more than three months of talks between the union and employers of 20,000 workers, local Pres. Thomas Shortman said. It provides wage hikes totaling 62.5 cents an hour and higher wage differentials for handymen, starters, porter foremen and others with special skills. Health and welfare improvements include a family major medical program effective July 1 and an increase in the present $2,000 life insurance coverage to $3,000 next Jan. 1.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, January 25, 1969 | No. 4

Basic Problems Confront Nixon's Administration

SWEARING-IN CEREMONY for Labor Sec. George P. Shultz, left, shows Mrs. Shultz holding Bible as Chief Justice Earl Warren administers the oath of office in the East Room of the White House. Shultz was dean of the Graduate School of Business at the University of Chicago before taking office in the Nixon Cabinet.

Cooperation Eases Leadership Shift

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Nixon turned from the solemn ceremony and traditional fanfare of the inauguration to the continuing problems confronting the United States at home and abroad.

During his first days in office, Nixon presided at meetings of the National Security Council and his new Urban Affairs Council, which he set up by Executive Order to deal with the crisis of the cities.

His new Cabinet took over the reins in the 12 sprawling government departments. All but one of the Cabinet members won unanimous confirmation by the Senate. Interior Sec. Walter J. Hickel was also confirmed, but 16 dissenting votes reflected criticism of his comments on conservation and some of his actions as governor of Alaska.

In the first major policy statement of the Nixon Administration, Treasury Sec. David M. Kennedy coupled a pledge to move "decisively" to curb inflation with a promise to avoid "abrupt and blunt action" that "could bring unnecessary unemployment." The statement was approved by the President.

The changeover at the top in nearly all departments was the smoothest in memory with outgoing officials offering full cooperation to their successors.

It was an incomplete changeover, however, with a number of appointments still to be made—of assistant secretaries, agency heads, bureau chiefs and key aides. There were indications that the new Administration is having trouble filling some of the less prestigious but important appointments in the government.

By the tone of the President's inaugural address, it is unlikely that there will be the heavy flow of legislative proposals to Congress

(Continued on Page 8)

Shultz Picks IAM Staffer For Key Post

An international representative of the Machinists, whose record as a troubleshooter impressed Labor Sec. George P. Shultz, has been appointed Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations.

Shultz called a news conference to introduce William J. Usery, 45-year-old Machinist Grand Lodge representative, as "a negotiator and a mediator who gets things straightened out."

Usery, an IAM member since 1949, served as a shop steward and local union president before being picked for the IAM staff.

Since 1956, he has been coordinator of IAM activities and negotiations at the Cape Kennedy Space Center in Florida—a period that has seen the union's strength at the space center grow from one local with 17 members to eight locals with 4,600 members.

Usery succeeds Thomas R. Donahue as assistant secretary. Donahue recently returned to the Service

(Continued on Page 8)

Oil Strike Agreements Spur Talks

Denver—More major oil companies came to terms with their striking employes as the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers pushed for settlements with six big holdout companies and a scattering of small independents coast to coast.

Contract agreements had been reached for about a third of the strikers as the AFL-CIO News went to press. All were in line with the "pattern" settlement first established at Union Oil Co. of California about a week after 60,000 OCAW members walked out Jan. 4 at nearly 100 installations of several dozen companies.

The settlement pattern won by OCAW from Union Oil and its Pure Oil division was valued by the union at 69.6 cents an hour over a two-year period. Since then, other settlements have varied from 64 to 70 cents an hour in average raises.

Most new contracts provide a combination of general wage increases, special adjustments for skilled workers, higher night shift premiums, and increased company payments toward the cost of hospitalization insurance and retirement programs, the union said.

Widespread Bargaining

OCAW has 435 separate agreements with 20 major firms and numerous independents. It bargains with most of them on a plant-by-plant basis, with a few on a company-wide basis. Past practice has been to win an acceptable pact with one major firm, and then to seek similar terms from other companies.

The Union Oil pattern was accepted and strikers voted to return to work at most Union, Humble and Atlantic Richfield Co. locations. Other locals voted contract approval at properties of Mobil Oil, American Oil Co., Cities Service, Marathon Oil Co., Phillips Petroleum and Gulf Oil, plus a number of smaller firms with one or more refineries.

OCAW said the last holdouts among the big corporations included Texaco, Shell, Sinclair, Standard of California, Standard of Ohio and Conoco.

The OCAW strike for a "fairer share of the oil industry's increasing profitability and productivity" has won the support of the U. S. labor movement and the two-million-member Intl. Federation of Petroleum & Chemical Workers.

OCAW Pres. A. F. Grospiron reported to federation Pres. George Meany on current settlements and added in a telegram

(Continued on Page 2)

Benefit Boost Indicated:

Social Security Fund Shows Strong Gains

A report by the trustees of the Social Security Trust Funds shows the funds to be in sound, healthy condition and "clearly proves" that social security benefits can be increased without any boost in payroll taxes, AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman has pointed out.

The report singled out by Seidman covers the two trust funds from which cash benefits are paid—one for old-age and survivors insurance and one for disability insurance.

The trustees stated that new cost estimates show a favorable actuarial balance of 0.53 percent of taxable payroll compared with a previous estimated actuarial balance of 0.01 percent.

"This new balance," Seidman said, "means that Congress could grant 5 to 6 percent of a badly-needed increase in benefits without any increase in the social security tax, shared equally by employer and employe."

The trustees also submitted to Congress reports for fiscal 1968 covering Medicare hospital insurance and supplementary medical insurance (doctors bills) under social security.

Trustees for the funds in the fiscal year were Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball and three members of the Johnson Cabinet: Treasury Sec. Joseph W. Barr, Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz and Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen.

In the report on the cash benefits trust funds, the trustees cited two factors accounting for the increase in the actuarial balance:

One, 1968 earnings levels were higher than the 1966 levels which were used as a base for estimating contributions in determining the previous estimated balance.

Two, use of an assumed 4.25 percent interest rate on trust fund investments instead of a

(Continued on Page 7)

30-Cent Wage Lures Firms Across Border

Tucson, Ariz.—Mexico's "inexhaustible inexpensive labor market" is being touted as a 30-cents-an-hour gold mine for U.S. businessmen willing to invest in plants on both sides of the border.

"You don't have to go to Hong Kong, Taiwan, South Korea or Japan for low cost easily trainable foreign labor," says the official publication of DATE — Development Authority for Tucson's Expansion, which describes itself as a "nonprofit corporation representing a broad cross section of the Tucson community."

"It's available right here . . . along the Mexico-Arizona border for as low as 30 cents an hour in virtually inexhaustible numbers," DATE proclaims in glowing Chamber of Commerce prose.

"Mexican labor is competitive with foreign labor—easily recruited, quickly trained and equally as productive."

Tucson businessmen headed by J. Karl Meyer, DATE's executive director, point to the "advantages" of "cooperative U.S.-Mexican border operations such as low absenteeism and a proud, cheerful attitude toward work . . . under the Twin Plant concept."

That concept is described in these words:

"Components are manufactured in Tucson, assembled in Nogales, Mexico, and returned to Tucson for final inspection, packaging and ship-

(Continued on Page 7)

Labor to Help Seek Out Workers Owed Backpay

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany urged the federation's state central bodies to "help undo a major injustice" by helping the Labor Dept. find 3,802 workers owed some $400,000 in backpay from former employers.

"These workers can be paid the earnings due them only if they can be located and informed" of their rights, Meany said. Wages up to nearly $500 for individual workers were recovered after investigations of employer violations of Fair Labor Standards Act provisions, Meany related.

"You and your members can perform a public service," he said, "by helping to find these workers. I am sure you will use all means of communications open to you, including the labor press."

Meany sent each central body head a list of the names and last known addresses of the missing workers in his state with this request: "Workers you locate should write to the Administrator, Wage & Hour and Public Contracts Div., U.S. Dept. of Labor, Washington, D. C. 20210" listing names, addresses, recent employers and social security numbers.

Oil Workers Press Talks With Holdouts

(Continued from Page 1)

"your continued cooperation in our struggle with the other major oil companies is greatly appreciated."

Meany previously had called public attention to the industry's determination to "break a legitimate strike" and the danger to the public of running nearly 90 refineries and other complex installations with a handful of untrained, unskilled and inadequate skeleton crews.

Full Support Pledged

Pres. I. W. Abel of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. pledged the "full and material support" of the IUD and its 58 affiliated unions and told Grospiron "we are prepared to do what is required to help you bring victory to the workers still on the picket line."

IFPWC Pres. Luis Tovar of Venezuela told a press conference here that the executive board members of the world-wide oil and chemical union federation voted unanimously Jan. 8 at Geneva, Switzerland, to back the strikers in every way possible.

"The workers of the world should know," Tovar said, "that oil companies are actually one single company operating under many separate names. Oil workers must form one single bloc to deal effectively with this giant industry."

Two bargaining policy committees of OCAW voted in July to ask industry employers for major contract improvements including wage increases of 72 cents an hour over a 23-month term. Negotiations started in November, and employers made no offer until contracts were about to expire. The union extended the deadline but finally called the walkout when company negotiators declined to improve what Meany called their "patently inadequate" offer of settlement.

DRINKING WATER for people living in Quisqueya, Dominican Republic, is being furnished by an electric pump and storage tank built as a joint project of the American Institute for Free Labor Development and the Agency for Intl. Development.

Allen-Bradley Firm Hit On Biased Hiring Policy

Allen-Bradley Co., a machinery manufacturer in Milwaukee, has until Feb. 10 to end discrimination in hiring practices or risk the loss of $1.5 million in federal contracts.

The deadline was set by outgoing Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz who said the case represents the strongest crackdown yet for violation of Executive Order 11246 barring racial discrimination by employers holding government contracts.

Previous cases involving alleged violations have been negotiated to a settlement without Wirtz having to issue a decision, as he did in this case. The firm could lose its government business or have other sanctions imposed under the terms of the order.

The Office of Federal Contract Compliance (OFCC) in the Dept. of Labor notified the company last May that it was considered to be in violation of the order. A three-man panel held hearings in Milwaukee in August and released its report in December.

Wirtz said he has reviewed the case and agrees with the panel's findings that Allen-Bradley has failed to take "affirmative action" to assure that Negroes would share equal job opportunities with whites.

"It is clear from the record," Wirtz said, "that the prevailing impression in the Milwaukee area is that a Negro has less chance than a white man to get employment at Allen-Bradley," even if he has equal qualifications and ability to work.

"It is equally clear," Wirtz said, "that this prevailing impression results from the recruitment practices that the company has followed."

One practice, partially but not entirely abandoned last year, was identified as favoring "friends and relatives of present employes" in hiring.

Failure to Recruit

Another practice was identified by Wirtz as the failure of Allen-Bradley to use—"as many Milwaukee employers do"—the city's public and private facilities for recruiting and referring people to jobs "without regard to color, or in some cases with particular attention to finding jobs for Negroes."

Wirtz also agreed with the panel's finding that the firm has had full opportunity to enter into an agreement to end its discriminatory practices but has failed to do so.

He said he was not immediately proceeding to sanctions only because there was some early evidence that OFCC had not made its position fully clear and because the case "sets a precedent" for determining the meaning of "affirmative action" under the order.

In this case, he continued, an "affirmative action," to be worked out by the firm and OFCC, should require the company to agree to practices that show that race, creed, color and national origin will "make no difference when somebody applies for work at Allen-Bradley."

Wirtz said that the matter should be settled by Feb. 10 in such a manner that the director of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance finds full compliance with the Executive Order, and so advises the secretary of labor.

If no agreement is worked out by then, Wirtz said, the secretary of labor should decide on penalties against the firm.

Some 5,400 Allen-Bradley workers are represented by the United Electrical Workers, a non-affiliated union.

Job Safety Standards Raised for 46 Million

Revision of safety and health standards to provide greater protection for 46 million workers under the Walsh-Healey Act has been announced by the Labor Dept.

The law sets basic labor standards for work done under federal contracts over $10,000 in value. The revision, updating standards in effect since December 1960, was announced by outgoing Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz.

Changes in the standards, he pointed out, aim at reducing injuries from fire and accidents, and "the alarming number of cases" of impaired hearing and pneumoconiosis (a lung disease) caused by excessive noise and air contaminants.

In one area, the revision provides for the adoption of nationally recognized consensus standards, such as the National Fire Protection Association code and safety measures set up by the USA Standards Institute.

Also adopted are regulations established by federal agencies, including ordinance standards of the Defense Dept. and hazardous materials standards of the Transportation Dept.

The revision brings into the Act an occupational noise standard to reduce the danger of loss of hearing from job noise. The standard sets a maximum acceptable sound-measure level of 85 decibels.

If a firm is unable to meet this level immediately, an interim level of 92 decibels is acceptable, provided an effective hearing conservation program is drawn up to protect employes and reduce the noise level to 85 decibels by Jan. 1, 1971. While the noise level exceeds 85 decibels, annual audio-metric exams will be given to exposed workers.

The revision also spells out stricter standards to control air contaminants and adopts the Threshold Limit Values set forth by the American Conference of Governmental Industrial Hygienists with certain exceptions.

The exceptions include the current standards issued by the USA Standards Institute in the field of air contaminants and the new standard of the U.S. Public Health Service for coal dust.

The coal dust standard, Wirtz, said, "is designed to prevent coal miners' pneumoconiosis, which has resulted in serious illness among miners and an alarming number of deaths."

The revision was published in the Federal Register for Jan. 17 and becomes effective 30 days thereafter.

For 1969:

Scheduled List of Union Conventions

Below is a list of conventions scheduled for 1969 by AFL-CIO national and international affiliates, departments and state central bodies, and fraternally associated national labor organizations. Changes and additions will be reported.

DATE	ORGANIZATION	PLACE
Feb. 7	Connecticut	Hartford
Apr. 7-10	Louisiana	New Orleans
May 5	Insurance Workers	Miami Beach, Fla.
May 8-10	Arizona	Prescott
May 12	Grain Millers	Las Vegas, Nev.
May 21-24	Utility Workers	Miami Beach, Fla.
May 26-28	Arkansas	Hot Springs
May 26-30	Plate Printers, Die Stampers & Engravers	Ottawa, Canada
May (no date)	Laundry & Dry Cleaning	Washington, D.C.
June 1-5	New Jersey	Atlantic City
June 1-6	Glass Bottle Blowers	Bal Harbour, Fla.
June 2-13	Flint Glass Workers	Chicago, Ill.
June 9-11	Idaho	Wallace
June 9-12	Michigan	Grand Rapids
June 12-14	Virginia	Norfolk
June 16	Boot & Shoe Workers	St. Louis, Mo.
June 16-19	Musicians	Las Vegas, Nev.
June 23-27	Aluminum Workers	Vancouver, Wash.
June 23-27	Newspaper Guild	San Antonio, Tex.
July 7-11	Potters	Anaheim, Calif.
July 16-19	Texas	Corpus Christi
Aug. 2-8	Typographical	Seattle, Wash.
Aug. 4-7	Maryland-D.C.	Washington, D.C.
Aug. 11-15	Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers	Denver, Colo.
Aug. 18-22	Papermakers & Paperworkers	Pittsburgh, Pa.
Aug. 18-22	Teachers	New Orleans, La.
Aug. 18-23	Boilermakers	Kansas City, Mo.
Aug. 18-26	Painters	Miami Beach, Fla.
Aug. 21-23	Montana	Helena
Aug. 25-27	Marble, Slate & Stone Polishers	New Orleans, La.
Aug. 25-29	Washington	Olympia
Aug. (no date)	Utah	(Not set)
Sept. 3-5	North Carolina	Wrightsville Beach
Sept. 8	Stereotypers & Electrotypers	Detroit, Mich.
Sept. 8-12	Transit Union	New York, N.Y.
Sept. 8-12	Transport Workers	Miami, Fla.
Sept. 10-12	Iowa	Waterloo
Sept. 11-13	Colorado	Denver
Sept. 12-14	Hawaii	Honolulu
Sept. 15-17	Tennessee	Nashville
Sept. 15-19	Woodworkers	St. Paul, Minn.
Sept. 19-21	North Dakota	Minot
Sept. 22-24	Nebraska	Omaha
Sept. 22-25	Allied Industrial Workers	Chicago, Ill.
Sept. 22-26	Oregon	Portland
Sept. 25-26	Industrial Union Dept.	Atlantic City, N.J.
Sept. 25-27	Building & Construction Trades Dept.	Atlantic City, N.J.
Sept. 28-Oct. 2	Illinois	Chicago
Sept. 29-Oct. 1	Maritime Trades Dept.	Atlantic City, N.J.
Sept. 29-Oct. 1	Minnesota	St. Paul
Sept. (no date)	Nevada	Reno
Sept. (no date)	Wyoming	(Not set)
Sept. (no date)	Union Label & Service Trades Dept.	Atlantic City, N.J.
Oct. 1-3	Georgia	Savannah
Oct. 6	National Maritime Union	New York, N.Y.
Oct. 7-10	Massachusetts	Boston
Oct. 13-16	Florida	Jacksonville
Oct. 14-16	Air Line Dispatchers	Las Vegas, Nev.
Oct. 15-17	Kansas	Topeka
Oct. 20-24	Roofers	Bal Harbour, Fla.
Oct. (no date)	AFL-CIO National Auxiliaries	Atlantic City, N.J.
Oct. (no date)	New Hampshire	(Not set)
Nov. 4-6	Flight Engineers	Mexico City

Unionists Primed to Aid N.E. Poor

Twenty-two members of 14 trade unions in New England have completed a week of training in Washington, D.C. to equip themselves as advisers in an anti-poverty project set up by New England labor.

The trainees will now counsel another 130 trainees in the New England OEO Trade Union Leadership Program, through which union members in that part of the country are engaged in projects to help the poor in their home communities.

The program has been in operation for two years and is conducted by the Labor Relations and Research Center of the University of Massachusetts, under an OEO grant with cooperation of the six AFL-CIO state bodies in New England.

In Washington, the trainees discussed their responsibilities and heard from experts on manpower, housing and various OEO programs. AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Sullivan, chairman of the labor advisory council of OEO, spoke on labor's role in fighting poverty.

Aimed at Wildcat Walkouts:

British Threat to Curb Strikes Fans Anger of Trade Unionists

London—The Labor Government has sent a wave of confusion and anger throughout the British labor movement with its announced plans to curb the right of trade unionists to strike.

Two major proposals were made by Barbara Castle, Minister of Employment & Productivity, to be incorporated in legislation later this year. Both are designed to reduce unofficial, or wildcat, strikes. They are:

1. The minister would be able to impose a 28 day cooling-off period on unofficial strikes deemed to threaten the national economy.

2. The minister would be empowered to require a strike ballot before an official strike considered a threat to the national interest.

The proposals are included in a legislative package which Mrs. Castle termed "the most sweeping reforms for 60 years." Sixty years ago legislation was passed which enshrined the right to strike by freeing labor from the prospect of legal actions by employers.

The package also included a decision to establish a Commission on Industrial Relations, a body which will examine company collective bargaining procedures, claims for recognition, and troublesome disputes. This move was popular among the unions as was the appointment of retiring Gen. Sec. George Woodcock of the Trades Union Congress to the post of commission chairman.

Commission Outlook

Woodcock immediately announced that he hoped the Commission (known as the CIR) would make the need for strike curbs redundant. "There will still be trials of strength, but we should be able to reduce the number of strikes," he said.

But the curbs have already led to bitter attacks on the Labor Government from some union leaders. Mrs. Castle has been accused of stealing policies from the opposition Conservative Party, traditionally regarded by many trade unionists as their enemy.

Mrs. Castle is also under attack from some Labor members in the House of Commons, as well as some Conservatives, but their opposition is not considered strong enough to prevent the Government from passing the fundamental proposals in the legislation when it is formally introduced.

Some TUC leaders, including Woodcock, see overall gains for the labor movement in the proposals. And a series of measures designed to take the bite out of the strike curbing proposals were also announced by Mrs. Castle last week. These include:

- Establishment of the principle that no employer has the right to prevent or obstruct a worker from belonging to a trade union. This would open the way to easier recognition, and the CIR will be briefed to recommend recognition where it believes it to be necessary. The Government also would have the power to compel an employer to recognize a union.
- Safeguards against unfair dismissal.
- The right of unions to examine access to confidential commercial information which would be an aid to collective bargaining.
- Legislation to make possible appointment of worker representatives to company boards.
- Authority for unions and employers to make legally binding contracts if both sides agree. Previously, legally binding contracts have not been permissible under British law.

Anti-Strike Provisions

But so far, attention has been concentrated on the anti-strike provisions in Mrs. Castle's proposals. The Government's decision to go ahead with them meant that it rejected the major conclusion of a Royal Commission of inquiry into the unions published last year. The Inquiry recommended that no substantial change should be made to the fundamentally voluntary system of British industrial relations.

A key factor in the Government's decision has been a series of wildcat strikes affecting movement of exports from Britain's ports, and stoppages in the motor industry which have escalated to prevent production.

The threat of a nationwide strike in the engineering industry, narrowly averted last October, led Mrs. Castle to introduce the strike ballot provision. This is, for many union leaders, the least popular of all her proposals since it would give her power to intervene in trade union rules and executive decisions.

A number of trade unionists, including Victor Feather, a candidate to succeed Woodcock as TUC general secretary, are proposing that the TUC try to short circuit the Government's anti-strike proposals by introducing a new trouble shooting service organized by the TUC itself. It would be aimed at preventing unofficial strikes before the Government decided to move in.

But other members of the general council are almost as jealous of TUC intervention as they are of Government intervention and would prefer no change at all in the existing system of collective bargaining.

U.S. Standards Urged On Job Injury Benefits

A proposal for a federal workmen's compensation law was sent to Congress by outgoing Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz in one of his last acts before leaving office.

Wirtz said legislation is needed because most state laws don't adequately compensate injured workers and millions are excluded from coverage.

He said maximum benefits in 42 of the 50 state programs are below poverty levels and average payments are still lower.

A federal workmen's compensation law, or at least federal minimum standards for state laws, has been repeatedly urged by the AFL-CIO in its convention resolutions.

The proposal sent to Congress by Wirtz would key benefit standards to the level of the Federal Longshoremen's & Harbor Compensation Act, which applies across state lines for workers in covered occupations.

If states did not increase their benefits to these levels, the federal government would pick up the difference for workers in establishments affecting interstate commerce—and would require affected employers to obtain additional insurance to cover the federal portion of the benefits.

The Wirtz proposal would allow states to apply for federal grants up to 75 percent of any additional administrative costs they incur in strengthening their workmen's compensation program.

It also would set up machinery for injured workers to file compensation claims concurrently with state and federal agencies when state benefits are lower than those of the federal law.

The draft bill was among a series of major "lame duck" legislative proposals sent to Congress before the Johnson Administration left office. Most of them represent legislative proposals which would have been submitted to Congress in special messages over the next few months—if the election result had been different.

'While We're Inaugurating . . .'

CONSUMER EXPERT Sidney Margolius, right, whose column appears in the AFL-CIO News, is shown with delegates to the third annual meeting of the New York Consumer Assembly. More than 1,000 attended conference events and heard economist Leon Keyserling call high interest rates "a crime against the consumer."

Public Employes Upheld On Rights to Join Unions

St. Louis—Public employes have a right under the U. S. Constitution to belong to unions, according to a unanimous ruling by the 8th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals here.

"Union membership is protected by the right of association under the First and Fourteenth Amendments," the court held in an opinion written by Judge Gerald W. Heaney.

The State, County & Municipal Employes took the appeal to the court on behalf of two members who, the union contended, were fired from the North Platte, Neb., Street Dept. for union activity.

The decision holds that the constitutional right of public employes to join a union is protected under the First Amendment. It is made applicable to states under the Fourteenth Amendment.

The court specifically rejected the traditional argument that public employes "have no federally protected right to be continued in public employment."

The ruling also establishes that public employes may bring suit in federal court for compensatory and punitive damages, as well as attorneys' fees, against individuals who interfere with their constitutionally-protected rights.

The SCME suit was brought against a North Platte city commissioner as an individual, since a direct suit against a state or political subdivision is barred by the Eleventh Amendment of the Constitution.

Membership Rights

In its opinion, the court quoted an earlier ruling that the right of assembly protects more than "the right to attend a meeting; it includes the right to express one's attitude or philosophies by membership in a group or by affiliation with it or by other lawful means."

Ronald Rosenberg, SCME counsel, said the ruling "makes clear that any statute barring public employes from joining unions, or discriminating against workers for joining unions, are unconstitutional."

Alabama, for example, has a law prohibiting state employes from joining unions that, until now, has not been successfully challenged.

"We have every reason to expect that federal courts in other jurisdictions will follow the ruling rendered by the Eight Circuit," Rosenberg said.

SCME President Jerry Wurf said the ruling "supports our belief that public employes are entitled to the fundamental right to join a union that is now enjoyed by nearly all workers in private industry."

"This is only a first step toward equality for the public employe," he added. "For the legal right of an employe to join a union to be effective, there must also be a law requiring recognition of the union as the employes' representative. And we must also have a law requiring that public officials participate in good-faith collective bargaining with the organization chosen by the employes as their representative.

"These are basic rights in a free society," he asserted. "We are gratified with the unanimous court opinion that provides the first of these necessary steps."

Auto Workers Follow Trades On Apprentices

Following the lead of the AFL-CIO and building and construction trades unions in 51 cities, the Auto Workers will sponsor in the Detroit area 100 minority youths in the Apprenticeship Outreach Program.

The Labor Dept. announced that the UAW is the 10th major organization that will help prepare youngsters for apprenticeship entrance tests through tutoring and cram courses.

"The UAW is the first labor organization outside building and construction trades to sponsor such a project," a Labor Dept. release declared.

About 3,000 minority youths have been sponsored for the apprenticeship preparation program over the past two years and about 2,000 have been hired as apprentices—mostly in the construction industry.

Apprenticeship Outreach is based on a concept first developed by the Workers' Defense League in New York City with the cooperation and assistance of the AFL-CIO and its Dept. of Civil Rights. The program is designed to help apprentice candidates prepare for specific examinations by tutoring, mock oral tests, coaching and other assistance. The program searches among minority youth for potential skilled craftsmen.

Donald S. Slaiman, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights welcomed "the participation by the UAW in the program developed by the federation and its building trades union affiliates" for aiding minority youth.

Wirtz Points the Way

ONE OF THE FINAL actions of Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz before leaving office was to file with the 91st Congress the required annual report on the operations of the Fair Labor Standards Act. That report may well go down in the annals of legislative history. It brushed aside all the rhetoric of the obstructionists and the "conventional wisdom" of the economists in a sweeping call for a universal minimum wage.

The characteristic that will mark the 1960s, Wirtz said, is the "national determination to eliminate poverty in the United States." While there have been "magnificent and incomparable achievements in this area," the job has not been completed, he said, and continued:

"I urge consideration of the view that the appropriate and feasible next step is to assure—through amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act—that every person who works in this country receives at least enough for his labor to maintain himself and his family decently."

Spelling out the specifics of his proposal—full coverage of all workers and a step up to $2 an hour—Wirtz directed the attention of Congress to the problems of the working poor.

"Poverty is erroneously identified, in loose thinking, with unemployment. The monthly unemployment figures show between 2 and 3 million people unemployed; and about half of them are just entering the work force (and are looking for their first job) or are between jobs and only briefly out of work. The number of people who have been out of work for more than five weeks is never more at any one time than about 1¼ million.

"Yet there are between 22 and 26 million people living in this country under 'poverty' conditions. This number includes family members, and so is not directly comparable with the unemployment figures. But even when the necessary adjustment is made, it becomes obvious that considerably more than half of those living in poverty live there not because the head of the family is unemployed but because he doesn't get a decent living wage for the work he does.

"It is a conservative estimate that if every worker in the country received $2 an hour for his labor, the number of people living 'in poverty'—presently estimated at 22 to 26 million—would be more than cut in half."

Wirtz goes on to say that "there is significant coincidence today between the groups of people in this country who work at jobs not covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act and those who are still earning less than 'poverty-level' incomes."

His report notes that there is discussion currently of anti-poverty efforts to increase the incomes of the poor through a "guaranteed annual income" and a "negative income tax." He comments that whatever basis there is in any of these proposals "commands strongly a first step of seeing to it that when a person does work he gets enough for it to support himself and his family."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany noted that the Wirtz report and recommendations are "a fitting climax to his term in office. He is a compassionate man, a true humanitarian and his recommendations are a demonstration of those qualities."

Now it's up to Congress. If the drive to eliminate poverty is to have any meaning, Willard Wirtz's call for a universal $2 minimum wage must become a reality.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

*George M. Harrison	David Dubinsky	Joseph Curran
M. A. Hutcheson	Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky
A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton
Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	Paul Hall
Herman D. Kenin	*John J. Grogan	I. W. Abel
P. L. Siemiller	David Sullivan	Hunter P. Wharton
Paul Jennings	A. J. DeAndrade	Ralph Helstein
William Pollock	Max Greenberg	John H. Lyons

Deceased*

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, January 25, 1969 No. 4

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'What Kept You?'

In Democratic Party:

Labor-Liberal Coalition Faces New Test in 1970 Elections

The following is excerpted from "The Future of the Liberal Coalition," by Gus Tyler which appears in the January 1969 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

AS AMERICA TRIES to wrestle with its problems, searching desperately for the funds to provide education, housing, training, health services, model cities, etc., a sector of the society that could make a major—perhaps dominant—financial contribution is virtually exempt from the responsibility. This sector sits at the top where many who make new millions every year go without paying even a penny in taxes.

The tax structure is upside down—and frankly, hypocritical. Officially, we have a graduated income tax in which those best able to bear the burden do so. But that truism applies only to a limited income group: wage and salary people in the middle income sector. In truth, the man who earns $6,000 a year pays a higher percentage of his income in taxes than a man who earns $60,000. And the man who earns $600,000 a year out of oil, real estate or capital gains pays not only a smaller part of his income in taxes but is very likely to pay fewer dollars per annum to the Internal Revenue Service than the man who makes $6,000. The end result is that the middle income people carry the load—as they groan and growl.

The American government is deprived of vast resources for needed social programs because these resources are in the hands of private governments that tax the American people but will not permit themselves to be fairly taxed in return. The result? In the cities, the poor and near poor and not-so-poor are fighting over the allocation of meager resources, tearing at one another's piece of bread, calling one another dirty ethnic names, while those on top deplore disorder and berate the not-so-poor for selfishness in not sharing more with the poor.

But plainly, a political program for the 1970s must address itself to the redistribution of the wealth. Unless such a program can be moved in the coming year, fury will grow amidst the poor and frustration amidst the middle.

Such a program and similar programs in keeping with the problems of the coming decade require a creative idea center, a vehicle for public expression and organizational implementation at the political level.

ANY NEW IDEAS that the Democratic Party may generate will not be politically meaningful unless these fresh concepts are projected before the American people. To do so requires a voice that the Democrats do not come by naturally in the years ahead. They have lost the great platform of the presidency. The Supreme Court that for many years was a tribune of liberal ideas is very likely to become a citadel of conservatism. The Democrats will have to rely on Hubert Humphrey, as titular leader of the party, and on a lively body of vocal senators.

Organizationally, the Democratic Party failed in 1968 to do the best job at the precinct level: turn out the vote. The total national vote in 1968 was only 60 percent of the eligible, a figure several percentage points below the turnout in recent presidential years.

In the development of an effective coalition that has ideas, a voice and a precinct organization, the trade union movement of the United States is likely—if the 1968 campaign is an indicator—to play a much larger role than in the past. Although the unions are not part of the Democratic Party, since American labor continues its traditional role of endorsing individual candidates on the basis of their actions and program, the fact is that the AFL-CIO was much more deeply and effectively involved with the liberal coalition in 1968 than at any time in the history of U.S. labor.

Never in the past did the labor movement play so prominent and, perhaps, decisive a role in the pre-convention and convention politics. Never in the past did unions assume so heavy a load in the campaign—funds, literature, manpower, phone banks, canvassing and top campaign strategy at the state levels—as in 1968.

The labor movement does have ideas; indeed, it has very clear and consistent ideas on the subject of wealth redistribution, not merely in terms of wages but also in terms of tax policy. The AFL-CIO has long been sensitive to the urban crisis (that's where most of its members live) and has proposed programs.

The first testing of the old coalition in a new circumstance will take place in 1970, in the federal elections for House and Senate. This will be a difficult moment for Nixon and a real opportunity for the liberals. In every off-year election (but one) the party in the White House has lost seats in the mid-term election. The only exception was in 1934 when the country came out in vast enthusiasm to give its unusual vote of confidence to FDR. The mid-term elections will give the Democrats an unusual chance to increase their strength in Congress.

Among People and Nations:

Nixon Stresses Unity in Plea For All to Advance Together

The following is excerpted from Pres. Nixon's Inaugural Address, Jan. 20, 1969.

THE SECOND THIRD of this century has been a time of proud achievement. We have made enormous strides in science and industry and agriculture. We have shared our wealth more broadly than ever; we learned at last to manage a modern economy to assure its continued growth.

We have given freedom new reach; we have begun to make its promise real for black as well as for white.

We see the hope of tomorrow in the youth of today. I know America's youth. I believe in them. We can be proud that they are better educated, more committed, more passionately driven by conscience than any generation in our history.

No people has ever been so close to the achievement of a just and abundant society, or so possessed of the will to achieve it.

And because our strengths are so great, we can afford to appraise our weaknesses with candor and to approach them with hope.

Standing in this same place a third of a century ago, Franklin Delano Roosevelt addressed the nation ravaged by depression, gripped in fear. He could say in surveying the nation's troubles: "They concern, thank God, only material things."

Our crisis today is in reverse.

We find ourselves rich in goods, but ragged in spirit; reaching with magnificent precision for the moon, but falling into raucous discord on earth.

We are caught in war, wanting peace. We're torn by division, wanting unity. We see around us empty lives, wanting fulfillment. We see tasks that need doing, waiting for hands to do them.

To a crisis of the spirit, we need an answer of the spirit.

And to find that answer, we need only look within ourselves.

When we listen to the better angels of our nature, we find that they celebrate the simple things, the basic things—such as goodness, decency, love, kindness.

Greatness comes in simple trappings.

The simple things are the ones most needed today if we are to surmount what divides us and cement what unites us. To lower our voices would be a simple thing.

In these difficult years, America has suffered from a fever of words; from inflated rhetoric that promises more than it can deliver; from angry rhetoric that fans discontents into hatreds; from bombastic rhetoric that postures instead of persuading.

We cannot learn from one another until we stop shouting at one another—until we speak quietly enough so that our words can be heard as well as our voices.

For its part, government will listen. We will strive to listen in new ways—to the voices of quiet anguish, the voices that speak without words, the voices, of the heart—to the injured voices, the anxious voices, the voices that have despaired of being heard.

Those who have been left out we will try to bring in. Those left behind we will help to catch up.

For all our people, we will set as our goal the decent order that makes progress possible and our lives secure.

AS WE REACH toward our hopes, our task is to build on what has gone before—not turning away from the old, but turning toward the new.

In this past third of a century, government has passed more laws, spent more money, initiated more programs than in all our previous history.

But we are approaching the limits of what government alone can do.

Our greatest need now is to reach beyond government, to enlist the legions of the concerned and the committed. What has to be done has to be done by government and people together or it will not be done at all. The lesson of past agony is that without the people we can do nothing; with the people we can do everything.

To match the magnitude of our tasks, we need the energies of our people—enlisted not only in grand enterprises, but more importantly in those small splendid efforts that make headlines in the neighborhood newspaper instead of the national journal.

As we measure what can be done, we shall promise only what we know we can produce; but as we chart our goals we shall be lifted by our dreams.

No man can be fully free while his neighbor is not. To go forward at all is to go forward together.

This means black and white together, as one nation, not two. The laws have caught up with our conscience. What remains is to give life to what is in the law: to insure at last that as all are born equal in dignity before God, all are born equal in dignity before man.

As we learn to go forward together at home, let us also seek to go forward together with all mankind.

We cannot expect to make everyone our friend, but we can try to make no one our enemy.

Those who would be our adversaries we invite to a peaceful competition—not in conquering territory or extending dominion, but in enriching the life of man.

As we explore the reaches of space, let us go to the new worlds together—not as new worlds to be conquered, but as a new adventure to be shared.

And with those who are willing to join, let us cooperate to reduce the burden of arms, to strengthen the structure of peace, to lift up the poor and the hungry.

But to all those who would be tempted by weakness, let us leave no doubt that we will be as strong as we need to be for as long as we need to be.

Billions Slip By:

Union Economist Spurs Drive To Get Tax Loopholes Plugged

URGING "a frontal attack on loopholes," a union economist renewed organized labor's demand for basic reform on the federal income tax.

Frank Fernbach, assistant for special projects to the president of the Steelworkers, charged that the federal treasury suffers losses "in the billions" because of special treatment and exemptions of certain forms of income.

Questioned by reporters on Labor News Conference, he listed oil and mineral depletion allowances, tax-free state and municipal bond interest and unlimited charitable gifts as among areas of the present law most in need of tightening. The AFL-CIO produced interview is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

Fernbach noted that many of the loopholes were originally written into the tax laws to meet specific public needs. But, he added, they become "entrenched in the law" and hang on long after they have lost their "soundness of purpose." He cited the example of tax-free state and municipal bond interest, which has been on the books for more than 50 years.

Fernbach said that basic reform should also include a "minimum tax that all persons beyond a reasonable level of income are required to pay, even if particular forms of their income are tax-free because of loopholes." He pointed out that "many millionaires" and other wealthy people are able to avoid all taxes, or to pay very little.

"NO WEALTHY AMERICAN—morally or in terms of fairness of distribution of the burden—should continue to pay no tax support of his government," he declared.

Fernbach also urged that "impoverished people"—individuals and families below government-set poverty levels—should be removed from the federal tax rolls. He also called for "immediate tax relief for the middle-income group" through increase of the standard deduction, "which has too long remained at 10 percent."

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

RICHARD M. NIXON is now the President of the United States; the Nixon Administration is here.

Every new President assumes power with the legacy left by his predecessor—the good and the bad. And Nixon has received his legacy.

On domestic issues, for example, Pres. Johnson left office with the social and racial climate stormy and living costs uncomfortably high.

At the same time, unemployment is at a 15-year low, take-home pay is high, the doors of education are opened wider than ever before, hard core poverty has been vastly reduced, civil rights are advancing, the aged have more protection and the consumers' rights are better safeguarded.

But Johnson left another legacy for Nixon: a social and economic program which the outgoing President described as designed for "the greatest good for the greatest number."

This is no broadscale declaration but a rigidly-hard, dollar-and-cents blueprint of priorities for the coming fiscal year. It is all contained in the budget message of the President for fiscal 1970.

There is no expectation that Nixon will accept the budget without alterations. The changes he will make, though, will be evidence of the Nixon philosophy and priorities in today's turbulent world.

Pres. Johnson carries in his budget a commitment to the Viet Nam war and other international obligations.

Following are some of the areas of high domestic priorities given by Johnson:

Housing—Initial goal to build or repair 700,000 homes or apartments for low-income families over the next two years. Includes provisions of Housing Act of 1968 to involve the federal government, in partnership with industry and labor, to build 26 million new or rehabilitated homes or apartments over the next 10 years.

Aids to Urban Areas—Two-thirds of U.S. citizens live in urban areas which are the sections of greatest need. In 1964, $5.6 billion or 55 percent of total federal grants channeled into aid for cities. The 1970 budget would channel $16.7 billion or 67 percent of total grants. Emphasis is on model cities and new communities.

Education—Total outlays for education are estimated at $9.8 billion in 1970 compared with $3.1 billion in 1964. Federal funds represented about 9 percent of total national expenditures for schools and colleges in 1964. They now equal approximately 14 percent of the total—including 8 percent of the support for elementary and secondary education and 23 percent for higher education.

Manpower—Outlays to provide skills for millions of Americans are estimated to rise from $735 million in 1964 to $3.5 billion in 1970. As a result 2 million individuals will be helped to find suitable jobs in 1970 compared with 278,000 in 1964.

Health—Federal outlays for health in 1970 will rise to an estimated $18.3 billion, an almost four-fold increase since 1964. As a proportion of the nation's health expenditures, federal outlays rose from 13 percent to about 30 percent in 1970.

Income Security—Includes such programs as retirement benefits, disability benefits, unemployment insurance, public assistance and other cash payments. Federal cash payments rose from $29 billion in 1964 to more than $47 billion in 1970. Number of persons aided rose from 35 million to about 44 million in five years.

Federal Aid to Poor—Amid abundance, some 22 million Americans still live in poverty. To assist them in education, employment, health and other ways federal payments rose from $11.9 billion in 1964 to an estimated $27.2 billion in 1970.

The test facing Pres. Nixon is not whether he alters these programs—even Pres. Johnson admits that many need to be improved—but whether the changes will be more or less beneficial to more or less people.

It is on the federal budget that these decisions will be made—his own priorities.

RENEWING LABOR'S demand for basic federal income tax reform, economist Frank Fernbach, center, assistant to the Steelworkers' president, urged "a frontal attack on loopholes" as he was questioned by Alex Uhl, of Press Associates, Inc. and Alan Adams of Business Week magazine on Labor News Conference. The AFL-CIO produced public affairs program is heard Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on Mutual Radio.

Labor Dept. to Survey Job Openings Monthly

A regular monthly survey of job opportunities in 50 metropolitan areas throughout the nation will be undertaken beginning in February, the Labor Dept. announced.

The new survey is being made in response to widespread interest and to requirements under the 1968 amendments to the Manpower Development & Training Act, outgoing Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz said.

Publication of data on the survey is not expected to begin until mid-1969, he added, in order to permit time for analysis and evaluation of the new statistics.

The department's Manpower Administration will administer the new job vacancy program through the Bureau of Employment Security with technical guidance from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Purpose of the new survey, the department said, will be to identify imbalances between manpower demand and supply, and aid the development of planning, training and job placement programs.

Under the survey, estimates of total job openings by industry will be prepared monthly for all nonfarm industries in 26 of the 50 areas, to be supplemented by quarterly estimates of job openings by occupation in 17 of these areas.

In addition, monthly estimates of the number of openings in manufacturing will be developed in 24 other metropolitan areas.

Job-openings data will be collected from a sample of employers in each of the 50 areas by state employment security agencies. The agencies will also prepare estimates of local job opportunities.

The collection of job opportunities information will be merged with the existing cooperative federal-state labor turnover statistics program in order to secure further comparison advantages.

The survey will also seek to determine the relationships between the job openings data and employment, unemployment, labor turnover, and other economic data under varying economic conditions, the department said.

Based on commitments received from cooperating state employment security agencies, the following areas will be surveyed for estimates of total job openings on a monthly basis and vacancies by occupation on a quarterly basis: Atlanta, Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Houston, Miami, Milwaukee, Minneapolis-St. Paul, New York, Oklahoma City, Philadelphia, Phoenix, Salt Lake City and St. Louis.

Job openings on a monthly basis, without the supplemental occupation data, will be prepared for: Buffalo, Hartford, Kansas City, Newark, New Orleans, Pittsburgh, Portland, Ore., Providence and Seattle.

Areas to be surveyed for monthly job opening data for manufacturing only are: Albany, N.Y.; Birmingham, Ala.; Burlington, Vt.; Charleston, W. Va.; Des Moines; Fargo, N.D., and Moorhead, Minn.; Fort Worth; Greensboro, N.C.; Greenville, S.C.; Jackson, Miss.; Jersey City; Little Rock; Louisville; Memphis; Paterson, N.J.; Portland, Me.; Richmond, Va.; Rochester, N.Y.; San Antonio; Sioux Falls, S.D.; Syracuse; Tampa; Wichita, and Wilmington.

'Most Urgent Priority':

Federal Standards Pressed To End Jobless Pay Erosion

Legislation to strengthen the "eroded" unemployment insurance system "should have the most urgent priority" in this Congress, an article in the Federationist, the AFL-CIO magazine emphasizes.

The system which was set up to be "the nation's first line of defense against want and poverty," writes James O'Brien, "has deteriorated to a level where it perpetuates poverty and its evils."

"The jobless worker, the grocer, the merchant and the entire economy are the actual and potential victims of the shocking erosion of the system."

O'Brien, an assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, notes that the federal-state system was enacted in 1935 to aid jobless workers voluntarily separated from their jobs.

"But the record shows the system has been moving away from this goal," he points out.

O'Brien tells why and how this has happened, presents examples of the system's breakdown and sets forth federal standards for unemployment compensa'ion being pressed by the AFL-CIO and liberal forces.

The argument by opponents of federal standards that the states can be relied upon to modernize the system and make improvements has been completely disproved by the record of state legislatures in recent years, the article stresses.

Its review of state improvements adds up to this picture:

A few "insignificant extensions" of unemployment insurance coverage, minor changes in the taxable base for employers in a few states and "continuing deterioration of the benefit structure" despite slight increases in benefit payments.

"In fact," O'Brien says, "half-hearted state action and federal inaction made the unemployment compensation meaningless for more than half the jobless workers."

He cites figures showing that more than one-half of the jobless drew some benefit from the system 10 years ago, while only four out of 10 were benefitting by 1965, and the ratio is now down to three out of 10.

Noting that 16 million wage and salary workers—one-fourth of the nation's total—were not covered by the system in 1967, the author warns that "this number increases annually as employment expands in uncovered industries."

The article focuses on these aspects of the system, among others, in which there are "major deficiencies" that are regularly getting worse:

Qualifications—While a half dozen states qualify 90 to 95 percent of new claimants for unemployment benefits, "far too many states deny benefits to 25 and 30 percent of new claimants."

In the three years of 1965, '66 and '67 there were 16 states that increased benefits and at the same time "robbed Peter to pay Paul" by imposing stricter qualification requirements.

Financing—State after state has deviated from the 2.7 percent state tax on employers that was counted on to finance the unemployment system, along with a three-tenths of 1 percent federal tax on employers.

In 1967, ten states permitted application of zero tax rates to some employers. The average employer tax rate during the year for the entire system was only 1.6 percent of taxable payrolls.

This "underfinancing" has occurred for one apparent reason, O'Brien observes. It is part of the competition among states to pirate industry with the lure of low taxes.

Disqualifications—Provisions for challenging employes on unemployment rolls and denying them benefits have increased to the extent that "a hostile attitude toward the unemployed has developed within the system itself."

Benefits—In the early years of the program, the maximum weekly jobless benefit in most states equaled 65 percent of the average weekly wage. Today, the typical maximum benefit represents only 42 percent of the average wage.

There are only two states in which the maximum weekly benefit is not lower in relation to wages than it was in 1939.

Only seven states have maximum benefits that maintain a worker with three dependents above the poverty-level income of $3,335 per year for a four-member family set by the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. in 1966.

Surely, O'Brien maintains, a worker who has made a contribution to the nation's affluence during his employment is entitled "to more than a poverty level of income during unemployment."

Summing up the "dismal record" of the states in improving jobless benefits, O'Brien concludes that this failure "demonstrates that the states are either unable or unwilling to modernize the system."

"The one sure way of establishing minimum standards in the system," he adds, "is through federal legislation and this should be a first order of business in the 91st Congress."

The standards he proposes would:

- Extend unemployment benefits coverage to all wage and salaried workers, set eligibility requirements not to exceed 20 weeks of work, and entitle every claimant to at least 26 weeks of benefits when he is unemployed that long.
- Call for a weekly benefit equal to 66.6 percent of his past full-time earnings, in no case less than 50 percent, and a maximum benefit amount equal to two-thirds of the state-wide average weekly wage.
- Eliminate the "waiting week" for eligibility or compensate for it retroactively after a few weeks of unemployment.
- Limit the "availability requirement" to registration and availability for suitable work, which should be properly defined and not include employment not covered by jobless compensation.
- Permit disqualification of persons drawing benefits only for the most serious reasons and for not more than six weeks. Forbid cuts or cancellation of a worker's benefit rights or base period wages. Permit workers to draw benefits when they are participating in state-approved job training courses.
- Help secure the soundness of jobless funds by standardizing tax rates on employers and disallowing all zero tax rates now being levied in some states.
- Raise the taxable wage base, through a series of steps over a period of years, until it is at least equal to the base used in levying employer and employe social security contributions ($7,800 as of Jan. 1, 1968).

Employment in Poor Urban Areas Still Lags Despite Gains in 1968

The job picture in urban poverty neighborhoods improved in 1968 "but the unemployment gap between the fortunate and less fortunate was still clearly evident," the Labor Dept. reported.

Its year-in-review section accompanied a report showing that poverty neighborhoods in the nation's 100 largest cities had a 5.2 jobless rate in the last quarter of 1968, down 1.7 percent from the quarter in 1967.

Poverty neighborhoods, as defined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics based on Census Bureau data, are the poorest one-fifth of the neighborhoods in each urban area.

The average jobless rate in poverty neighborhoods in 1968 was 6 percent, BLS said, down eight-tenths of 1 percent from the 1967 average "but still substantially higher" than the 3.6 average jobless rate for the nation in 1968.

Noting that the pace of improvement in the employment situation in poverty neighborhoods was greater than in other urban areas, the government made clear this was due to economic growth plus programs aimed at helping the disadvantaged.

Total unemployment in poverty neighborhoods averaged 375,000 in 1968 compared to 450,000 in 1967. The unemployment level represented 13.7 percent of total unemployment in the nation. In 1967, it accounted for 15.3 percent of the total unemployed.

The unemployment rate for adult men in poverty neighborhoods was 4.2 percent in 1968, down five-tenths of 1 percent from the average rate for 1967.

"Despite this improvement," BLS pointed out, "the jobless rate for adult men in poverty areas continued to be more than twice as large as the rate for men in other urban neighborhoods."

The rate for adult women averaged 5.5 percent last year, down from 6.1 percent in 1967, but still nearly twice as high as the rate for women in other urban neighborhoods.

The jobless rate for teenagers in the poorest neighborhoods declined from an average of 23.5 percent in 1967 to 20 percent in 1968, compared to a rate of 12.2 percent for youths in other parts of the 100 cities.

Among Negroes living in the poverty neighborhoods, the average unemployment rate dropped from 8.9 to 7.3 percent between 1967 and 1968. For non-whites, the rate decreased from 5.3 to 5 percent.

The rate for Negroes living in these neighborhoods showed greater improvement than for their counterparts in other urban neighborhoods, the government reported.

Employment in the poverty neighborhoods averaged 6.1 million in 1968, BLS said, down by 125,000 from 1967. Combined with the 75,000 reduction in unemployment, this meant that there were 200,000 fewer workers in the neighborhoods than in 1967.

However, it was noted that this decrease in the labor force was accompanied by a decline of "similar magnitude in the population of these poverty neighborhoods." Thus, there was little change in labor force participation for these workers.

"Whether the unemployment status of those leaving these neighborhoods has improved is difficult to determine," BLS concluded.

For the fourth quarter of 1968, the unemployment rates in poverty neighborhoods were 3.7 percent for adult men, 4.7 percent for adult women and 19.2 percent for teenagers. The rates for the same period in 1967 were 4.9, 5.9 and 24.3 percent, respectively.

The unemployment rate for Negroes was 6.4 percent in the last quarter of 1968 compared to 9 percent in the 1967 last quarter. For whites, the rate was 4.4 percent for the final quarter last year, compared to 5.4 percent in 1967.

Both white and Negro unemployment rates for adult men in poverty neighborhoods were lower in the last three months of 1968, the government stated.

However, in comparing Negro and white adult women, it pointed out, all of the improvement was among Negroes, as their rate fell from 7.2 to 4.9 percent between the two quarters.

Bruce Gillis Appointed NLRB Regional Attorney

Denver—Bruce W. Gillis, Jr., assistant regional attorney for the National Labor Relations Board here, has been named regional attorney succeeding Francis Sperandeo, new Denver regional director. Gillis joined the NLRB in 1952 at Indianapolis.

Benefit Boost Indicated:

Social Security Fund Shows Strong Gains

(Continued from Page 1)

3.75 percent interest rate on which previous estimates have been based.

The trustees said that combined income into the old-age and survivors and disability trust funds in fiscal 1968 exceeded outgo by $2.6 billion. Assets of the two funds totalled $28.1 billion at the end of the fiscal year.

In the five years ahead, the trustees foresaw income to the funds exceeding expenditures by about $45 billion.

Based on the present tax schedule and taxable earnings level, they predicted that the funds will have sufficient income from contributions to meet the cost of benefits and administrative expenses "for the next 15 to 20 years and for the distant future."

In the report on the hospital insurance trust fund, the trustees said there would be an unfavorable acturial balance—0.29 percent of taxable payroll—based on an assumption that the present taxable earnings base, $7,800 a year, remains unchanged.

However, the trustees emphasized that if the earnings base is increased proportionately with increases in the general earnings level, there will be an actuarial balance in the fund—about 0.07 percent of taxable payroll.

Total income to the hospital insurance trust fund in fiscal 1968 was reported at $3.9 billion, about $100 million in excess of outgo. The fund's total assets were $1.4 billion, an increase of $87 million over fiscal 1967.

Estimates for the fiscal three-year period of 1969-71 looked to steady increases in both income and disbursements.

Income to the supplementary medical insurance trust fund in fiscal 1968 was $1.4 billion, while outgo was $1.5 billion, the trustees reported. But this high outgo, it was pointed out, was due to a big backlog of claims for services rendered in the early period of the program's operation.

While total assets of the fund decreased from $486 million to $307 million between June 30, 1967, and June 30, 1968, the report noted that assets were back up to an estimated $446 million by Dec. 31, 1968, as the result of an increased premium rate and payment of some government contributions for past years.

The trustees indicated that the financial future of the supplementary medical insurance program depends upon rates of utilization of doctors services and costs, particularly how much doctors' fees continue to increase in the future.

They noted that all estimates show that, with a $4 monthly premium rate for supplementary benefits through June 1970, the program will have sufficient funds, on a cash basis, to meet anticipated expenditures for benefits and administrative costs until that date.

If on an actuarial basis experience exceeds the $4 rate, there will be ample time for action necessary to assure the continuing soundness of the program, they concluded.

WELCOME BACK to the labor movement is extended by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to Mrs. Esther Peterson, who will become legislative representative of the Clothing Workers after having served during the Johnson and Kennedy Administrations as Assistant Secretary of Labor. Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, left, announced the appointment. Mrs. Peterson is a former ACWA organizer.

Filbey Named President of Postal Clerks

The Postal Clerks chose Francis S. Filbey, national administrative aide since 1962, as president to fill the unexpired term of the late E. C. "Roy" Hallbeck, who died Jan. 14.

Filbey, 61, will serve until the union's August 1970 convention in Los Angeles. He was elected by unanimous vote of the union's 24-man national executive board.

Known to friends as "Stu" Filbey, the new head of the 165,000-member union started work as a postal clerk in Baltimore in 1926. He was an officer of the clerks' local for more than 20 years. From 1959 to 1963 he was also vice president of the Maryland State-District of Columbia AFL-CIO, and president of the Baltimore AFL-CIO for eight years.

Filbey moved to his union's national headquarters in Washington after serving a two-year term as national vice president.

Filbey, who lives in Rockville, Md., served with the Army Air Corps and the Army Postal Service in World War II.

The union said his first major assignment will be to help lead current negotiations for merger with the National Postal Union, formed in 1958 by former UFPC members. The executive boards of both unions have been meeting for several weeks to discuss merger terms.

30-Cent Wage Lures Firms Across Border

(Continued from Page 1)

ping. . . . Duty is imposed only on the added value of the assembly."

Tucson is only one of the Southwest's border towns promoting the "cheap foreign labor" concept. Among the first to tap the new lode was Laredo, Tex., which induced the Transitron Electronics Corp. of Wakefield, Mass., to move its non-union operations into a new plant with a small work force.

Across the border at Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, within walking distance of Laredo, is a Transitron plant with 1,400 workers, all Mexican nationals. Under the twin plant formula, Transitron may use its small U.S. work force to manufacture products and its large Mexican force to assemble them.

Wage rates in the U.S. are $1.60 an hour and up. In Nuevo Laredo the rate is a reported $2.16 a day.

Defense Contract

The U.S. plant has started work on a $1.7 million contract to make telephone cables for the Defense Dept. The contract is for a one-year period, but the Army Electronic Command awarded Transitron an additional contract on its bid of $1.1 million, and the Economic Development Administration procured a grant of $28,000 in U.S. funds to "train 15 or 20 persons in the electronics field" at the Transitron plant in Laredo. A subsidiary, Phalo Corp., got the contracts and the grant.

The hands-across-the-border concept got a jolt, however, when the Mexican workers cast off the "proud, cheerful attitude toward work" extolled by the tubthumping U.S. businessmen and stopped work for three weeks at the Nuevo Laredo plant.

The walkout was not an official strike, sanctioned by the ruling powers, but it forced Transitron to ship some of the quartz crystals used in its production processes to another company subsidiary in Kansas City, Mo. The workers finally went back when the governor of Tamaulipas state stepped in and the State Labor Board agreed to hear the dispute—over wages promised but not paid for lunch "breaks."

Last year an AFL-CIO Executive Council subcommittee urged joint action by American and Mexican labor movements and governments to change the immigration and tariff laws. It cited unfair competition by low-wage border-jumping plants and "green card" tourists who cross the border freely to take jobs in agriculture, often at the expense of union farm workers.

Shultz Pledges Efforts To Whittle Jobless Rate

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz isn't satisfied with the current 3.3 percent unemployment rate, even if it is a 15-year low.

He told members of the Senate Labor Committee at his confirmation hearing that he believes "we should work very hard" to bring it down further—especially the 25 percent jobless rate for young Negroes.

Shultz is satisfied that "free collective bargaining is a better system for handling labor disputes than an imposed settlement." And he prefers it also to the "labor court" proposal advanced by Sen. George Murphy (R-Calif.).

The Senate committee expressed its satisfaction with Shultz. Its members voted unanimously to recommend his confirmation.

Shultz, in his opening statement to the committee, pledged to "do everything within my power to manage the department and administer its programs with one overriding concern: the promotion of the welfare of all workers in this country in a manner consistent with the public interest."

In the manpower area, Shultz said he didn't think that a government guarantee that "everyone gets a job" is a practical solution to hard-core unemployment.

He suggested instead a more concerted effort by private firms, better transportation facilities to suburban jobs, and open housing.

Replying to questions about the need for new legislation to deal with the problem of national emergency strikes, Shultz said he would be "very cautious" about proposing any such legislation.

"If you're not careful," he said, "you may legislate something for an immediate problem that will have an unnecessary effect in an area where collective bargaining has been working well—and in most areas collective bargaining is working well."

NAM's Outlook Gloomy On Gutting Labor Act

The National Association of Manufacturers reported to its big business affiliates that industry's "high priority" goal of gutting the National Labor Relations Act is "unlikely" to be achieved in the next two years.

The NAM's government relations staff didn't use the blunt word "gutting" in its evaluation of the legislative outlook. In more roundabout language, it referred to its proposals for "revision" of the law "to redress the present imbalance in favor of labor unions."

But the conservative employer group saw no likelihood of accomplishing this "unless public opinion changes sharply as a result of major strikes or other developments."

It noted that neither the House nor the Senate Labor Committees, both controlled by liberal Democrats, could be expected to approve the changes the NAM wants. And it added the opinion that "the Administration, which is expected to seek ways to accommodate at least some labor demands, is not likely to send Congress measures which would diminish the power of unions."

The report also expressed the NAM's concern that Congress will move ahead on its own with job safety and health bills, consideration of federal workmen's compensation legislation, strengthening the enforcement powers of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission, stronger pollution control and new consumer laws without awaiting the views of the new Nixon Administration.

It warned its members, too, that new proposals for raising the minimum wage are likely to be made in this Congress and "could be the dominant industrial relations issue of the second session."

The NAM staff expressed relief that "the near hysteria that marked passage of the Wholesome Meat Act and other health measures has waned."

But it found cause for concern that the leading proponents of strong consumer protection laws in the House and Senate "all won big" in last November's elections and "can be expected to seek the limelight again."

As a result, the NAM report noted sadly, "the outlook for continued measures to 'protect' the consumer is bullish."

13 Fishermen Land $32,000 Backpay Grant

Metairie, La.—Checks for $32,000 in backpay have been given under National Labor Relations Board order to 13 menhaden fishermen fired five years ago by the captain of the motor vessel Gallant Man when they voted to join a union.

The award was one of the largest of its kind in 1968, according to Meat Cutters Local 300. The NLRB ordered the Patterson Menhaden Co. to rehire the fishermen fired unlawfully in October 1963, and to make up their lost pay.

The union, which won the election, 15-2, is conducting a new organizing drive on the Gulf Coast for pogy boatmen and cannery workers.

Freedom Medal Awarded To Dubinsky by Johnson

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Dubinsky was among 20 prominent Americans honored by Pres. Johnson the day he left office.

Dubinsky, the president-emeritus of the Ladies' Garment Workers, was awarded the Medal of Freedom, highest civil honor the President can bestow.

He is the fourth trade union leader to receive the top presidential award.

Pres. Kennedy named AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for the first award—and the presentation was made by Johnson after Kennedy's assassination. Johnson subsequently presented the Medal of Freedom award to AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, the noted civil rights leader, and to John L. Lewis, retired president of the Mine Workers.

The latest group of award winners included high government officials, such as Ambassador W. Averell Harriman and Defense Sec. Clark Clifford, business leaders Henry Ford II and Edgar Kaiser, Roy Wilkins of the NAACP and Whitney M. Young, Jr. of the Urban League and others prominent in the arts and public life.

OATH OF OFFICE as President of the United States is taken by Richard M. Nixon on the steps of the Capitol as thousands watched in person and millions on television. Chief Justice Earl Warren administers the oath, with former Pres. Johnson by his side.

Old Problems Remain:

New Administration Takes Over Reins

(Continued from Page 1)

that has marked the start of previous administrations.

Nixon promised to continue to pursue the goals of "full employment . . . excellence in education . . . rebuilding our cities . . . protecting our environment."

But the President added that "we are fast approaching the limits of what government alone can do."

His inaugural address was a call for new attitudes rather than new laws.

The "greatest need now is to reach beyond government," Nixon said, to enlist concerned individuals "in those small, splendid efforts that make headlines in the neighborhood newspaper instead of the national journal."

The new President implored his countrymen to "stop shouting at one another," to drop the "angry rhetoric that fans discontents into hatreds" and "speak quietly so that our words can be heard as well as our voices."

He promised that "for its part government will listen."

America, Nixon stressed, must "go forward together . . . black and white together, as one nation, not two."

Nixon pledged to dedicate his energies "to the cause of peace among nations" and a world which will be "open to ideas, open to the exchange of goods and people."

He invited "a peaceful competition . . . in enriching the life of man" and an approach to space exploration "as a new adventure to be shared."

At the same time, the new President served notice "to all those who would be tempted by weakness" that the United States "will be as strong as we need to be for as long as we need to be."

Nixon sought in his inaugural address to set a tone rather than lay out a program.

Whatever new proposals his Administration will make—to Congress or in the international arena—apparently will come in bits and pieces over the months ahead.

If there was a theme to his inaugural, it was the "togetherness" note. But the President deliberately refrained from choosing a phrase to sum up his Administration, ending a precedent that stretched from the New Deal of Franklin D. Roosevelt to the Great Society of Lyndon B. Johnson.

Nixon spoke in a low key, neither inviting nor getting more than occasional applause from the largely partisan thousands gathered in front of the Capitol on a chill, gray day.

But the new President summed up the significance of the occasion in his opening sentences in which he spoke of "the majesty of this moment" of "the orderly transfer of power."

Seated at Nixon's side was the outgoing President — Lyndon B. Johnson, greeted for the last time with the traditional Hail to the Chief, preparing to hand over the leadership of the most powerful nation on earth to the candidate of the opposition party.

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey was there in the same role that Nixon played in the 1961 inauguration of Pres. John F. Kennedy—the outgoing Vice President who had narrowly lost the presidential election and was taking part in the inauguration of his opponent.

Alongside was his successor, Spiro T. Agnew, little more than two years ago a county official and now to occupy the nation's second highest office.

The Chief Justice of the United States, Earl Warren, administered the oath to the new President as he had to Presidents Johnson, Kennedy and Eisenhower.

The traditional inaugural parade, bands and floats, governors and drum majorettes, followed the traditional route from the area of the Capitol past the White House reviewing stand.

It was a time of change. It was a time of continuity.

Several hundred thousand people lined the route to watch and applaud, but one group of angry, violently militant demonstrators—unwilling to settle for the "counter-inaugural" parade the day before—hurled obscenities and sticks at the heavily guarded presidential limousine.

As the new President took his place in the reviewing stand, the old President was receiving a warm, affectionate sendoff at Andrews Air Force Base.

There were Cabinet members, congressional leaders, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and other longtime associates. And there were hundreds of cheering union members among people from all walks of life who had come to say thanks and wish Godspeed to the former President.

At night, the incoming Administration celebrated at a series of jam-packed inaugural balls.

And at 7:30 a.m. the next morning, Richard M. Nixon was at his White House office to take on the burdens that go with the title of President of the United States.

1-25-69

William Usery of IAM Named Aide to Shultz

(Continued from Page 1)

Employes in a new post as executive secretary of the union.

In answer to questions, Usery told newsmen he is a Democrat who supported Vice Pres. Humphrey in the election campaign and hopes in his new post "to foster free collective bargaining as much as possible." Although born and raised in Georgia, Usery said, he fought for equal rights and equal opportunity out of deep personal conviction before there was a civil rights law on the statute books.

Shultz told the newsmen that he wanted someone with experience in the trade union movement for the post but stressed that Usery will be representing the public as a whole in his new post.

The new labor secretary also announced the appointment of David P. Taylor as his executive assistant. Taylor, 34-year-old associate professor of industrial relations at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, is a former student of Shultz at the University of Chicago.

Shultz announced that George L-P Weaver, assistant secretary for international affairs, will remain in the Labor Dept. through June to complete his term as chairman of the Governing Board of the Intl. Labor Organization.

The career post of assistant secretary for administration, Shultz said, will continue to be filled by Leo R. Werts.

While Shultz still has some high-level posts to fill, he is in better shape than most of the new Cabinet officers who have not yet named the bulk of their top aides.

Following the inauguration, Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell announced his major appointments to Justice Dept. posts—including some that raised eyebrows.

For deputy attorney general, he named Richard G. Kleindienst, who came into prominence as a chief tactician in Barry Goldwater's 1964 campaign for the presidency. Kleindienst was also active in the Nixon campaign this year. Another close Goldwater associate, William H. Rehnquist of Phoenix, will be counsel to the department.

Two assistant attorney generals, Jerris Leonard of Wisconsin for civil rights and William D. Ruckelshaus of Indiana, who will head the civil division, were unsuccessful Republican candidates for the Senate last November. Both are considered moderates by midwestern Republican standards.

Corporation Lawyer

The appointment that attracted most attention, however, was the naming of a Chicago corporation lawyer who has specialized in defending business firms against federal antitrust cases as assistant attorney general in charge of the antitrust division. The new appointee, Richard W. McLaren, said at a news conference that past Republican administrations have been characterized by "vigorous" enforcement of antitrust laws "and the Nixon Administration will be no exception."

Mitchell announced that Erwin N. Griswold, a noted law school dean before joining the Johnson Administration, will remain as solicitor general.

The criminal division will be headed by Will R. Wilson, a former Texas attorney general who switched his registration from Democratic to Republican several years ago. A Greenville, S.C., attorney, Johnnie Walters, will head the tax division.

In answer to questions at a news conference, Mitchell said he is interested in closing "loopholes" in the campaign financing law through which, he said, some people have driven "teams of horses."

WILLIAM J. USERY

Dock Strike Dragged On By Employers

New York—The dock strike entered its sixth week as negotiators for the Longshoremen pressed for a settlement with balky employers at North Atlantic and Gulf Coast ports.

ILA committees hope to end the tieup within a week or 10 days, the union said, but no strikers will return to work until all contracts have been settled.

The union won wage increases of $1.60 an hour over a three-year period from employers in the New York Shipping Association along with a guarantee of 2,080 hours of work per year and job protection on containerized freight.

Ports where no progress has been reported in applying the New York terms to local contracts included New Orleans, Baltimore, Boston, Hampton Roads and Philadelphia, the union said.

The union made no official comment on reports that Gov. Rockefeller and Republican Senators Jacob Javits and Charles E. Goodell of New York have urged Pres. Nixon and Labor Sec. George P. Schultz to give "top priority" to a settlement short of government intervention.

An ILA spokesman said "telegrams settle no strikes. The way to settle is to try hard at the bargaining table. That's what we are doing, and hope to continue doing."

The strike began Dec. 20 after an earlier strike was halted by an 80-day court order under the Taft-Hartley Act.

Handicapped Unit Retains Freeman

Gordon M. Freeman, president emeritus of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, has been named to another three-year term on the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped.

The committee is made up of leaders in labor, industry, the professions and of national, civic, veterans and handicapped people's organizations. Its aim is to provide a continuing program of public information and education for employing the handicapped.

Freeman was reappointed by Harold Russell, chairman of the President's committee.

Congress Urged To Move Fast On Tax Reform

Congress was urged to give "top priority" to tax reform by outgoing Treasury Sec. Joseph W. Barr.

Appearing before the Joint Economic Committee of Congress shortly before leaving office, Barr warned of a "revolt" by taxpayers against loopholes that reduce the tax payments of many wealthy individuals to little or nothing.

He estimated that the revenue loss from these loopholes will exceed $50 billion this year.

"Our income tax system needs major reforms now," Barr told the committee. He said 155 persons with adjusted gross incomes of over $200,000—including 21 making more than $1 million—paid no federal income tax at all last year.

Barr warned the committee that people who pay full tax on their incomes "are concerned, and indeed angered, about the high-income recipients who pay little or no federal income tax."

Minimum Wage Hikes Set for 2 Million

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, February 1, 1969 | No. 5

Broadened Protection In Effect

More than 2 million of America's lowest-paid workers will get a pay raise to $1.30 an hour as of Feb. 1—when the third step of the 1966 amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act takes effect.

On the same date, 1.5 million persons who had not previously been covered by the law move under its protection. More than half of them are employes of smaller retail stores; most of the remainder work in restaurants, hotels and motels.

There is no change in the wage-hour protection for most of the 44 million workers covered by federal law. Their minimum pay guarantee went up to $1.60 a year ago and, with a few exceptions, their maximum straight-time hours have been pegged at 40 for many years.

The ones who will benefit by the Feb. 1 change come from the group brought under the wage-hour law for the first time by the 1966 amendments.

This group includes nearly 9 million persons who were brought under the law at a $1 minimum two years ago, raised to $1.15 last year and to $1.30 this year. Some occupations are exempt from hours coverage, but for most in this group the straight-time limit drops this year to 40 hours a week after having been pegged at 44 hours the first year, 42 hours last year.

The 1.5 million newly-covered workers move in at the same $1.30 level as if they had come under the law two years ago.

About half of the new group and about 1.3 million of the group moving up from the $1.15 wage guarantee now earn less than $1.30 an hour and will benefit immediately from the higher rate, the Labor Dept. estimated.

Their wage increases will add up —again an estimate—to $505 million a year, all going to workers earning poverty-level incomes.

Restaurant, hotel, motel and farm employes remain exempt from the maximum hours provision of the law and where workers receive more than $20 a month in tips, employers can credit tips toward up to half the amount of the minimum wage.

The workers newly covered this year are those working in establishments which do at least $250,000 gross volume of business a year. Last year, only places doing more than $500,000 business were covered.

Except for farm workers, all

(Continued on Page 4)

Buying Power Inches Up But Prices Zoom in '68

New Attack On Filibuster Falls Short

A bipartisan effort to change the Senate's rules to make it easier to halt a filibuster went down to defeat again this year—but the battle was closer than it had ever been before.

It takes a two-thirds vote under present rules to limit debate. And that's why the Senate this year didn't get the chance to vote on changing the rules.

Supporters of a rules change proved they had a majority of the Senate behind them. But on two tries, they couldn't get the two-thirds necessary to force a vote on the issue.

The final try to close debate showed an actual count of 29 Democrats and 21 Republicans voting for cloture, with 21 from each party voting against limiting debate. That adds up to a 50-42 majority. Counting the senators who were paired or indicated their position, the lineup would be 56-44.

If the Senate earlier had been willing to accept the ruling of Hubert Humphrey, issued shortly before he left office as Vice President and presiding officer of the Senate, cloture would have been imposed. A compromise rules change to allow three-fifths of the Senate to close debate would almost certainly have been adopted.

Humphrey gave the Senate its chance after a 51-47 vote for cloture several weeks back. He ruled that cloture had been imposed, despite the lack of a two-thirds majority, because a majority of the Senate has a constitutional right at

(Continued on Page 12)

HUBERT HUMPHREY, honored by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights as the "most consistent and eloquent champion" of its goals, joins in the applause for Roy Wilkins, executive director of the NAACP and chairman of the Leadership Conference throughout its 20 years of existence. AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, left, presented a distinguished service plaque to Wilkins on behalf of the conference's 115 affiliated groups.

Lifelong Dedication Cited:

Humphrey Honored By Rights Leaders

By David L. Perlman

Hubert H. Humphrey called on both black and white Americans to keep the faith—the faith that America is one nation, not "a collection of racial enclaves, each jealously set aside and restricted."

The former Vice President was honored by the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a 20-year-old coalition of 115 national organizations, including the AFL-CIO.

A host of prominent speakers paid eloquent tribute to Humphrey's lifetime dedication to racial justice and equal rights. There was a pageant spotlighting highlights of his record, a plaque on which was engraved the opening section of the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1964.

But Humphrey made it clear that he doesn't consider the battle over—or his own role in public life ended.

He warned against leaving the field to the apostles of hate and racial separation, whether black or white.

"To put it bluntly," he said to the interracial audience of 1,300 attending the dinner in his honor, "I find the epithets 'nigger' and 'honky' equally offensive."

And, Humphrey added, "any person, white or black, who thinks racial hatred is the path to salvation is tragically—even pitifully—misguided."

There's more to be done by government to make justice and equal opportunity a reality than just being "more efficient," Humphrey

(Continued on Page 12)

Real Wages Gain Only A Fraction

By Duane Emme

The purchasing power of rank-and-file workers' pay checks rose by a mere six-tenths of 1 percent during 1968 even though the gain in take-home pay averaged nearly 5 percent, the Labor Dept. reported.

The difference, the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics pointed out, was accounted for by the sharpest annual price increase in 17 years. Prices in 1968 averaged 4.2 percent above the level of 1967.

The BLS analysis of prices and earnings over the year was combined with monthly reports for December.

Prices rose by two-tenths of 1 percent in December, sending the Consumer Price Index to 123.7 percent of the 1957-59 average. It was the smallest monthly increase since September.

The index figure means that it cost the average city family $12.37 to buy goods and services that would have cost $10 in the 1957-59 base period.

Weekly take-home pay for the worker with three dependents averaged $97.50 in December, a gain of 95 cents over the month. For the worker with no dependents, the increase was 93 cents to an average of $88.57.

Real spendable earnings—take-home pay adjusted to take account

(Continued on Page 5)

Parley Pushes Fresh Goals For Consumer

Lower prices, a grievance procedure for consumers, and stepped-up anti-pollution programs were advocated by opening day speakers at Consumer Assembly '69, a two-day conference sponsored by the Consumer Federation of America.

Its goal is to make sure that the voice of the consumer will continue to be heard loud and clear in the White House and the halls of Congress.

The "get involved" theme was stressed by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.), who urged: "We must move our criticism from the kitchen to the hearing room, from the living room to the legislature, from the back fence to the ballot box, from in front of the TV set to in front of the TV camera."

(Continued on Page 10)

Supreme Court Urged to Uphold NLRB Name-and-Address Rule

The AFL-CIO urged the Supreme Court to uphold the National Labor Relations Board's Excelsior rule requiring employers to give the NLRB name-and-address lists of workers before any representation election is held.

In doing so, the court should "make it clear that the Excelsior rule is a proper method for implementing the rights of employes" to discuss and be informed about unionization, and the right of unions to inform workers on this subject, the federation said in a friend-of-the-court brief.

Also filed with the court was a report from 21 AFL-CIO regions showing that during 780 election campaigns in 1964, employers gave "captive audience" speeches to their workers in 73 percent of the campaigns and sent out home mailings in 76 percent. Unions, in contrast, sent mailings 65 percent of the time but reached only about 40 percent of the eligible voters in making house calls.

"Aside from the use of threats and coercion, the most prevalent legal device" in these campaigns is for employers to impede labor's access to workers, the federation argued in support of the so-called Excelsior rule requiring address lists.

The Excelsior case originated in 1964 when the Clothing Workers lost a representation election at Excelsior Underwear and Saluda Knitting Co. plants in Saluda, S.C., and Long Beach, Calif. The ACWA appealed, charging the companies conducted an intensive propaganda campaign against the union which it was unable to counter because it lacked the names and addresses of all the workers.

(Continued on Page 2)

Holdout Ports Delay Wrap-up Of Dock Strike

New Orleans—Executive board members of the Longshoremen voted here to reaffirm the position of union negotiators that none of the ILA's 60,000 striking members will return to work in any port until all ports have settled.

At the same time the officers of the union's South Atlantic and Gulf district urged Pres. Nixon not to intercede legislatively, as employers have demanded, in the strike that began Dec. 20. Instead he should urge the employers to "forget that longshoremen in the South can be bought more cheaply than longshoremen in New York," a district spokesman wired the White House.

Union attempts to reach agreement with "outport" employers, on the basis of the $1.60 "package" reached last month in the port of New York, have been stymied by the employers. When negotiations broke down in Philadelphia and New Orleans, the ILA called its executive board into session here.

The 27-member board took the position that it does not "intend to push any port into a substandard agreement" just because some outport employers demand a "cheap settlement."

The New Orleans Shipping Association has offered the union an hourly money package of $1.07 for a new three-year agreement instead of the higher New York package. Boston employers are demanding a change in that port's work rules.

ILA Pres. Thomas W. Gleason told newsmen here the union will insist that southern employers agree to the same $1.60-an-hour wage package and the same container clause accepted in New York. The clause gives the union some protection for members against job losses due to the loading of containers within 50 miles of a port.

Medicare Sets Deadline For Doctor Bill Coverage

A last chance to sign up for Medicare's supplementary medical insurance covering doctor bills is being offered persons born before Oct. 2, 1901, and for those who were enrolled in the plan earlier, but dropped out before Jan. 2, 1967.

Both the Social Security Administration and the Railroad Retirement Board have sent out reminders that people in either of these categories have only until Apr. 1 to sign up for the insurance, known as Medicare "Part B."

Others eligible to sign up at this time are employes and their wives who have recently attained 65 or will reach that age before Apr. 1, other persons 65 and over who did not previously enroll, and other dropouts from the plan who wish to re-enroll.

Social security beneficiaries and civil service annuitants should enroll at their nearest social security office. Persons under railroad retirement may sign up at a Railroad Retirement Board office, or through cards being sent out by the board.

The monthly premium for the doctor bill insurance is $4 but previous dropouts from the plan and some who passed up an earlier enrollment opportunity may have to pay a slightly higher premium.

Gains, Goals Reviewed By Manpower Agency

The Labor Dept.'s Manpower Administration looked back to 1961 and forward to 1975 in its annual report to Congress under the Manpower Development & Training Act.

The backward look traced the recovery of the American economy from the 1960-61 recession, and the evolution of government manpower programs to meet changing priorities.

During this period, the number of people with jobs increased 10.1 million; the number of unemployed dropped nearly 2 million—and the unemployment rate was cut from 6.7 to 3.6 percent.

This was accompanied by a 1.1 million reduction in longterm unemployment and a drop of more than 1 million in the number of persons working part-time because full-time jobs were not available. The number of major areas with unemployment was brought down from 101 in 1961 to six in 1968.

It was the nation's emergence from the recession period, the report indicates, which led to the shift in the government's training programs from help to those who were victims of layoffs and technological changes to concentrated assistance to the disadvantaged groups who were least prepared to take available jobs.

Thus, the report notes that in the program's first year—fiscal 1963—the majority of trainees were unemployed heads of households with at least three years of work experience. Most of the training was given in classrooms and the typical trainee was a white, high-school graduate.

Last year, the number of on-the-job trainees nearly matched the number of persons receiving classroom training, union-aided pre-apprentice training continued to grow, and the new JOBS program operated through the National Alliance of Businessmen emerged as a major form of on-the-job training keyed to the poorest and most disadvantaged groups.

The report discusses the role of the Neighborhood Youth Corps, the Job Corps and a range of special programs for groups such as Indians, the Spanish-speaking, the elderly and the handicapped.

Looking ahead to 1975, it predicts a work force continuing the trends that have been observable over the past decade.

The proportion of adult workers with at least a high school education will have risen from 54.9 percent in 1965 to 66 percent in 1975.

The total work force will be about 15 million higher than 10 years earlier, an increase of 19.4 percent. But the biggest percentage gain will be among women workers—a 25.1 percent increase.

Will they have jobs? That, the report indicates, depends on the growth in the American economy. It estimated that "output would have to grow by 4.4 percent a year to bring unemployment down to 3 percent by 1975."

Oil Strike Narrows To Five Producers

Denver—Striking oil workers won improved contract terms from Sinclair Refining Co. and returned to work at more than two dozen locations from Wyoming to Pennsylvania.

The settlement left about 20,000 members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers still on strike against five major oil firms—Shell, Texaco, Continental (Conoco), Standard of California and Standard of Ohio (Sohio).

The Sinclair agreement, the only national pact negotiated by OCAW, covers about 5,700 members of 25 local unions. It follows the "pattern" settlement first established at Union Oil Co. of California about a week after 60,000 OCAW members walked out Jan. 4 at nearly 100 installations of several dozen companies.

The union warned that it "still needs the support" of the entire labor movement before its current fight for improved contracts is won. A spokesman said that, while progress to date has been substantial, the five unsettled companies still are formidable holdouts.

The Sinclair contract was reported close to the settlement won from Union Oil and its Pure Oil division—valued by the union at 69.6 cents an hour over a two-year period.

Some settlements have been better than the Union oil agreement by a few cents an hour, OCAW said. Most new pacts combine general wage increases with special adjustments for skilled workers, higher night shift premiums, and increased company payments toward hospital insurance and retirement costs.

Besides settling with Sinclair, OCAW expanded the range of prior agreements with Gulf Oil and Phillips Petroleum that returned most strikers to work for those firms. Also it won more settlements from smaller companies.

No agreements have been reached at any point with the five holdout companies, the union said. Some "independent" firms also are holding out, it reported.

The OCAW strike has the strong support of the AFL-CIO and the two-million-member Intl. Federation of Petroleum & Chemical Workers. Leaders of both have pointed to the oil industry's "increasing profitability and productivity" and its ability to give union members a fairer share of their continuing prosperity.

OCAW committees voted last July to seek major contract improvements this year, including wage hikes of 72 cents an hour over a 23-month term. The strike started when no employer came close to meeting OCAW's minimum aims.

Unionist Named Aide To Maryland Governor

A former union legislative director has been named top aide to the new governor of Maryland.

Gov. Marvin Mandel, the Democrat elected by the Maryland legislature to succeed Vice Pres. Agnew, announced the appointment of Edmond F. Rovner as his administrative assistant.

Rovner, a former legislative director for the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers (IUE), has been administrative assistant to Rep. Jonathan D. Bingham (D.-N.Y.) for the past four years.

In Supreme Court Case:

Labor Brief Backs Election List Rule

(Continued from Page 1)

A similar case was later consolidated with Excelsior and Saluda since both covered the same point. It involved the Operating Engineers and K. L. Kellogg & Sons of Long Beach, Calif.

The NLRB in 1966 upheld the claim of both unions that elementary fairness requires all parties in an election to know the identity of all potential voters before the election.

Elections, it ruled, not only should be free from interference, restraint or coercion by either party but "also from other elements that prevent or impede a free and reasoned choice."

One of the election impediments, the board held, was a union's inability to reach all workers in a plant by reasonable means. It ordered the lists furnished in a decision that has since become known as the Excelsior rule.

To Hear Arguments

The Supreme Court recently agreed to hear arguments in the only one of six cases in which a U.S. Court of Appeals barred the application of the Excelsior rule—NLRB vs. the Wyman-Gordon Co. The court was the 1st U.S. Circuit Court in Boston.

The 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, San Francisco, and the 5th Circuit, New Orleans, are the two latest appeals bodies to differ with the 1st Circuit. Two U.S. district courts, at Utica, N.Y., and Houston, Tex., also upheld the board in rulings not yet disposed of at higher levels. All voted to enforce the Excelsior rule against the protests of employers.

The San Francisco judges approved NLRB orders against two California firms — British Auto Parts, Inc., and Teledyne, Inc. They said they are unable to agree with a contrary ruling by the 1st U.S. Circuit Court.

In their decision, the 9th Circuit judges said: "We see no need to engage in further judicial discourse" on employer claims about "the unreasonableness and unfairness of an employer's being required to provide the addresses of his employes for use in a representation election. These questions have had sufficient answer" in two 1967 appeals court decisions, they said.

The 9th Circuit judges also said they regard as without merit the challenge to the address-list rule made by the Wyman-Gordon Co. in the Boston case.

The Wyman-Gordon Co. had refused to furnish a name-and-address list to the NLRB on the ground that the board did not follow the Administrative Procedure Act in publishing its Excelsior rule.

In the most recent ruling, the appeals court at New Orleans summarily reversed a lower court decision based on the 1st Circuit's Wyman-Gordon ruling. It said a lower court injunction against an NLRB election was "unwarranted and must be vacated without delay to permit board processes to go on." Employes of Groendyke Transport, Inc., in eastern Texas have been waiting to vote since Aug. 1, 1968, the appeals judges said.

Injunction Dissolved

In the other two recent rulings, the Utica district court dissolved an injunction against an NLRB order for the Gladding Keystone Corp. to furnish a name-and-address list. The Houston district court ordered Industrial Insulators, Inc., to produce such a list by Jan. 10 or give the NLRB its personnel and payroll records for the period on which voter eligibility was based.

A Houston newspaper quoted NLRB Regional Dir. Clifford W. Potter as noting that this is the first time he has had to go to court in several hundred elections since the Excelsior rule was adopted in 1966. The paper also quoted U.S. Judge John V. Singleton, Jr. as saying:

"Any politician can get a list of all voters in his precinct by going down to the county court house and ordering one. I don't see why there should be any objection here."

HOW-TO-DO-IT EXPERTS give pointers to members of the Laurence F. Lee Boys' Club in Jacksonville, Fla., on the use of hand tools. A complete workshop was built at the club mainly by craft union volunteers and equipped with many hand and power tools by the Jacksonville General Apprentice Association, including union locals of the Carpenters, Plumbers, Painters and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. From left are Louis Toth, North Florida Carpenters Joint Apprentice Committee; Randal Gardner, Plumbers Local 234 and president of the general apprentice association, and Charles Howell, Carpenters Local 627.

Prospects Held Favorable:

Overhaul Forecast In Maritime Policy

Government, management and labor officials have joined in an optimistic view of the prospects for development of a forward-looking maritime program by the Democratic Congress and the Republican Administration.

That consensus emerged from a day-long seminar held in Washington under the sponsorship of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. to chart a course on merchant marine legislation in the 91st Congress.

The chairmen of the key congressional committees concerned with maritime affairs—Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) of the Senate Commerce Committee and Rep. Edward A. Garmatz (D-Md.) of the House Merchant Marine & Fisheries Committee—said they would give top priority to passage of legislation reconstituting the Maritime Administration as an independent agency.

Magnuson noted that during the 1968 election campaign, Pres. Nixon promised a sweeping overhaul of the nation's shipping and shipbuilding programs. He added that if the campaign promises "prove to be an accurate guide," Congress can expect Nixon to submit "a meaningful proposal to revitalize the fleet."

Garmatz said that he too, hoped that the new Administration "will have a better understanding of the vital requirements of American seapower." In any event, he said, Congress would press with "renewed vigor" for maritime independence and for "a substantial and well-balanced maritime program."

Similar optimism came from other speakers at the MTD-sponsored affair. They included:

- Page Groton, director of the Iron Shipbuilders Marine Council of the Boilermakers Union, who noted that both the Republican and Democratic platforms in 1968 pledged positive action on the maritime front. "We must never let them forget this pledge," he declared. "We must work . . . to make both parties keep their commitment to the nation."
- James R. Wilson, Jr., director of the American Legion's National Security Division, who said Nixon's campaign pledge to develop a fleet capable of carrying 30 percent of America's imports and exports, as compared to today's 5-percent level, was in harmony with the Legion's goal of restoring the American flag "to its rightful position of leadership on the high seas."
- Edwin M. Hood, president of the Shipbuilders Council of America, who called on the Administration to consider using the U.S.-flag fleet as an instrument for correcting the chronic balance-of-payments deficit. By carrying more U.S. trade and commerce in American-flag ships, as Nixon has proposed, he said, "a substantial outflow of dollars can be avoided."
- Archibald E. King, chairman of Isthmian Lines, Inc., who asked the Administration and Congress to give "equitable treatment" to the unsubsidized segment of the fleet by giving them priority in the carriage of government foreign aid and Food-for-Peace cargoes, and by granting unsubsidized lines the same privilege enjoyed by subsidized operators to put money aside in tax-deferred reserve funds to enable them to build new vessels.

In his keynote to the seminar, O. William Moody, Jr., administrator of the MTD, urged conference participants to look "not to the past, but to the future."

He noted that, in addition to the Nixon Administration's pledge for fleet revitalization, the merchant marine has an advantage in that most members of the 90th Congress who went on record "in favor of the maritime independence and a strong maritime posture" were re-elected to the 91st Congress.

Copper Miners United In Strike for Fair Pact

Calumet, Mich.—Deep snow and the bitterest cold weather in a decade have only hardened the determination of 1,000 striking copper miners to win a fair contract from what they call a 1913-style management.

The miners, members of Steelworkers Local 4312, walked off their jobs Aug. 21 at mines of the Calumet & Hecla Co. in the Upper Peninsula after many frustrating meetings failed to produce tolerable contract terms.

They remember the 1913 strike, when two Calumet & Hecla workers were shot and killed, others deported and their union smashed. And even today they resent the company's attitude toward its workers more than the low wages and inferior working conditions.

"It's still 1913 for copper workers in Calumet," says USWA Rep. Sylvio Guisfredi, who heads the union bargaining committee.

In spite of some gains, C&H wages are said by the union to be among the lowest in the copper industry, which enjoys rising prices and generous profits. Copper workers elsewhere, according to the union, earn more in starting pay than Calumet miners earn at the top of their grade — $2.12 to $2.51 an hour here, $2.74 at the lowest grade at Kennecott, Phelps Dodge and Anaconda locations.

Another sore point at C&H is the issue of safety. An arbiter recently upheld the union claim that a new signal system for hoisting men up and down in the Kingston mine had been imposed arbitrarily. Workers refused to enter the mine, but management locked out the men and refused to change the system.

The USWA, the Michigan AFL-CIO and labor generally helped finance Christmas dinners and a children's party. The strikers' families are receiving weekly food supplies and medical aid from funds supplied by the Steelworkers.

While the strike continues, miners have donated more than $100,000 in labor to build an indoor ice rink for the community in the National Guard Armory here, USWA District Dir. Glenn Peterson said.

CREDIT UNION AUDIT

A complete verification of accounts of all members of the AFL-CIO Employes Federal Credit Union was made as of Dec. 31, 1968. Members who do not receive statements by Feb. 28, 1969, are asked to notify the Chairman, Supervisory Committee, Room 711, 815 16th Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. (20006).

THE FIRST CONVENTION of the Intl. Allied Printing Trades Association since its founding in 1911 meets in Chicago. Attending the sessions were delegates from five AFL-CIO graphic arts unions comprising the Allied Printing Trades—Lithographers & Photoengravers, Bookbinders, Stereotypers. Typographical Union and Printing Pressmen. Delegates urged annual conventions be held.

Caribbean Cruise? Get a Promotion

Give a tired executive a company-paid Caribbean cruise vacation instead of just another pay raise.

That's the advice Club International, owned by the Diners Club, is giving to business firms. Suggesting that companies buy membership for executives and key personnel, the solicitation letter declares:

"Imaginative management has discovered that there is much more emotional appeal to an employe in a Caribbean cruise than in a similar amount of compensation given as a salary increase."

Union Growers Hail Relations With UFWOC

Los Angeles—Contracts with the farm workers' union have benefited the workers without damaging the grape industry, officials of four grape firms said here.

A report to that effect in the Los Angeles Times took the air out of charges by non-union growers, the John Birch Society and the National Right to Work Committee that the union has brought "chaos" to company farms.

Representatives of Schenley Industries and the Di Giorgio Fruit Co. told Times labor writer Harry Bernstein that relations with the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, AFL-CIO, have been "remarkably good."

Wages at Schenley have gone up more than 50 per cent since the company recognized the union and signed a contract but "it isn't causing us any real economic problems," Atty. Sidney Korshak of Schenley told the newspaper.

Paul Masson Vineyards, which has agreed to pay an average wage of $3.25 an hour, said it has worked out all major contract problems with the union. Another major winery, Almaden Vineyards, told the Times it has had a "fairly decent relationship" with the union for 16 months. The firm said its 99 full-time farm workers earned an average of $4,612 through Nov. 15, plus 10 cents an hour paid by the employer into a union health and welfare fund.

UFWOC Dir. Cesar Chavez said the report "vindicates the confidence placed in us" by AFL-CIO leaders in "permitting us to conduct our own affairs" and refutes the "irresponsible charges" of growers who have refused to deal with the union of their employes.

Printing Trades Press Expanded Use of Label

Chicago—Initial steps to expand and promote use of the Allied Printing Trades Label were taken here at the first convention of local councils affiliated with the Intl. Allied Printing Trades Association (IAPTA).

Resolutions adopted by the 115 delegates at the two-day meeting will be presented to the IAPTA Board of Governors in the form of recommendations. Before this convention, the 300 local councils of the Association had no voice in making policy.

Delegates urged that the international agreement governing IAPTA and its affiliates be changed to allow local Allied Printing Trades Councils to issue or withdraw their label or make amendments to rules by a four-fifths majority of council members. A unanimous vote of all five member unions is now required.

Member unions of the IAPTA are the Typographical Union, Lithographers & Photoengravers, Stereotypers & Electrotypers, Bookbinders and Printing Pressmen. All five must agree on any changes in the international agreement.

Among other actions, the delegates:

- Urged the convention be held on an annual basis.
- Called for recognition of state Allied Printing Trades Councils and suggested that they be given one delegate each at future conventions.
- Urged the board of governors to proceed with establishment of an international office to promote use of the label. The IAPTA board has already voted to set up such an office. The convention urged that the international coordinate the efforts of graphic arts unions in the field of politics and legislation.
- Called for removal of the "manufacturing clause" of the federal Copyright Act to eliminate discrimination against work done in Canadian shops.
- Turned down a proposal that annual licenses be issued for use of the Allied label. When an employer meets the requirements of an Allied council, he receives a license to use its label.
- Requested that a survey be made of shops printing checks for bank checking account customers to promote the use of the label.

The only speeches at the convention were in the form of welcoming remarks by the association's chairman, Pres. James H. Sampson of the Stereotypers, and by Sec.-Treas. Henry L. Coco of the Chicago Allied Printing Trades Council.

NEW PRES. Francis S. Filbey of the Postal Clerks will fill the unexpired term of the late E. C. Hallbeck, who died Jan. 14. Filbey had been national administrative aide of the union and before that a national vice president.

Table Grapes Sour Menu at Agnew's Ball

Baltimore—Fifty boxes of California grapes, distributed by sponsors of Vice Pres. Spiro T. Agnew's inaugural ball at the National Guard Armory, left a bitter taste in the mouths of farm strikers pressing their grape boycott here.

"Is this a sample of the kind of concern the Nixon-Agnew Administration is going to have for forgotten people?" asked Vice Pres. Andrew Imutan of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, AFL-CIO. He added "Who after all is more forgotten than the farm worker who tries to eke out a bare existence by the sweat of his brow?"

Ball Chairman Clarke Langrall told newsmen the $30-a-ticket ball sponsors had no way of knowing where the grapes were grown. He said "for all we know, they could have come from Afghanistan."

Union members like Imutan have been calling public attention to the long strike of California grape pickers for union recognition, and the refusal of growers to meet with them or permit an election. Grape workers are not protected by federal labor laws. Pickets in many cities have urged the public not to buy California grapes while the dispute lasts.

HOME FOR MANY folk in the Appalachian hills is a rundown shack. Their plight was retold in a television documentary aired by the Cincinnati AFL-CIO.

A TRASH-CLUTTERED STREET in the slums of Cincinnati is the playground for children of people who abandoned a hopeless life in the ravaged hills.

AN OLDTIMER describes how strip mining has raped the land, leaving behind struggling hill people to dwell in their cabins of wall-to-wall poverty.

YOUNGSTERS like these inherited the disaster of the scarred hills. As they grow older, they may escape to the slums of the city . . . possibly to find only more grief.

Cincinnati Labor Television Film Penetrates Poverty of Appalachia

Cincinnati—The Cincinnati AFL-CIO turned to television to help get labor's message to the public and apparently hit the jackpot on the first try.

The council sponsored a documentary titled "Appalachian Heritage," a deep and penetrating look at the major problems in the hills of eastern Kentucky and the slums of Cincinnati.

It was a successful television venture—so much so that the documentary is being considered for nomination for an Emmy award. That was an unexpected fringe benefit for the council.

More importantly, the presentation brought a heartening response to the council from television viewers and union members in the Cincinnati area.

It turned out to be one of the more gratifying projects ever undertaken by the council, said William P. Sheehan, executive secretary-treasurer of the Cincinnati AFL-CIO.

Sheehan began shopping for an effective medium to reach the public and discovered that occasional use of television would be within the council's means. He sent out feelers through Cincinnati advertising agencies noting that the council was looking for a program that offered dramatic impact. They steered him to Avco Broadcasting, which was in search of a sponsor for the Appalachian documentary it was filming.

After viewing the film, Sheehan worked out a plan for the council's messages that were closely related to the theme of the program.

The "commercials" depicted in part how many of the poor from the Appalachian hills and Cincinnati slums elevated their status in society through union-won wage gains and benefits. Former Vice Pres. Humphrey also cooperated in taping one of the commercials.

Both the documentary and the council's public service messages were acclaimed by the show business trade publication, Variety.

The film described how strip mining in Appalachia has deteriorated the land, robbing it of beauty and resources and destroying the kind of life known to the mountain people.

Despite federal and state financial aid, legislation to regulate mining and other governmental measures, the people of the hills gave up hope for the desolate areas and moved north.

But on arrival most of them discover that they simply have traded one misery for another. They try to fit into an urban society they neither like nor understand. Thousands are "refugees" living in cold-water apartments in city slums trying to exist on city welfare subsistence.

Aired on evening prime time Friday, Dec. 13, over Avco's Channel 5 in Cincinnati, the hour-long program logged an extremely high rating in a viewers' survey.

Sheehan reported the council received wide response from union members and the general public praising its participation in the production.

The council is now looking into the possibility of sponsoring more stirring programs as a vehicle to deliver its messages, Sheehan said.

He feels that such programs can help make the public more fully aware, for example, of labor's volunteer efforts in many community services programs.

The cost of sponsoring "Appalachian Heritage" totaled $3,800. This included initial production fees for turning out the "commercials" for the program.

Skills Training Held Key To Jobs for Rural Poor

New Orleans—An intensive study of the problems of joblessness in rural areas of Louisiana shows that new industry alone will not help local people find employment. They need training, too.

Unless the local workers have a good education or skills, the introduction of new industry often "does nothing for the local people, but rather imports a new work force."

The study, made by Loyola University's Institute of Human Relations funded by the U.S. Dept. of Labor, concludes that "a concentrated program of employment and skill training in rapidly industrializing rural areas" is needed if the jobless or underemployed men and women "are to be fully integrated into the industrial society."

Rural Project

The 15-month project involved 933 men, women and youths in the rural Louisiana parishes of St. James, St. John the Baptist, St. Charles and St. Tammany.

More than one-half of all those recruited listed no skills, and few of the others had the skills required by employers in the area. Almost one-third had never been employed in a regular job.

Nearly all had had trouble finding suitable work despite the dramatic economic expansion of the region, spurred by the growth of the space and petrochemical industries.

Despite intensive efforts at placement by the project, only 244 of the 933 enrollees had jobs at the time of final tabulation. Another 191 were in school, the armed services or a training program. The rest were unemployed.

Perhaps the most important conclusion to be drawn from Project Reach is "that the people served need additional, or in many cases their first, skill training," the report notes. "These individuals stand with one foot in the traditional agrarian culture of the South, and with the other in the space age."

The report also made these observations:

- Special arrangements for transportation must be made in rural areas in any scheme to place the hard-core unemployed in permanent jobs or in training.
- Payment of a living allowance during training cuts the dropout rate significantly.
- The poor are much more apt to finish a training program if there's a job waiting at the end. Job development is the key element in any such program.

Federal Minimum Wage Extended to 1.5 Million

(Continued from Page 1)

those covered by the $1.30 step this year will have their wage guarantee lifted to $1.45 next Feb. 1, and to the standard $1.60 level on Feb. 1, 1971. Before that date arrives, of course, Congress may have boosted the minimum wage — a major legislative goal of the AFL-CIO. Former Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz, before he left office, urged a two-step raise to $2 an hour, including farm workers.

Under present law, the minimum pay for covered farm workers — only those on large farms are covered—doesn't go any higher than the new $1.30 level. The cutoff was part of the compromise necessary in 1966 to achieve the breakthrough of bringing farm workers under the Fair Labor Standards Act for the first time.

A Labor Dept. study indicates that about 26 percent of the 523,000 covered farm workers will need wage increases to reach the $1.30 level—the great majority of them in the South.

Ohio Labor Chief Quits Legislature

Columbus—Pres. Frank W. King of the Ohio AFL-CIO was saluted by the Ohio Senate for "effective service" on behalf of Ohio workers when he resigned to devote full attention to his state central body duties. He had served 16 years in the Senate after two years in the Ohio House.

Miss Marigene Valiquette (D-Toledo) was named to take King's Senate seat after serving in the House from the 79th district for eight years with a perfect Ohio COPE voting record.

Hits Job 'Trade-Off' Talk:

Abel Blames Profits For Inflation Cycle

St. Louis—Soaring profits rather than wage increases are chiefly to blame for the current period of inflation—and the economic facts prove it, Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers told business executives here.

Those who advocate slowing down inflation by allowing more unemployment should instead be urging "a trade-off in profits," he emphasized to the Purchasing Management Association of St. Louis.

Abel charged that economists and business leaders who would encourage more joblessness as a device to halt price rises show a "calloused disregard" for human suffering.

He began his address by citing government reports showing that between 1960 and 1968 after-tax profits of corporations increased 95.5 percent and dividends 73.1 percent, while after-tax earnings of workers "went up only 26.6 percent."

Abel then called attention to articles appearing last Aug. 5 and Oct. 22 in the Wall Street Journal, "which, like Caesar's wife, must be beyond suspicion in the business world."

The first story, he noted, after examining price rises in each of three periods in the past 20 years, found that factory labor costs declined while profits increased during each period.

Prices Affect Wages

The second article, dealing at length with the profits-prices-relationship, concluded that "It's more accurate to say that rising consumer prices cause rising wage demands than it is to state the reverse."

Abel scored those who ignore "the fact that the official policy of this nation on employment is a policy of full employment; not a little unemployment, 4 percent unemployment or any level of unemployment."

Pointing out that unemployment means "hardship, privation and perhaps suffering," the Steelworkers' president said that "it is little comfort" to the jobless worker to be told his unemployment "is within socially acceptable bounds."

The idea of pushing up unemployment to halt inflation "is not the least bit acceptable" to workers at a time when corporations are making record profits, he concluded.

Turning to what the nation can do about inflation, Abel suggested an action to "harness" prices that begins with "a willingness to search for a solution that would not require making people jobless."

He called for:

- A government look at those areas "where the real rapid price increases have occurred"—such as medical costs and services—along with a will to "do something about them."
- Legislation to give the President discretionary tax authority to "adjust taxes in time of threatened inflation and thereby nip inflation in the bud."
- Establishment of a mechanism for reviewing prices and price increases, particularly in industries where prices "are administered" and not subject to the law of supply and demand.
- Effective anti-trust action "to halt the unhealthy trend to the creation of larger and larger corporations" and particularly "conglomerate" mergers of firms in unrelated fields.
- More effective legislation to give consumers "a fair share and stop price-gouging."

"Of one thing you can be sure," Abel declared, "the labor movement will continue to demand that this kind of search be undertaken and that the only correct policy regarding employment is one of full employment."

DITTY BAGS FULL OF GIFTS are readied for shipment to servicemen in Viet Nam by members of the Ladies' Garment Workers from the Central Pennsylvania District's Harrisburg area. More than 3,000 gift bags were packed with the cooperation of the Harrisburg AFL-CIO Community Services Committee and the Red Cross. About 100 ILGWU women collected the items from their shops and packed the bags. From left are Viola Wiestling, Carrie Albert, Eleanor Houck, Bonnie Segal and Elizabeth Arndt.

Machinists Score Mediation Lag In Dispute With National Airlines

Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists called on the National Mediation Board to live up to its responsibilities under the Railway Labor Act by making a formal proffer of arbitration in the National Airlines dispute with the union.

Accusing the NMB of failing to act on the union's "repeated fruitless requests for the assignment of a mediator since the case was first docketed" Dec. 23, Siemiller also called on Congress to investigate the board's slow performance. He urged the Federal Aviation Administration to protect the traveling public against possible inadequate maintenance of National planes while the dispute continues.

The dispute, originating in current contract negotiations, came to a head when National suspended three employes at John F. Kennedy Airport in New York and then "fired" 1,200 other machinists who refused to work at other National locations unless the three were reinstated.

Pres. Constantine Ballas of IAM Local 1894, Springfield Gardens, N.Y., and two other IAM members were suspended Jan. 16 for declining to taxi Boeing-727 jet planes with two men, instead of the usual three, at the controls. The airline sent telegrams firing all the protesters Jan. 21, and has since used supervisors to taxi planes from airport to hangar.

The IAM set up picket lines at all National locations and accused the airline of engaging in a lockout.

Siemiller told the mediation board that "since your board has not carried out its duties" under the law "by promptly putting itself in communication with the parties to this dispute, we must now insist, in view of this disregard of your responsibilities, that your board immediately make a formal proffer of arbitration."

The arbitration proffer is the second step in the process of dispute-settling prescribed by the Railway Labor Act governing airline and railroad bargaining.

Siemiller's telegram to Acting FAA Administrator David D. Thomas declared "it is quite obvious that National Airlines does not have and cannot obtain a sufficient number of skilled personnel to perform their maintenance in accordance with existing regulations." He added:

"We therefore request and urge that your agency take immediate steps to see that all aircraft maintenance work is performed in accordance with established procedures and regulations."

The traveling public, Siemiller said, is "entitled to assurance that any aircraft they fly has all maintenance work performed in a safe and satisfactory manner."

The IAM president also sent identical telegrams to Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, and Rep. Harley Staggers (D-W.Va.), chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, asking Congress to investigate the board.

The IAM's dispute with National erupted as union committees continued bargaining separately with eight major airlines on new contract terms. Contracts covering 50,000 mechanics and other workers, due to expire Dec. 31, were automatically extended while contract talks continue.

The three suspended workers in New York were protesting a unilateral decision by management to reduce the number of ground crewmen in the cockpit from three to two, the IAM reported. The union maintains that the third man in the cockpit is vital to watch instruments not visible to mechanics in the pilot and copilot seats. The third man, it contends, also is the only crew member who can watch both wing tips as the plane taxis through crowded airport traffic.

Buying Power Inches Up But Prices Zoom in '68

(Continued from Page 1)

of price rises since 1957-59—averaged $78.82 for the worker with three dependents in December and $71.60 for the worker with no dependents. These figures were up 58 cents over the month in each case.

The gains in real spendable earnings for the month were attributed to an increase in average weekly hours of work, which more than offset the moderate rise in prices.

Real Earnings $78.61

For the year as a whole, take-home pay for the worker with three dependents averaged $95.28 a week compared to $90.86 in 1967. His real spendable earnings averaged $78.61, compared to $78.13 in 1967.

Thus, while his take-home pay averaged $4.42 a week higher in 1968 than in 1967, his buying power was up only 48 cents.

The 4.2 percent increase in the average for the price index in 1968 compared to a 3.1 percent increase in 1967, and a 3.3 percent increase in 1966. The highest previous increase for a single year since 1951 was 3.5 percent in 1956.

Arnold Chase, the bureau's assistant commissioner, would not predict what prices might do in 1969, but a month ago Pres. Johnson's Council of Economic Advisers forecast an increase of about 3.5 percent in the year ahead.

Most of the December price increase was attributed to higher food and housing costs, higher charges for public transportation and medical care services.

Over the past 12 months, medical care costs led all major items on the index with an increase of 7.3 percent. Both hospital and doctors' charges rose sharply, BLS said.

Clothing prices increased an average of 6.7 percent over the year, while consumer services climbed by 6.1 percent. Grocery store food prices rose by 4 percent. Average prices of restaurant meals were up 5.7 percent.

The Wholesale Price Index—usually a forerunner of price increases—rose by two-tenths of 1 percent in December, and BLS said preliminary data indicated "a much greater" rise in January.

About 88,000 workers will receive cost-of-living wage increases based on the December index, BLS reported, with about 54,000 of them employed in the glass container industry, receiving a 1 percent boost based on price changes over the year.

About 12,000 workers in several industries will get a 3-cents-an-hour increase based on quarterly changes. Some 2,000 printing industry employes in northern California will receive $2 weekly increases. Other raises will range from 1 to 8 cents.

Unions Fully Committed To Model Cities Efforts

Unions are "wholeheartedly committed to the success" of the model cities program to rebuild and rehabilitate the nation's slums, an article in the 1968 Housing Yearbook points out.

"As a champion of human betterment," AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan writes, labor sees the program as "the key to a better life for all urban dwellers."

Concern over housing—and all of the problems of our cities—is expressed by Keenan, who is secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. He heads the AFL-CIO Housing Committee and is a vice president in the National Housing Conference, publisher of the yearbook.

Keenan notes that the AFL-CIO and NHC were at the forefront of the drive for the model cities program, enacted by Congress in 1966, and that after its passage AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called for "fullest participation" by federation affiliates.

Since then, Keenan observes, labor organizations have responded "promptly and fully to this call" by taking an active role "in the planning of specific model neighborhoods on which the program is to focus."

He describes how local unions throughout the country are giving assistance to model cities planning, how they have strengthened housing committees to aid projects and how union members are serving as volunteers in training, education and community services efforts.

He points to local labor housing committees, reinforced by guidance from the AFL-CIO, that help communities attack and solve their housing problems.

The article emphasizes that labor is going beyond the physical aspect of slum clearance by assisting with the "human redevelopment" that is needed in ghetto areas.

As an example of this, Keenan describes the participation of building trades unions in Apprenticeship Outreach programs to recruit and train unemployed youths from minority groups to become skilled craftsmen.

Among projects singled out are those being carried out by unions in Buffalo, Washington, D.C. and Newark, N.J. Keenan also tells how IBEW, his union, and the National Electrical Contractors Association are aiding an electrical training program in junior high schools.

The Senate's Separate Way

THE "TYRANNY OF THE MINORITY" will continue as a way of life in the U.S. Senate for at least another two years with the defeat of the latest attempt to reform the filibuster rules.

The struggle to allow a simple majority to bring an issue to a vote in the Senate after full discussion and protection of the minority has been going on for decades. The conservative coalition has prevailed to the extent that even the matter of changing the Senate rules is subject to a filibuster, overcome only by a two-thirds vote.

With the opening of the 91st Congress the liberal forces who have done valiant battle for democratic principle proposed a limited change of the cloture rule that requires two-thirds of the senators present and voting to shut off debate. They proposed lowering the figure to three-fifths, or 60 of the 100 senators if all were present and voting. But this essentially small modification was too much for the conservatives and it went down to defeat.

Historically the Senate filibuster is linked with the civil rights issue. A Southern-led coalition succeeded for many years in blocking an obvious national sentiment for civil rights legislation. In the past few years however, the public demand for action has prevailed.

But the filibuster has become a major weapon for the conservatives in other areas. In the 90th Congress they used the unlimited debate procedures to block a floor vote on repeal of Section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Act and on the nomination of Supreme Court Justice Abe Fortas to become chief justice. In both cases it was clear that a majority existed in the Senate for approval of the repeal measure and the nomination—but not two-thirds.

So the Senate continues on its separate way. A simple majority of the voters is enough to win a candidate a seat in the Senate. But a simple majority is not enough to bring a bill or a nomination to the Senate floor for a vote. Such is the tyranny of the minority.

A Look at the Poor

PROGRAMS to implement the national commitment to eliminate poverty in the United States are being reviewed by the Nixon Administration and its Urban Affairs Council. While the review is taking place some of the facets of poverty are worth taking a look at.

The incidence of poverty is highest in the rural areas with heaviest concentrations in the South and Appalachia. It is higher also in the small cities and towns outside the major metropolitan areas than in the central cities.

Most of the poor are white—71 percent of all poor families. The incidence of poverty among non-whites, however, is far higher: about one household in three compared to one in seven among whites.

Only recently has the reduction in poverty among non-whites matched the reduction among whites.

Overall the number of persons in poverty has declined about 20 million over the past 20 years, including a drop of 12 million since 1963 and an estimated 4 million in 1968 alone.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

*George M. Harrison	David Dubinsky	Joseph Curran
M. A. Hutcheson	Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky
A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton
Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	Paul Hall
Herman D. Kenin	*John J. Grogan	I. W. Abel
P. L. Siemiller	David Sullivan	Hunter P. Wharton
Paul Jennings	A. J. DeAndrade	Ralph Helstein
William Pollock	Max Greenberg	John H. Lyons

Deceased*

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, February 1, 1969 No. 5

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'That Should Hold You for a While'

Ignorance a Factor:

Hidden Hunger, Malnutrition Haunt Many in Nation of Plenty

The following is excerpted from a statement by Dr. Arnold E. Schaefer, chief of the National Nutrition Survey being conducted by the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, before the Senate Committee on Nutrition and Related Human Needs.

OUR STUDIES TO DATE clearly indicate that there is malnutrition, and in our opinion it occurs in an unexpectedly large proportion of our sample population.

One of the major objectives of the National Nutrition Survey is to determine the prevalence of the various population groups that are in a serious health risk status as a result of their nutritional status. Inadequate food, caloric and nutrient intake, if prolonged, results in weakness, fatigue and inability to carry out the simplest tasks, and as you know, in its extreme form leads to starvation and death. Degrees of caloric and other nutrient deficiency manifests itself in retarded growth in the young child.

Of special concern to us is so-called "hidden hunger" in which the individual may not recognize any particular symptom; however, in essence he has such low nutrient tissue levels, that if he is subjected to a continued inadequate diet and/or additional stress such as hard physical labor, infectious or chronic disease, his physiological functional performance is reduced and eventually the physical manifestations of malnutrition will appear.

The preschool child from the time of weaning until approximately six years of age is the most vulnerable to problems of malnutrition. His well being is dependent upon the knowledge and capability of the mother to properly feed him and protect his health, supply clothing and shelter. The problems of malnutrition are definitely associated with other health, education, social and economic problems.

In general, the most widespread nutritional problem is one of multiple nutrient deficiency of a combination of one or more nutrients such as protein, vitamins, minerals and calories. It is important to bear in mind and perhaps shocking to realize that the problems in the poverty groups in the United States seem to be very similar to those we have encountered in the developing countries.

Overall health status is better probably due to the better environmental sanitation—pure water, safe food supply, and waste disposal system. Also medical care, though limited in many areas, is still more available in the United States than in the developing countries.

HEIGHT AND WEIGHT measurements for age provide the simplest means we have for assessing early growth status. The data of this status report of the National Nutrition Survey seem to indicate that we do have growth retardation in the 1- to 6-year-old child. In addition to the growth curves figure, we have preliminary evidence of this retardation from our wrist bone x-ray analyses. Analyses of a very small number (120) of x-rays from children reveal retarded bone growth in 3.5 percent. Of even greater consequence and more concern are the usually undetected detrimental effects of early malnutrition on the learning ability, mental and neurological capacity and behavior of children who survive impaired physical growth.

I wish to re-emphasize that all essential nutrients must be provided to man as well as to lower animals at adequate levels to insure optimal growth and development. Our findings on the high prevalence of anemia, reduced serum albumin, vitamin A, and vitamin C levels and urinary riboflavin clearly indicate the seriousness and magnitude of the problem.

The farmer or the pet owner today in the United States need not worry about the nutritional adequacy of the formulated animal feed since these are produced to insure adequate levels of all nutrients. This is not the case for man. Our diets are based on our knowledge of what food selection will provide the required nutrients, customs, personal preference, and cost factors. Lack of knowledge of food needs or insufficient money to purchase food needs can result in the consumption of a poor diet and lead to malnutrition.

To date in our studies we have found seven cases which the physician diagnoses as severe malnutrition using such terms as kwashiorkor (severe protein and multiple nutrient deficiency) and marasmus, primarily a caloric deficiency. We did not expect to find such cases in the United States. In the majority of these cases a universal contributing factor was a lack of knowledge on the part of the mother. How to feed the child and lack of proper health care for these cases is often complicated in infectious disease or diarrhea. In many of the developing areas where we have worked, Africa, Latin America, and Asia these severe cases of malnutrition only rarely are found; they either are hospitalized or have died.

Rustin Says Integration Is Goal:

Black Separation Proposals Rejected as Counsel of Despair

The following is excerpted from an article by Bayard Rustin, "Towards Integration as a Goal," in the January 1969 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

THE PROPOSITION that separation may be the best solution of America's racial problems has been recurrent in American Negro history. Let us look at the syndrome that has given rise to it.

Separation, in one form or another, has been proposed and widely discussed among American Negroes in three different periods. Each time, it was put forward in response to an identical combination of economic and social factors that induced despair among Negroes. The syndrome consists of three elements: great expectations, followed by dashed hopes, followed by despair and discussion of separation.

The first serious suggestion that Negroes should separate came in the aftermath of the Civil War. During that war many Negroes had not only been strongly in favor of freedom but had fought for the Union. It was a period of tremendous expectations. Great numbers of Negroes left the farms and followed the Union Army as Gen. Sherman marched across Georgia to the sea; they believed that when he got to the sea they would be not only free but also given land—"forty acres and a mule." However, the compromise of 1876 and the withdrawal of the Union Army from the South dashed those expectations. Instead of 40 acres and a mule, all they got was a new form of slavery.

Out of the ruins of those hopes emerged Booker T. Washington, saying in essence to Negroes: "There is no hope in your attempting to vote, no hope in attempting to play any part in the political or social processes of the nation. Separate yourself from all that and give your attention to your innards: that you are men, that you maintain dignity, that you drop your buckets where they are, that you become excellent of character." Of course, it did not work. It could not work. Because human beings have stomachs, as well as minds and hearts, and equate dignity, first of all, not with caste but with class. I preached the dignity of black skin color and wore my hair Afro style long before it became popular; I taught Negro history in the old Benjamin Franklin High School, where I first got my teaching experience, long before it became popular.

But in spite of all that, it is my conviction that there are three fundamental ways in which a group of people can maintain their dignity: one, by gradual advancement in the economic order; two, by being a participating element of the democratic process; and three, through the sense of dignity that emerges from their struggle. For instance, Negroes never had more dignity than when Martin Luther King won the boycott in Montgomery or at the bridge in Selma.

The second period of frustration and the call for separation came after World War I. During that war, 300,000 Negro troops went to France—not for the reason Mr. Wilson thought he was sending them, but because they felt that if they fought for their country they would be able to say: "We have fought and fought well. Now give us at home what we fought for abroad."

Again, this great expectation collapsed in total despair as a result of postwar developments: Lynchings in the United States reached their height in the early twenties; the Palmer raids did not affect Negroes directly but had such a terrifying effect on civil liberties that no one paid any attention to what was happening to Negroes; Ku Klux Klan moved its headquarters from Georgia to Indianapolis, the heart of the so-called North; and unemployment among Negroes was higher than ever before.

Today, we are experiencing the familiar syndrome again. The Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1965 and the Supreme Court decisions all led people seriously to believe that progress was forthcoming, as they believed the day Martin Luther King said, "I have a dream." What made the March on Washington in 1963 great was the fact that it was the culmination of a period of great hope and anticipation.

But what has happened since? The ghettos are fuller than they have ever been, with 500,000 people moving into them each year and only some 40,000 moving out.

THERE ARE MORE Negro youngsters in segregated schoolrooms than there were in 1954—not all due to segregation or discrimination, perhaps, but a fact. The number of youngsters who have fallen back in their reading, writing, and arithmetic since 1954 has increased, not decreased, and unemployment for Negro young women is up to 35, 40 and 50 percent in the ghettos.

I maintain that, in all three periods, the turn to separation has been a frustration reaction to objective political, social and economic circumstances. I believe that it is fully justified, for it would be the most egregious wishful thinking to suppose that people can be subjected to deep frustration and yet not act in a frustrated manner.

But however justified and inevitable the frustration, it is totally unrealistic to divert the attention of young Negroes at this time either to the idea of a separate state in the United States, or to going back to Africa, or to setting up a black capitalism (as Mr. Nixon and CORE are now advocating), or to talk about any other possibility of economic separation, when those Negroes who are well off are the 2 million Negroes who are integrated into the trade union movement.

This is not to belittle in any way the desirability of fostering a sense of ethnic unity or racial pride among Negroes or relationships to other black people around the world. This is all to the good, but the ability to do this in a healthy rather than a frustrated way will depend upon the economic viability of the Negro community, the degree to which it can participate in the democratic process here rather than separate from it, and the degree to which it accepts methods of struggle that are productive.

The Urban Crisis:

Labor Financing Helps Drive To Combat Housing Shortage

THE AFL-CIO is seeking to channel union pension and welfare fund investments into low-cost housing as a first step in its coordinated drive to "confront the urban crisis," John Evans, director of the newly-established AFL-CIO Dept. of Urban Affairs, reported.

Evans conceded that "ambitious" goals have been set, but noted that study of the funds confirms their potential to make a substantial impact on the need for decent low-cost housing in inner-city areas. The federation's drive stems from its long concern for urban problems and its determination to "directly focus" on steps to ease them, he said on Labor News Conference.

Evans, formerly a special assistant to the Secretary of Housing & Urban Development, declined to map out long-range plans in all areas of the complex problem.

"It's quite a temptation when you undertake the organization of something like this to want to write a white paper that addresses itself to all the problems on the urban horizon" and programs to solve them, he said. "We are proceeding in another direction," he emphasized, concentrating first on job opportunities and manpower, and the financing of low-cost housing.

DESPITE A WIDE RANGE of public and private efforts directed at urban problems, he pointed out that the AFL-CIO's program is not an unnecessary duplication.

Evans said the pooled resources of the mortgage investment trust fund will finance housing and other projects guaranteed by the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration. This, he said, will offer "union members not only the opportunity to engage in socially-worthwhile programs," but a safe investment that produces a reasonable return, as well.

By Press Associates, Inc.

NOW THAT ALASKA's former governor, Walter J. Hickel, has been confirmed by the Senate as Secretary of the Interior one fact emerges—the American people and their representatives have shown an encouraging concern about the world they live in.

Conservationists showed strong feelings about a man who had spoken lightly, if unguardingly, about national resources. Others were equally concerned about his off-hand attitude toward such problems as water and air pollution. Whether the new Secretary of the Interior will use his immense powers over the public domain wisely remains to be seen—the fact remains that the eyes of the country will be upon him.

The United States no longer can afford the luxury of a frontier mentality that sees its resources as a means of private enrichment without regard for future generations. There is real alarm, not merely that we are ruthlessly destroying irreplaceable natural wonders such as the giant redwoods but that we are actually endangering human life on the earth itself by thoughtless exploitation.

Our earth, of course, is vast as human eyes judge it, but the portion of it upon which human existence is dependent is frighteningly small. The current issue of "Population Bulletin" published by the Population Reference Bureau, sums up what scientists know only too well:

- That the biosphere—the real world in which we live—is a mere "thin slice of life."
- That the air, water and soil upon which we depend measure less than eight miles in depth and that most forms of life as we know them are dependent on the top half mile of the seas and the bottom two miles of the atmosphere.

Dr. LaMont C. Cole, Division of Biological Sciences at Cornell University, is deeply concerned with air pollution and the ravages of other types of land despoliation. Writing in "Population Bulletin" he is deeply disturbed that we may actually run out of the very oxygen that we breathe and need to sustain life itself.

Citing the relationship between the atmospheric elements, bacteria, plants and animals, Dr. Cole expresses deep concern over the pollutants that we are pouring out—synthetic pesticides, plastics, detergents, "weed" killers poisonous to plant life, the lead in ethyl gasoline, the sulphurs from fossil fuels, the radiation that increasingly fills the atmosphere. The list is endless—no less than 3,000 foreign chemicals have been identified in the air that surrounds us.

The United States, during the Johnson Administration, began to take heed of the dangers of air and water pollution. We now have legislation establishing a National Air Pollution Control Administration and in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare have placed power to control much water pollution in the Interior Dept., which Hickel now directs.

So far as water pollution is concerned, the picture is not too bright. The Dept. of the Interior, for example, reported on Jan. 17 that "an updated study on the cost of clean water indicates that the nation will fall behind in its efforts to provide and maintain adequate municipal waste treatment facilities unless the rate of capital investments is substantially increased."

One of the arguments that industrialists use—Hickel himself used it in talking with the press—is that mankind cannot permit natural resources to be kept in a "deep freeze" and that industry must not be scared away by the heavy cost of pollution abatement. This, of course, is true, but it is equally true that mankind cannot squander its resources at the peril of its own existence.

The new Secretary of the Interior, with his Alaskan background, undoubtedly has been accustomed to judging conservation matters in terms of Alaska's vast expanse. The view for the rest of the country—which already has squandered unmercifully its resources—is not the same. The American people have begun to understand the implications of what is happening to their environment. They will want Hickel to understand them, too.

JOB OPPORTUNITIES, manpower and financing low-cost housing are first steps in the AFL-CIO's coordinated drive to "confront the urban crisis," Dir. John Evans, center, of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Urban Affairs, said on Labor News Conference. Questioning him were Stanley Levey, left, of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers and George Riveire of the Bureau of National Affairs. The public affairs interview is broadcast Tuesdays on Mutual Radio.

How to Buy:

Spurting Credit Rates Threaten To Crimp Family Income More

By Sidney Margolius

BETTER WATCH your borrowing and installment buying this winter if you want to avoid paying out a bigger slice of family income on finance charges. Lenders again have raised rates on personal and car loans as the result of the tight money, high interest situation that is squeezing working families in many ways this year.

This is the second time in only eight months that leading banks have raised finance rates. The rates are now the highest since the end of World War II. In that period the cost of buying a car or other goods on time has increased about 50 percent.

Credit unions and commercial banks are still the lowest cost lenders. Fred Gardner, installment department manager of the American Bankers Association, estimates that bank car loans nationally now are about $6 per $100, and personal loans, closer to $7. (These are the equivalent of true annual interest rates of close to 12 to 14 percent.)

For a used car loan, you generally have to pay more than for a new car. On very late models, banks may charge close to the new car rate of $6. But for older used cars, the rate is usually close to the personal loan rate of $7, Gardner reports.

Credit unions are limited to 1 percent a month (12 percent a year). This means their maximum dollar charge is $6.50 per $100 on any kind of loan. A number of credit unions charge less, especially for new car loans, and most also include life insurance to cover the loan at no extra cost.

Note that rates on used cars financed through dealers are especially higher than credit union or bank rates. Used car dealers may charge you $10 to as much as $17 per $100 for financing a used car, depending on state law and the age of the car. These are the equivalent of true annual interest rates of 20 to 34 percent.

The new high finance charges can increase the cost of installment purchases tremendously if you are not careful. Even on one of the relatively lower-cost new car loans, a charge of $7 a year per $100 on a $2,500 balance to be repaid in 36 months costs you a total of $525 just in finance charges. A rate of $12 a year per $100 to finance a used car balance of $1,500 over 24 months, means you pay $360 extra.

It is especially unwise to buy on installment terms from the large mail order houses which have pre-calculated payment tables in their catalogs. While their cash prices often are reasonable, their installment plans are expensive because the payment tables are arranged for long terms like 36 months on a $500 installment purchase. That means your finance charge will be about $150.

If you borrow the money from a credit union or bank and pay for the purchase with cash in hand, you can cut your finance costs two ways—with a lower rate, and shorter repayment period tailored to your actual needs.

For example, if you borrow the $500 at a rate of $6.50 per $100 on an 18-month loan, you will pay only $48.75 in finance charges. Even on a 24-month loan you would pay only $65 for the credit fee instead of $150.

NOR WILL YOUR monthly payments really be more burdensome. On the lower-rate 24-month loan, from a credit union or bank, you would have to pay $23.50 a month as against about $18 a month for the higher-rate 36-month plan.

It is interesting to note that the Amalgamated Bank of New York, sponsored by the Clothing Workers, not only has the lowest bank rate in the nation but tells this reporter that it is going to hold the line as long as it can despite the consecutive increases by other lenders. This bank charges only $4.75 per $100 for personal and car loans, including life insurance.

Copyright 1969 by Sidney Margolius

Soup to Nonsense:

Male Apparel Peril—The Game Husbands Play at Coat Racks

By Jane Goodsell

IF I GET my way—and I won't—my husband's next overcoat will be bright red with gold buttons. Gaudy? Sure. But at least he'd know his own coat when he sees it.

The coat he's wearing now is gabardine in that dull greenish-brownish-blackish shade. You know. Overcoat color. I'd say it's just a bit more on the greenish side than his last overcoat, which had raglan sleeves and fit him better. As I remember it, that coat was nicer quality, too. It was beautifully tailored with stitching around the collar and extra buttons sewed into the lining. I'll bet that coat cost a pretty penny although I can't say for sure. Jim got it the way he gets most of his coats—in a trade. That time he got the best of the bargain.

I was sure that whoever picked up his overcoat (a sleazy unlined one he'd grabbed off the rack at a Chinese restaurant a few months earlier) would telephone the next day to make arrangements to swap back. But, to my great relief, no one ever called. It was up to him, whoever he was, to make the first move. We couldn't, because the coat Jim brought home bore no identification except a label from a men's store in Tucson, Ariz. But Jim's coat (the old sleazy one, that is) had a name tape with his address and telephone number sewn onto the neckband.

I remember the evening we went to a testimonial dinner and, having met an old friend we hadn't seen for years, we were among the last to leave. Jim grabbed the only coat hanging on the rack, threw it over his arm and we went home. The next morning, when he was ready to leave for the office, he grabbed his coat and rushed out the door. Two minutes later he was back in the kitchen.

"EITHER I'VE SHRUNK or my overcoat has grown," he announced. With the coat flapping around his ankles and the sleeves dangling to his knees, he looked touchingly like Jackie Coogan in "The Kid." We stood there, blinking at each other. But in a matter of seconds, the telephone rang. A voice identified itself as Jerome Quincy and asked anxiously, "Say, did your husband happen to pick up the wrong overcoat at the banquet last night?"

Hat mixups almost never turn out so happily. A pity, because men are even more prone to pick up hats that don't belong to them. It's easy to see why. If a man can't remember (which he can't) whether or not he was wearing a hat when he came, he'll assume that any grey fedora he sees lying around must be his.

Say what you will about women's fashions. True, they are foolish and flighty, whimsical, giddy, capricious, often unwearable and sometimes just plain unbelievable. But at least, women don't get their wardrobes all mixed up, and absentmindedly wander off dressed in each other's clothes.

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

To Spend or Not:

Consumer Attitudes Hinge on Prices, War

PROSPECTS FOR CONSUMER spending remain good, and would improve if inflation slows and progress is made toward peace in Viet Nam, the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center reports.

The latest SRC quarterly survey of consumer attitudes and inclinations to buy, based on a national cross-section of more than 1,400 families interviewed between Nov. 11 and Dec. 13, reveals little change in consumer sentiment during the final quarter of 1968.

Expectations about business trends, both short-run and long-run, are somewhat improved, they report. Some people expect the new administration to take appropriate steps so that good times will continue. Unusually few people believe that a recession is likely in the near future.

On the other hand expectations about personal finances deteriorated during the last three months. In the fourth quarter, fewer families than earlier in 1968 expected to be better off a year hence. Less than two-thirds of those with income increases said that they were better off than a year earlier.

"Awareness of inflation represents the major cause for the adverse changes in attitudes," the report states. "Many people refer at present to price increases in explaining why they do not expect to be better off."

THE LATEST SURVEY confirms findings of three months earlier that only a small percentage of families (approximately one in 10) finds that the tax surcharge makes a considerable difference in either their spending or their saving. About 50 percent of respondents say that the surcharge makes practically no difference in how much they spend and how much they save. Income increases often compensate for the larger tax bite as well as for higher prices.

The SRC emphasizes that expenditures on durable goods, and discretionary expenditures in general, are a function both of ability to buy and willingness to buy. The Index of Consumer Sentiment indicates that willingness to buy has changed little in six months, and is lower than in some recent years. Ability to buy, however, has increased during the last few years, primarily because of income gains.

"What has not been mentioned in this evaluation of near-term prospects is the finding that late in 1968 relatively many people expressed uncertainty about forthcoming trends," the report continues. "The prolonged absence of substantial changes in the Index of Consumer Sentiment that prevailed in 1968 is quite unusual in the 20 years of experience with the measurement of consumer attitudes. Absence of change may give way to either an improvement or a deterioration depending, as indicated by survey data on respondents' expressed reasons for their attitudes, primarily on two considerations—namely, what happens to prices and what happens in Viet Nam.

"It appears that more pronounced inflation during the next few months would have an adverse effect and lesser inflation a favorable effect on willingness to spend. Furthermore, improved prospects for peace in Viet Nam would create more optimistic attitudes and enhance inclinations to buy durable goods."

Determined Drive Urged:

Soaring Costs Swell Support For National Health Plan

A national health insurance program is essential if all Americans are to have "the wonders of modern medicine" at a price they can afford, writes AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman in the Federationist, the AFL-CIO magazine.

Interest in the program, Seidman points out, has mounted rapidly in recent years as people find it "increasingly difficult to pay their health bills" and secure adequate health care.

The time has come, he declared, for labor and other progressive groups to unite in a determined drive in Congress to secure passage of a "medically advanced and economically sound" national health insurance law.

The article traces the history of proposals for NHI and explains the AFL-CIO's position as to what it should do and how it should be constructed and financed.

A universal, compulsory system of medical care insurance was first advocated in the United States prior to World War I, Seidman recalls, and in the years since interest has waxed and waned but has never died.

Now, he adds, the combination of spiraling medical costs, the passage of Medicare and proposals for extending that program have convinced a growing number of people that the nation needs universal health insurance.

Such a program, the article states, should cover not only workers and their families but also the unemployed, students and those on public assistance.

Its benefits should provide for hospital costs; physicians' services in the office, home and hospital; nursing care; home health services; psychiatric services; eye examinations and prescription drugs.

By national health insurance, the AFL-CIO is not advocating a government-operated health system such as that of Great Britain, Seidman stresses, adding:

"Rather, it would be a financial mechanism to pay for the costs of medical care for all people much like the present Medicare program for the elderly. It would not interfere with the clinical practice of medicine."

Patients would have both a free choice of physicians and health delivery systems. The government would not "freeze-in" either the fee-for-service system or a capitation system, that is, periodic payments based on an individual or family covered by health care.

But no one should get the idea that the AFL-CIO favors "a completely laissez faire system under national health insurance," Seidman says. "We would not tolerate sky's-the-limit doctor fees and we would insist on controls and incentives for moderating hospital charges."

Tripartite Financing

Because NHI would cover those on public assistance and the unemployed, the article calls for a program financed on a tripartite basis under social security with the government, employer and employe each paying one-third of the cost.

Seidman estimates that the program the AFL-CIO envisions could provide more comprehensive and higher quality health services to Americans "for no more and perhaps less than we are now spending for personal health services."

He notes that total U.S. health expenditures are now running at more than $50 billion annually and amount to 6.3 percent of the gross national product, the nation's total output of goods and services.

By comparison, he points out, all other nations spend less in this area both in total dollars and as a proportion of the total economy—yet most of them have national health programs covering substantially all of their citizens.

Labor does not expect the support of organized medicine in a campaign for national health insurance, Seidman concedes. However, he observes, "The American Medical Association was opposed to Medicare and it is now law."

Seidman cites a Harris poll taken in 1967 showing that union members "are not the only ones who want" NHI. The poll found that a majority of the public wants "Medicare for all," which is what the program would provide. Fifty-one percent answered "yes," 39 percent "no" and 10 percent were "undecided."

"It is time to bring the wonders of modern medicine to all the American people. It is time for national health insurance," Seidman concludes.

IT'S REUNION time, with the emphasis on union, for Rep. William L. Clay (D-Mo.), left, and Sec.-Treas. Joseph L. Ames of the State, County & Municipal Employes. The newly-elected congressman, who will be a member of the House Labor Committee, once worked as an organizer for SCME Local 410 in St. Louis. Ames was the business agent of the local who hired him. Later Clay became apprenticeship training director of the St. Louis Steamfitters local.

High Court Backs NLRB In Fringe Benefit Issue

The Supreme Court, reversing the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at San Francisco, ruled that the National Labor Relations Board has the power to enforce a contract against an employer who refused to abide by its terms, including fringe benefits.

The court, with Justice William O. Douglas dissenting, upheld a 1965 labor board order against Joseph T. Strong, doing business as Strong Roofing & Insulating Co. The board directed Strong to sign a contract with Roofers Local 36, Los Angeles, stop refusing to bargain with the union, and pay his share of the pension and welfare funds agreed upon by the union and the Roofing Contractors Association of Southern California.

Justice Byron R. White, who wrote the majority opinion, said Strong sought to withdraw from the employers' association a few days after it completed negotiating a four-year agreement with Local 36 in 1963, and "refused repeated demands from the union that he sign the contract."

In 1965 the NLRB ordered Strong to abide by the contract. The 9th Circuit appeals court enforced the NLRB order except for the payment of fringe benefits, which it said was "beyond the powers of the board." The NLRB appealed.

"The board is not trespassing on forbidden territory," the high court ruled, "when it inquires whether negotiations have produced a bargain which the employer has refused to sign and honor, particularly when the employer has refused to recognize the very existence of the contract providing for the arbitration on which he now insists."

To this extent, the court said, the "contract is the board's affair, and an effective remedy for refusal to sign is its proper business." It added: "Arbitrators and courts are still the principal sources of contract interpretation" but the board may prohibit conduct which is an unfair labor practice "even though it is also a breach of contract remediable" by arbitration and in the courts.

Justice Hugo Black concurred in the reversal but would direct that the case be remanded to the NLRB for a decision on arbitration. Justice Black wrote in his dissent that "arbitration is not a process which the board is either equipped or qualified to follow."

'Campus' Job Training Enlists School Dropouts

Los Angeles—Poverty-stricken youths from the Watts area are going to receive education and job-training at their own residential "college" under a program operated by a union-backed community group.

But unlike institutions of higher learning which require high school degrees and academic achievements, the Saugus, Calif. Rehabilitation Center will recruit high school dropouts from one of the nation's worst ghettos.

The program, supported by a $2 million Labor Dept. grant, is the latest in a series of projects being carried out by a Watts committee, organized by area trade unionists in 1965. The committee has conducted job counseling, voter registration and remedial education classes for the poor.

The latest program, announced by the Labor Dept. and the committee, will provide 40 weeks of remedial education and occupational training for about 500 youths 16 years old and up over the next year.

They will live and train at the center, 30 miles north of here, five days a week and will be taken home on weekends. The 580-acre site is a former rehabilitation center for alcoholics, leased by the city of Los Angeles for $1 a year.

An integral part of the training program at Saugus will be conducted by instructors furnished by the Operating Engineers and the Marine Cooks & Stewards Union. They will train youths in their crafts.

The Rockefeller and Ford Foundations will provide advisers, training materials and equipment. Each has made initial grants of $25,000 for the program.

The Urban League and the U.S. Employment Service will help the committee recruit the youths, both young men and young women. About three-quarters of the group will be men.

The first six months will be devoted to improving the skills of trainees in basic arithmetic, reading and writing. They will also explore career possibilities and work in a number of jobs.

In the second half of the year the trainees will be geared toward specialized training in a variety of jobs— maintenance of plant equipment, construction, cooking, animal husbandry, nurses' aides, office and laboratory work.

Sigmund Arywitz, executive secretary of the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO, praised the committee as a "constructive force" that has developed "real roots in the ghetto and gained the confidence of its people."

The county federation and a number of unions are making regular monthly cash contributions to the committee to help it with its varied activities, he pointed out.

'He Comes With the Neighborhood'

Denver to Host Union Label Product Show

Denver—The 1969 Union-Industries Show, the annual exhibition of union-made products and services, will open here May 16 for a six-day stay in this city's new exhibition hall.

The hall, now under construction, will be dedicated by city officials during the show at the multi-million dollar Denver Convention Center.

More exhibits than ever and the largest attendance ever are expected by show director Joseph Lewis on the basis of reservations to date and past performance in a series stretching back to 1938. Lewis is secretary-treasurer of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept. of the AFL-CIO.

Show preparations enter their final stage with the arrival here next month of department staff members in charge of show arrangements.

Eligible to reserve exhibit space are local, national and international unions and the fair employers they recommend.

More than $10 million in union-labeled products will be on display at approximately 300 show exhibits. Souvenirs and gifts valued at some $100,000 will be given away during the show's stay here, according to department plans.

Handicapped Unit Renames Haggerty

C. J. Haggerty, president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., has been reappointed to the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped for another three-year term.

The President's Committee is composed of representatives of labor, industry, the professions and national civic, veterans and handicapped organizations. Founded in 1947, it has fostered a more enlightened attitude toward the employment of the handicapped, who number one in every 10 persons in the United States.

AIRLINE HOSTESSES and pursers of Trans World Airlines picket ticket offices at Park Ave. and 42nd St., New York City, to protest arbitrary layoffs of TWA cabin personnel Jan. 15. The employes, members of Transport Workers Local 550, also picketed six other ticket offices coast-to-coast to call public attention to the firings—the second instance in two years on domestic and overseas flights, the union said.

Strike Benefits Declared Taxable Unless Union Applies 'Need' Test

The Supreme Court let stand a lower court ruling that members of the Air Line Pilots must pay income taxes on certain strike benefits received during a walkout on Southern Airways.

Previously, the high court had held that strike benefits paid from strike funds, or by special assessments against union members not on strike aren't taxable if they are based on strikers' needs for food and housing.

In the ALPA case, involving a strike that lasted from 1960 to 1962, the Internal Revenue Service ruled that the benefits received were taxable because the union didn't require the strikers to demonstrate economic need or distress.

Further, IRS held that some of the Southern pilots took other temporary jobs and their benefits weren't reduced accordingly.

The U.S. Tax Court and the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati upheld the IRS, and the Supreme Court refused to review the appeals court decision.

In an earlier case, the Supreme Court left standing a lower court finding that there is no bar in the Railway Labor Act to a member suing his union and employer for an alleged unjust discharge.

The case involved Vincent P. Brady who brought suit against the Machinists and Trans World Airlines, Inc. after he was fired from his job in Philadelphia for failing to pay the full amount of his dues under an IAM union security contract.

Brady took a grievance over his firing to an IAM-TWA adjustment board, provided for under the Act. It ruled against him, so a part of the case centered on whether he then had the right to go to court.

By refusing to review the case, the Supreme Court let stand rulings of the U.S. District Court for Delaware and the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia that adjustment boards only have jurisdiction over labor-management grievances, and this wasn't that kind of grievance.

Refusal to review also left in force the lower courts' rulings that Brady was fired illegally and must be reinstated with back pay. This part of the case hinged on Brady's contention that he hadn't been fully notified of a meeting to approve a dues increase.

In a third case, the Supreme Court refused to review lower court decisions in a suit brought by the Firemen & Enginemen against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad to enjoin an agreement that management had with the Locomotive Engineers to provide for training locomotive engineers.

The BLF&E, now part of the United Transportation Union, charged that the plan subverted the L&N's long-standing practice of promoting firemen, its members, to engineers. However, a U.S. District Court of Kentucky and the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in Louisville both ruled that the issue was outside their authority.

In a fourth case, the Supreme Court affirmed a lower court decision holding as unconstitutional an Alaska law requiring national and international unions with at least 100 members in the state to charter Alaska locals.

The Operating Engineers, which has a local in Seattle representing construction workers in Alaska, refused to charter a local in the state under the law and went into federal court to enjoin state enforcement of the statute.

The U.S. District Court for Alaska found in favor of the union, holding that the state law was unconstitutional in that it invaded the jurisdiction of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Consumer Conference Focuses on New Goals

(Continued from Page 1)

In a keynote address opening the conference, Sen. Philip A. Hart charged that high prices are more often the result of lack of price competition in major industry than inflation caused by traditional "supply and demand" factors.

Hart, who is chairman of the Senate Antitrust & Monopoly subcommittee, warned against the assumption that passage of a few needed laws has solved longstanding consumer complaints.

"Those laws then are turned over to regulatory agencies for the day-by-day enforcement," he stressed. "It is the action of the agencies, not Congress, which really determines whether they will fulfill expectations."

It is "unrealistic," Hart asserted, to depend on regulatory agencies to be "watchdogs for the consumer . . . both advocate and judge."

He urged establishment of an independent consumer council—a federally chartered corporation, which would pass on product information based on now-secret government tests, represent consumer interests before regulatory agencies and government bureaus, and serve as an "ombudsman" in handling consumer complaints. Arbitration of consumer grievances through the ombudsman approach, Hart said, could be achieved at the local as well as the federal level through community consumer councils.

Voices Not Heard

In recent years, Hart said, consumers "have found their voice." But, he stressed, "they still need an efficient way to make it heard."

Muskie, who is chairman of the Senate's Air & Water Pollution subcommittee, also warned against reliance on regulatory agencies to protect the consumer.

"Sometimes," he noted, "economic interests and government agency interests become so intertwined that the public cannot distinguish between the two."

It's a race, Muskie suggested, between the efforts to reclaim despoiled landscapes, purify polluted water and clean the air and the continuing activities which add to these corruptions.

The conference, attended by delegates from co-ops, unions, local and national consumer groups, was scheduled to consider a broad range of consumer problems in specialized workshops as well as general sessions.

A unique portion of the program was to bring together members of the principal regulatory agencies of government for questioning by a panel of newsmen who have specialized in consumer issues.

In 91st Congress:

Major Committees Of House, Senate

Listed below are the major congressional committees of the 91st Congress. The first name listed is that of the chairman, always a Democrat since Democrats have a majority in both the House and Senate. The second name is that of the senior-ranking Republican member. Asterisks (*) are after the names of those who did not hold the same position in the last Congress.

Also listed are two joint committees, where the chairmanship and vice chairmanship rotate every two years between the House and the Senate.

HOUSE COMMITTEES

Agriculture—W. R. Poage (D-Tex.), Page Belcher (R-Okla.)

Appropriations—George H. Mahon (D-Tex.), Frank T. Bow (R-Ohio)

Armed Services—L. Mendel Rivers (D-S.C.), William H. Bates (R-Mass.)

Banking & Currency—Wright Patman (D-Tex.), William B. Widnall (R-N.J.)

District of Columbia—John L. McMillan (D-S.C.), Ancher Nelsen (R-Minn.)

Education & Labor—Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.), William H. Ayres (R-Ohio)

Foreign Affairs—Thomas E. Morgan (D-Pa.), E. Ross Adair (R-Ind.)*

Government Operations—William L. Dawson (D-Ill.), Florence P. Dwyer (R-N.J.)

House Administration—Samuel N. Friedel (D-Md.)*, Glenard P. Lipscomb (R-Calif.)

Interior & Insular Affairs—Wayne N. Aspinall (D-Colo.), John P. Saylor (R-Pa.)

Interstate & Foreign Commerce—Harley O. Staggers (D-W. Va.), William L. Springer (R-Ill.)

Judiciary—Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.), William M. McCulloch (R-Ohio)

Merchant Marine & Fisheries—Edward A. Garmatz (D-Md.), William S. Mailliard (R-Calif.)

Post Office & Civil Service—Thaddeus J. Dulski (D-N.Y.), Robert J. Corbett (R-Pa.)

Public Works—George H. Fallon (D-Md.), William C. Cramer (R-Fla.)

Rules—William M. Colmer (D-Miss.), H. Allen Smith (R-Calif.)

Science & Astronautics—George P. Miller (D-Calif.), James G. Fulton (R-Pa.)

Un-American Activities—Richard H. Ichord (D-Mo.)*, John M. Ashbrook (R-Ohio)

Veterans' Affairs—Olin E. Teague (D-Tex.), E. Ross Adair (R-Ind.)

Ways & Means—Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), John W. Byrnes (R-Wis).

SENATE COMMITTEES

Aeronautical & Space Sciences—Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.), Margaret Chase Smith (R-Me.)

Agriculture & Forestry—Allen J. Ellender (D-La.), George D. Aiken (R-Vt.)

Appropriations—Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.)*, Milton R. Young (R-N.D.)

Armed Services—John Stennis (D-Miss.)*, Margaret Chase Smith (R-Me.)

Banking & Currency—John J. Sparkman (D-Ala.), Wallace F. Bennett (R-Utah)

Commerce—Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.), Norris Cotton (R-N.H.)

District of Columbia—Joseph Tydings (D-Md.)*, Winston L. Prouty (R-Vt.)

Finance—Russell B. Long (D-La.), John J. Williams (R-Del.)

Foreign Relations—J. W. Fulbright (D-Ark.), George D. Aiken (R-Vt.)*

Government Operations—John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), Karl E. Mundt (R-S.D.)

Interior & Insular Affairs — Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.), Gordon Allott (R-Colo.)*

Judiciary—James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), Everett McKinley Dirksen (R-Ill.)

Labor & Public Welfare — Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.)*, Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.)

Post Office & Civil Service—Gale W. McGee (D-Wyo.), Hiram L. Fong (R-Hawaii)

Public Works—Jennings Randolph (D-W. Va.), John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.)

JOINT COMMITTEES

Joint Committee on Atomic Energy — Rep. Chet Holifield (D-Calif.), chairman; Sen. John O. Pastore (D-R.I.), vice chairman.

Joint Economic Committee—Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.), chairman; Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.), vice chairman.

Committee Enlarged:

Liberals Hold Reins Of House Labor Unit

The House Education & Labor Committee, like its Senate counterpart, will have a strong liberal majority in the 91st Congress.

The committee was slightly enlarged by changing the ratio of 19 Democrats and 14 Republicans in the 90th Congress to 20 Democrats and 15 Republicans.

Democrats had four vacancies to fill and assigned Negro congressmen to three of the spots. Adam C. Powell of New York, the former chairman of the committee, returned from exile to take the low-seniority spot at the bottom.

Louis Stokes, brother of the mayor of Cleveland, won a committee assignment as did William Clay of St. Louis. Clay knows labor problems first hand as apprenticeship training director for a local of the Plumbers & Pipefitters and earlier as an organizer for the St. Louis local of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

Also moving onto the committee is Joseph M. Gaydos, from a Pittsburgh area district with a heavy concentration of Steelworkers.

Incumbent Democrats who moved off the committee are Sam M. Gibbons, a Florida liberal who won a coveted seat on the Ways & Means Committee, and House Majority Leader Carl Albert of Oklahoma.

Republicans filled three vacancies with two conservatives and a moderate.

The moderate is Orval E. Hansen of Idaho, whose record in the state legislature includes a vote against a so-called "right-to-work" law.

More conservative is Earl B. Ruth of Salisbury, N.C., who was dean of students at Catawba College and won an upset victory in a new district last year after having switched his registration from Democratic to Republican.

Most conservative of the GOP newcomers is Earl F. Landgrebe, who won the seat of retired Charles A. Halleck, longtime GOP stalwart. As a state senator, Landgrebe voted against virtually all social legislation and he said during the campaign that he opposed government spending programs because most government planners "are bums who couldn't make a living as doctors or truck drivers."

Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) remains as chairman of the committee, with Edith Green (D-Ore.) and Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.) next on the seniority list.

Committee appointments were later than usual this year because the initial Democratic caucus insisted on enforcing a neglected rule—that appointments made by the Democratic members of the Ways & Means Committee, who choose members of other committees, must be acted on by the full Democratic caucus.

This rule resulted in an unprecedented and successful revolt by Mrs. Shirley Chisholm, who represents a black ghetto district of Brooklyn, N.Y.

She had been assigned to the Agriculture Committee. And she told the caucus that she didn't think she could do any good on the Agriculture Committee.

The somewhat startled caucus passed her amendment to delete her name from the Agriculture Committee list and Ways & Means Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) promised to try to find a spot for her on another committee.

There were changes but not significant shifts of liberal-conservative strength on other committees.

The one spot on the powerful Appropriations Committee went to a Colorado liberal serving his third term, Frank E. Evans.

Sam H. Scott, Stone Workers Leader, Dies

Winston-Salem, N.C.—Sam H. Scott, president of the Stone Workers from 1944 to 1968, died here at 67 after a brief illness from heart disease. At his death he was district director of his union and a vice president of the North Carolina AFL-CIO.

Scott stepped down as Stone Workers' president last Sept. 1 but remained active in his other posts. He served a union district including North and South Carolina, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi and Tennessee. Formerly he was president of a Tobacco Workers' local union and a staff representative of that international.

Pres. Robert W. Kurtz and Sec.-Treas. John C. Lawson headed a Stone Workers' delegation at services Jan. 30 in Parkway United Church of Christ here.

Wallace Backer Stripped Of Seniority in Congress

House Democrats voted 101-73 to penalize a Louisiana congressman who supported the third party candidacy of George Wallace by stripping him of his committee seniority.

The action was taken against Rep. John R. Rarick (D-La.), an extreme segregationist who seldom voted with his party during his previous term in the House. It was the same punishment handed out four years ago to two southern Democrats who had endorsed Republican Barry Goldwater in the 1964 presidential election.

An earlier Democratic caucus, held the day Congress convened, had voted 87-85 to table the motion to drop Rarick to the bottom of the seniority list on the Agriculture Committee.

The liberal Democratic Study Group, which had proposed the action against Rarick, redoubled its efforts and succeeded in turning the vote around at the next party caucus, on Jan. 29. The AFL-CIO strongly supported the move.

$50.6 Billion Spent On Health Care in '67

Public and private spending in the United States for health reached $50.6 billion in 1967—an increase of more than $5.6 billion or 12 percent above the previous year, the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. reported.

The total outlay covers all types of health services, supplies, health research and medical facilities construction.

Most of the rise in total expenditures was attributed to an increase in federal government health spending.

An article in the January issue of the Social Security Bulletin, "National Health Expenditures, 1950-1967," reported that the federal expenditure reached $11.8 billion in 1967, up about $4.8 billion over the previous year.

Spending for health purposes in the private sector and by state and local governments totaled $32.8 billion and $6 billion, respectively in 1967, up more than $400 million in each case.

The first full-year coverage of health care benefits for the aged under Medicare and expansion of the Medicaid program of aid to the "medically indigent" were "largely responsible for the growth of public expenditures," the article said.

Operations of the two programs, it added, led to the following developments:

- Health spending per person—$251 in 1967—was more than 11 percent greater than in the previous year.
- Intensified public spending for health brought the private share of the total outlay down from 75 percent in 1965 to 65 percent in 1967.
- The consumer paid out less for care in non-government hospitals in 1967 than he did in 1966, with his share of these expenditures dropping from 79 to 62 percent.
- Medicare took over a large part of the personal health care expenditures previously financed out of the aged person's pocketbook.

$12.6 Billion Lost in Wages To Sick Time

Total value of time lost by workers through sickness was $12.6 billion in 1967, with about 29 percent of it replaced by sick leave and insurance plans, the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. reported.

The loss in income was about $600 million more than reported in 1966, according to an article in the January issue of the Social Security Bulletin.

But this 3 percent increase in lost income, the article said, was less than the percentage increase in other recent years, due mainly to a "particularly low incidence of influenza in the winter of 1966-67."

Small Variance

The article, "Income-Loss Protection Against Illness, 1948-67," showed that the 29 percent of lost income replaced in 1967 varied little from the percentage replaced in most of the other years.

About two of every three workers in government and private employment had some type of formal protection against loss of income due to illness in 1967.

However, the article noted that this ratio was increased by the fact that four states—California, New Jersey, New York and Rhode Island—have compulsory temporary disability laws that require some form of protection against lost income due to sickness.

Under voluntary programs in the other 46 states, only a little more than half of the workers were protected against lost income.

Schools Urged to Train Youth for Building Jobs

Palm Beach, Fla.—The construction industry was called upon by Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. to join with labor in "advertising" to youth the advantages of entering construction careers.

He told a convention of the Building Industry Employers of New York State that building trades unions are having difficulties in many areas in finding youths interested in apprenticeships.

"Much of the blame for this lies in our laps," Haggerty said. "We just haven't advertised the advantages of a career in construction. We haven't gone into the junior and senior high schools to talk to these young men."

"Instead of putting pressure on the school boards to revitalize craft training in these schools," he pointed out, "we've ignored them and allowed them to become centers for teaching skills outmoded more than 20 or 30 years ago."

To solve the problem, Haggerty proposed that employers and building trades unions in various cities set up joint committees to acquaint guidance counselors, teachers and students "with opportunities offered by our industry."

The committees would explain the satisfaction and economic advantages of becoming building trades' craftsmen, as well as opportunities to move up to higher positions as superintendents and contractors.

Haggerty pointed out that the program should accompany efforts to establish and up-date courses in industrial arts beginning at the junior high school level.

He described one such course, which the building trades unions have aided, now in its third year of development at Ohio State University. Unions have furnished the program with instructional material, including films.

The course, designed to expose youths to all segments of the construction industry including its crafts, is now being tested in school systems in Long Beach, Calif., Chicago, Austin, Tex., Cincinnati, Trenton, N.J., and Miami, Fla.

Once the "bugs are removed and the course is perfected," Haggerty said, it will become an excellent replacement to "the outmoded industrial arts courses where boys sand book ends for a semester and are told they know carpentry."

He urged members of the New York employers group to alert school boards in their communities to the new course and encourage them to use it in their schools.

Dystrophy Board Names Unionists

New York—Pres. William H. McClennan of the Fire Fighters and Thomas R. Donahue, executive secretary of the Service Employes, were elected to the board of the Muscular Dystrophy Associations of America at its meeting here.

McClennan succeeds William D. Buck, retired president of the Fire Fighters, on the board. Donahue, former assistant secretary of labor, moves up from a vice presidency in MDAA.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Pres. James H. Rademacher of the Letter Carriers were among MDAA directors re-elected to new terms.

Newly elected as an MDAA vice president was Pres. James T. Housewright of the Retail Clerks, succeeding James A. Suffridge, retired Clerks president. Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians was re-elected a vice president.

ISRAEL MINISTER OF LABOR Joseph Almogi, second from left, visiting in the United States, stops by the AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington. He was introduced by Amos Eiran, left, labor attache to the Israeli embassy, to AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, second from right, and AFL-CIO Dir. of Intl. Affairs Jay Lovestone.

'Tuned' Economy Sought:

Wage-Price Guides Ruled Out by Nixon

Wage-price guidelines don't work and won't help curb inflation, Pres. Nixon said in the first news conference of his Administration.

The President said his Administration is concerned about the "escalation of prices." But he saw no point in "exhorting" unions to negotiate smaller wage increases or companies to put a ceiling on profits.

Nixon said he is "aware" that leaders of both labor and management "have to be guided by the interests of the organizations that they represent."

Instead of guidelines, the President said, his Administration will rely on "fine tuning of our fiscal and monetary affairs in order to control inflation." Fiscal policies cover both taxes and government spending; monetary affairs deal with money supply and credit.

Both Nixon and a key economic aide stressed that the Administration will seek to avoid anti-inflation measures so drastic that they would bring about an "unacceptable rise in unemployment."

The President and the chairman of his Council of Economic Advisers, Paul W. McCracken, said a "substantial" rise in joblessness would be unacceptable.

McCracken testified before the Senate Banking Committee, which later voted to recommend his confirmation. He rejected a "sledgehammer" approach to curbing inflation, declaring that "it will have to be done gradually."

McCracken said he couldn't assure Congress that prices can be stabilized without any effect on employment. But he said he thinks it can be done without a "substantial increase" in the number of jobless.

Nixon told his news conference that the Administration will have "some new approaches" that will enable it to "control inflation without an increase in unemployment."

The specific policies, he said, are being considered by the Cabinet Committee on Economic Policy—a special group the President established by Executive Order. Its initial membership includes the Vice President, the Secretaries of the Treasury, Agriculture, Commerce and Labor, the Budget Director, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers and the Counsellor to the President. The last-named post, a new position, is held by Arthur Burns, who served as head of the Council of Economic Advisers in the Eisenhower Administration.

The President said he will send Congress this year "a major legislative program" but hadn't decided yet whether to outline it at one time in a State of the Union Address or piecemeal in a series of messages.

He said he has asked his Attorney General, John N. Mitchell, to prepare "on an urgent basis" measures to deal with the serious crime problem in the nation's capital.

He reiterated his support for the world treaty intended to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons but said he has not yet decided "whether this is the proper time to ask the Senate to move forward and ratify the treaty."

On a number of other matters, the President's reply reflected the cautious approach of his Administration—study, consideration and reconsideration of major issues rather than a fast-paced program designed to take advantage of the honeymoon period of congressional goodwill usually extended to an incoming President.

SPANISH-SPEAKING members of Clothing Workers Local 169 attend a weekly night class in New York City to study the English language. The course is expected to run about seven weeks. Similar classes were conducted by the ACWA local three years ago.

Cohen Takes Post As Michigan Dean

It's Dean Wilbur J. Cohen. The former Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare got a promotion when he returned to the University of Michigan, where he had been a professor.

He was designated dean of the university's School of Education.

Filibuster Foes Lose New Bid To Ease Rules

(Continued from Page 1)

the start of a new Congress to act on its rules.

But a majority of the Senate wasn't willing to make a sharp break with precedent and accept Humphrey's reasoning. His ruling was overturned, 53-45, on an appeal.

The second cloture try was made Jan. 28 because several senators said they would support cloture once the Humphrey ruling had been disposed of. There were some switches—but not enough.

Vice Pres. Agnew was not called upon for a ruling since the vote overturning Humphrey's ruling decided the issue for this Congress. But his opportunity will probably come early in 1971—at the start of the 92nd Congress.

A hard core of Southerners and the Republican conservative wing headed by GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen provided the votes to stave off the rules change. The filibuster was the South's weapon to delay for years action on civil rights legislation; it was the weapon Dirksen used to block repeal of Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b).

Civil Rights Leaders Cite Humphrey's Role

(Continued from Page 1)

suggested. As for his own future, "I ain't done yet."

The Leadership Conference served notice that it wasn't done yet either.

Representatives of its affiliated organizations had earlier adopted a program statement reaffirming its goal of "an integrated society of equals" and its commitment to "democratic process" to bring this about.

It spelled out the actions needed from Congress and the Administration—to finance and enforce programs already on the statute books and to take new steps to provide jobs, feed the hungry, raise the minimum wage, give bargaining rights to farm workers and translate the "freedom budget" of the A. Philip Randolph Institute "into legislative terms."

Too ambitious a goal? The conference didn't think so. "We refuse to believe that the nation lacks the resources or the will to do what must be done," it declared.

The dinner for Humphrey also honored Roy Wilkins, executive director of the NAACP and chairman of the Leadership Conference throughout its existence.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller presented the award to Wilkins on behalf of the conference's affiliates. The "courageous, dedicated" efforts of Wilkins "brings us closer to our goal of full equality in a plural society," the citation said.

Clarence Mitchell, the conference's legislative chairman, made the moving presentation to Humphrey. The reason Negroes voted overwhelmingly for Humphrey in the presidential election is easy to understand, Mitchell said. It was because "he made us a part of America."

It was an evening that had almost an embarassment of eloquent speakers, a pageant complete with the District of Columbia Youth Chorale and a memorial tribute to Martin Luther King and Robert F. Kennedy.

To those who were there, it was an evening rich with sentiment and human warmth. It was an evening for reaffirmation, for rededication to great ideals.

The program was supposed to have ended with the benediction. But people were reluctant to leave. So Bayard Rustin, the program chairman, stepped back to the microphone to sing out in a rich voice the anthem of the civil rights movement, "We Shall Overcome."

"Black and white together," the audience joined him, "we shall overcome some day."

And you believed that the day would not be far off.

2-1-69

Arthur F. Burns Gets Key White House Post

Dr. Arthur F. Burns, who served as chairman of Pres. Eisenhower's Council of Economic Advisers, has been named by Pres. Nixon as his counsellor with major duties in the area of domestic affairs.

Currently a professor of economics at Columbia University, Burns also is chairman of the National Bureau of Economic Research.

He headed a task force for Nixon which recently submitted a report to the President calling for legislative or executive action in a number of domestic areas. Details on the report have not yet been released.

The appointment carries Cabinet rank and therefore makes Dr. Burns the ranking member of the White House staff.

Nixon also announced the appointment of Russell E. Train, president of the Conservation Foundation, as under-secretary of the interior.

Reports of the possible nomination of Train, who has long interests in conservation and wildlife, became public during the debate over the nomination of Interior Sec. Walter J. Hickel.

In another development, five key appointments were announced to the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development, including two prominent Negroes, Samuel C. Jackson and Samuel J. Simmons.

Jackson, who was named to be general assistant secretary, formerly served on the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. He is a former director of the NAACP.

Simmons, who was chosen as assistant secretary for equal opportunity, has served as director of the field services division of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission. He also has been prominent in the NAACP.

The three other appointments announced by HEW Sec. George Romney were Richard C. Van Dusen of Detroit to be under secretary of the department; Sherman Unger of Cincinnati as general counsel; and Mayor Floyd H. Hyde of Fresno, Calif., to be assistant secretary for model cities and governmental relations.

Meanwhile, the Senate confirmed James E. Johnson as a member of Civil Service Commission, the highest appointment given to a Negro so far by Pres. Nixon.

Johnson, who formerly headed California's division of veteran affairs, had been the center of controversy in hearings because of a memo he sent to state employes plugging Gov. Ronald Reagan's "creative society."

CONVENTIONS

Two more unions have announced convention dates and locations for 1969.

The Communications Workers will meet in Kansas City, Mo., June 16-20. The Lithographers & Photoengravers will convene in Philadelphia Oct. 20-24.

Wharton Joins United Fund Board

New York—Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers was elected to a three-year term on the board of the United Community Funds & Councils of America at the organization's annual meeting here. He succeeds Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., who retired from the board.

Other labor representatives on the board are AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis; Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, Communication Workers; James A. Suffridge, president-emeritus, Retail Clerks, and Sec.-Treas. Barney Hopkins of the Michigan AFL-CIO.

St. Louis AFL-CIO Adds Three Counties to Area

St. Louis—The local AFL-CIO central body, acting with the approval of the national federation, changed its name to the Greater St. Louis Labor Council and expanded its geographical scope to encompass neighboring Franklin, Jefferson and St. Charles counties. About 40 AFL-CIO unions in the area will be invited to affiliate, Pres. Oscar A. Ehrhardt said.

The council now represents about 143,000 members.

7 Rail Unions Negotiate New Canadian Pact

Montreal — Seven shopcraft unions and Canada's two major railways—Canadian Pacific and Canadian National—have negotiated a new two-year contract providing major gains in wages and benefits.

The pact, similar to one negotiated previously with eight non-operating unions, calls for a 6.5 percent across-the-board wage increase retroactive to Jan. 1, 1969, and another 6.5 percent boost Jan. 1, 1970.

The settlement, covering 22,000 workers, also includes a 10-cent an hour increase in skill differentials, in two steps; improvements in apprentice rates; increased indemnity benefits and an extended duration of their payment.

The agreement was negotiated by the Machinists, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Railway Carmen, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers, Plumbers & Pipefitters and Molders.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, February 8, 1969 | No. 6

Meany Opens Labor Drive To Cover Teachers' Fine

Tax Reform Hearings Set In Congress

The 91st Congress will get down to business Feb. 18 after a 10-day Lincoln's Birthday recess—whether or not the Nixon Administration is ready with its legislative proposals.

The House Ways & Means Committee will begin exhaustive hearings on one of the big issues before this Congress—reform of the nation's loophole-ridden tax laws.

Pres. Nixon hasn't asked for any legislation on the subject. But at congressional direction, the Treasury Dept. staff last year drew up a detailed proposal for tax reform. Pres. Johnson chose to leave it for consideration of the new Administration rather than submit it to Congress shortly before he left office. But the Ways & Means Committee, which initiates all tax legislation, asked for and obtained publication of the staff study.

Its effect would be to boost taxes for the very wealthy who have used loopholes in the present law to escape taxation on the bulk of their income. It would also lower and simplify the tax on lower-income families.

Nixon told newsmen he has discussed tax issues with Ways & Means Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) and the committee's ranking Republican, John W. Byrnes (Wis.).

He said Treasury Sec. David M. Kennedy will make a preliminary statement on tax policy but the Ad-

(Continued on Page 8)

HEAD START YOUNGSTERS are fitted for new shoes so they may attend winter classes in the Morgantown, W. Va., area. Shoes, clothing and vitamin pills are distributed to needy children through the "We Care" project, run by Monongalia-Preston AFL-CIO. (Story, Page 3.)

$220,000 Levy Hit As 'Unjust'

The AFL-CIO has enlisted the support of all its affiliated unions to help pay a $220,000 fine imposed on the New York teachers' union "under the unjust provisions" of a law forbidding public employe strikes.

Federation Pres. George Meany said the AFL-CIO fully supported the teachers during work stoppages last year and "that support will continue."

Under the state's Taylor Law, the United Federation of Teachers—Local 2 of the American Federation of Teachers, AFL-CIO—was fined by a state court "for the actions it deemed necessary to defend the interests of its members," Meany related.

"The UFT will not bear this burden alone. In conjunction with the AFT, the AFL-CIO will work out a program for raising these funds from its affiliated unions. The AFL-CIO Executive Council, which begins its next meeting Feb. 17, will announce a detailed fund-raising program," Meany said.

In imposing the fine, State Supreme Court Justice Francis J. Bloustein said he had found "extreme provocation" by School Board representatives and others "in official office" in the withdrawal of union teachers from the city schools last fall. The teachers stopped work in protest against layoffs and harassment of teachers in Brooklyn's experimental Ocean Hill-Brownsville school district.

(Continued on Page 3)

New R-T-W Approach:

Foes of Union Shop Exploit Under-Paid

The National Right to Work Committee apparently intends to exploit the nation's poorer-paid workers—Negroes, farm workers and public employes—in its effort to destroy the union shop.

The committee, which is supported by money from anti-union employers, paraded spokesmen for its latest strategy at a press conference in Washington.

Notably absent from the conference's declarations was any boast of putting over new state right-to-work laws. The committee has been completely unsuccessful in this area in recent years.

Committee spokesmen were:

- Ben Howard of Los Angeles, a former UAW member, who spoke out for black separatism and dual unionism as a leader of a California group called Black Workers Alliance.
- Jose Mendoza, self-styled farm worker, who has been touring

(Continued on Page 8)

Air Line Pilots Put Up Bounty On Hijackers

The Air Line Pilots and the Air Transport Association are hopefully awaiting the effects of $25,000 rewards they have jointly offered for information leading to the conviction of hijackers of U.S. airliners.

ALPA Pres. Charles H. Ruby said the union joined in cosponsoring the rewards in the hope that they will become a strong deterrent to the hijacking of

(Continued on Page 7)

Pay Raise Assured Top Federal Officials

Top government officials were assured of a pay raise that a blue ribbon citizens' commission termed long overdue when resolutions disapproving the increases were beaten in the Senate and blocked in the House.

The biggest pay raises will go to Cabinet members and Supreme Court justices, but other government executives and federal judges will also get substantial raises.

Congressmen and senators will have their salaries increased from $30,000 to $42,500 a year. The special commission, on which AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany served, had recommended a boost to $50,000. But congressional leaders thought an increase that large would pose too great a political risk and convinced former Pres. Johnson to submit a smaller amount in his budget.

Under a 1967 law, a salary review is held every four years and the pay rates submitted by the President take effect automatically unless rejected by either the House or Senate.

The idea was to avoid putting members of Congress in the position of having to decide their own pay scale.

A Senate vote, nevertheless, was forced by a hard-core economy bloc which complained the big pay hikes would set a poor example for the private sector of the economy, would pave the way for increases for lower-ranking federal workers,

(Continued on Page 6)

Nixon Seeks New T-H Strike Options

The Taft-Hartley Act's provision for dealing with "national emergency" strikes is "outmoded," Pres. Nixon told newsmen.

Nixon said he helped write the provision when he was in Congress but has concluded that it doesn't provide "enough options" for the President.

He has asked the Labor Dept. to "develop some new approaches in this field and we will submit them . . . to this Congress."

10 Unions to Map Talks With GE, Westinghouse

The AFL-CIO Coordinated Bargaining Committee of GE-Westinghouse Unions will meet in Washington, Mar. 6, to discuss upcoming negotiations with the two big electrical companies.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called the meeting in a letter to the presidents of the 10 unions involved. He said the group will discuss plans to gain contract improvements in wages, including parity for those working at depressed wage rates in some parts of the country, employment security and arbitration, in addition to other gains.

Meany noted that the soaring cost of living has virtually wiped out the 1966 wage gains of General Electric and Westinghouse employes.

He noted that the 1966 sessions successfully established coordination as a key principle in bargaining with the two leaders in the electrical industry. The legality of that principle, he recalled, was upheld by the National Labor Relations Board in a 1968 decision.

The unions involved are the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Steelworkers, Allied Industrial Workers, Flint Glass Workers, Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, Technical Engineers, Carpenters, Machinists, and Sheet Metal Workers.

The meeting will be held at the Mayflower Hotel, starting at 1:30 p.m. on Mar. 6.

J. Curtis Counts Named to Head Mediation Unit

A California aerospace executive, J. Curtis Counts, has been nominated by Pres. Nixon to head the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

The appointment of Counts was announced by Labor Sec. George P. Shultz at an outdoor news conference on the grounds of the White House.

Shultz indicated that the unusual setting for the announcement was "to build up the importance of the service." Shultz said he hopes most major disputes will be settled by the government's professional mediation staff—and that fewer will end up on the desk of the Secretary of Labor.

Counts, 53, has been with the Douglas Aircraft Corp. and its successor McDonnell Douglas Corp. since 1941. He became the company's industrial relations director in 1960 and its vice president for employe relations in 1964.

Counts served from 1962-68 on the national labor-management advisory panel to the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service and his work there was praised by the retiring FMCS director, William E. Simkin.

Simkin, who is leaving to join the arbitration panel in the steel industry, wired Counts: "Your years of experience in collective bargaining and your personal attributes known to many of us eminently qualify you for this post."

J. CURTIS COUNTS

ALL-GIRL PICKET LINE, shown with a male visitor, has been maintained by five radiological technicians for more than a year at two New Castle, Pa., hospitals. The women, highly trained technicians who read x-ray plates at St. Francis and Jameson Memorial Hospital, are picketing for recognition of their union, Technical Engineers Local 25. The male is AFL-CIO Rep. Victor Mills.

5 X-Ray Technicians United in Long Strike

New Castle, Pa.—Five spunky union women have been on the picket line for more than a year to win union recognition, and a signed contract, from two hospitals here.

Summer and winter, through fair weather and foul, x-ray technicians at the privately operated St. Francis Hospital and the municipal Jameson Memorial Hospital have picketed for their union, Local 25 of the Technical Engineers.

When hospital administrators refused to recognize the union or deal with it, the pickets refused to down their signs and steal away. They can be just as "stubborn" as the hospitals, they declared.

AFTE locals have been sending financial assistance to Local 25 since the walkout started Jan. 2, 1968. The local labor movement has helped, too, particularly the Lawrence County Building & Construction Trades Council, whose affiliated local unions have respected the picket lines.

The power of the pickets is more than just vocal power, says AFL-CIO Staff Rep. Victor Mills. United with that of other unions, it has brought a $1 million building project to a halt at St. Francis Hospital, and stymied building plans at Jameson Memorial.

Last fall, pickets broke ranks at St. Francis to let building tradesmen put a winter covering over the footings for a nurses' home and hospital extension. Since then, not a brick has been laid nor a foot of concrete poured while the dispute continues.

Not long ago the picket lines were extended when the x-ray technicians marched in front of the First National Bank and the Peoples Bank of Lawrence County, both in downtown New Castle. The president of one bank is chairman of the Jameson Hospital board of directors, and the other bank president is chairman at St. Francis.

Pennsylvania has a state law, recently upheld by the state Supreme Court, excusing hospitals from bargaining with unions of their employes. That's one reason for the long tieup. Another factor is that neither hospital wants to be first to break ranks from the area hospital association, union members say.

The association's dogged stance was weakened recently when the same union, AFTE Local 25, won recognition and bargaining rights at two hospitals in Youngstown, O. 20 miles away. Mrs. Esther Macri, Local 25 president, is one of the determined pickets—the only one from Jameson Hospital.

Appeals Court Upholds Cardcheck Certification

The right of the National Labor Relations Board to order a "flagrantly unfair" employer to recognize a union on the basis of of cards signed by employes was upheld by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Cincinnati.

A three-judge appeals court panel enforced a 1966 NLRB order compelling Priced-Less Discount Foods, Inc., doing business in Springfield, O., as Pay Less, to bargain on contract terms with Retail Clerks Local 1552.

The issue before the court was whether an NLRB bargaining order is the "proper remedy . . . for law violations which had the effect of dissipating the union's card majority and which destroyed the conditions for a fair election."

"In this case the usual cease and desist order could hardly be true remedial," the judges said. They noted that the employer solicited his workers to withdraw their authorizations, helped them to prepare the letters, got their signatures in company offices and mailed the letters to the union after claiming to have a good faith doubt that local 1552 had a majority.

The judges declared that "when an employer resorts to such flagrant unfair practices," the board acts within its authority in ordering him to recognize the union even though no election has been held.

The decision related that on Jan. 20, 1965, RCIA had 23 valid cards signed by employes and offered to prove its majority status by a cardcheck through an impartial third party.

The company refused, claiming it had a sincere doubt that the union had a majority. Then it prevailed on 12 workers to repudiate their signatures, the record showed. The judges said:

"Although the letters contained language that the request . . . was made of the employes' own free will and with no outside pressure, the evidence to the contrary is substantial. Solicitation, pressures and coercion are proved by convincing evidence."

Swedes Refuse To Unload Grapes

Stockholm—At the urging of the Intl. Transport Workers' Federation, 5,000 union longshoremen have decided not to unload cargoes of California grapes arriving at Swedish ports.

The ITU asked the Swedish Transport Workers' Federation to call upon its members to refuse to unload the grapes in support of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee's boycott and strike against the California grape growers.

The union complied with the request and its instruction to members was expected to have an immediate effect since several ships carrying the grapes were reportedly enroute to Sweden.

In 21-Year History:

Mediation Service Logs Peak Activity

The 1968 fiscal year was the busiest in the 21-year history of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, which anticipates another active year in 1969, the service said in its annual report to Congress.

Time lost because of work stoppages increased to twenty-nine one-hundredths of 1 percent but, the service noted, 99.71 percent of available time was worked without any interruptions.

Another measure of the workload was this: contract settlements during the year averaged 360 a week, of which 145 per week involved direct participation by mediators in joint negotiations.

The report said "the persistent upward spiral of the cost of living, with its eroding effect on real wages, continued to be the largest single motive" for contract disputes.

It cited another reason for membership pressures on unions: "The affluence of American industry as a whole with an ever-increasing number of corporations posting some of the highest profit margins in their history was reflected in union demands for a larger share of the economic pie."

The report was the final one for Dir. William E. Simkin, who left the federal service to become chairman of an incentive pay panel for the Steelworkers and the steel industry. His successor is J. Curtis Counts of the McDonnell Douglas Corp., big aerospace contractor.

For the year ended last June 30, the service cited such problems as frequent union membership votes rejecting tentative contract agreements, more use of coordinated bargaining with increased management resistance, intensified service to defense industries, and a stepping-up of the service's "preventive mediation" efforts to avoid "crisis" bargaining.

Internal problems included the cancellation of mediator training programs because the service received only 12 percent of the $186,000 additional funds it requested to meet the higher pay rates voted by Congress for all government employes. The annual mediator seminars are being rescheduled for 1969, Simkin reported.

He answered the question "is collective bargaining adequate?" by saying "there is every reason to believe the system will prove itself capable of meeting the problems of the future."

Simkin reported that during the year, the service:

- Took part in more than 700 labor relations conferences a week.
- Participated in a record 1,322 cases involving "preventive" mediation.
- Submitted 8,630 panels of arbitrators at the request of labor and management.
- Took part in 991 public information and educational assignments on request.

The mediation service, one of the smallest government agencies, had 446 employes in 1968 and a budget of $7.45 million.

Bargaining Stepped Up In Longshore Dispute

New York—Striking dockworkers and holdout employers in a dozen ports intensified their efforts to reach contract agreement as the Nixon Administration reassigned veteran mediator David L. Cole to the dispute.

The Longshoremen came to terms Jan. 14 with port employers in New York City but "outport" shipping associations have been refusing to agree to contracts the ILA can recommend to the 60,000 strikers.

Still unsettled as the AFL-CIO News went to press were contracts with employers in Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, New Orleans, Hampton Roads, Va., and Gulf ports from Brownsville, Tex., to Tampa, Fla.

Cole helped mediate the New York settlement on terms of a "master" contract but has been inactive since that time. In Washington, Labor Sec. George P. Shultz announced that he has appointed Cole to head federal mediation efforts in cooperation with commissioners from the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service who have been close to the talks.

ILA Pres. Thomas W. Gleason said the dispute would have been settled long ago if employers had a single bargaining team, as the union does.

He blamed continuation of the strike on "a few holdout operators" who are trying to force White House intervention.

Pres. Nixon indicated at his news conference this week that he is looking to collective bargaining and mediation to bring a settlement of the dock strike.

If the White House steps directly into the dispute, it won't tip its hand in advance. The President told newsmen that "for the White House to indicate publicly that we are going to do this and that" in effect would be "telling the parties to do nothing."

Nixon said he supports Shultz in his renewed mediation efforts in the dispute.

The New York agreement gives ILA members $1.60 an hour over a three-year period in money benefits. It continues the guaranteed 52-week work year for experienced dockworkers. Also it gives longshoremen the right to load and unload shipments, in containers consolidated from more than one shipper, within a radius of 50 miles from the port.

The ILA is insisting on similar container clauses in all 20 Atlantic and Gulf ports to preserve members' jobs. It has announced that no local union will return to work until all locals have settled —a position that brought threats of congressional action to end the six-week strike.

The New York Shipping Association called a news conference to announce that it was canceling its new three-year agreement, but called it off when both government and labor sources said that would throw a monkey wrench into settlement chances at all other ports. The association has been demanding government action to get its dockers back to work.

The Best things in life come with UNION LABEL PRODUCTS & SERVICES
UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Council to Map Fund-Raising:

Meany Pledges Drive to Pay 'Unjust' Fine Against Teachers

(Continued from Page 1)

Bloustein fined the UFT $220,000 and the Council of Supervisory Associations $43,500 on complaints that members of the two organizations committed contempt of court when they struck. The justice also levied a $250 fine and a 15-day jail sentence on UFT Pres. Albert Shanker, and imposed a $125 fine and three days in jail on CSA Pres. Walter J. Degnan.

No Appeal

Shanker and Degnan met with their lawyers and decided not to appeal for a stay of sentence. Shanker spent 15 days in jail last year and the UFT was fined $150,000 for a previous strike. Degnan heads an unaffiliated group of 3,300 supervisors who stayed out when the teachers did.

AFT Pres. David Selden called the sentencing of Shanker "outrageous and a tragic miscarriage of justice."

Selden reiterated the AFT's support of Shanker and the New York local, declaring:

"New York City teachers were involved in a defensive strike. . . . They were aiming to hold the Board of Education and the Ocean Hill governing board to agreements" previously negotiated by the city and the union.

The teacher-supervisor walkouts occurred when the Ocean Hill local board ousted 19 teachers on charges of which they were later cleared by an arbitrator, and refused to reinstate them.

Meanwhile, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller announced that he would ask the state legislature to make the punitive sections of the Taylor Act harsher, as recommended by a special advisory committee headed by Prof. George W. Taylor of the University of Pennsylvania.

Labor mediator Theodore W. Kheel said the state should try to make bargaining work better, instead of imposing tougher penalties. Also it should have a protective device like a cooling-off period for public employe strikes, he advised.

Opposition to harsh no-strike penalties also was voiced by Assistant Dir. Raymond D. Westcott of the Xavier Institute of Labor Relations in New York. When penalties are imposed on strikers, they also should be directed against department heads who refuse to bargain with their employes until faced with a strike problem, Westcott said.

In a 27-page opinion, Justice Bloustein noted that he was limited to ruling on the Taylor Act and could not explore the issue of "extreme provocation" raised by the UFT except in mitigation of sentence.

Contributors to Violence

There is "uncontroverted evidence that known militants and extremists, strangers to the communities involved, contributed to the unrest and violence," the opinion said, and the result was that "feelings of hatred surfaced."

"There were daily confrontations of a destructive character," the justice continued. "Whites against blacks, blacks against whites. Hatemongering was current and anti-Semitism was practiced by many."

In criticizing the "appropriate governmental agencies" for failure to forestall the crisis, Bloustein observed that the courts are no place to solve "one facet of a much more fundamental" problem, that of giving school communities more voice in school affairs without violating the rights of teachers, supervisors and the city government.

The teachers stayed out of school last year from Sept. 9-11, and returned when the city agreed to keep its contract agreement with the union. They walked out again Sept. 13-27 when the Ocean Hill board refused to comply, and groups of "militants" invaded the schools and harassed union teachers. The third stayout was from Oct. 14-Nov. 18, when the city finally agreed to enforce its authority to run the district schools.

SAILING AT 7,500 FEET, skydiver Don Boyles of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers local in Tulsa, Okla., sports an OCAW sticker during a free-fall parachute jump. Boyles, who has been parachuting for eight years, has made 336 jumps. His parachute also has OCAW letters sewn on each side.

2 Major Food Chains Ban California Grapes

Baltimore—Two major food chains have agreed to remove all California table grapes from their stores in the Washington-Baltimore-Harrisburg region, the Citizens Boycott Committee announced here.

The decision to remove grapes after present stocks run out was made by the A&P Food Stores, eastern division, and Food Fair in response to consumer demand, the committee said. More than 100 stores are involved.

The announcement climaxed a long campaign by the Committee to win public support for the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, AFL-CIO, and its boycott of non-union California grapes.

The farm workers have negotiated 12 contracts with producers of wine grapes but table grape growers headed by the Giumarra Co. have fought all union attempts to win recognition or a contract. Field workers are not covered by the National Labor Relations Act and have no right to a representation election under any law, federal or California state.

The A&P agreement came as UFWOC and cooperating citizens committees of clergymen and others were preparing to stage demonstration picketing at major points in the area, according to UFWOC Vice Pres. Andrew Imutan.

In other developments, the national board of the Consumer Federation of America voted at a Washington, D.C., meeting to "fully support" the grape boycott and called on member organizations to do likewise.

Noting that the boycott has "captured the imagination of the nation," the board said "millions of consumers have joined in this effort for social justice" by refusing to buy grapes while the primitive labor conditions "and the refusal of employers to bargain continues".

Grape workers led by Cesar Chavez have been trying to improve their economic lot, the federation said, but have been "met with a vicious campaign of propaganda, intimidation and violence." The federation, the largest organization of consumer groups in the United States, is headed by the Rev. Robert J. McEwen, S. J., an educator.

At the same time Dir. William L. Kircher of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization denied a statement by an American Farm Bureau Federation official that the issue in the grape boycott is a union contract demand "which would require all workers to join the union whether they wanted to or not."

The only demand facing the growers, Kircher said in a letter to the Washington Post, is "that they recognize the union for purposes of bargaining on matters affecting hours, wages and the working conditions of table grape workers." The growers have for three years refused to meet with any UFWOC representative under any conditions, Kircher said.

AFL-CIO Quits Panel Over Retreat on Safety

An association of state workmen's compensation boards has forfeited labor's support by opposing needed occupational health and safety laws and standards, the AFL-CIO said.

Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman said the AFL-CIO has cancelled its long-held associate membership in the Intl. Association of Industrial Accident Boards & Commissions. A number of affiliates and AFL-CIO central bodies have done likewise.

The reason was spelled out by Seidman in a letter to the association.

Labor's initial affiliation, Seidman noted, was based on the assumption that the association's goals on workmen's compensation and occupational health and safety "were essentially similar to our own."

Developments in the past year, Seidman indicated, demonstrated that this is not so.

The AFL-CIO, he wrote, was "greatly distressed" when the association opposed the Occupational Health & Safety Act when it was before Congress.

"We were dismayed when your organization opposed legislation . . . to extend workmen's compensation protection to uranium miners."

Last Straw

The last straw, Seidman said, was a resolution adopted at the association's convention which "seems to have repudiated the standards which had long guided all supporters of effective workmen's compensation, including organized labor, in their efforts to obtain enactment of strong viable laws fully geared to the protection of injured workers and their families."

Seidman said the AFL-CIO "reluctantly concluded" that it could no longer support or participate in "an organization whose actions and policies on workmen's compensation and occupational health and safety issues have become so completely opposite to its own tradition as well as the views of the trade union movement."

Official state agencies are the only voting members of the IAIABC. But other groups interested in workmen's compensation, including insurance carriers and business associations as well as unions, have participated in the organization's programs and paid dues as associate members.

West Virginia 'We Care' Project Fills the Gaps on Welfare Needs

Morgantown, W.Va.—A new pair of shoes. A warm winter jacket. A bottle of vitamin pills.

These are things many disadvantaged youngsters need even before they can take part in various government-funded projects such as Head Start and the Neighborhood Youth Corps.

But in certain situations, these basic necessities are not made available by welfare agencies.

The Monongalia-Preston Labor Council discovered this problem after establishing a Head Start Center in 1966. During severe weather conditions many children were missing the classes because they lacked shoes or adequate clothing.

Even some adult volunteers who were recruited from the area's poverty districts couldn't report for work because they were inadequately dressed for the cold winter days.

The two-county AFL-CIO council's Economic Opportunity Committee sought to solve the crisis with the development of another project, called "We Care."

Its plan was to solicit cash donations and clothing from people and merchants of Monongalia and Preston counties so clothing or other necessities could be distributed to the needy who were enrolled in the poverty programs.

A collection and distribution center for the "We Care" project was set up in the Steelworkers Local 6214 union hall. Committees were formed to raise funds, collect clothing donations and to handle the sorting and repair of used clothes.

The project was a success from the start, reports Homer Kincaid, now director of the area Neighborhood Youth Corps. Kincaid and two other USWA Local 6214 members—David Chappell and Don G. Clingerman—were the nucleus in organizing the council's Economic Opportunity Committee. The committee was set up after the three completed a leadership training program for community action at the West Virginia University Institute for Labor Studies.

Chappell is now president of the Monongalia County Community Action Program and Clingerman is an officer of the Preston County CAP.

Since the start of "We Care" in November 1966, the project aided 1,374 children and adults. Cash contributions amounted to more than $1,780—much of it from the faculty and students of West Virginia University.

Morgantown merchants also have pitched in. One businessman, Milton Cohen, donated 477 pairs of shoes in 1968 alone. And much of the clothing was sold to the council with large discounts by the businessmen.

Clothing donations also came from out-of-state points, including Columbus, Ohio, and Montgomery County, Md. "We Care" reciprocated by sending a truckload of clothes to the riot-torn areas in Pittsburgh last year.

As the "We Care" project grew, its operations were moved from the Steelworkers' hall to the office of the Neighborhood Youth Corps, which is sponsored by the West Virginia AFL-CIO. NYC enrollees are employed in the "We Care" operations staff.

The project also has assisted needy families by referring them to established community organizations for help.

Staff volunteers also have gone out into isolated rural areas to find families in desperate need who had been overlooked by the welfare agencies.

Another phase of the project is its vitamin program. The pills, which are obtained from the Council of Southern Mountains, are distributed to volunteers, social workers, Head Start teachers, CAP aides and county health nurses for use by needy children and adults.

The "We Care" project is supervised by Lewis Albright, president of the Monongalia-Preston AFL-CIO, Clingerman, Willis B. Cottril, and Dr. Frederick Zeller.

R. I. Unionist Gets Majority Leader Post

Providence, R.I.—A veteran trade unionist has been elected majority leader of the Rhode Island House of Representatives.

House Democrats, who hold 76 of the 100 seats, chose John J. Skiffington, Jr., a field representative of the Rubber Workers. He has been a legislator since 1951.

Prices, Profits and Jobs

THE ECONOMIC POLICYMAKERS of the Nixon Administration—and the President himself—apparently are planning a new attack on rising prices and inflation in terms of how much of an increase in unemployment the public will tolerate.

Various statements issued to date all deal with the concept that rising prices can be contained without a "substantial" increase in joblessness, or with little increase in unemployment.

Underlying this approach is the idea of the "trade-off;" that in order to check rising prices there must be some increase in unemployment and that if unemployment is to be cut further there has to be an accompanying rise in prices.

Now along comes a little-noticed economic study by the Johnson Cabinet Committee on Price Stability, issued in the waning hours of the Johnson Administration, which says that the accepted "trade-off" theory is more than a two-way street—that there is an alternative that will contain inflation without a rise in unemployment: a cutback in the booming rate of profits.

Booming profits have long been suspected of being a major contributor to inflation, especially in industries dominated by a few companies where prices are set arbitrarily to bring a pre-determined profit rate regardless of market conditions.

The cabinet committee staff study makes the point that current pricing policies in many industries assure a high rate of profit despite a low utilization of plant capacity. A period of sustained economic growth—such as the past eight years—intensifies this profit rate to the point where more and more income is shifted to profits.

In light of all this the staff study declares:

"If the primary policy goal is a reduction of the rate of inflation, this can be done by increasing the unemployment rate, decreasing the profit rate or both. Similarly, a low unemployment rate could be maintained with a smaller rate of inflation if profits were to fall."

It adds that any reduction of profits "could be expected to improve the trade-off between unemployment and inflation."

The study cites figures worked up by University of Minnesota economist George L. Perry showing that if the profit rate were reduced from 11.7 to 7.2 percent, the unemployment rate could be held steady at 3 percent and inflation cut from 3 percent to 1 percent.

The same reduction in the rate of inflation—from 3 to 1 percent—could be obtained, according to Perry's figures, by dropping the rate of profit to 10.1 percent and allowing unemployment to rise to 4 percent.

Or if the rate of inflation is cut back to 2 percent and unemployment held at 3 percent, the profit rate would drop from 11.7 to 8.7.

Other economists and publications, including the Wall Street Journal, have cited the role of booming profits during a period of economic expansion as contributing to an inflationary price trend. Organized labor, too, has made the point repeatedly that profit-fed inflation is a major factor in the current economic situation.

The new Administration's policymakers ought to ponder well, therefore, the choice before them: swelling the ranks of the jobless or trimming back on a profit rate that is running well above normal levels.

Do Not Feed the Animal

Apprentice Preparation:

Workers Defense League Sets Patterns for Negro Job Gains

THE SUCCESS of the Workers Defense League in recruiting and preparing Negroes for New York City apprenticeship programs may show the way to employment opportunities elsewhere.

Researchers F. Ray Marshall and Vernon M. Briggs, Jr., who voice this optimism, analyze the New York experience in a 64-page study titled "Equal Apprenticeship Opportunities," published as a policy paper by the Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations of the University of Michigan and Wayne State University.

Marshall, a member of the University of Kentucky faculty, and Briggs, from the University of Texas, first take up historical reasons for the infrequency of Negro or nonwhite apprentices in the various trades.

As is well known, the researchers note, after emancipation, Negroes were restricted mainly to agriculture and certain menial jobs, except for a few building trades like the trowel crafts in which a large number of slaves had been trained.

Whites monopolized the more highly skilled operations of the newer occupations which grew up after slavery and kept control by monopolizing the more advanced training programs.

"Once these segregated job patterns became institutionalized, they tended to perpetuate themselves and to change very slowly," the report suggests. "In considerable measure this was because little pressure came from Negroes to change the system. The aspirations of Negro youngsters were conditioned by the realities of the situation they faced, and the occasional Negro who attempted to crack the system faced such overwhelming odds that few of them tried it, and few of their parents or counselors encouraged them to do so.

"Moreover, the skilled trades institutionalized their recruitment patterns in such a way as to exclude most Negro youngsters from any opportunity to enter the system . . . (hence) the paucity of applicants."

The Workers Defense League, founded before World War II as a human rights organization, moved into the apprenticeship area in 1963, the researchers point out. WDL discovered that it could not fill the vacancies in apprenticeship programs that it was trying to open up.

CONSEQUENTLY the organization began to determine the relevant admission standards for the various trades, subsequently published them for potential apprenticeship candidates. WDL avoided confrontations with the unions and concentrated instead on recruitment and placement of people who were qualified. To make sure that promising candidates could be admitted, WDL helped them to prepare for examinations and other entrance hurdles. Tutoring sessions and remedial classes were made available, temporary jobs were found for successful applicants who might otherwise become tired of waiting to be admitted to apprenticeship programs.

Marshall and Briggs conclude that fundamental solutions to Negro employment patterns will require "policies which cause basic changes in those attitudes and procedures which have caused minorities to be barred from many employment opportunities.

"New policies will have to cause fundamental changes in the schools attended by most Negro youngsters. Information about job opportunities will have to reach Negro youngsters. The desirability of the skilled trades as an occupational choice for minority youngsters who have graduated from high school with good grades will have to be made clear.

"These changes can help Negroes and other minorities to move regularly and permanently into areas from which they have been excluded. Active manpower and employment policies, effective antidiscrimination programs, an effective welfare system, and massive improvements in education for residents of rural and urban ghettos are among the most significant measures that can be taken to create changes in racial employment patterns."

While it may sound superficial to train applicants to pass entrance examinations, the researchers write that "the WDL-type operation is designed to do whatever is required to get Negroes into apprenticeship programs and set in motion the forces which will expose the fundamental defects in existing procedures and clear the way for fundamental remedies."

Some evidence that progress is being made in this type of program is contained in the report by former Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz that as of last June 30, there were an estimated 8,100 Negroes in registered apprenticeship programs, nearly double the 4,200 estimated at the end of 1966. The 1968 figure is roughly four times the figure of 2,191 nonwhite apprentices recorded in the 1960 census.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

*George M. Harrison	David Dubinsky	Joseph Curran
M. A. Hutcheson	Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky
A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton
Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	Paul Hall
Herman D. Kenin	*John J. Grogan	I. W. Abel
P. L. Siemiller	David Sullivan	Hunter P. Wharton
Paul Jennings	A. J. DeAndrade	Ralph Helstein
William Pollock	Max Greenberg	John H. Lyons

Deceased*

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, February 8, 1969 No. 6

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Checks and Balances:

Revitalized State Governments Key to Strong Federal System

The following is excerpted from "Revitalizing State Governments," by Terry Sanford, which appeared in the January issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

THERE ARE A NUMBER of things that must be done by the national government and by the state governments, and particularly by the people looking to both of these governments, if the federal system in America is to endure.

The national government has much to offer. It has money, position to see the nation as a whole, opportunity for overcoming special and regional interests which retard the will of the people and a capacity for supporting new and inventive programs. We cannot do without an effective national government and all the talk of cutting out its programs or greatly diminishing its position simply will not work. What can work is an effort to balance the dual system of government, with the states positioned to carry their fair share of the dual responsibilities.

First of all, we need to have a national government which is determined that the federal system should be strengthened. This is not purely a matter of letting the states jockey for proper position, but the national government and the leaders of the national government have a responsibility for saving the federal system. There are some things that can be done, but basically we must begin with a determination that the federal system is worth saving.

Second, I think we need presidential understanding that the federal system is now being shaped by the winds of hazard, that the national bureaucracy is inclined to random procedures that weaken the capacity of state government and that only the White House can be effective in bringing order and balance to the federal system.

The White House cannot do it alone. Only the President, however, has the authority to insist on the necessary changes.

Part of this determination should be an insistence that Congress establish a mechanism of government to function at the highest level of the executive branch, with sufficient presidential authority to work daily to reduce conflicts, duplications and confusion, and to exercise continuing initiative to reach the goals defined in intergovernmental relations.

One of the greatest obstacles to workable state government is that state executive leadership is fragmented. Part of this is due to constitutional provisions, conditions written in when there was considerable distrust for the executive branch of government.

It is not possible for the governor to lead unless he has the position of leadership, and it is not possible for him to be an efficient executive if the executive authority is scattered in a number of places. The election of numerous executive positions in state government, or the constitutional provisions that the governor shall not do a number of things unless boards and commissions have so provided, all tend to weaken state government in its relative position with national government.

Another hinderance to good state government is the lack of continuity. There is so much starting and stopping in state government. Once something gets going, then it is time to start over again. There are several factors, some of them constitutional. A number of states still have two-year terms and still another group of states limits their governors to a single four-year term. The people should at least reserve to themselves the decision as to whether or not a governor will be called to serve an additional four years, and certainly while there may be grounds for limiting the total term of office to eight years, it is a demonstrated fact that it is extremely difficult to get programs under full steam and productive within a span of four years.

Another way to get at the lack of continuity is to establish a planning structure within state government. No sizable industry moves on a day-to-day basis, reacting to whatever happens and not planning for the future. Government, especially state and local government, makes few plans for the future.

We started a two-year project called the Institute of State Programming and at the last governors' conference they brought industrial leaders together to help demonstrate how states could plan for their futures and use the planning device in making decisions and could gain continuity and direction for state government. This is merely one kind of reorganization in direction which will help make state government effective.

OVER-ORGANIZATION and centralization are threats that can be combatted with an approach typical of American life—competition. Government competition may come into its own in the age of technology, as our problems become more and more complex. It is the concept of countervailing among governments. We must have competition among governmental levels for many reasons. Stimulation for creative improvement is one, but the urgent reason is to defend ourselves against the possible abuses of centralized power. Abuses will not come because of technology but abuses can come because of the misuse of technology.

Our forebearers built our system of government on the theory that we must have checks and balances at the seat of power. Many of them had fled the persecutions of central governments in other countries. Traditionally, most Americans have felt that a single center of power is potentially dangerous. They have always asked who will hear the individual complaints. Where will the political muscle come from to support the private citizen and groups of citizens who may have valid objections to the actions of governments, or those with grievances that might not seem valid to the majority?

The practical answer is not to attempt futile efforts to weaken the national government; it is to strengthen the state governments and make them work.

To make the federal system work, our task is to find and develop the strengths for productive and sensitive state governments. This means a thousand things in 50 different places, with each of us charged to seek the same goal in our own state, starting from where we are. The future of American government depends on what kind of future we shape for the states.

By Press Associates, Inc.

IN THE LAST FEW WEEKS public attention has been focused on the problem of conflict of interest. The many ways in which conflict of interest was handled by the several Senate committees which conducted the confirmation hearings on presidential nominees well illustrate the absence of any set standards for handling it.

Only a handful of presidential nominations, out of thousands made, are normally controversial.

A conflict of interest charge is only one of a number of ways in which objection might be raised to a presidential appointment.

Usually, such allegations are directed at businessmen, industralists or bankers who are more likely to hold stock, draw pensions or who otherwise are connected with a company which deals with a federal agency to which he is appointed.

Throughout the years other challenges to confirmation have been made, some successfully and some unsuccessfully, for such allegations as lack of experience, conflicting political views, questionable patriotism, past policy decisions, patronage reasons, etc.

Then, senators sometimes object to a nominee as "personally obnoxious." Other senators, as a matter of courtesy, usually support such an allegation.

The one basis for opposing confirmation of a nominee on which there could be definite standards and guidelines, however, is conflict of interest.

MORE RECENTLY, this charge was raised, rightly or wrongly, against such nominees of Pres. Nixon as Interior Sec. Walter J. Hickel, Treasury Sec. David Kennedy, Deputy Sec. of Defense David Packard, Under Sec. of Agriculture Phil J. Campbell, Jr., and Under Sec. of the Treasury Charles Walker.

In the case of Kennedy, he sold the securities in question and the objections were dropped. Packard, however, was permitted to keep $300 million of stock in his company dealing with defense contracts in a short term trust. Whereas the dividends from such holdings will go to charity, Packard still has a vested interest in his company and defense contracts.

Hobart Rowan, financial writer for the Washington Post questions whether Packard can avoid a "conflict of attitude."

"That part of the U.S. industrial machine closely tied to defense spending has an enormous stake in seeing a continuance of big military budgets," writes Rowan. "So the question must be raised as to Packard's ability to view impartially not only questions that may relate to his own company, but to the whole philosophy of defense spending."

Rowan suggests that Packard, as a capable executive, might have far more to offer other departments of the government in which his attitude would not come in conflict.

This was a major objection raised to Hickel, too. His own financial involvement and association with the oil industry is part of his "attitude."

Another part of the conflict of interest problem is the fact that there is no requirement for public disclosure of outside income and holdings by members of Congress.

Some members, such as former Senators Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) and Joseph Clark (D-Pa.), strongly urged such disclosures and voluntarily opened their own books. So did the presidential candidates last year.

Some members of Congress contend that they have to answer to their own constituents and that should be sufficient. Members of Congress do set broad policy though, which directly affects their financial status.

Administrators, though, have direct control over awarding of contracts. They have wide latitude in interpreting policy which can have a pronounced effect not only on individual pocketbooks but on the directions this nation shall take.

Conflict of interest among congressmen may be debatable, but both conflict of interest and conflict of attitude cannot be ignored in the case of administrators.

To Raise Benefits:

Labor Presses for Overhaul Of Unemployment Insurance

WORKERS AND THEIR families have less real protection against "temporary" unemployment today than when the nation's unemployment insurance system began more than 30 years ago, an AFL-CIO spokesman reported.

The federation's call for nationwide standards for unemployment compensation benefit levels, duration and eligibility, was renewed by James O'Brien, an assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, on Labor News Conference. The public affairs interview is broadcast Tuesdays, at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

O'Brien emphasized that the lack of federal standards for unemployment insurance has led to "serious deterioration" of the system.

The social security specialist pointed out that:

- Maximum benefits have fallen from 65 percent of the average weekly wage in covered employment in 1938, to about 30 percent today.
- Some 18 million workers, many of them public employes, farm workers and domestics, are still denied protection of the insurance that "stands out like Pikes Peak in our present system of income maintenance."
- Harsh disqualifications rule out protection for many who would otherwise be eligible for temporary help while looking for work.

He also pointed out that of 11 million people out of work at some time during 1966, only three in 10 drew even the "benefits that allow less than poverty level subsistence."

"SERIOUS DETERIORATION" of the unemployment insurance system leaves workers and their families with less real protection against temporary joblessness today than when the system started 30 years ago. AFL-CIO Assistant Social Security Dir. James O'Brien, center, pointed this out to Neil Gilbride, left, of the Associated Press and Sam Sharkey of the Newhouse Newspapers on Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

Federal Pay Hike Assured Top Officials

(Continued from Page 1)

and would look bad to constituents who couldn't understand why a senator needed or should get more than $30,000.

Actually, it is a rare senator or congressman whose special expenses in connection with his office don't eat up the bulk of his pay. And one of the Senate's wealthier members, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), argued strongly that service in Congress shouldn't be limited to the rich. Kennedy noted also that more than 2,100 state and local officials are paid more than members of Congress.

On the showdown, 26 Democrats and 21 Republicans voted to go along with the pay increases; 18 Democrats and 16 Republicans voted to disapprove the raises.

A resolution of disapproval never got to the floor of the House. The Post Office & Civil Service Committee took no action to send it to the floor. And the House Rules Committee rejected, by a reported 12-3 vote, a motion by its chairman, Rep. William M. Colmer (D-Miss.), to bring the issue to the floor anyway.

Heads of Cabinet departments will have their salaries increased from $35,000 to $60,000 and, at the lower end of the executive pay scale, most bureau chiefs will get a raise from $28,000 to $36,000.

The increases for appointed and elected officials will also pave the way for raises for the highest grades of the career civil service. Their pay, supposed to be based on comparability with private industry, has been held down for some years because it couldn't go above the amount paid to presidential appointees.

Earlier this year, Congress voted to double the salary of the President to $200,000 a year.

Handbook on Tax Dodges Lists 10 Types of 'Shelter'

Multiply your wealth by "sheltering" it from taxes—that's the pitch being given to business executives and corporations by the Research Institute of America, Inc., and it's ready to tell them how.

The institute offers a report that shows "10 ways to draw tax-sheltered money from the company." It includes revelations on stock options, "private arrangements" that will lower tax rates, insurance deals and vacations that can be charged off as "expenses."

One of the devices listed, for example proposes to show "how to determine your best tax-wise salary and when the company can supplement with business meals, lodging, club membership, recreation, and other expenses that add up to a tidy sum."

The report is being offered to businessmen to encourage subscriptions to the institute's $2-a-month, weekly Recommendations service, which provides further "tax-saving help."

The brochure on the report is bordered in red, white and blue.

House Liberals Learn To Use Their Strength

Liberal Democrats showed they had learned the lesson of effective organization when they turned out the votes in the House Democratic Caucus to strip a turncoat congressman of his committee seniority.

The 101-73 vote in the caucus dropped Rep. John R. Rarick (D-La.) to the bottom of the seniority roster as punishment for his open support of George C. Wallace, the third party candidate, during the presidential campaign.

It also restored the prestige of the Democratic Study Group, a liberal organization of House Democrats.

The DSG took on and beat the party establishment — the House leadership and many senior committee chairmen whose "don't rock the boat" strategy had aligned them on this issue with the party's conservative Dixie bloc.

Democratic liberals had lost the first round in the fight at the initial party caucus on the opening day of Congress.

They moved at that time to strip Rarick of his seniority—the same action that was taken after the 1964 election against two Goldwater supporters.

But they didn't have the votes, at least not on a secret ballot. The motion was tabled, 87-85.

Another DSG proposal was adopted, however. It mandated regular caucus meetings—not just at the start of Congress. And it spelled out a requirement for a vote by the full caucus on committee assignments.

That gave the DSG a second chance.

This time the liberal leaders didn't take anything for granted. With the help of their own "whip" system, they checked and doublechecked their potential supporters. Legislative representatives from the AFL-CIO and affiliated unions joined in the effort. And a key decision was made—to press for an open rollcall vote, where each congressman would go publicly on record.

Rarick, himself, put the rollcall in the Congressional Record.

Speaker John W. McCormack, Majority Leader Carl Albert and Caucus Chairman Dan Rostenkowski—despite their liberal records on legislative issues—voted not to discipline Rarick. But the leadership was able to carry only a small handful of northern Democrats along on the issue.

A solid majority of the congressmen at the caucus had been lined up in advance behind the DSG position. When the time came to stand up and be counted on a rollcall, they did so. And the party leadership was on notice that the liberal wing, when aroused and organized, is neither a tame tabby nor a paper tiger.

James E. Allen Named U.S. Education Chief

An educator and state official who says he strongly believes in enforcing federal guidelines on desegregation of schools has been chosen by Pres. Nixon to be the nation's top education official.

He is Dr. James E. Allen Jr., New York State commissioner of education for 13 years, a member of the state's education department for 22 years, and prior to that a professor of educational administration at Syracuse University.

Subject to Senate confirmation, he will take over two previously separate jobs—that of U.S. commissioner of education and that of assistant secretary for education in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

Pres. Nixon also announced that he has offered the post of administrator of the Agency for International Development to Dr. John A. Hannah, president of Michigan State University.

Hannah, currently chairman of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, was chairman of Pres. Truman's advisory committee that first proposed a program of technical assistance to other nations.

He said he would accept the new post under a "shared time" arrangement that would allow him to retain the university's presidency until June 1, while also serving in Washington.

Among other appointments made by Nixon was that of Roger T. Kelley, a vice president of Caterpillar Tractor Co., to be secretary of defense for manpower and reserve affairs.

In announcing the appointment, Sec. of Defense Melvin R. Laird said Kelley will be instructed "to initiate an imaginative new look at our total use of manpower resources, military and civilian."

Noting that there are 3.4 million servicemen and 1.3 million civilian employes in the defense establishment, Laird said the idea of the "new look" is to eliminate waste and achieve efficiency "in the use of our most precious resource, people."

Staff Assistants Appointed at CWA

LaRoy H. Purdy, director of civic affairs for the Communications Workers since 1955, has been appointed assistant to the President of the CWA. Purdy also had directed the AFL-CIO voter registration program in the 1968 presidential campaign.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne simultaneously announced that two Washington legislative specialists have joined the CWA as administrative assistants. They are Ivan (Red) Swift, formerly legislative and political reporter for Congressional Quarterly, and John T. Morgan, who has been a special assistant at the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

Two Cities Enact Strikebreaker Ban

Laws banning employers from hiring professional strikebreakers in labor disputes and prohibiting agencies from supplying them have been enacted by city councils in Columbus, Ohio, and Oswego, N. Y.

The actions, the Typographical Union said, brings to 103 the number of U.S. municipalities that have passed such ordinances in the last eight years.

Local unions and federations lobbied for passage of the ordinances in both cities.

Senate Record:

Key Rollcall Votes On Filibuster Rule

There were three key votes in the labor-supported effort to change the Senate rules to make it easier to stop a filibuster. The effort was unsuccessful because a minority of the Senate filibustered to block action on a rules change.

Vote No. 1, on Jan. 16, was the first attempt to limit debate on the rules reform proposal. A 51-47 majority of the Senate supported this move. Voting for cloture were 34 Democrats and 17 Republicans; opposed were 21 Democrats and 26 Republicans.

Vote No. 2, immediately following, came on an appeal from the ruling of Hubert Humphrey, then the Senate's presiding officer. Humphrey ruled that the cloture vote had carried because a majority of the Senate has a constitutional right to act on its rules at the start of a Congress. The two-thirds cloture requirement of the old rules didn't apply, he said. But only 45 senators—32 Democrats and 13 Republicans—supported Humphrey. Voting to overrule him were 30 Republicans and 23 Democrats.

Vote No. 3, on Jan. 28, was a final attempt to muster a two-thirds majority to close debate, but the margin was only 50-42. On this test, 29 Democrats and 21 Republicans voted for cloture; 21 from each party opposed it.

On labor's scoreboard, votes for cloture and in support of Humphrey's ruling were Right votes (R); votes against were Wrong (W). Other symbols: PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—absent and not paired.

DEMOCRATS

	1	2	3		1	2	3
Allen (Ala.)	W	W	W	McClellan (Ark.)	W	W	W
Anderson (N.M.)	R	R	R	McGee (Wyo.)	W	W	W
Bayh (Ind.)	R	R	PR	McGovern (S.D.)	R	R	R
Bible (Nev.)	W	W	W	McIntyre (N.H.)	R	R	PR
Burdick (N.D.)	R	R	R	Magnuson (Wash.)	A	PR	A
Byrd, Harry (Va.)	W	W	W	Mansfield (Mont.)	R	W	PR
Byrd, Robert (W.Va.)	W	W	W	Metcalf (Mont.)	R	R	R
Cannon (Nev.)	A	PW	W	Mondale (Minn.)	R	R	R
Church (Idaho)	R	R	R	Montoya (N.M.)	R	R	R
Cranston (Calif.)	R	R	R	Moss (Utah)	R	R	R
Dodd (Conn.)	R	R	R	Muskie (Maine)	R	R	PR
Eagleton (Mo.)	R	R	R	Nelson (Wis.)	R	R	R
Eastland (Miss.)	W	W	W	Pastore (R.I.)	R	R	R
Ellender (La.)	W	W	W	Pell (R.I.)	R	R	R
Ervin (N.C.)	W	W	W	Proxmire (Wis.)	R	R	R
Fulbright (Ark.)	W	W	W	Randolph (W.Va.)	R	R	R
Gore (Tenn.)	R	W	A	Ribicoff (Conn.)	R	R	R
Gravel (Alaska)	W	W	PW	Russell (Ga.)	W	W	W
Harris (Okla.)	R	R	R	Sparkman (Ala.)	W	W	W
Hart (Mich.)	R	R	R	Spong (Va.)	W	W	W
Hartke (Ind.)	R	R	R	Stennis (Miss.)	W	W	W
Holland (Fla.)	W	W	W	Symington (Mo.)	R	R	R
Hollings (S.C.)	W	W	W	Talmadge (Ga.)	W	W	W
Hughes (Iowa)	R	R	R	Tydings (Md.)	R	R	R
Inouye (Hawaii)	W	W	W	Williams (N.J.)	R	R	R
Jackson (Wash.)	R	R	R	Yarborough (Tex.)	R	R	R
Jordan (N.C.)	W	W	W	Young (Ohio)	R	R	R
Kennedy (Mass.)	R	R	R
Long (La.)	W	W	W
McCarthy (Minn.)	R	R	R

REPUBLICANS

	1	2	3		1	2	3
Aiken (Vt.)	R	W	R	Hansen (Wyo.)	W	W	W
Allott (Colo.)	W	W	R	Hatfield (Ore.)	R	R	R
Baker (Tenn.)	W	W	PW	Hruska (Nebr.)	W	W	W
Bellmon (Okla.)	W	W	W	Javits (N.Y.)	R	R	R
Bennett (Utah)	W	W	W	Jordan (Idaho)	W	W	W
Boggs (Del.)	R	W	R	Mathias (Md.)	R	R	R
Brooke (Mass.)	R	R	R	Miller (Iowa)	W	W	W
Case (N.J.)	R	R	R	Mundt (S.D.)	W	W	W
Cook (Ky.)	W	W	R	Murphy (Calif.)	W	W	W
Cooper (Ky.)	W	W	R	Packwood (Ore.)	R	R	R
Cotton (N.H.)	W	W	W	Pearson (Kans.)	R	R	R
Curtis (Nebr.)	W	W	W	Percy (Ill.)	R	R	R
Dirksen (Ill.)	W	W	W	Prouty (Vt.)	W	W	W
Dole (Kans.)	W	W	W	Saxbe (Ohio)	R	R	R
Dominick (Colo.)	W	W	R	Schweiker (Pa.)	R	R	R
Fannin (Ariz.)	W	W	W	Scott (Pa.)	R	R	R
Fong (Hawaii)	R	R	R	Smith (Maine)	R	W	R
Goldwater (Ariz.)	W	W	W	Stevens (Alaska)	W	W	W
Goodell (N.Y.)	R	R	R	Thurmond (S.C.)	W	W	W
Griffin (Mich.)	R	W	R	Tower (Tex.)	W	W	W
Gurney (Fla.)	W	W	W	Williams (Del.)	W	W	W
				Young (N.D.)	W	W	W

Group Health Unit Appoints Unionists

Stanton Smith, coordinator of AFL-CIO central bodies, and Richard E. Shoemaker, AFL-CIO Social Security assistant director, have been named to a 15-member committee to promote prepaid group practice health plans.

The committee, established by the Group Health Association of America, also includes representatives of group practice programs, community groups and the following union representatives:

Vice Pres. Walter Bierwagen, Transit Union; Sec.-Treas. Edwin C. Brown, Rhode Island AFL-CIO; Albert Epstein, Machinists; James Compton, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Charles St. Croix, Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers; Curtis Treen, Rubber Workers; and John Tomayko, Steelworkers.

Assembly Agrees:

Consumer 'Agents' Needed for Public

America's consumers need business agents to protect their interests before the agencies and regulatory commissions of both federal and state governments, speakers at the 1969 Consumer Assembly agreed.

They stressed the need for knowledgeable experts to intervene as hard in the public interest as the representatives of industry and business do for their clients.

Esther Peterson, who was the first White House special assistant for consumer affairs, suggested that the Consumer Federation of America, sponsors of the assembly, build up a staff of experts to do this.

"Much more can be done under existing laws and regulations if the appropriate agencies, boards and departments will only act as they are empowered to do, and if we push them to do so," she said.

Mrs. Peterson, currently legislative representative of the Clothing Workers, noted that Congress has not yet provided funds to enforce many of the consumer protection laws now on the statute books.

The executive board of the federation, which serves as an information clearing house for some 150 affiliated groups including unions and co-ops, wired Pres. Nixon urging him to continue the post of presidential assistant for consumer affairs in the White House.

Nicholas Johnson, a member of the Federal Communications Commission, said he thought a consumer agency should be set up by legislation. But he said that in any event consumers should have their own direct representation, "responsible to you, not to Congress or the White House."

Consumer oriented groups could easily raise the money, Johnson suggested, and apply pressures of their own to the regulatory agencies.

Johnson, Federal Power Commission Chairman Lee White, Securities & Exchange Commission Chairman Manuel F. Cohen and James Nicholson of the Federal Trade Commission were questioned by a panel of four newsmen, including Sidney Margolius, consumer columnist for the labor press.

The Consumer Federation board voted its strong opposition to the so-called Uniform Credit Code being pushed by money lenders and retailers in state legislatures.

Its defects were spelled out in a speech to the Consumer Assembly by a California Municipal Court judge, George Brunn.

He charged that it would decrease the protection given borrowers in many states and permit "incredible" increases in interest rates. He said it fails to meet even "minimum standards of fairness."

In addition, Judge Brunn said, the code "is one of the most technical and difficult to understand pieces of legislation I have ever seen. . . . Retailers and finance companies have lawyers who will put this into English for them, but consumers usually do not and cannot be expected to."

The more than 400 delegates were assured by Patricia Hitt, newly-named assistant secretary in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare that the Nixon Administration would not "downgrade" consumer protection. She said its programs would be designed to "strengthen the response to consumer needs."

Sen. George McGovern (D-S.D.) reported to the delegates on the Senate's investigation of hunger in America and termed "inconceivable" the fact that starvation exists in a nation that can send men to the moon. He sharply attacked price differentials for products such as Vitamin D milk which have added nutrients or vitamins which cost producers only a small fraction of a penny to include.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) outlined a bill he has sponsored to provide federal matching grants to states to strengthen consumer protection programs. Protective legislation, he urged, should be accompanied by expanded consumer education programs.

CONSUMER ASSEMBLY delegates were urged by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.) to be watchdogs over the watchdog regulatory agencies of government which, he warned, sometimes confuse the public interest with the interest of the industries they regulate. The two-day conference was sponsored by the Consumer Federation of America.

Strict Radiation Safety Standards Pressed at Atomic Energy Parley

Los Angeles—The growing use of atomic energy and radiation in science and industry promises many benefits to the American people but must be accompanied by strict safety regulations to protect the public and workers.

That was the consensus of participants and speakers at a day-long conference here on "Atomic Radiation—Benefits With Safety," sponsored by the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO.

Nearly 200 leaders of unions and specialists on the subject of radiation attended the meeting, and took part in eight separate workshop sessions.

While centering on developments and problems in industry, the conference also explored a wide range of topics in the atomic field, ranging from dental x-rays to atomic power plants.

The conference was keynoted by Rep. Chet Holifield (D-Calif.), chairman of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy in Congress. Other speakers included Sigmund Arywitz, executive secretary of the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO and Dr. Simon Kinsman, chief of the bureau of radiological health, California Dept. of Public Health.

Holifield spoke on "the use and abuse of radiation," cited examples of radiation hazards that have become the concern of Congress, and described the work of his committee.

Radiation Defined

The use of radiation, he said, "implies the application of a nuclear or other radiation producing process to achieve some benefit." By contrast, he added, "abuse implies inadequate recognition of the radiation hazards, inadequate control either in engineering or general procedure, or both."

As an example of congressional concern over the hazards of radiation, the California lawmaker pointed to hearings that have "indicated" abuses in x-rays —faulty machines, overuse and inadequately trained operators of equipment.

At the same time, Holifield pointed to the many beneficial uses of radiation in medicine and industry, particularly the use of radioactive isotopes in the diagnosis and treatment of disease.

Arywitz deplored the need of a "permanent struggle in industrial safety" to get employers to install job safeguards and educate workers in safety, but he stressed the struggle must go on.

"There are," he said, "two great enemies of safety—greed and ignorance—employers' greed, workers' ignorance."

When workers fail to use protective clothing and available safety equipment in a non-atomic industry, Arywitz pointed out, it can lead to a broken bone, a mashed foot or a lost limb.

But similar "carelessness" in a nuclear industry, he noted, carries even greater consequences, such as "leukemia, other forms of cancer, disfigurement, lifelong pain and shorter life."

Dr. Kinsman told a luncheon session that the public's chief danger of exposure to radiation comes from the x-ray machine, and more importantly from its operator.

"A good x-ray technician can properly and safely operate lousy equipment but a lousy technician can't use good equipment," he stated.

He strongly supported proposed legislation in California to require the licensing of x-ray technicians, noting that they are "the only allied health workers not presently licensed or certified in the state."

Closing the conference, Arywitz said, "we learned long ago that we can't stop new ways of doing things when the results are socially beneficial even if side effects are harmful."

However, he concluded, unions "must insist that employers install effective safeguards and that workers respect them." Where employers won't cooperate, he emphasized, unions must fight for and win enactment of protective legislation.

Human Rights Crusader Ralph McGill Dies at 70

Atlanta—Ralph McGill, Pulitzer prize-winning editor-publisher-columnist and voice of moderation in the South, died here after a heart seizure and was buried on his 71st birthday.

Praise for his long crusade for human rights came from Pres. Nixon, former Pres. Johnson, Chief Justice Earl Warren, Georgia Gov. Lester Maddox, and other friends and foes of his anti-segregationist stance.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wired his family "we in the labor movement knew him as our friend —and so did all who cherish freedom, believe in democracy and consider our fellow man our brother."

Recalling that "it was my rare privilege to have served" with McGill on public commissions, Meany said "at the conference table as in all his work and life he was a man of rare compassion and true idealism."

Dir. Donald Slaiman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights said of him: "Ralph McGill spoke out in a forward-looking way whether it was on problems of education, poverty, race, union organization or politics. He was the supreme target of hatred by the radical right. He has left his mark on his region as no other writer in recent memory."

McGill wrote a column seven days a week for the Atlanta Constitution, of which he was editor for 30 years. The paper printed his final column Feb. 4 inside a black border. Addressed to Health. Education & Welfare Sec. Robert H. Finch, it said in part:

"It will be the greatest tragedy with the most foreboding consequences if public school officials are allowed to perpetuate dual choice systems. The freedom of choice plan is, in fact, neither real freedom nor a choice. It is discrimination."

McGill accompanied Nixon, then vice president, on a 1959 trip to Russia. The year before, he won a Pulitzer prize for a series of editorials denouncing Ku Klux Klan violence in opposition to racial equality.

Illinois Church Body Backs Grape Boycott

Carbondale, Ill.—By majority vote, delegates to the Illinois Council of Churches general assembly meeting here gave their backing to the California grape boycott.

Air Line Pilots Offer Reward for Hijackers

(Continued from Page 1)

planes. At the same time, he called for other anti-hijacking actions.

The offer of rewards by ALPA and ATA, which represents major airlines managements, followed the 12th hijack attempt of an airliner so far in 1969—ten of them successful.

Meanwhile, the House Commerce Committee opened hearings on airline hijackings with a view to finding ways of ending them.

Piracy Law

A federal anti-piracy law provides penalties ranging from 20 years in prison to death for anyone convicted of seizing an airline in flight "by violence and with wrongful intent."

In announcing the rewards, covering hijackings that have occurred since Jan. 15, 1969, the donors emphasized no reward would be paid to any person for action taken to halt a hijacking while on board an airliner.

The union has instructed pilots not to attempt resistance to hijackers because such resistance poses a threat to the safety of all passengers aboard.

ALPA's participation in the rewards, Ruby said has been under consideration for some time "as one effective measure which could be immediately implemented as a deterrent" to hijacking.

"One way we feel the reward will be effective," Ruby added, "is by lessening potential hijackers' confidence that they can escape the consequences of their actions and thereby possibly dissuade them beforehand from committing a hijacking."

ALPA's share of the rewards is being raised by voluntary contributions from pilots. Ruby observed that this "is evidence of the deep personal concern they feel about this problem and the need for positive action" to resolve it.

In urging long-range solutions to the hijacking problem, the ALPA president called for "speeded up" research and development on deterrent and protective devices against hijacking.

He also appealed for "vigorous" action by the U.S. government to secure international agreements—ultimately a world-wide agreement —providing for extradition of hijackers from the countries in which they seek haven to the countries in which their crimes were committed.

Nixon Proposals Due:

House Hearings Set On Tax Law Reform

(Continued from Page 1)

ministration's full-scale tax program would not be presented until a later date.

Subcommittees of the House Appropriations Committee will begin work after the recess on the budget submitted by the Johnson Administration—without waiting on revisions from the Nixon Administration.

House Majority Leader Carl Albert set the tone for independent congressional action when he urged the committees to "move right ahead" on legislation.

Start Moving

"I've told the chairmen to start moving on anything they've got," Albert said. "I'm hoping we can roll up a respectable legislative record by Easter."

Congress, particularly the House, has been slow in getting its committees organized — the first requirement for congressional action.

The chief lag, however, has been the paucity of legislative proposals from the new Administration.

Pres. Nixon has moved at a careful, cautious pace in setting up his Administration — and even now many key subcabinet positions have not been filled. An elaborate system of White House councils with broad responsibilities crossing department lines has been set up to evaluate existing programs and recommend revisions.

Some reorganization plans—including a spinning off of anti-poverty programs from the Office of Economic Opportunity—are reported in the works. But there is nothing approaching the flood of new, often-controversial legislative programs which marked the advent of past Democratic administrations.

Despite the early start on tax hearings, legislation may not reach the voting stage until late in this session or even the second session in 1970.

Weeks of public hearings have been scheduled on various facets of tax reform, starting with hearings on tax-exempt status of foundations.

By past precedent, additional weeks will be devoted to closed door sessions of the committee where the details of legislation are hammered out and voted on. Other issues will intervene, including the question of extension of the emergency tax surcharge which otherwise would expire in June.

One possibility is that the committee may seek to move through a bill containing the less controversial tax change proposals this year and follow it up with a fuller rewriting in the second session.

Floor and Ceiling

The Treasury Dept. staff proposals would set both a minimum and a maximum tax for high-income families.

A new tax, scaled from 7 to 35 percent, would be imposed on persons whose income from tax-free sources exceeds their taxable incomes—including some millionaires who under present law have avoided paying any tax at all.

Few people, no matter how high their income, presently pay the maximum 70 percent tax rate. But any who do would get a break from another section of the proposed revisions which would set the maximum federal tax at 50 percent of income.

To simplify tax returns and give a break to those with low incomes, taxpayers would be allowed to take a flat deduction of 14 percent of adjusted gross income if they do not itemize deductions, up to a ceiling of $1,800. Another proposal would raise the minimum standard deduction in a way that would lower the tax bite on families with incomes under $5,000.

New Training Role Promised To Labor Dept.

The Labor Dept. will take over job training programs now administered by other agencies, Pres. Nixon indicated in a meeting with key Labor Dept. staff employes.

The "primary responsibility" for manpower training "belongs here," Nixon said. "We have some reorganization plans under consideration and we're going to give the department more responsibilities."

He said the result would be a "strengthened" department.

Nixon's remarks reinforced speculation that manpower programs now operated by the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare will be shifted to the Labor Dept.

The OEO currently runs the Job Corps program and HEW has jurisdiction over work-experience programs for welfare recipients. The Commerce Dept. also has training programs under its Economic Development Administration.

Nixon's visit to the Labor Dept. was one of a series he has been making to major government departments and agencies, meeting the career civil service employes who will be carrying out the Administration's program.

North Dakota Feels Sting Of Right-to-Work Myth

Bismarck, N.D.—"Nothing could be further from the truth" than the "myth" that industry will locate in a state where wages are low and unions are discouraged—and North Dakota proves it.

That was emphasized by four-term Democratic Gov. William L. Guy as he called on the state's Republican controlled legislature to repeal North Dakota's "right-to-work" law.

Pointing out that the state has tried the low-wage "philosophy" for nearly 80 years and is still "the least industrialized state in the union," Guy added: "If low wages and weak labor laws . . . could attract industry, then we should be one of the most industrial of all states."

Guy charged that the "work" law "has protected no one" and that the low wages it fosters are driving youths out of the state. He also called for improvements in the state's "unrealistic" minimum wage law and full organizing rights for public employes.

Attack on Union Shop Exploits Under-Paid

(Continued from Page 1)

the country with financial help from the committee in an effort to undermine the grape workers' strike in California.

● James Nixon, a Negro, who has brought suit in an attempt to knock out an agency shop contract negotiated between the City of Detroit and State, County & Municipal Employes Council 77.

Howard said that his alliance hopes to raid established unions in California to form "separate" black unions. Under questioning he conceded this was "dual unionism" and he might run into trouble securing elections under the Taft-Hartley law.

Howard, who said he is vice chairman of the western region of the Congress on Racial Equality, distributed copies of a resolution passed by Los Angeles CORE supporting the open shop.

Asked whether his CORE chapter was typical of others, he admitted he knew of no other CORE group that had come out against the union shop.

He claimed that "there have been moves" within the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference "to combat" the union shop. He couldn't specifically identify any. When a reporter reminded him that the late Dr. Martin Luther King, who formerly headed SCLC, was a strong supporter of the union shop, Howard nodded assent.

Asked why he was no longer a member of UAW Local 887 at North American-Rockwell, an aircraft manufacturer, he said he was promoted out of the bargaining unit into a supervisory post at the plant.

It was brought out that North American-Rockwell has a union shop contract, which was overwhelmingly approved in a 1968 referendum conducted among the firm's 21,000 workers.

Financed Tour

Mendoza told how the committee "has sponsored me on tours" through the United States in opposition to the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee's boycott of grape growers who refuse to recognize or bargain with the union or to permit an election among the grape pickers.

He identified himself as general secretary of Farm Workers —Freedom to Work, which he said was formed "after a series of workers' rallies last fall" to oppose UFWOC.

A spokesman for UFWOC in Delano, Calif., said the organization was formed with financial backing from Giumarra Vineyards of Bakersfield and several other grape growers who have opposed union rights for their workers.

Jerry Cohen, UFWOC attorney, said the union now has a suit pending in a state court against Mendoza's organization, originally known as "Farm Workers — Freedom to Work Association," charging it with illegally taking money from an employer. "It's a company union, no doubt about it," Cohen said.

Mendoza attacked legislation in Congress, backed by UFWOC, which would give farm workers the right to join unions and bargain collectively, as other workers do.

He said he opposed the bill because it would permit the union shop and hiring hall. But Charles W. Bailey, chairman of the "work" committee's board, said the committee itself would neither support nor oppose the measure.

In introducing Nixon, Bailey praised him for leading a fight to "nullify" a contract forcing workers "to join and pay dues" to a union. Actually, an agency shop contract, such as the one in question, does not require workers to join a union. But those who do not are required to pay the equivalent of dues as a service fee, since federal law requires a union to represent and bargain for all workers in its jurisdictional unit whether they are union members or not.

In a separate development, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller scoffed at a claim that repeal of Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b), which allows state right-to-work laws, was the main goal of the recent attempt to change Senate rules.

Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D-Fla.) said changed alignments of senators showed that this was the objective of those seeking to curb filibusters, where in the past the move centered on passing civil rights bills.

"The senator, as usual, doesn't know what he's talking about," Biemiller said. "There was no realignment. . . . The civil rights advocates —and labor is proud to count itself as one—were just as determined this time as they were in the past."

Labor has fought the "undemocratic" filibuster "that Sen. Holland loves so much, every time we've had a chance," Biemiller pointed out.

CONVENTIONS

Two more state federations have announced dates and locations for 1969 conventions.

The Pennsylvania AFL-CIO will meet in Philadelphia, June 3-6, and the Wyoming AFL-CIO will convene in Rawlings, Sept. 18-20.

Labor Warns Congress on Racket Papers

Members of Congress have been warned by the AFL-CIO against shady promoters who solicit advertising for bogus labor publications.

These promoters, the federation observed, seek a quick profit by setting up a publication with "labor" or "union" in its title and then selling worthless advertising to unwary public officials or businessmen.

The warning came in a letter sent to all members of the 91st Congress by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and Sec.-Treas. Kenneth Fiester of the Intl. Labor Press Association, AFL-CIO.

The letter noted that every new Congress is considered fertile ground by these racketeers and that a number of senators, House members and their staffs have inquired about phony solicitations.

The letter noted: "These racketeers not only inflict financial loss upon their victims but do even greater damage to the good name of the labor movement. We wage constant war against them, in close collaboration with the postal authorities, the Federal Trade Commission, the National Better Business Bureau and various business associations. But for every successful prosecution, another racket seems to crop up."

Congressmen were also reminded of the AFL-CIO rule which prohibits the federation and all of its affiliates from publishing souvenir books, journals or programs containing advertising.

Biemiller and Fiester advised legislators solicited either for editorial articles or advertising to contact the ILPA before responding.

2-8-69

Sex Bias Ban Now in Force For Want Ads

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission's guideline banning sex discrimination in help-wanted advertising as a violation of the 1964 Civil Rights Act is now in effect, the commission announced.

The guideline states that the placement of job advertisements under separate male and female column headings in classified ads violates Title VII of the law "unless sex is a bona fide qualification for the position advertised.

Title VII of the act, which is administered by EEOC, bans discrimination in employment based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin.

The EEOC issued the guideline last August to become effective Dec. 1, 1968. But it was challenged by newspapers, and the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia stayed its effective date.

The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia issued an order vacating the stay.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, February 15, 1969 | No. 7

Jobless Rate Holds Steady At 15-Year Low of 3.3%

House Unit Asks 'Teeth' For NLRB

The National Labor Relations Act needs strengthening—not weakening—the House Special Labor Subcommittee said in a report charging "recalcitrant employers" with "a willful flouting" of the nation's labor policy.

The subcommittee, headed by Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.), specifically rejected employer-sponsored proposals for a so-called "labor court" to take over most of the functions of the National Labor Relations Board.

It said the labor court proposal is being pushed by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and suggested that the intent "is not to make the nation's labor policies more effective and meaningful, but perhaps to achieve the opposite result."

The report, based on hearings held by the subcommittee during the 90th Congress, was signed by all seven Democratic members and by Republican Ogden R. Reid (N.Y.).

One of its recommendations was to empower the Secretary of Labor to deny government contracts to "repeated and knowing violaters of the National Labor Relations Act."

The subcommittee also proposed:

- Authority to the NLRB to crack down on persons who do the employer's dirty work but are not actually on his payroll. An example, the report said, would be a banker who threatens to call in a loan if a worker at a plant exercises his right to join a union.
- Giving union organizers access to plants where local ordinances and traffic conditions make effective leaflet distribution impossible and where convenient facilities for union meetings are not available.
- Disqualifying attorneys from further NLRB proceedings if they are found to have advised clients to engage in violations of federal labor law.
- Making a trial examiner's recommendations final, subject only to appellate court review, unless at least two members of the NLRB think the case is important enough to warrant review.
- Requiring immediate reinstatement of a discharged employe upon a trial examiner's finding that the discharge was unlawful, unless the employer presents "good cause" to a reviewing body for not doing so.
- Giving discharged workers in unfair labor practice cases the right to sue in civil court for triple damages and costs, just as employers can now sue unions for damages from unlawful secondary boycotts.

These recommendations, the subcommittee said, are based on findings that employers and their allies in many communities are

(Continued on Page 3)

IN RECOGNITION of "all the work the AFL-CIO has done to help boys everywhere," Eagle Scout Randolph Roth presents the Scouts' 1968 Report to the Nation to the federation. Accepting for AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan. At right is Arch Monson, Jr., director of the board of the Boy Scouts of America. (Story, Page 4.)

Employment Grows For 4th Month

By Duane Emme

Unemployment in the United States held at a 15-year low of 3.3 percent in January, matching the December rate, the Labor Dept. reported.

The department's Bureau of Labor Statistics also announced that non-farm employment rose by 250,000, seasonally adjusted, to 69.5 million, the fourth consecutive month of sizable gains.

The picture was one of a much less than usual decline in total jobs and the size of the labor force before allowances for seasonal factors, while the number of unemployed rose in line with seasonal expectations.

Total unemployment in January was 2.9 million, up about 450,000 from December but down 200,000 from a year ago. The 3.3 percent jobless rate was down three-tenths of 1 percent below that of last January.

The jobless rate for adult men rose two-tenths of 1 percent to 2 percent in January. The 3.5 percent rate for adult women was unchanged over the month. The teenage rate fell 1 point to 11.7 percent.

Unemployment rates for white and non-white workers were unchanged at 3 and 6 percent, respectively.

Harold Goldstein, BLS deputy commissioner, noted that this 2-to-1 ratio between non-white and white rates of joblessness has "remained virtually unchanged" over the past 19 years.

The unemployment rate for married men held at 1.4 percent in January, the lowest point since 1955. The rate for full-time workers was 2.9 percent, up two-tenths from December.

Persons unemployed 15 weeks or longer totaled 316,000 for the

(Continued on Page 12)

For Huge Florida Project:

Crafts, Disney Sign Landmark Accord

By Saul Miller

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A labor-management agreement assuring "orderly and uninterrupted construction" at the largest private project ever put together in the United States was signed here by 18 building and construction trades unions and Walt Disney Productions and its contractors.

The project agreement covers Walt Disney World, a Florida vacation-recreation complex expected to open in 1971 that will be five times larger than California's famed Disneyland.

The agreement was signed by C. J. Haggerty, president of the Building & Construction Trades Dept., the presidents of the 18 unions making up the department, and Harry Hall, president of Allen Contracting Co., Disney's general contractor.

The joint statement issued at the signing termed the working arrangements "fair, strong and satisfying the needs of the employes, the unions, the contractors and Walt Disney World."

The agreement, the statement added, "makes possible the orderly and uninterrupted construction" of the project and puts into practice "effective and binding methods for the settlement of all misunderstandings and disputes."

Bonar Dyer, vice president for industrial relations for Disney, praised the "spirit of cooperation and good faith" of the unions during the nearly 12 months of negotiations on the agreement.

The first phase of the project will include an amusement park, several resort hotels, a large recreation complex and a transportation system. Later phases will feature a jet airport, industrial parks and a prototype "community of tomorrow." The project is located on a 43-square mile site 15 miles southwest of Orlando, Fla.

The agreement came during a meeting of the BCTD executive council here which discussed a number of problems in the con-

(Continued on Page 3)

Government Issues Credit 'Truth' Rules

Merchants and money-lenders have been told by the government exactly what information must be disclosed to credit customers and borrowers after July 1, when the federal truth-in-lending law takes effect.

The law, strongly supported by the AFL-CIO during an eight-year campaign for passage, allowed more than a year of preparation to reform the nation's consumer credit structure.

It assigned to the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System the task of translating the legislative language into specific regulations on credit and interest charge disclosure.

The board has completed its reg-

(Continued on Page 9)

Defense Dept. Yields On Textile Contracts

The Defense Dept. decided not to cancel multi-million dollar contracts with three big southern textile firms despite findings by a government agency that the companies had discriminated against Negroes and refused to take "affirmative action" to remedy the discrimination.

South Carolina's Sen. Strom Thurmond, the former Dixiecrat turned Republican, had strongly protested the proposed cancellations in a telegram to Pres. Nixon. Thurmond was a key supporter of Nixon at the GOP national convention and during the presidential campaign.

One of the firms involved was J. P. Stevens & Co., notorious for its union-busting policy involving wholesale firings of union supporters and repeated violations of federal labor law.

Also involved were South Carolina plants operated by Burlington Industries and Dan River Mills.

The Labor Dept.'s Office of Federal Contract Compliance, which is charged with enforcing the executive order barring companies which discriminate from receiving

(Continued on Page 10)

Nixon Seeks Guidance On Farm Union Rights

Pres. Nixon has asked two members of his Cabinet to get together and come up with a recommendation on whether farm workers should be covered by the National Labor Relations Act.

He handed the joint assignment to Labor Sec. George P. Shultz and Agriculture Sec. Clifford M. Hardin. It was the latest in a series of policy questions the President has assigned to his department heads for study and recommendations.

Extension of collective bargaining rights to farm workers has been a high priority legislative goal of the AFL-CIO and its United Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

It had strong support from former Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz and a farm worker bill was approved by the House Education & Labor Committee last year. But further action was blocked by strong conservative opposition.

The Farm Bureau, representing most of the biggest agricultural employers, strongly opposed bargaining rights for farm workers, and the House Agriculture Commit-

(Continued on Page 12)

Randolph Hits Flare-Up of Anti-Semitism

New York—When a worker engages in anti-Semitism he is a "disgrace to the working class," AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph told a luncheon meeting of the Atlantic Labor Press Conference here.

Anti-Semitism became an ugly issue in the recent strike of New York teachers and Randolph's was among the first major Negro voices raised in condemnation of anti-Semitism.

The former president of the Sleeping Car Porters gave strong support to the United Federation of Teachers—Local 2 of the American Federation of Teachers—for its efforts on behalf of classroom teachers in the city.

He praised UFT Pres. Albert Shanker for his leadership in the strike. "Shanker," Randolph said, "is fighting for the larger decency in life and in fighting for the teachers, he is fighting for all of us."

At the luncheon, ALPC presented its first "man of the year" award to William H. Bowe for contributions on behalf of equal rights and social justice. Bowe is secretary-treasurer of the Sleeping Car Porters and treasurer of the New York City AFL-CIO.

Luncheon speakers included Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., president of the central labor body; Pres. Frederick O'Neal of Actors' Equity; Kenneth Fiester, Intl. Labor Press Association secretary-treasurer, and Lou Levine, New York State's deputy commissioner of labor.

"MAN OF THE YEAR" award of the Atlantic Labor Press Conference went to William H. Bowe, left, Sleeping Car Porters' secretary-treasurer and New York City AFL-CIO treasurer. ALPC Pres. Albert K. Herling, center, made the presentation at a New York luncheon. ALPC Sec.-Treas. Richard Strunsky, right, was the toastmaster.

72,000 City Workers Win Gains in New York

New York—New labor agreements covering 72,000 city employes were announced here by the city and District Council 37 of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

The pacts, if ratified by members of SCME locals, will give raises of $1,100 to $1,500 by July 1, 1970, to 28,000 city clerical workers and 19,000 hospital aides and technicians.

In addition, some 25,000 employes of the Dept. of Social Services will get raises of 8 percent this year and next for caseworkers and welfare supervisors, 9 percent for homemakers now and another 9 percent next Jan. 1.

City and union negotiators agreed that since the city plans not to replace social service workers who retire, resign or die in the next 18 months, those who remain will be given raises of $340 to $400 a year to compensate for the decrease in promotional opportunities and an expected increase in workload.

Caseworkers have been earning $7,200 a year. Supervisors average about $9,500, and homemakers $4,700. Children's counselors, dental assistants and home economists will be given comparable wage increases, the parties announced.

Hospital employes scheduled a membership vote on the proposed contracts Feb. 13 and clerical workers Feb. 17. Social service employes will vote when final details of their contract have been worked out, according to SCME.

Contract negotiations for the first two groups began last November and were recessed Feb. 7 for membership votes. A major feature is a guarantee of a $6,000 minimum yearly salary by the last contract year, District 37 Executive Dir. Victor Gotbaum said.

Job Bias by Employer Held Labor Law Breach

An employer who practices discrimination against employes because of their race or national origin may be held guilty on an unfair labor practice, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled in a precedent-setting decision.

A panel of three judges upheld a National Labor Relations Board order against Farmers' Cooperative Compress of Lubbock, Tex., directing the firm to bargain with the Packinghouse Workers—now merged with the Meat Cutters—on wages and working conditions, "including the condition of race discrimination" against Negroes and Latin Americans.

The court went further, however, and said the NLRB should have decided whether the company's discriminatory policies were in themselves violations of the labor law. It sent the case back to the NLRB for hearings and a decision on the question. The court itself made it clear that it viewed the company's discrimination as a violation which should be stopped.

The decision was the first court ruling that the NLRB has jurisdiction over civil rights violations by employers under the National Laber Relations Act.

The judges said that "although we have found no cases in which an employer's policy of discrimination . . . was alleged to be a violation" of the labor act, there is no reason "why employer discrimination is exempt from Board scrutiny" since charges against unions are not exempt.

The Packinghouse Workers won an election in 1965 at the company's West Texas cotton processing mill and was certified as the legal bargaining agent for production and maintenance employes.

After more than eight months of attempted bargaining, the union called a strike in September 1966 after filing unfair labor practice charges against the employer.

The strike was still in effect when the NLRB on Jan. 23, 1968, ordered the corporation to stop its unlawful practices, to bargain in good faith with the union over economic matters and its discriminatory hiring and promotion policies, and to reinstate the strikers with backpay.

The union appealed the board's order, arguing that the NLRB should also have found that the company's policies toward minority group employes were themselves violations of the labor act. The company claimed the NLRB order was not supported by the evidence, and the board asked the appeals court to uphold its order without change.

The court ruling upholding the union's position was written by Judge J. Skelly Wright. It cited such company practices as giving a few white employes guaranteed weekly salaries, filling the highest-rated jobs "largely with whites" at $1.80 an hour, paying white weighers more money than Negroes or Latins for the same work, giving overtime work to whites and refusing it to others.

Illinois U. Honors State Labor Chief

Champaign, Ill.—The University of Illinois honored State AFL-CIO Pres. Reuben G. Soderstrom at a public ceremony here for his decades of service to labor education and the university.

Soderstrom, state federation head for 38 years, was given a certificate of appreciation by UI Pres. David Dodds Henry and Dir. Melvin Rothbaum of the university's Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations to highlight the 20th annual Central Labor Union conference.

Under Court Order:

Dock Strikers Vote On Contract Terms

New York—Nearly 22,000 striking dockworkers in this port were scheduled to vote Feb. 14 in a court-ordered referendum on whether to accept or reject contract terms offered by their employers.

Pres. Thomas W. Gleason of the Longshoremen announced that members would ballot during a seven-hour period at 15 polling places in Manhattan, Brooklyn, Staten Island and New Jersey union halls.

Gleason said the union's wage scale committee "stands by its earlier recommendation to accept the offer" of companies represented by the New York Shipping Association.

The ILA reached agreement with New York employers Jan. 14 but declined to submit the contract to a vote until all other ILA locals on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts have settled. More than a dozen "outports" still are negotiating to obtain terms keyed to the New York offer.

The New York employers' association charged that the ILA was conducting a secondary boycott in its refusal to allow a vote by members here, and the National Labor Relations Board asked for an injunction to end the strike under provisions of the Taft-Hartley law.

U.S. District Court Judge John F. X. McGohey ordered a poll of all local members by Feb. 14 but deferred action on the NLRB's request for a restraining order against the strike until a Feb. 20 hearing.

The strike started Dec. 20 at more than 20 ports from Searsport, Me., to Miami and Brownsville, Tex., after union members voted by a 13-1 margin against accepting "final" management proposals. All the strikers have stayed out while negotiators sought to wrap up settlements at every port.

The strike was the second in 1968-1969 negotiations. The dockers originally struck after their contracts expired Sept. 30 without any acceptable employer offers. Pres. Johnson halted the strike with a Taft-Hartley injunction but the walkout resumed after the 80-day order expired.

Negotiations in such key ports as Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans and Galveston were reported stymied while employers waited to see what the NLRB and the courts would do. Major issues include guaranteed work time, protection against job losses due to container-packed freight, and a money package valued at $1.60 an hour over three years.

Employers have repeatedly urged Pres. Nixon to intervene, but Nixon told a press conference he hoped collective bargaining and mediation would achieve a settlement.

Abel Victory Forecast By Wide Margin

Pittsburgh—Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel and Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Burke will win their campaign for re-election by "substantial margins," their campaign committee predicted on the basis of unofficial returns to date. Vice Pres. Joseph P. Molony won a new term without opposition.

Nearly 400,000 union members cast their ballots Feb. 11 for 50 offices in the international union and its districts in the United States, Canada and Puerto Rico.

Local union election committees have until Feb. 21 to mail official tally sheets to USWA election tellers. The tellers, aided by the Honest Ballot Association as official observers, have until May 1 to announce the result.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, the latest unofficial returns from three-fourths of the union's 3,700 locals gave Abel some 182,000 votes to about 107,000 for his opponent, Emil J. Narick, union staff member.

Burke was opposed by Morros Brummitt, former president of Aliquippa, Pa., Local 1211.

The election will settle contests for the post of district director in 10 regions. Fourteen incumbent directors and William Mahoney, national director for Canada, won without opposition.

All contests are for two-year terms beginning June 1 except for 19 AFL-CIO convention delegates.

Candidates for district director are competing with incumbent directors in these areas: District 4, New York State; 5, Quebec and Maritime Provinces; 8, Baltimore; 15, Homestead and Charleroi-Monessen, Pa.; 20, Ambridge, South Side Pittsburgh and Sharon, Pa.; 23, Steubenville, O.-Wheeling, W.Va.; 26, Youngstown, O.; 28, Cleveland, O.; 33, Minnesota and Iron Range; 36, West Coast.

BARGAINING STRATEGY for the Firemen & Oilers' current wage movement on the nation's railroads is discussed by Pres. William E. Fredenberger before the union's general chairmen in Chicago. The union, which has bargained jointly with other railroad unions in the past, is for the first time negotiating separately.

Assails Labor Court Plan:

House Unit Calls For New NLRB Penalties

(Continued from Page 1)

deliberately violating the law and the penalties the NLRB now may impose are inadequate to deter them.

It cited examples such as these:

"The calculated discharge of key union adherents . . . very often frightens the other employes from exercising the rights guaranteed by Congress.

"Recalcitrant employers are aided and abetted in their defiance of federal law by political, economic and social leaders who are anxious to recruit and maintain new industries . . . by promises of a 'cooperative' work force.

"In many situations, the employes are warned that the employer will move his plant elsewhere if they join a union. . . . Employes are visited by the merchants and the bankers, and reminded that they will be unable to obtain credit if they vote for a union. The local newspaper runs stories and editorials prophesying doom to the community and to the individual employes if they persist in unionization attempts.

"Union organizers are warned to get out of town. They are denied motel facilities within the area; they are followed wherever they go by policemen; they are threatened with violence, and sometimes physically assaulted.

"The city councils enact ordinances which severely limit the right to distribute leaflets or to solicit membership in a union.

"In many situations, the location of a plant adjacent to a busy highway makes it impossible to distribute literature . . . and under existing Labor Board doctrine the employer can post his property against union 'trespassers.'

"Often the employes are denied public and private facilities for union meetings. . . . When they meet in a park, there is surveillance by the police or by influential businessmen. In the meantime, the anti-union forces have free use of all these facilities and the employer uses his plant as a forum for anti-union information."

Against this arsenal of employer unfair labor practices, the subcommittee report found NLRB remedies to be "without teeth."

"Legalistic" notices on "a little read company bulletin board," back pay remedies that do not adequately compensate workers, "meaningless" preferential rehiring lists were among the deficiencies cited.

The subcommittee said its findings were backed up by "the cumulative testmiony of witness upon witness" at its hearings.

BUILDING TRADES leaders listen intently to a legislative report during a meeting of the executive council of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. at Bal Harbour, Fla.

Iowa Labor Conference Accents Role of Youth

Des Moines—Today's young workers will be running the unions—and perhaps the nation—a few years from now, Iowa AFL-CIO members were reminded at their annual state-wide conference here on organizing.

Responding to "accent on youth" as the conference theme, 100 delegates from more than two dozen unions braved icy roads to hear reports on organizing wins and losses, spiced with comments from two youth panels.

Four young union members told one panel meeting that while older union officers don't go out of their way to involve young members in union affairs as they should, basically it's the average youth's "own fault" if he isn't active.

"Problems of the younger workers will be paid attention to if they make themselves heard—if they bring their gripes and questions to the attention of the officers and stewards," said one panelist.

Three university students and a high school senior on another panel said they believe the average student's reaction toward unions is based on ignorance, apathy, indifference or parents' opinions. Only one had had any direct knowledge of unions—from a brother-in-law.

"If you can solve the problem of apathy, let the rest of the country know how you did it," one girl panelist advised the delegates.

Another observed that many university students are training for professional careers, and feel no need for unions.

A third said many students are from well-to-do management-type families with strong anti-labor attitudes. Their opinions in many cases are "silly," the result of "closed minds," he said.

One student panelist said he was impressed by the union members represented on the morning panel.

On the question of union democracy, a student expressed a viewpoint popular with the average unionist: "If democracy is an imperfect system, then labor is not a lot different from other groups—it has its leaders and its followers."

Panel moderators were Paul M. Larsen, regional AFL-CIO staff representative, and Edward Haines, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization. Speakers included Regional Dir. Daniel J. Healy, Chicago; state AFL-CIO Pres. Hugh D. Clark and others.

The student panel comprised Jerry Rolwes and Mrs. Connie Staples of Drake University; Jim Sweet, University of Iowa, and Judy Lester, North High School, Des Moines. The trade union panel consisted of Twyla McConnell, Ladies' Garment Workers Local 491; Marvin Hrubes, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and James J. Fitzgerald, IBEW Local 499; and Mary Ann McClimon, Machinists Local Lodge 388.

Delegates reported that last year Iowa unions won 61 percent of all the elections they engaged in. Multi-union elections were reduced from 12 to 5 by agreement, and all five were won by affiliated unions, the conference was told.

New Job Safety Standards Delayed

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz announced a 90-day delay in the effective date of strengthened safety and job health standards under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act.

The new standards, covering fire, safety, noise and air pollution, had been proposed by former Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz under the law governing firms which have federal contracts amounting to more than $10,000. They were to have gone into effect Feb. 16.

Shultz said the delay is to allow him more time to study the regulations and does not reflect an evaluation of the merits of the proposed changes.

Craft Unions, Disney Reach Landmark Pact

(Continued from Page 1)

struction industry and the trade union movement.

The council received a report from its legislative representative, Walter Mason, on the makeup of the 91st Congress and its committees and the general prospects for legislation sought by the building trades. Mason noted it was too early to forecast actions by the Congress or the Administration but said he was encouraged and very hopeful that the long-stalled common site picketing legislation would win approval this year.

The department's legislation program stresses the need for construction safety, occupational health and safety measures as well as extension of various programs in the fields of health, education and housing.

In the housing area the council heard two AFL-CIO representatives outline the federation's programs for cleaning up the slums and ghettos with low-cost housing aided by financial support from the trade union movement.

John Evans, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Urban Affairs, discussed the federation's program to spur the investment of union funds and pension and health and welfare funds in the AFL-CIO mortgage trust fund to provide financing for ghetto housing projects. His presentation and discussion also involved Robert McGlotten of the Dept. of Civil Rights.

A number of building trades union presidents indicated their interest in spurring action in this area and in examining the possibility of investing union funds.

NEW SKIPPER of the USS Samuel Gompers is Capt. Claiborne S. Bradley. He relieved Capt. Harry Risch, Jr., as commander of the destroyer tender in ceremonies at Subic Bay in the Philippines. Risch had been commander of the Gompers, named for the founder of the AFL, since its commissioning in 1967.

IUE Presses Campaign For Strict Import Labels

The American consumer is entitled to know if a product is imported and where it comes from, the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers emphasized in announcing a drive for passage of a bill to assure "truth-in-import-labeling."

IUE Pres. Paul Jennings said enactment of the measure would help make the public aware of the extent to which imports are "drastically affecting" the lives of U.S. workers. He said it would put a stop to the "blatant deception" practiced by some manufacturers in concealing the origin of a product through the use of a familiar U.S. label. Main sponsors of the bill are Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.) and Rep. Joseph G. Minish (D-N.J.).

It would require that all office, industrial or household appliances and equipment prominently show in what foreign country they were made or assembled. The label, attached at a place "conspicuous at all times," would be at least half the size of the product brand name.

Violation of the labeling requirement would constitute an "unfair or deceptive practice" under the Federal Trade Commission Act and be subject to the law's enforcement provisions.

An IUE "fact sheet" emphasized that this would be in sharp contrast to present FTC rules which allow a U.S. company to import the entire mechanism of an appliance, place it in a cabinet, and market it without showing where the mechanism came from.

This is allowed, IUE said, because the FTC defines the company as the ultimate consumer. An appliance imported without final assembly, the union said, must be labeled as to country of origin, but the label may appear on back, or even underneath the appliance, in small, inconspicuous letters.

Jennings said in a statement that there may be instances in which consumers might prefer to buy an appliance made overseas but, he added, "certainly the consumer is entitled to know where the product was made."

"And with the achievement of fair product labeling," he said "we hope the American public will realize the extent of the imports problem, which is so drastically affecting the lives of thousands of workers in this country."

He said a "shift to foreign production" cost the jobs of 2,000 Westinghouse employes, represented by IUE at Edison, N.J. and hundreds of employes recently lost jobs at Philco-Ford in Philadelphia when it shifted TV manufacturing to Japan.

He also said that nearly 8,000 employes represented by the union have lost their jobs over recent years at a Singer Sewing Machine Co., plant in Elizabethport, N.J., because Singer now imports machines from foreign subsidiaries.

CWA Leader Bill Smallwood To Step Down

Bal Harbour, Fla.—William A. Smallwood, who has served as secretary-treasurer of the Communications Workers since 1955, announced his resignation at a meeting of the CWA executive board here.

Smallwood, 60, said he is stepping down Mar. 31 for "compelling personal reasons."

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne expressed "profound regret" at the news and praised Smallwood's long service to the union. Smallwood played a leading role in building the CWA in the South, serving as district director for nine southern states from 1943 to 1955.

He served as secretary of the AFL-CIO Secretary-Treasurers Conference and as a member of the COPE Operating Committee. Smallwood was a leader in developing automatic bookkeeping systems and computer operations for unions.

Beirne said the CWA board will elect a successor before Mar. 31.

Steel Union Forms Fabrication Group

The Steelworkers' executive board has established a planning committee to consider establishment of a conference in the Fabrication industry for 500,000 USWA members not now involved in existing industry conferences within the union.

At its 1966 convention, the USWA established four industry conferences—in Basic Steel, Nonferrous, Aluminum and Can—"to bring about greater involvement and participation by the membership in the union's collective bargaining procedure." The union also has conferences in Valves and Fittings, Pumps and Compressors, Steel Foundries, Grey Iron and Malleable Foundries, Railway Car Building, and Construction Machinery and Equipment.

"This is another significant development in the union's policy of making our union as responsive to the needs of the members as possible," said Pres. I. W. Abel.

A KILLER TORNADO that whipped through the southern Mississippi hill country Jan. 23, leaving 31 dead in Hazelhurst and surrounding communities, picked up the home of young Bobbie Gilmore and dropped it into a nearby pond. Bobbie is checked for minor injuries by a Red Cross worker, top photo. Rescue workers pause for a quick snack during the cleanup operations, center photo. Claude Ramsay, left, president of the Mississippi AFL-CIO, presents a check to Thomas L. Wright, an emergency disaster fund official, bottom photo. In addition to the contribution of $500 authorized by the executive council, the state AFL-CIO has issued an appeal for individual contributions. A number of union families were affected by the twister.

Tentative Pact Reached At McDonnell Douglas

St. Louis—The Machinists reached tentative agreement with McDonnell Douglas Corp. on terms of a proposed new contract, and scheduled a meeting for Feb. 16 to vote on the offer.

IAM District 837 said details of the offer will not be published until the meeting and that meanwhile the month-old strike of nearly 18,000 bargaining unit members will continue.

Picket lines will be maintained at all locations in suburban Hazlewood and St. Charles, Mo., the union announced. It has been paying strike benefits of $25 a week to those who picket, and those payments will be continued.

The nation's first major aerospace strike in more than a year started Jan. 13 when members voted to reject a company offer they called too little. That offer included wage increases of 6 percent the first year, and an additional 3 percent in each of two following years.

Before the strike started, McDonnell Douglas employes continued to work under an extension of the contract that had a Nov. 3 expiration date.

Negotiations were delayed by a dispute over representation rights. District 837 won the right to retain legal bargaining rights after three separate elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board. The IAM beat back raids on its membership by the unaffiliated Auto Workers and Teamsters and was certified in November.

Cites Distortions:

NLRB Member Condemns Business Propaganda Drive

Tucson—Slanted and biased reports of National Labor Relations Board decisions can have only a harmful effect on the nation's collective bargaining system, NLRB member Gerald A. Brown told the University of Arizona's fifth annual conference on collective bargaining and labor law.

"Distorted accounts of the board's activities have appeared recently in the Readers Digest and other publications," Brown said.

He noted a report last year that the nation's major corporations had joined with the Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and other employer groups in a $1 million campaign to help change public opinion about the labor laws.

"The labor board welcomes honest and informed criticism," Brown said. "But I have a different reaction to an organized campaign which represents a disservice to employers, employes and the general public."

The board does not seek immunity from fair comment but is concerned "about the harmful effects of the existing well-financed propaganda campaign" against the present labor law, he told the conference.

Since Big Business launched its propaganda campaign, Brown said, he has noted these propaganda techniques in critical news stories and editorials—"the use of slanted or biased news, ridicule and belittlement, color words, fear technique, guilt by association, false conclusions from fallacious reasoning, and name calling."

He cited as "distorted accounts" those in the Readers Digest and other publications which "carefully select a few cases, gloss over or misrepresent the facts, accuse the NLRB of bias and prejudice, and conclude with emotional words predicting dire consequences for our system of free enterprise, consumers and the civil rights of all citizens."

Such accounts, Brown noted, "do not mention that almost all the cases cited have been approved by the courts" after judicial review. The "quoted authorities usually represented the losing side in the cases discussed, but this fact is nowhere mentioned."

"If a case is to be reargued before the public, both sides should be heard. It is true that the board has sometimes been reversed by the courts, but our critics ignore the fact that the reversals have been at the expense of unions as well as employers, and blame the board whatever the results."

Editorial Hit

Brown quoted a Wall Street Journal editorial of Dec. 2, 1968, asserting that in requiring employers to furnish unions with employe name-and-address lists, the board was forcing employers to help unions organize their employes. The editorial said in part:

"In this instance the board didn't even find out what employers thought. The regulation was adopted without benefit of the sort of formal rule-making procedure where companies and unions could argue for or against it. The summary nature of this action led an appeals court to declare the (Excelsior) rule invalid."

The fact is, said Brown, that the board not only heard oral arguments by unions and management but invited, and received, written briefs from the CofC and the NAM more than eight months before the Excelsior rule was adopted.

Another fact, he said, is that the rule has been approved by more than a dozen other courts besides the one cited by the business paper. The Supreme Court recently agreed to hear arguments on the one adverse ruling.

Brown produced copies of three newspaper editorials in the Macomb, Mich., Daily, the Richmond, Calif., Independent and the Northern Virginia Sun, Arlington, Va. Each editorial "appeared to represent the independent view of the paper" in which it appeared but two were identical, the board member noted. All three repeated employer charges that the board has "disregarded fraud and gross misrepresentations" by unions and "rewarded strikers for flagrant misconduct by forcing employers to reinstate them with back pay."

Board Hits Newspaper For Stalling Bargaining

A Gannett Chain newspaper that agreed to "talk forever" about pensions, insurance, sick leave, severance pay and other matters but refused to put them into contract language was not bargaining in good faith, the National Labor Relations Board ruled.

The board ordered Westchester Rockland Newspapers, Inc., doing business as the Herald Statesman in Yonkers, N.Y., to bargain in good faith with the New York Newspaper Guild and to embody any understanding reached in a signed contract.

The board overruled Trial Examiner Thomas A. Ricci who recommended last Aug. 23 that the Guild's complaint of refusal to bargain be dismissed.

"It is clear from the evidence," the NLRB said, that a management official "asserted unequivocally" on several occasions that he would not include in a contract any agreement that might be reached on several mandatory subjects of bargaining.

The examiner had concluded that the Guild, Local 3 of the ANG, made little if any protest against management's refusals. The board said, however, "any protests by the union would have been an exercise in futility" under the circumstances.

The board decision said "the announcement, in advance of a determination not to comply with the statutory requirement to reduce any understanding reached to a signed and binding agreement, displays the absence of a good-faith intention to conclude an agreement."

Such avoidance of the law is a violation and in addition, by stating that it would not include even existing company policies in a contract, the paper "foreclosed bargaining with respect to these mandatory areas," the board said.

This, it ruled, is "tantamount to a refusal to negotiate about such subjects . . . and each instance is an independent violation."

The union was certified as bargaining agent for circulation department employes June 6, 1967, and from that date until Dec. 27, 1967, held 22 bargaining meetings without any effective result. It filed charges against the paper more than a year ago.

Democrat Backed In Wisconsin Race

Wisconsin Rapids — A liberal young member of the Wisconsin legislature won labor's unanimous endorsement as a candidate for Congress in a special election to be held Apr. 1.

Dave Obey, 29-year-old assistant Democratic leader in the state Assembly, was backed by delegates to the 7th Congressional District COPE meeting covering 14 counties in north-central Wisconsin.

The special election is to fill the House seat vacated when Republican Melvin Laird was named Secretary of Defense. Obey faces only token opposition in the Mar. 4 primary when Republicans will also pick their candidate.

Top Boy Scouts Say Thanks for AFL-CIO Aid

Outstanding representatives of Boy Scouting in America met around one table as guests of the AFL-CIO when 15 "Report to the Nation" Scouts and Explorers wound up a week-long tour of Washington with a lively dinner-discussion led by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph Keenan.

Keenan, who is secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, was on hand to accept, on behalf of Pres. George Meany and the AFL-CIO, the Scouts' presentation "report" and commemorative paperweight.

In making the presentation, Eagle Scout Randolph A. Roth of Lafayette, Calif., cited "all the work the AFL-CIO has done to help boys everywhere."

William Moody, administrator of the Maritime Trades Dept., and Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities, helped Keenan field informed questions by the Scouts on many phases of national economic life — from guaranteed jobs to Medicare and a reduction of the voting age to 18.

"We're the people's lobby," said Keenan, speaking of the AFL-CIO role in the community. "Our only purpose is to help our fellow men; our special interest is the people who are unfortunate."

Keenan summed up by urging the Scouts to "give us a chance as you go through life. Check the record—don't let others influence you. You'll see that the AFL-CIO has been in the vanguard of the fight to get social security, widow's pensions, good schools and, most recently, legislation providing 10 million low-cost housing units for the inner city—a bill passed with labor's backing, but which must now be funded by the Appropriations Committee."

Labor's forces must now be trained on the same target as the Boy Scouts' Boypower '76 Project —the ghetto, Keenan observed.

Decent housing and jobs are labor's aim, he noted, while the Scouts are directing their energies toward reaching a "representative" third of all U.S. boys by 1976—which means a much increased membership coming from the urban inner cities.

Bargaining Brings Solution:

L&N Pact Resolves Rail Crew Dispute

Settlement of a dispute over train-crew sizes on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad has been cited by the United Transportation Union as "proof that good faith bargaining" can resolve labor-management differences in the industry.

The settlement, reached in long negotiating sessions in Louisville, provides that L&N will employ a conductor and two trainmen on half of its freight train crews, while the other half remain subject to negotiation.

If no agreement can be reached on the makeup of the remaining 50 percent of the crews in six months, the matter will be referred to UTU Pres. Charles Luna and L&N Pres. W. U. Kendall for disposition.

If they can't reach an agreement, the parties may revert to self-help after 30 days. This means the management could arbitrarily set sizes on unresolved crews or the union could strike over the issue.

The agreement on the 1-and-2 makeup covers 250 crews, many of which previously operated with only a single trainman.

The procedure is similar to that set in accords reached previously on the crew-size issue between UTU and 52 other railroads. It has led to complete agreements without walkouts.

However, UTU has stressed that the L&N settlement is "particularly important" because the dispute there and similar disputes on the Illinois Central and the Belt Railway of Chicago were handled by a presidential emergency board in December.

The brunt of the union's case before the board was that the three carriers had "refused to bargain realistically" ever since 1966 when the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the legality of notices served by the Railroad Trainmen, now part of UTU.

In a report to Pres. Johnson, the board made no recommendations except that the parties continue to bargain. It said it saw no reason why the issue couldn't be settled that way, "as has been done in the greater part of the industry."

Recalling the history of the dispute, UTU noted that its members were forced to strike L&N before the board was appointed, and again briefly in January when negotiations again reached a stalemate.

The second strike was halted by a court injunction, but the walkout also produced a new round of negotiations which led to the settlement.

"In the final analysis," Luna said. "an agreement can be reached if both sides will sit down across the table from each other and iron out their differences."

UTU expressed hope that the L&N settlement will pave the way for settlement of other disputes over crew sizes still pending on more than 30 railroads, including the IC, the Belt and several other major carriers.

Active in negotiating the agreement on the L&N were UTU's general chairmen on the line, J. M. Hicks (L&N proper) and J. G. Daughtery (North Carolina & St. Louis division) and UTU Vice Pres. J. P. Saunders.

LAUNDRY WORKERS' Local 52 in Los Angeles celebrates its affiliation with the AFL-CIO Laundry & Dry Cleaning Union after disaffiliating from a union previously expelled by the AFL-CIO. From left, William E. Pollard of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, Sec.-Treas. Sam H. Begler of the AFL-CIO Laundry Workers, Local Sec.-Treas. Harold E. Chandler, Local Pres. Richard C. Vasquez, and AFL-CIO Laundry Workers Pres. Russell R. Crowell.

Dues Boosted By Connecticut State AFL-CIO

Hartford, Conn.—The Connecticut AFL-CIO voted to raise monthly per capita payments by affiliates from 8 cents to 11 cents at a one-day convention here.

Pres. John J. Driscoll of the state labor council said 9 cents of the dues will be used for current operating expenses and 2 cents would go into the Committee on Political Education fund.

In a convention resolution, the delegates pledged to oppose any attempt in the legislature to increase the state sales tax from the current 3.5 percent to 5 percent.

Any increase in the tax, the resolution stated, would cause an undue burden on those who could least afford it—the low-wage earners and retired workers living on fixed incomes.

As an alternative, the council proposed a tax on excessive income from securities dividends and a tax on insurance company operations. It also suggested a payroll tax to be paid solely by employers without any contribution from workers.

The council proposed a campaign to amend the state unemployment compensation law so that workers involved in labor-management disputes would be eligible for benefits after seven weeks out of work. Currently, workers on strike are not eligible for benefits no matter how long they are out of work.

The fall session of the state AFL-CIO convention has been set tentatively for Sept. 11-12 in New Haven, Driscoll reported.

Big Laundry Local Returns to AFL-CIO

Los Angeles—A 6,000-member laundry workers local here has joined the AFL-CIO Laundry & Dry Cleaning Union after disaffiliating from a union expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957.

Local 52 was granted a charter of affiliation in ceremonies at its headquarters attended by Pres. Russell R. Crowell of the Laundry Union, representatives of the Los Angeles AFL-CIO, and officers, members and friends of the local.

The local also celebrated by holding an "open house." It recently moved into a new building at 920 South Alvarado Street.

The affiliation closely followed settlement of a legal suit brought by the Laundry Dry Cleaning & Dye House Workers, which was expelled from the AFL-CIO for failure to clean out corrupt elements.

The suit had sought to block Local 52's disaffiliation. A counter suit by the local would have prevented the international from interfering. However, both parties agreed to drop their court actions.

Local 52 Sec.-Treas. Harold E. Chandler said affiliation with the AFL-CIO Laundry Union carried out the wishes of a vast majority of members who had signed a petition demanding return to the federation.

He pointed out that the strength of the 13.6-million-member AFL-CIO and the 500,000-member Los Angeles AFL-CIO would be of immeasurable benefit to the local's members and their families.

"It is only through a unified labor movement that laundry and dry cleaning workers can attain real industrial democracy," Chandler declared, adding:

"United strength in organizing spells economic progress for laundry workers and united strength in politics means political representation and protection of these gains."

Among those taking part in the affiliation ceremony, in addition to Crowell and Chandler, were Local 52 Pres. Richard C. Vasquez; Local Vice Pres. Jack Begler; Sec.-Treas. Sam H. Begler of the AFL-CIO Laundry Union; Abe Solomon, Clayton James and Henry M. Romiguierre, vice presidents of the union; and William E. Pollard, staff representative, AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights.

Community Aid Brings Laundry Union Victory

Phoenix, Ariz.—Strong community support was credited with helping the Laundry & Dry Cleaning Union win its first contract in the state of Arizona.

Union members voted unanimously to ratify a one-year contract with the Phoenix Linen & Towel Supply Co. For nearly 200 low-paid workers the pact will result in wage increases averaging 14 cents an hour, a minimum wage of $1.35 an hour, six paid holidays, one and two-week vacations, grievance procedures, and arbitration of unsettled disputes.

Sec.-Treas. Wellayne Lowery of the union's new Local 369 called it a "humble beginning" after an eight-month struggle with the laundry employers' association. But national union Sec.-Treas. Sam H. Begler predicted the pact would be a "big breakthrough" to contracts with other Phoenix laundries and with service trades firms.

Most of the Latin-American and Negro employes of the laundry were paid $1.15 an hour before a new federal minimum wage provision raised the minimum to $1.30.

Management previously provided a one-week vacation after five years of continuous service. Because of rapid turnover, few, if any, production employes ever achieved enough tenure for vacation.

In a National Labor Relations Board election held last May, employes voted for union representation, 133-41. When negotiations dragged, union members staged a community-wide consumer boycott. It won the support of Arizona State University students, clergymen, civil rights groups and the city and state labor federations.

Students led by the Mexican-American Student Organization demanded that the university void its contract with the linen supply firm, and filed charges of racial discrimination against the laundry with the state Civil Rights Commission.

The union filed charges of discrimination with the National Labor Relations Board, and union supporters handbilled city shopping centers in support of the don't patronize campaign.

The boycotted firm finally reached agreement with the union but others are still holding out. Employes of Mission Linen Supply voted for the union 24-1 nearly a year ago but Mission has not yet come to terms on a contract, according to Ted Caldez of the AFL-CIO regional staff.

New Governor Has ACWA Roots

Baltimore—To old-timers in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers here, Maryland's Gov. Marvin Mandel is still "Harry's boy."

Harry Mandel, who died six years ago, is still remembered as one of the pioneer leaders of the union who helped bring his shop into the ACWA in 1916 and remained an active member all his life.

His son, the state's new governor, held an ACWA card also when he was attending law school and worked part time as a shipping clerk in the shop where his father worked as a cutter.

FTC Proposes Curbs On Marketing Games

The Federal Trade Commission has proposed new rules to halt "unfair and deceptive practices" by the food retailing and gasoline industries in promoting games of chance.

The agency said that, based in part on a staff study of the games, it has reason to believe such practices "are widespread in the industries involved."

One proposed rule, applicable to both supermarket and gasoline station games, would make it an unfair and deceptive practice for industry members, promoters and manufacturers to "manipulate or rig a game so that prizes are dispersed on a pre-determined basis."

The rule would forbid the advertising or promotion of games so as to misrepresent by any means, directly or indirectly, participants' chances of winning any prize.

Further, it would require clear disclosure of such material facts as the exact number of prizes in each category or cash denomination to be awarded in a specified area during a specified period of time.

A second rule, restricted to the gasoline industries, would bar a gasoline supplier from coercing retail dealers to participate in their games of chance.

RandolphFund Expands Staff, Widens Scope

New York—Creation of two new departments within the A. Philip Randolph Education Fund —one for educational affairs, the other for employment and economic development, was announced here.

Bayard Rustin, the organization's executive director, said the new departments and additional staff will help the fund to better concentrate its energies "in those areas of vital concern to the Negro people."

Mrs. Dollie Robinson, an assistant to the director of the Labor Dept's. Women's Bureau under Pres. Kennedy, will head the educational affairs department. It will help develop quality integrated education and improved relations between parents and teachers.

As a former organizer of hospital workers for State, County & Muncipal Employes Council 37, Mrs. Robinson helped unionize psychiatric and medical social workers in New York hospitals.

Winston H. Lockett will head the department of employment and economic development, which will bring up-to-date information on employment and economic issues to the attention of civil rights and community groups.

Before coming to the fund, Lockett was an organizer for the Service Employes Union. He was a director of CORE's midwest region from 1963 to 1965.

The Depths of Cynicism

THE NATIONAL Right to Work Committee, the creature of anti-union employers intent on weakening and ultimately destroying the trade union movement, has reached a cynical low as the "friend and protector" of the worker's rights.

Over the years it has paraded across the country with high-blown rhetoric about freedom and liberty to the point where the public disbelief was nearly complete and total. For the simple facts quickly surfaced—that the aim was freedom to exploit workers through low wages, company-dictated working conditions and a complete lack of job security. Keeping unions weak and off balance would produce these results in the minds of the right-to-workers, who dreamed of an earlier century when employers ruled as absolute monarchs.

Its campaigns discredited and voted down wherever they surfaced, the Right to Work Committee revised its blatant approach, updated its public relations and tried the "reasonable" approach, this time with ads and other materials that on examination were found to be filled with distortions, quotes ripped out of context, vague or non-existent attributions of statements and all the rest of the pitchman's bag of tricks.

Now it has reached what can only be described as the bottom rung of a descent into abject cynicism. It has rounded up a few men who typify the most exploited groups in the nation—workers who have been exploited by the anti-union, ultra-conservative forces over the years—and declared that these workers demonstrate the need for right-to-work laws.

THE WAY TO THIS PROTECTION is to join forces with a phony strikebreaker who is traveling the country trying to break the farm workers' strike and the boycott of the gallant men and women in the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee against the table grape growers of California.

It is to join forces also with those badly misguided workers in the Negro community who have opted for black separatism, who in their turn to a racist approach would help weaken the trade union movement—the force that has helped bring human dignity and an end to exploitation to black and white workers alike by the millions.

And the right-to-workers have reached out also to the large area of poorly paid government employes to try and break a surging tide of unionism and organization among public workers—again black and white alike.

To use the poorest and the most exploited to insure that they will remain both poor and exploited by weakening the strength of the unions that can best give them aid and protection is an approach that no decent, self-respecting American citizen can tolerate.

There is inherent, perhaps, in this latest affront to conscience the final gasps of an organization that cannot by its very nature make a contribution to American society except to defile it.

But it is vital that the Naional Right to Work Committee be kept under relentless exposure so that its attempts to further exploit the current ills of our society are stymied, and reasonable and civilized men can go about the task of providing decent living standards, good jobs at good pay for the farm worker, the public worker and the most cruelly exploited of all, the black worker.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

*George M. Harrison	David Dubinsky	Joseph Curran
M. A. Hutcheson	Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky
A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton
Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	Paul Hall
Herman D. Kenin	*John J. Grogan	I. W. Abel
P. L. Siemiller	David Sullivan	Hunter P. Wharton
Paul Jennings	A. J. DeAndrade	Ralph Helstein
William Pollock	Max Greenberg	John H. Lyons

Deceased*

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, February 15, 1969 No. 7

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

New Formula–Same Poison

Muskie Spurs Consumers:

'Voices, Votes, Pocketbooks' Hold Key to Safe Environment

The following is excerpted from an address by Senator Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.) to Consumer Assembly '69.

UNFIT FOR HUMAN consumption! Do not drink this water! No bathing—beach closed! Are these the signs inevitable of a modern industrial society? Or are they indicators of decay, lack of concern, and disregard for resources?

Today throughout America these signs mark centuries of neglect of our water resources. Headlines such as "Lake Erie is dying" and "pollution takes toll" appear daily across the nation.

And they apply not only to our water supply. Air pollution occurs with increasing frequency. Air pollution alert systems have been established in many of our major cities as though we were at war. Emphysema, bronchitis and other chronic respiratory diseases continue to increase in geometric proportions.

And our landscape is scarred. Land developers, highway builders and strip miners have laid waste to the contryside with little or no regard to erosion or siltation control. We abandon our litter and bury and burn our garbage with little or no thought to the environmental effects or to the waste of resources.

The environment we live in is more than skies, streams and open spaces. Highways and buildings are part of modern man's habitat. A highway built without regard to the integrity of a community can destroy the vitality and degrade the quality of that community. . . .

We demand changes. We react to dirty air, foul odors, vile water, noise and ugliness with disgust. We demand changes. . . .

We intend to overcome the challenges and the resistance, but we can't do the job alone.

We need the active support of consumers who care about a better environment. We need their participation in the educational and legislative job to be done.

Unfortunately, too many people, for too long, have assumed that participating in a democracy begins or ends at the ballot box. City, state and federal government have functioned in the abyss of public neglect. Those who can afford constant representation in the halls of Congress, in legislative lobbies and in city halls have dominated the decision-making procedures—often because of their constant presence.

The public—the consumer—has abdicated civic responsibility on a "let George do it" basis. The result in terms of our environment has been devastating and will worsen. Too frequently that which is destroyed today cannot be recovered tomorrow. . . .

UNFORTUNATELY, government develops vested interests which become more concerned with self-perpetuation than with social values. Sometimes economic interests and government agency interests become so intertwined that the public cannot distinguish between the two. When this continues for a long time, a clash between individual citizens and the combined forces of public agencies and private interests are almost inevitable.

Government has an obligation to provide and the public has a right to demand built-in safeguards. . . . The safeguards cannot be limited to public hearings and beautification measures. The public is entitled to and must demand alternative methods for meeting specific goals. . . .

But consumers will have to educate themselves and work for better solutions if public officials and corporate executives are to respond. The power of voices, votes and pocketbooks will have to be combined.

Man is affronted by his environment today because he has ignored it in the past.

We can never achieve the environment of our past, but we must recognize, as James Fenimore Cooper said in The Prairie, "The air, the water and the ground are free gifts to man and no one has the power to portion them out in parcels. Man must drink and breathe and walk and therefore each man has a right to his share of each."

Gardner Calls Housing Major Problem of Cities

"There is no other problem of the cities on which federal action is more urgent" than the need for decent housing for low-income families, national Urban Coalition Chairman John Gardner declared in a recent speech.

Gardner warned that "private enterprise, unaided by public subsidy, cannot produce the 6 million units" called for in the 1968 Housing & Urban Development Act, and he urged Congress to provide full funding for the program.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan is a co-chairman of a Coalition task force on housing needs.

In Struggle for Union Rights:

Chavez Terms Grape Boycott Farm Workers' 'Gate of Hope'

Following are excerpts from an article by Cesar Chavez, director of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, AFL-CIO, which appeared in the Washington Post, Sunday, Feb. 9:

IN NEARLY EVERY major city of the United States today there are California-based union farm workers. They are there, they hope temporarily, to promote the boycott against California grapes and to seek broad understanding and support from the consumer community.

They are far from their homes and most of their relatives. They are away from their friends, living new lives in strange places under extremely difficult conditions. Why do they do it? Because there is no other way forward. The alternative is to stand still, and in so doing to hand down to their children the same bleak frustration of their lives, with no security, no dignity and very little hope.

The consumer boycott is the only open door in the dark corridor of nothingness down which farm workers have had to walk for so many years. It is a gate of hope through which they expect to find the sunlight of a better life for themselves and their families. To get from where they are to where they want to be, they must go together. They must organize, and for workers that means to unionize.

A reasonable person might ask, "Aren't there legal procedures for determining the rights and the wishes of workers with respect to having unions?"

The answer is "Yes" for millions of American workers—but not for farm workers. They are specifically excluded from the coverage of the federal law that assures and protects the rights of other workers to organize and to bargain collectively. The same person might say, "But surely some reasonable procedure could be worked out to determine the wishes of the workers and give them some equal treatment where these rights are concerned?"

Such a proposition sounds reasonable. As a matter of fact, hundreds of priests, rabbis, ministers, professors, industrialists and others have thought so, and have offered their services as third party participants. The employers have turned down every such effort.

Denied the protection and procedures under the federal law and faced with the growers' refusal even to discuss the matter of union recognition, the workers were forced to choose between striking and crawling. They say they will no longer be the last vestige of the "crawling American." They struck.

The built-in pitfalls of farm-labor strikes became immediately apparent. Local courts, free to take jurisdiction of each and every complaint against the union, went into action. Judges and public officials who have long been a part of the power structure in agriculture-dominated communities, are "soft" on growers. Injunctions were quick and devastating.

The gates that the injunctions opened in the picket lines were soon filled with masses of strikebreakers—green-card visa holders from Mexico with easy entrance into the United States because of the laxity of the government in enforcing its immigration policy.

Faced with such limitations on the strike's effectiveness, the farm worker reinforced his strike activities by introducing the boycott, which he realized was his last best hope of success, not by choice but by process of eliminating the other alternatives where unfair and inequitous treatment jeopardized any chance of real success.

The current boycott was started well over a year ago against one company, Giumarra Vineyards Corp. in the Bakersfield area of California, probably the nation's largest shipper of fresh table grapes. To frustrate the boycott the Giumarra company started shipping its grapes in cartons bearing the labels of its competitors. Whereas Giumarra normally shipped under a half dozen labels, suddenly there were 50 or 60 labels available to them, lent by their "competitors."

THE RESISTANCE to the farm-workers' organizational efforts has been massive. Numerous lawsuits, totaling millions of dollars, have been filed against the union. There has been constant harassment in the courts, both through civil suits and action by local constabulary. Dealing in double standards doesn't bother the growers a bit. The National Labor Relations Act protects both employes and employers. The industry is fighting bitterly to prevent the farm workers from being covered by that part of the law which protects the workers' rights. Yet the growers have instituted several massive legal cases with the National Labor Relations Board to force coverage where the rights of the employers are concerned.

Phony wage data and economic statistics are part of the resistance propaganda. The growers and their supporters quote California farm wages as the best in the nation—piece work averages of $2.50 per hour. They fail to mention that these are wage statistics that are built up during long hours at harvest peak under optimal piece-work conditions. Neither do they mention the fact that frequently the mother and father are the payroll statistic but all their children may be in the field picking with them and having their production credited to the parents, thereby inflating the wage rate.

The facts are that by management's own admission a healthy, energetic, highly skilled grape harvester getting the maximum hours among all grape workers and working under the best of conditions can expect to make between $3,000 and $3,500 per year. Those are poverty level wages and he is the elite—the cream of the crop—with respect to earnings. Imagine how it is with the others.

In reality, whether the wages are more or less has little to do with the real issue, which is: Do farm workers have rights similar to those of other workers, or are they to be relegated to second-class citizenship simply because they are farm workers?

In Public and Congress:

Support Grows for Program Of National Health Insurance

GROWING PUBLIC and congressional support for national health insurance makes the proposal more politically feasible this year than in recent years, the AFL-CIO's social insurance expert reported in the Mutual Radio Network interview, Labor News Conference.

"People are becoming very much concerned about unmet health needs in this country," declared Bert Seidman, director of the Dept. of Social Security. He said that generally favorable experience of the Medicare program has demonstrated the effectiveness of meeting those needs "on a comprehensive basis."

The union spokesman cited a recent national Harris poll showing that 57 percent of those responding favored "a system of Medicare for everyone."

That is "essentially what national health insurance is," Seidman explained, and such strong support is particularly significant, since this has not been a "burning issue in Congress in recent years."

Seidman stressed that a national health insurance program would make comprehensive health and medical care, including prevention, diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation, available to all Americans, but would not prevent anyone from receiving care and treatment outside the system. He turned aside the suggestion that such a system would be a "poor care" program.

"WE WOULD TRY to put in the incentives to make it a program of excellent medical care . . . for the entire population, as is now the case in many other countries," he asserted.

He said that there is wide misunderstanding about the amount of health insurance that people now have and what it covers. Although a "considerable portion of the population, perhaps as high as 70 or 80 percent, has coverage for hospitalization," only a much smaller proportion is covered for medical services other than surgical.

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE FAMOUS EDITOR Horace Greeley once said "Go West, Young Man," and by and large the American people have been following that advice. The East, nevertheless, and its jobs still hold its millions.

The Bureau of the Census, not content with waiting for the 1970 census returns, has just come up with some statistics that it has never covered in depth before—what the nation's metropolitan areas will look like in 1975.

These projections show that the 10 most populous metropolitan areas will show five in the East with a population of 25,832,000; three in the Middle West with a population of 13,818,000, and two in the West with a population of 13,518,000.

The figures show that while the West is still the fastest growing section in the country, the westward movement has slowed down somewhat. In 1790 when the first census was held, the center of population in the then United States was 23 miles east of Baltimore, near Chestertown, Md.

It has been moving westward ever since. By 1900 it had reached Columbus, Ind. It stayed in Indiana until 1950 when it crossed the Wabash and landed in Olney, Ill. By 1960 it had moved to Centralia, Ill. The 1970 figures, of course, are not in and the Bureau of the Census isn't making any predictions but the center is still likely to be in Illinois.

What the newest bureau figures show is the increasing pace at which Americans are becoming the inhabitants of metropolitan areas—not merely core cities which are losing population but of larger areas which take in adjacent suburbs—all more or less dependent on the same economic factors that hold them and the core cities together, in a sometimes uneasy alliance.

The Census Bureau, despite the westward trek now, comes up with the surprising prediction that New York City will still be the nation's largest metropolitan area in 1975 in spite of all the troubles that beset it and the dire predictions of collapse that surround it.

Although Los Angeles will have closed the gap considerably, it will still be number two. The figures are: New York 12,078,000, up 6.3 percent since 1965; and Los Angeles 9,893,000, up 25.6 percent.

THE NEXT EIGHT largest metropolitan areas show varying rates of growth—one even shows a loss—Chicago, 7,288,000, up 9 percent; Philadelphia, 5,080 000, up 9 percent; Detroit, 4,174,000, up 4.7 percent; Boston, 3,334,000, up 4 percent; San Francisco, 3,625,000, up 17.7 percent; Washington, D. C., 3,034,000, up 25.9 percent; Pittsburgh, 2,306,000, down 3.3 percent; and St. Louis, 2,356,000 up 7.2 percent.

The 1965-75 projection shows that cities of between 1 and 2 million will grow the fastest of all. These include Atlanta, up between 21 and 25 percent; Dallas, up between 21 and 25 percent; Denver, up between 20 to 25; Houston, up between 21 to 25; Miami, up between 23 and 24; San Bernardino (Calif.), up between 31 and 35; and San Diego, up between 19 and 23.

What is surprising about the growth of the West and its wide-open spaces is the concentration of population in its metropolitan areas. For instance, by 1975 there will be 28 million Westerners living in city conglomerates and only 10 million in non-metropolitan areas. The ratio in the far smaller Northeast will be 41 million in metropolitan areas as compared with 11 million in non-metropolitan areas.

The North Central and South will divide their population somewhat more evenly. The North Central will have 35 million metropolitan inhabitants as compared with 23 million in non-metropolitan areas. The South will be just about half and half—34 million to 33 million.

Greeley said, "Go West, Young Man." But for today's young man, there are all sorts of choices.

WITH GROWING public and congressional support, national health insurance is more politically feasible this year than in recent Congresses, AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman, center, told Jerome Brazda of Washington Report on Medicine & Health and Judith Randal of the Washington Evening Star on Labor News Conference. The public service program is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on Mutual Radio.

How To Buy:

Functions of FTC Hampered By Meager Funds, Weak Law

By Sidney Margolius

THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION is the main federal agency that protects you against deceptive advertising, many types of fraud, and price fixing. This agency is one of the few places you can complain to about false ads or frauds, and if not get actual redress, at least have a lever to get a merchant or manufacturer to listen to you and to warn other people.

But accusations against the FTC have spotlighted many weaknesses. In the latest of criticisms going back many years, a group of law students who studied the FTC complained that this is a sleepy, secretive cop.

Much of the blame was put on the chairman of the FTC. But now the blame has begun to spread to other members of the commission, and even to commissioners of other regulatory agencies who may say they didn't know what was going on in their own commissions. At the recent Consumer Federation of America Consumer Assembly, this responsibility was pinned on to other commissioners too, by questioners at a session on regulatory agencies.

In the face of today's mass advertising with its apparent power to make people respond like so many puppets, Congress has starved the FTC. While the national production has increased 350 percent in the past decade, FTC's appropriation has increased only 30 percent.

In one recent year, just one advertiser, Procter & Gamble, spent $24 million to introduce just one soap product, Bold. This compares with the $14 million Congress gave the FTC for all its ad and price policing work that year.

Because of its inability to keep up with even most deceptions on a case-by-case basis, FTC recently has tried to establish fair-practice guides for various industries. But while this may be helpful in some cases, it doesn't quite work either.

For example, the FTC has set up trade practice rules for the jewelry industry. But the Jewelers Vigilance Committee in New York has assembled a big collection of substandard gold and silver jewelry foisted on the public by unscrupulous manufacturers.

The fact is that sometimes jewelry you may buy stamped "14K," or "sterling," really does not contain that much gold or silver.

Another obstacle to adequate protection is that the law under which FTC operates makes it possible for a questionable practice to go on a long time before the FTC can issue a desist order. Even then the order carries no penalty. FTC merely says, "Go and sin no more, at least not in exactly this way." As one example, it has been arguing for years over Geritol ads.

I recently reviewed the FTC citations for several years and found that often it takes from two years to as much as six until a final FTC desist order is issued.

For example, in the case of alleged fictitious pricing in Spiegel's mail-order catalog, the acts occurred in 1962 and '64. But the final order was not issued until 1968. By that time the advertiser had stopped the practice. A complaint against 1966 Bufferin ads did not become an official order until 1968, and so on.

Sen. Warren D. Magnuson (D-Wash.) is sponsoring an amendment to the FTC Act which would enable FTC to move faster. This amendment, as explained by Michael Pertschuk, Senate Commerce Committee general counsel, would permit FTC to get a preliminary injunction if the Commission can show that there is a threat of injury to the public if the activity were allowed to continue pending appeal.

THE MAGNUSON AMENDMENT passed the Senate last year but died in the House Commerce Committee for lack of interest.

Pertschuk reports that the Johnson Administration had recommended this bill for passage just before it left office. Sen. Magnuson plans to reintroduce the bill this spring.

Of course, authority to issue preliminary injunctions would be significant only if the FTC uses it with determination to protect American families against deception. But passage of the Magnuson bill would be one of the most immediately practical actions Congress can take to help protect you from misleading selling.

The last thing we want is the notion one newspaper has suggested, that FTC may not be worth saving.

At least now, when you feel a seller is making misleading claims for a product or for the guarantee, you still can call the FTC if there is an office in your city. Or you can write to the Federal Trade Commission, Washington, D.C. 20580.

Copyright 1969 by Sidney Margolius

FIRE FIGHTERS' Local 136, Dayton, O., has trained 88 members as referral specialists to direct people in trouble to an appropriate city agency. Attending graduation exercises were, from left, Stanley Wysor, AFL-CIO Community Services representative in Dayton; Whitney Scharzer, assistant city manager, IAFF Sec.-Treas. Albert E. Albertoni; Robert A. Rosekrans, CSA assistant director; and Local 136 Pres. Claude Henley.

To Keep Up:

Job Shifts Demand Continued Learning

HOW WOULD YOU like to learn a new job every 10 years, or keep going to school for most of your adult life?

This, according to a University of Michigan authority, may be the normal pattern for all of us by the year 2000—just 30 years from now.

Economist William Haber, adviser to the university executive officers and former dean of the College of Literature, Science and the Arts, said our technological revolution will make old jobs obsolete and demand of us new knowledge—with the result that "commencement" will in fact be the beginning and not the end of one's education.

"It is a devastating statistic to realize that many millions of Americans now hold 'dead-end jobs'—jobs that are not going anywhere and which are disappearing every day," Haber said.

He noted that more than 50,000 elevator operators were displaced by the push-button elevator in Manhattan alone in the period of a decade. Unskilled jobs in agriculture are almost gone, and the "great reservoir for the less educated which agriculture used to provide has disappeared."

The "bright future jobs," the U-M economist said, require more education. "These jobs are in the professions and the professional aides, in interior design, in beautification, in the arts, in research, in teaching and preaching, in public service—a vast expansion of jobs which have nothing to do with making things but are related to making life more tolerable for everyone."

Haber cited some figures which indicate the scope of the technological revolution now going on: outlays for research and development grew to $25 billion by 1965, an increase of more than 700 percent in just two decades.

"The result has not only been the creation of a vast area of new products and materials, and a new methodology," he explained. "It has also created new markets and led to a vast explosion of knowledge simultaneously with a rather rapid obsolescence of knowledge. . . . We have probably advanced more in technological terms during the past 50 years than in the preceding 2,000 years."

COUPLED WITH the research revolution—highlighted by the computer and by automation—has come a "revolution in skills," Haber said. "This is a service-oriented society. Since 1954 when the U.S. census first told us that more than half of the work force was engaged in providing services rather than in making things, the proportion of our people involved in production of goods has declined, and the proportion in provision of services has expanded."

Meanwhile, Haber continued, we have begun to shift from a needs economy to a wants and aspirations economy. With average family income of nearly $8,000 and a growth rate of about 3 or 4 percent per year, it is conceivable that we can double our living standards in less than 20 years, he said.

This means that less of a family's income would be absorbed in outlays for such "necessities" as food, clothing, shelter and medical care, and more would remain for discretionary spending.

A society in the process of rapid and vast technological change must have a population which is capable of ready adaptation to a new economic and technological environment, and this is the prime responsibility of educational institutions, Haber said.

Furthermore, he added, in a service-oriented society the need for trained specialists with some expertise in a particular area expands rapidly. We already have shortages in professions, in teaching, in engineering and nursing, for example.

The supply of such people will depend upon available schooling, Haber said, adding: "Education is now, and perhaps for the first time, being recognized as an investment rather than an expenditure. It is necessary for an expanding society. The quest is no longer for universal literacy and rudimentary knowledge. Our economic growth and stability, in fact high levels of employment, require more education."

Soup To Nonsense:

Grandma Never Felt Misery Of Look-Alike Spray Cans

By Jane Goodsell

MODERN SCIENCE has solved a number of petty problems which plagued my grandmother, and thereby created a number of petty problems my grandmother never heard of. Take laundry starch. In my grandmother's day, laundry starch had to be boiled on the stove and stirred constantly to keep it from lumping. It must have been a horrid chore, stirring laundry starch for heaven-knows-how-long in a hot, steamy kitchen. I'm glad I don't have to do that.

My laundry starch comes in a nice spray can which dampens and starches in a few quick poufs, and I must say it's a joy to use. It is, in fact, the ideal solution to my starching problems. But, as I mentioned earlier, solutions have a way of creating problems that never before existed. I'm sure my grandmother never made the mistake of trying to starch her linen napkins with furniture polish. How could she? Back in those days, laundry starch and furniture polish didn't resemble each other in the least.

But my furniture polish comes in a nice spray can, too. It's not exactly like the spray can the starch comes in but, on the other hand, it's not noticeably unlike it.

It must be admitted that the spray can filled with oven cleaner looks very like the spray can which contains room deodorizer which is perilously similar to the hair spray, the moth spray, the bug spray, the mosquito repellant, the nail polish hardener, the suntan lotion, the rug cleaner, the windshield de-icer, the spray paint and the glass cleaner.

I can't say from personal experience what would happen if you attempted to polish the dining room table with bug spray—or if you used windshield de-icer as a deodorant.

But I can testify that oven cleaner does not work well as an air freshener (it's the only thing I've ever found that smells worse than sauerkraut) and I can vouchsafe that mosquito repellant will not remove coffee stains from carpets.

And I know something else: when befuddled woman stoops to folly and learns too late that she has sprayed her hair with emerald green paint, she won't be going out that night.

Effective July 1:

Truth-in-Lending Regulations Issued

(Continued from Page 1)

ulations which will apply to "banks, savings and loan associations, department stores, credit card issuers, credit unions, automobile dealers, consumer finance companies, residential mortgage brokers, craftsmen such as plumbers and electricians, doctors, dentists, hospitals and any other individuals or groups which extend or arrange for consumer credit."

Neither the law nor the regulation set any ceiling on interest rates or finance charges.

The intent is to disclose to customers or borrowers before a deal is closed or a sale made exactly what the credit or interest charge may be in terms of true annual interest rates. This would enable consumers to "shop for credit" by comparing the credit costs of one store, bank, or loan company with that of another.

It would, for example, enable the buyer of an automobile to judge whether he would pay the lowest finance charge by financing his car through the dealer, a bank, a loan company or a credit union.

The regulations include tables for determining the true annual rate according to the type of credit—whether open end credit, such as department store revolving charge accounts or credit cards, or single transactions such as a bank loan or a major purchase. The tables are geared to show the true interest rate to the nearest one-quarter of 1 percent.

The buyer or borrower doesn't have to worry about the tables; they are for the use of the seller. But if the seller or lender deliberately violates the law, he can be jailed for one year and fined $5,000, and the customer can sue for double civil penalties.

As examples of how credit and interest charges must be expressed by July 1, the Federal Reserve governors cited these cases:

- A department store which now charges revolving credit customers 1.5 percent of the unpaid balance each month would have to notify its customers that the annual rate comes to 18 percent a year.
- A bank which makes a $1,000 loan for one year and now calls it a 6 percent loan because the amount repaid in 12 monthly installments comes to $1,060 would have to use the correct annual rate of 11 percent. This is because the full $1,000 would be available to the customer only for the first month of the loan. With each payment, he repays part of the principal and has less money at his disposal.
- If a bank discounts the interest charge in advance — actually giving the borrrower only $940, it would have to list its annual rate at 11.5 percent.

For the first six months of the law—until Jan. 1, 1970—the annual percentage rate can be expressed as dollars per $100 instead of as a percentage. Thus, instead of 18 percent a finance charge could be described as $18 per year per $100 of unpaid balance.

The new regulations also spell out the wording of a notice which must be given to every person who signs an agreement putting up his home as security to a loan. The notice tells the borrower that he can cancel the agreement within three business days without penalty.

Actual enforcement of the regulations will be spread among nine federal agencies with regulatory authority over various industries and bank systems. However most retail credit transactions will be policed by the Federal Trade Commission.

Consumer Prices Up 4.1 Percent in Canada

Ottawa—The consumer price index in Canada went up 4.1 percent in 1968 to reach 158 points, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported. It was the largest yearly increase since the index rose by 10.7 percent in 1951.

Mainly responsible for the leap in the overall index were rising costs of housing, recreation, alcohol and tobacco. Home purchase prices went up 8.1 percent and rents rose 4.3 percent. Recreation, alcohol and tobacco each rose by 6.1 percent.

PHAN THIET leads all towns and cities in South Viet Nam in the number of factories making "nuoc mam," a popular fish sauce. The port also is headquarters for the Fishermen's Union, which has plans to operate its own "nuoc mam" factory.

FISHERMEN OFTEN ARE WOMEN in South Viet Nam, and they're members of the strong Fishermen's Union there. Officials, organizers and members of the union are shown at a 25-day training seminar at Rach Gia, a port on the Gulf of Siam.

Vietnamese Fishermen's Union Brings New Hope to Its Members

Saigon—When the Viet Cong pose as fishermen in the Gulf of Siam to spy for the Communists, Do Minh Toan, a South Vietnamese fisherman who heads his union's local, regularly reports their activities to his country's military officials.

Toan refuses to be intimidated by the Communists and he makes no bones about it, even though he, his wife and their three children face the threat of Viet Cong reprisals.

Toan sees nothing particularly heroic in his attitude. He says, "All Fishermen's union officials do the same thing throughout the country."

In the obstacles it faces and the hardships and dangers its members encounter daily, the Fishermen's union is typical of most labor organizations in South Viet Nam.

Yet the union has grown to become the second largest in the country despite Communist opposition, the job-destroying warfare that has engulfed the land, and vestiges of feudal-era distrust among the people.

The Fishermen, with 65,000 members, is affiliated with the Vietnamese Confederation of Labor (CVT), which is incontestably anti-Communist and the best organized group for progress in the nation.

Despite the bravery of Toan and thousands of his fellows members, the union has suffered losses in membership that coincide with Viet Cong successes and South Viet Nam instability.

Organized in 1963, it grew rapidly to 40,000 members in one year but plummeted to 10,000 by mid-1965 during the period of stepped-up military attacks by the Viet Cong and a chaotic political situation.

The union suffered another drop in mid-1968 following the Communist attacks and terrorism that broke the Tet (New Year's) truce, but membership has once more begun to climb.

As with all unions in South Viet Nam, there has been a direct correlation between membership and security conditions. When warfare or Communist oppression eliminates jobs, membership drops.

The Fishermen credit the union's recovery from its mid-1965 slump to a program it undertook for the U.S. Agency for International Development later that year.

At a time when the Viet Cong had cut a number of rail lines and highways, the union's members made an agreement with AID to use their fishing junks to haul rice, medicines and diesel oil into South Viet Nam ports.

The successful operation broke the Viet Cong bottleneck and helped increase membership in the union. But there was a side benefit that helped to bring new dignity to the lives of the Fishermen.

Under terms of the agreement with AID, the union took 10 percent of gross income earned in carrying the cargoes and started a union welfare fund. This provided the seed capital for a national Fishermen's credit union.

Until that point, fishermen of the country traditionally had been lifetime debtors. A credit union to them was the means of freeing themselves and their families from the village money-lender who had long dominated their economic, social and even political lives.

The union conducts training programs in all parts of South Viet Nam for its members, officials and organizers. One of the most successful seminars was recently held in Rach Gia, where Toan heads the local.

The union's organizing and bargaining efforts have greatly improved fishermen's wages and benefits and have enabled it to operate three social welfare centers.

Thus, despite the warfare raging around them, South Viet Nam's Fishermen see a future of hope through their union.

Wider Legal Services Urged for Nation's Poor

Federal legal aid for the needy granted under the nation's anti-poverty drive should be greatly expanded, the National Council of Senior Citizens told Congress.

David H. Marlin, associate director of NCSC's program of legal research and services for the elderly, made the appeal before a Senate Special Committee on Aging.

The council is currently conducting legal aid projects under a $510,793 grant made last year by the Office of Economic Opportunity, and it was on the basis of this experience that Marlin testified.

"I can detail both from my own experience and from known facts on legal aid in this country the very urgent need faced by millions of the poor for legal assistance," Marlin declared.

He described two projects in which the NCSC is trying to expand legal services for poor, elderly Mexican-Americans in the San Antonio, Tex., and Albuquerque, N.M., areas.

In the San Antonio area, Marlin said, about 5,000 Mexican-Americans receive old age assistance but many more receive none because they entered the United States illegally and are afraid to apply to the government for help.

Estimating that there are more than 60,000 Mexican-American farm workers 65 and over who are "poverty stricken" in the Southwest, he added, "No group stands in greater need of legal aid than the Spanish-speaking Americans."

Marlin also described legal research and legal aid demonstration projects being carried out by NCSC throughout the United States.

They include a counseling program in Boston, legal aid in the area of housing at Venice and Culver City, Calif., and legal research projects being conducted in cooperation with law schools at Columbia and Duke universities.

But his conclusion was that all of the NCSC plans and other legal aid now being provided for the poor falls far short of the actual need.

Crafts Training Set For Jobless

Kansas City—About 360 hard-core jobless workers will be trained for building and construction jobs under a contract signed here between the U.S. Dept. of Labor and the Builders' Association of Kansas City.

Nearly $1.5 million in federal funds has been allotted for the two-year training project under the Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) program, being carried out in cities across the U.S. by the National Alliance of Businessmen.

Cooperating in the program are six AFL-CIO building trades unions—Carpenters, Painters, Bricklayers, Lathers, Plasterers & Cement Masons and Laborers.

Five Drug Firms Offer $120 Million as Rebate

Five of the nation's largest drug manufacturers have offered $120 million to states, cities and consumers in settlement of suits charging them with price-fixing and over-charging on antibiotic drugs.

If the proposal is accepted all around, it will be the largest package settlement in the history of anti-trust cases.

Joining in making the offer were American Cyanamid Co., Charles Pfizer & Co., Bristol-Myers Co., Squibb Beech-Nut, Inc., and the Upjohn Co.

The first three firms were convicted in U.S. District Court in New York City in December 1967 for conspiring to control the production and distribution of $1.7 billion worth of antibiotics.

The three firms are appealing the conviction. All five asserted in announcing the proposed settlement that they were not admitting to wrongdoing and had "contributed greatly to the public health."

The initial suit in the case was filed against the manufacturers by New York City in 1964. It was aimed at countering a move by Pfizer to prevent the city from buying tetracycline — one of the so-called wonder drugs—from Italy. The city said it was paying up to five times more for drugs purchased from U.S. firms.

Since then, 43 states, Puerto Rico, 12 cities, more than a score of private hospitals and miscellaneous groups have brought or joined suits against the firms.

The overall offer provides $100 million for all governmental units who made purchases for themselves or for welfare recipients, including payments for wholesalers, retailers and individual concerns. There is another $20 million for non-governmental hospitals, Blue Cross associations and other insurers.

The five companies agreed to break down their responsibility for payment on the following percentage basis: Cyanamid, 40.3 percent; Pfizer, 34.1 percent; Bristol-Myers, 16.1 percent; Upjohn, 5.2 percent, and Squibb, 4.3 percent.

They claimed the right to withdraw from the settlement program if it is not accepted by Mar. 7 by all named plaintiffs and intervenors in the present suits.

Southern Mills Get U.S. Orders Despite Bias

(Continued from Page 1)

government contracts, had found the textile firms in violation of the federal policy.

Deputy Defense Sec. David Packard, however, said he has reviewed the case and obtained "personal assurances" from the heads of the companies that they would take steps to provide equal opportunity for Negro workers.

The Labor Dept. contract compliance office said it wasn't consulted about Packard's decision and would like to know just how specific the "assurances" were and what they covered.

The agency's acting director, Ward McCreedy, said: "Those must have been rather spectacular agreements for them to award the contracts based on what I know of the case." He said he will ask the Defense Dept. for "a full report."

In a related area, Labor Sec. George P. Shultz has before him a report from the contract compliance office that the Allen-Bradley Co., a Milwaukee electronics manufacturer, has refused to take steps to remedy discriminatory employment policies.

The decision on whether to disqualify the firm from government contracts was left by former Labor Sec. Wirtz to his successor.

Oklahoma Trades Continue Training

Forty Oklahoma City youths, unemployed and from minority groups, will be trained for skilled crafts under an extended Apprenticeship Outreach program, the Labor Dept. announced.

The "outreach" contract, for one year, grants the Southwestern Oklahoma Building & Construction Trades Council $48,625 to continue a highly successful program completed in November 1968.

Under its previous contract, the council nearly doubled its goal of getting 40 youths into apprenticeships by placing 70 of them in training programs of 10 crafts.

'Corporate Octopus':

Wave of Business Mergers Engulfs Nation's Economy

The greatest wave of business mergers in history is rolling through the nation, carrying with it grave implications for the economy, the public, workers and unions.

And its impact is felt most heavily in the growth of the industrial conglomerate—the "corporate octopus," writes Ray MacDonald in the February issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO magazine.

MacDonald, an AFL-CIO economist, points out that the number of mergers in mining and manufacturing zoomed from 219 in 1950 to 844 in 1960 to nearly 1,000 in 1966 and to about 2,300 in 1968.

But while this surge in the number of mergers is itself a matter for concern, the author notes, the characteristics of present-day mergers are cause for even greater apprehension.

Some of these characteristics, as the article brings them out, are:

- The merging of not only "bigs" with "smalls" but with "bigs" with "bigs."
- The increasing involvement of banks and insurance companies in mergers.
- The "widespread emergence" of the conglomerates-mergers of firms in unrelated industries.

The article cites Federal Trade Commission figures showing that where there were 101 mergers in 1966 involving an acquired company with assets exceeding $10 million, and there were 188 mergers in that category in 1968.

The FTC figures also show that in 1968, for the first time in history, a firm with assets of more than $1 billion was acquired in a conglomerate merger. Jones & Laughlin, the sixth-ranking steel producer, was the company and Ling-Temco-Vought took it over.

On the subject of financial institutions being involved in mergers, MacDonald points to the acquisition of United Life Insurance Co. by Teledyne and of the Paul Revere Life Insurance Co. by Avco.

He describes how major banks have increasingly become "involved in stock ownership of companies and interlocking relationships with them, through boards of directors."

By 1967 this involvement had reached a stage where a small number of banks—just 49—held 5 percent or more of the common stock in 147 of the 500 largest industrial corparations and had "interlocks" with 286 of them.

Earlier business mergers, going back to the turn of the century, MacDonald recalls, were nearly always one of two types: horizontal, among firms producing the same or very similar products; or vertical, involving the acquisition of a supplier or a customer firm.

These mergers resulted in concern about the danger of monopolies. Anti-trust laws were enacted and strengthened at times to curb the danger.

The article notes, however, that these laws "have not been applied to conglomerate - type mergers," with the exception of a recent FTC anouncement that it would challenge certain types of acquisitions of textile firms.

FTC figures show that between 1948 and 1967 there were 1,083 mergers in mining and manufacturing involving firms with assets of $10 million or more—and 734 of these were of the conglomerate variety.

Ling-Temco-Vought (LTV) is cited as an example of the "astronomical" size of the conglomerates. It is in airlines, computer technology, basic steel, aerospace, electronics, car rentals, meat packing and sporting goods.

One major problem arising from conglomerates as they affect unions, MacDonald writes, is that many of them refuse to break down their financial reports on a divisional basis.

This practice, he says, "muddies the waters of collective bargaining" since evaluation of a firm's finances has always had a high priority among the information needed by a union in negotiations. Also MacDonald notes, the National Labor Relations Board has "long held" that a union is entitled to such information.

The lack of financial reporting, the article shows, is probably due to the way in which many conglomerates are formed. They combine seperate earnings figures into one over-all figure as part of a manipulation to "pad paper growth." This boosts stock value and capital gains for stockholders.

MacDonald also describes many other ways in which conglomerates result in plant shutdowns and layoffs, increase union bargaining problems and have an impact on the prices of goods and services.

The concern over conglomerates, he states, also poses questions as to how these "concentrations of economic power" will affect competition, which is protected by the anti-trust laws.

So far, the development of conglomerates is far out-running knowledge about them. Members of Congress have attempted to throw a spotlight on the "super giants" in recent years. The FTC is expected to report soon on a study it is conducting on conglomerates.

Information from this study, MacDonald concludes, should "indicate much more clearly than is now known" the impact of conglomerates and "should lead to a careful review of government policy tailored to the needs of maintaining the health and vigor of the national economy and a democratic society."

In the meantime, he suggests, the Securities & Exchange Commission should require conglomerates to report in detail on the operations of their separate divisions in addition to reporting on the corporation as a whole.

Profits of Major Companies Show 7.3 Percent Gain in Fourth Quarter

Profits of major U.S. companies continued their steady upward trend in the final quarter of 1968, showing a gain of 7.3 percent over the same period of 1967, the Wall Street Journal reported.

While the increase was smaller than those of the first three quarters of the year, it nevertheless represented "a solid profit gain," the Journal said. The earlier gains over 1967 were 11.1 percent in the first quarter, 10.2 percent in the second and 13.6 percent in the third.

The newspaper's survey showed that after-tax profits of 521 major corporations totaled just under $6 billion in the fourth quarter last year compared to $5.5 billion for the same quarter of 1967.

The article suggested that the main reason for somewhat smaller profit increases in the fourth quarter, compared to rises in other 1968 quarters, was that the earlier increases "were just too big to continue very long."

In most industries, it added, profits have been soaring "so fast for so long that the gains are getting increasingly difficult to match even with strong sales gains, and in some cases, rising prices."

The newspaper's breakdown of fourth quarter profits by industries showed that 13 producers of copper and other metals registered by far the strongest gain among 31 different groupings.

Their combined net in the fourth quarter was about $163 million, a 106 percent increase over earnings of $79 million for the 1967 fourth quarter.

The article attribtued the sharp advance to the fact that earnings of nonferrous metal producers were reduced in late 1967 by an industry-wide strike.

But it also observed that since the start of 1969 the firms have benefited from price increases on copper, lead, zinc and nickel.

Taking 18 mining and metal companies as a whole, to include the copper and metal firms and five aluminimum companies, their combined profits were $231.6 million, up 57.4 percent over the final quarter of 1967.

Other industries presenting outstanding profit pictures, listed to show their fourth quarter profits and percent of increase, included:

Five farm equipment manufacturers, $59.6 million, up 47 percent; 14 building material suppliers, $91.2 million, up 25.5 percent; 15 specialty electrical equipment firms, 39.5 million, up 25 percent; nine office equipment makers, $312 million, up 24.1 percent and seven publishing companies, $18.9 million, up 23.1 percent.

Only one of the 31 groupings—eight airlines—showed a combined net loss in the fourth quarter. The article said the aggregate deficit of $9.5 million springs from the fact that airlines' percentage of total seats occupied is falling as many new planes are added to the fleets.

Only two other industry categories — 25 steel manufacturers and five distillers—had lower net profits in the final quarter compared to the period in 1967. The steel firms' combined profits were $200 million, down 23 percent, and the distillers' net was $44 million, down 14.1 percent.

Steel's comparatively bad fourth quarter, the Journal stated, was the result of a combination of continued heavy customer inventory liquidation, which held down shipments, and some price-cutting.

The article predicted, however, that the industry's profit picture would rebound in the current quarter of 1969, with shipments increasing and the cancellation of an earlier $22-a-ton price cut on hot-rolled carbon steel.

On Policy Planning:

Oil Official Named To New Labor Post

A Standard Oil Co. executive, based in England, has been named by Pres. Nixon to a new post of Assistant Secretary of Labor for Policy Development & Research.

The appointment, subject to Senate confirmation, went to Jerome M. Rosow, 49-year-old employe relations manager for Esso Europe, Inc., a subsidiary of Standard Oil of New Jersey.

Rosow worked as a federal government personnel official from 1942 to 1953, when he joined a Standard Oil subsidiary in Venezuela. He was assigned to the parent company in the United States from 1955 to 1966.

The policy planning post is similar in title to the position held by Daniel P. Moynihan when he was assistant secretary in the Kennedy Administration. The Labor Dept. later shifted the assistant secretary post to the Manpower Administration.

Unless the Nixon Administration seeks and gets congressional authorization for an additional assistant secretary, Rosow will be filling one of two still vacant assistant secretary posts.

No successor has yet been named for Esther Peterson, formerly assistant secretary for labor standards, or for George L-P Weaver, assistant secretary for international affairs.

In another area, the White House announced a controversial and apparent downgrading of the presidential consumer assistant post which had been held by Betty Furness.

It was preceded by a White House spokesman's alert to newsmen that an announcement was forthcoming which would indicate that the role of consumer affairs assistant was being "expanded in a very exciting way."

The actual announcement was that Pres. Nixon has named Willie Mae Rogers as his part time "consultant" on consumer affairs.

Miss Rogers will retain her regular job as director of the Good Housekeeping magazine's institute which awards its "seal of approval" to products advertised in the magazine.

The White House said there was "no concern" about a possible conflict of interest between the two jobs.

Earlier the Administration filled the key post of Under Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare by naming John G. Veneman, 43-year-old member of the California Assembly and a close friend of HEW Sec. Robert H. Finch.

Veneman is considered a moderate-to-liberal Republican, but his departure from the legislature reportedly aroused the ire of conservative Republican Gov. Ronald Reagan.

Reagan's concern is that the narrow GOP majority in the lower house might be threatened if a Democrat should be elected to succeed Veneman. There are now 41 Republicans and 39 Democrats in the Assembly and Veneman's district has a majority of registered Democrats.

A veteran civil rights leader, James Farmer, was named an assistant secretary in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare to become the highest-ranking Negro appointee in the Nixon Administration.

Farmer was one of the founders of the Congress of Racial Equality and was jailed in Mississippi during a Deep South Freedom Ride. He left his CORE post in 1966 and since then has taught and been an unsuccessful Republican candidate for Congress in a Brooklyn district. He is 49.

Finch said he hoped Farmer will bring more young people into HEW by helping to "convince the students that we can bring the Vietnamese war to a conclusion and allocate more of our resources to some of the domestic problems, to convince a lot of the young people that HEW is where the action is in terms of solving these domestic problems."

Also announced was the appointment of James M. Beggs, 43, to the number two post in the Dept. of Transportation. The new under secretary has been an associate administrator in the National Aeronautics & Space Agency, in charge of research planning.

Seattle Mayor James Braman, 67, and Harvard Prof. Paul Cherington were nominated as assistant secretaries in the Dept. of Transportation.

ARBITRATION INSTITUTE at the University of Illinois, sponsored jointly by the AFL-CIO and the University's Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations, was attended by representatives of midwest unions. Otto Pragan of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education is shown instructing a class on subcontracting as an arbitration issue.

Labor Writer Loftus Named Aide to Shultz

Joseph A. Loftus, one of the nation's best-known labor reporters, has been named to a new post of special assistant for communications to Labor Sec. George P. Shultz.

Loftus, 61, has covered labor and other major news beats for the New York Times since 1944. His earlier experience includes 11 years with the Associated Press, mostly in AP's Washington bureau. He is a longtime member of the Newspaper Guild and has walked picket lines as well as reported them.

Shultz said Loftus will advise the Labor Dept. on both communications with the public and press and on internal communications, will participate in policy formulation and work with the White House on communications matters.

John W. Leslie, a veteran career employe, will remain as director of the Labor Dept.'s Office of Information. The department's announcement said Leslie "will continue to supervise the operational phase of all public information efforts."

Loftus took leave from his newspaper work twice for graduate-level studies—in 1931 to earn a Master's degree at Columbia University and in 1960-61 to study at Harvard University on a Louis Stark fellowship.

AFL-CIO Institute Puts Focus on Arbitration

Champaign, Ill.—Preparation of mock union arbitration cases and courses taught by arbitration experts highlighted an institute here co-sponsored by the AFL-CIO and the Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations at the University of Illinois.

The institute was attended by 30 full-time representatives and staff members of midwest unions who spent a week dealing with the principles, procedures and techniques of grievance arbitration.

The sponsors reported they had applications from twice that number but had to limit enrollment to permit effective training. As a result, the AFL-CIO and the university will sponsor a second institute, March 23-28.

Represented at the first sessions were the Aluminum Workers, Boilermakers, Communications Workers, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Laborers, Meat Cutters, Machinists, Papermakers & Paperworkers, Rubber Workers, Sheet Metal Workers, Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers and the Nebraska AFL-CIO.

The participants broke into small groups to prepare model arbitration cases, which were then evaluated by the entire institute.

Other sessions and courses were devoted to such topics as arbitration and the law, arbitrability, selecting arbitrators, costs of arbitration and ways of presenting evidence at arbitration hearings.

The institute also offered classes on three issues which are frequently the subject of arbitration—discipline of workers by employers, promotions and subcontracting of work.

Representing the AFL-CIO at the institute were Otto Pragan of the Dept. of Education and Rudolph Oswald of the Dept. of Research.

Speakers addressing the institute included AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nat Goldfinger, who spoke on economic problems facing the nation in 1969 and prospects for resolving them.

A feature of the graduation session, at which participants received certificates, was an address on "the future of arbitration" by William E. Simkin, former director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

Service Union Job Training Plan Extended

A Service Employes program to train jobless workers in Washington for custodian jobs has proved so successful it is being extended for another year.

The program, jointly aided by the Labor Dept. and the Health, Education & Welfare Dept., will receive $292,986 in new federal funds to train and place 200 workers by April 1970. This will bring to 600 the number of persons receiving training under the program since 1967.

Trainees, nearly all Negroes, learn about cleaning mixtures, minor electrical repairs, rug and furniture shampooing, and a range of other subjects to equip them for employment. They also take remedial courses in reading, current events and simple arithmetic.

Michael J. Nash, director of the project, reported that nearly 90 percent of those who enroll complete the course.

Most of them previously had earned no more than $1.50 an hour when working. Project graduates, however, have been filling jobs at up to $2.50 an hour, with some starting at more than $3 an hour.

Fire Fighters Campaign For Greater Protection

The Intl. Association of Fire Fighters, many of whose members have been the target of snipers and rioters in civil disturbances in recent years, have called on local communities and the federal government to take immediate steps for their protection.

The recommendations stem from a report of a 13-member committee set up by IAFF Pres. W. H. McClennan last November. The committee's finding and recommendations are published in an IAFF manual titled "Fire Fighters Fight Fires, Not People."

Endorsed by the executive board of the 136,000-member union, the recommendations call for immediate revamping of fire service procedures and establishing protective operations to safeguard fire fighters against snipers and mobs.

The committee urged that fire fighters be equipped with protective clothing and that all new fire apparatus be designed to offer protection from gunfire and thrown missiles. It also suggested that the fire service officer at the scene be given power to decide when to withdraw fire fighters during a disturbance and that any attempt to arm fire fighters be resisted.

The union also called on Congress to make adequate funds available for the Fire Safety Act of 1968 which, it said, so far has been ineffective because no money has yet been appropriated to enforce it.

The committee recommended that the IAFF undertake a wide-ranging program of research and education to guide public officials on the needs and procedures of protecting fire fighters.

Megel Reappointed To Handicapped Panel

Carl J. Megel, legislative director of the AFL-CIO American Federation of Teachers and former AFT president, has been reappointed to the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped for another three-year term.

Megel previously served six years on the committee after 12 years as union president. He is currently a vice president of the Intl. Federation of Teacher Unions, and a trustee of the United Nations Association of the USA.

725 Upgraded After Training At Sea School

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Licenses as engineers and deck officers have been obtained by 725 merchant seamen over the past three years as a result of completing courses at a jointly-operated union school here.

Operators of the school—Marine Engineers District 2 and Seafarers Atlantic, Gulf, Lakes and Inland Waters District—said it is the largest number of new and upgraded licenses produced by any of the existing maritime union training programs.

In a joint statement, Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers and Raymond T. McKay, president of MEBA's District 2, said the school serves as a "supplement" to the merchant marine academies and provides skilled manpower for merchant ships.

It was reported that 307 members of the SIU have qualified for licenses as marine engineers, and 329 MEBA members have upgraded their licenses since February 1966.

Deck officers' licenses have been awarded to 54 men and another 35, mostly veterans of the Navy and Coast Guard, have earned engineers' licenses.

The school, known as the District 2 MEBA-SIU A & G Maritime Upgrading Center, is housed in a complex of buildings consisting of classrooms, laboratories, machine and welding shops and dormitories.

The Center's entire program is financed by American-flag ship operators under collective bargaining agreements with the MEBA and SIU.

Proposals Under Review:

Tax Reform Pledged By Administration

The Nixon Administration has promised "a high priority" for tax reform and indicated that it will have at least some proposals to submit to the House Ways & Means Committee during hearings starting Feb. 18.

Treasury Sec. David M. Kennedy said he and his top aides are "reviewing carefully" the tax reform proposals developed by the department's staff in the final months of the Johnson Administration.

Kennedy confirmed that he and Pres. Nixon met recently with Ways & Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) and Rep. John W. Byrnes (Wis.), the committee's senior Republican member.

The hearings are expected to continue for several months and the Administration's recommendations may be presented in bits and pieces over this period, rather than as a single package.

Kennedy cited three areas of emphasis in the Administration's tax policies.

"First," Kennedy said, is "the question of equity—are all Americans in similar circumstances paying approximately the same amount of income taxes?"

Kennedy noted that "recent testimony by the outgoing Secretary of the Treasury suggests that they are not. This area will receive our early attention," he pledged.

In a more controversial area, Kennedy reiterated the Nixon Administration's "interest" in the use of tax credits to private industry as a partial substitute for federal expenditures "to help solve the problems of the cities and of our disadvantaged."

He said studies in this area will move forward "as rapidly as possible."

On a long-range basis, with the implication that action might not be sought until next year, Kennedy suggested that the nation's entire tax system, state and local as well as federal, needs "a careful and searching re-examination."

Issues involved, he said, include "the strength of our domestic economy, our international financial position, the capacity to generate revenues to meet national needs."

Kennedy said "approaches to this long run problem" will be discussed in the months ahead "within the Administration and with congressional leaders."

The tax reform proposals drawn up by the Treasury Dept. staff under the Johnson Administration included a new "minimum income tax" which would make sure that wealthy persons who derived all or most of their income from tax-exempt sources would pay at least a portion of the tax imposed on those whose income comes from their paychecks.

The first phase of the House committee hearings will deal with the tax exempt status of foundations. The hearings will then move into other areas with broader impact on the nation's overall tax structure.

Nixon Orders Study on Farm Union Rights

(Continued from Page 1)

tee took the unprecedented step of passing a resolution urging the Labor Committee not to approve a bill.

Lack of machinery for union representation elections and inability to require farm employers to bargain with a union led to the development of the consumer boycott tactics to bring economic pressure on California grape growers.

Burns in Key Role

Presidential Counselor Arthur F. Burns has the job of coordinating the recommendations of the Cabinet members at the White House level. Burns has been quoted as saying that the solicitation of recommendations on various issues dosen't "necessarily" mean that legislation will be drafted or policies adopted by the Administration.

In other fields, Nixon asked Attorney Gen. John N. Mitchell to consult with congressional leaders on whether to push for a constitutional amendment to allow 18-year-olds to vote.

He asked Budget Dir. Robert Mayo to propose better ways to coordinate federal food distribution programs. And he asked for studies and recommendations dealing with regional development assistance, federal highway expenditures, population growth problems and atomic research, among others.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE AWARDS winners of the New York City AFL-CIO gather at the annual Lincoln's Birthday dinner in New York. The awards "in recognition of meritorious contributions to the cause of working people and the cause of free trade unionism" went to Ben J. Cohan, Office & Professional Employes Local 153; Edward Schneider, Ladies' Garment Workers Local 91; Irving Stern, Meatcutters Local 342, and Doris Turner, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union Local 1199. From left are Stern, Cohan, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, Miss Turner, New York AFL-CIO Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., Schneider and Council Sec. Morris Iushewitz.

'Stop! You're Under Arrest'

Shultz's Top Aides Confirmed by Senate

The Senate has confirmed Pres. Nixon's nominations of four top-level Labor Dept. officials including William J. Usery, former Machinists representative, as assistant secretary.

The others are James D. Hodgson as under secretary, Arnold R. Weber as assistant secretary and Elizabeth Duncan Koontz as director of the Women's Bureau.

3 Union Men On Democratic Reform Panels

Democratic National Chairman Fred R. Harris has named trade unionists to two commissions set up to draft improvements in the method of selecting delegates to party conventions and in party rules, including those governing conventions and appointment of committees.

The key Commission on Party Structure & Delegate Selection, mandated by the last Democratic National Convention, will be headed by Sen. George S. McGovern of South Dakota. AFL-CIO Vice Pres. I. W. Abel, president of the Steelworkers, will serve on the 27-member commission which represents a broad, predominantly liberal cross-section of the Democratic Party.

The resolution creating the commission directed that there be open participation in the delegate selection process, that minority views be represented, and that every effort be made to have the delegate selection process take place entirely within the year of the convention.

A companion Commission on Rules will be headed by Rep. James G. O'Hara of Michigan, past chairman of the liberal Democratic Study Group in the House.

Among those serving with O'Hara are Joseph D. Keenan, AFL-CIO vice president and secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and Paul Sanchez, an AFL-CIO field representative.

Harris, who is a senator from Oklahoma as well as party chairman, said he has asked the Republican Party to join in a bipartisan effort to reform presidential nomination procedures. In some cases, changes in state laws would be necessary to carry out reforms.

Jobless Rate Matches 15-Year Low of 3.3%

(Continued from Page 1)

month, down 6,000 from December. BLS pointed to a "steady chipping away" in long-term joblessness over the past year.

On the jobs side, the government said the picture improved despite a net increase of 90,000 in the number of workers off payrolls because of strikes, mainly in the longshore and petroleum refinery industries.

The biggest gains in payroll employment in January were in wholesale and retail trade, up 165,000 to 14.4 million, and in services and government, both of which had increases of 50,000 to totals of 10.8 and 12.5 million, respectively.

Manufacturing employment, at more than 19.9 million, was up 13,000 over the month.

January employment figures in other areas, seasonally adjusted, were:

Construction, 3.3 million, down 32,000 from December; transportation and utilities, 4.3 million, down 11,000; and finance, insurance and real estate, 3.4 million, up 13,000.

The civilian labor force in January rose by 506,000 seasonally adjusted to 79,874,000. This was the third monthly increase in a row. The growth over the year amounted to 1.9 million.

The Labor Dept. also reported that average hourly earnings of rank and file workers rose 2 cents in January to $2.95, but a decline in the average workweek lowered average weekly earnings to $110.63.

Average weekly earnings for production and non-supervisory workers declined in mining, construction and manufacturing, but increased in trade and finance.

Despite a 2-cent rise in hourly earnings for factory workers, their average weekly earnings fell $1.05 to $126.36 due to a six-tenths of an hour drop in their workweek.

The workweek for all rank and file workers averaged 37.5 hours, down three-tenths of an hour from December. Over the year the average workweek was up two-tenths of an hour.

2-15-69

W. M. Thompson Elected To Rail Union Office

Ottawa, Ont.—William M. Thompson of Ottawa is a new vice president of the Maintenance of Way Employes, succeeding J. A. Huneault, who died Dec. 4.

Thompson, a former union general chairman on the Canadian Pacific Railway, was chosen by a meeting of the union's grand lodge officers and general chairmen.

Federal Union Council Elects Rademacher

James H. Rademacher, president of the Letter Carriers, has been elected chairman of the AFL-CIO Government Employes Council, whose 34 affiliates bargain for federal workers in nearly every branch of government.

Rademacher, who had been council vice chairman, will fill out the 1969 term of the late E. C. Hallbeck, who had headed the GEC since 1961.

Hallbeck's successor as president of the Postal Clerks, Francis S. Filbey, was elected vice president of the GEC.

GEC delegates lauded Hallbeck's leadership in a resolution and voted a $1,000 donation to a memorial scholarship fund established by the Postal Clerks.

The new chairman of the U.S. Civil Service Commission, Robert E. Hampton, told the delegates that improved labor-management relations procedures in government will be a "high priority" goal of the Nixon Administration.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, February 22, 1969 | No. 8

Council Action Launches New Labor Studies Center

PLANS TO ESTABLISH a new AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center are outlined to the federation's Executive Council by Education Dir. Walter Davis. The center is scheduled to begin operations next Labor Day, with tuition-free intensive courses for union leaders and staff.

Pioneer Program To Train Leaders

By Saul Miller

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A new, pioneering AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center has been created by the federation's Executive Council to develop trade union leadership through varied educational training programs.

The center is planned to go into operation in Washington, D.C., by Labor Day 1969, initially drawing its student body from full-time union officials and expanding later to offer courses for local union officers and ultimately rank-and-file members.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference that the council will set up a specific financing plan later at the sessions here and that he foresaw no problems in this regard. A report to the council, he said, estimated that the first-year cost would be about $350,000 rising to $600,000 in the third year. There would be about 400 students in the first year of operations increasing to about 900 in three years.

The training and education would be provided tuition free, but the unions sending students to the center would provide for their living costs.

Meany said that the feasibility study of the center, conducted under the guidance of the federation's Committee on Education and the Dept. of Education, showed a tremendous need and interest in the center. The need is growing daily, he stressed, for better educated trade union officials to handle the complex problems of the modern industrial system.

The center will be incorporated as a non-profit education institution governed by a Board of Trustees composed of 16 members—10 from the AFL-CIO and six from the public.

While a number of federation affiliates have set up their own training programs, the AFL-CIO-created-and-financed center marks the first time in the history of the American trade union movement that a national labor education center has been established.

The council statement said that it has been "long convinced of the need and desirability of such an educational institution and is now agreed that the AFL-CIO can and should establish one without further delay."

The adoption of the statement establishing the center came after the council heard a detailed report by members of the committee that conducted the feasibility study authorized by the council in September 1967.

The presentation was made by Walter Davis, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, Prof. Fred Hoehler, director of labor studies programs at Michigan State University and former education

(Continued on Page 2)

Awaits Specific Programs:

Meany Looks to 'Reasonable' Relations with White House

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO foresees a "reasonable" relationship with Pres. Nixon and his Administration, federation Pres. George Meany declared here, but a good deal depends on the specific programs still to come and the future attitudes of the White House.

Meany's statement came at a press conference held in conjunction with mid-winter sessions of the AFL-CIO Executive Council here.

The federation president said he was "delighted," for example, that the President had ordered a study on coverage of farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act. The outlook on this matter and others requiring legislation, he said, will depend on the attitude of the Administration and leadership from the White House.

He noted, however, that any Administration plan to offset inflation by allowing unemployment to rise is "fundamentally wrong." Queried on a statement by Paul McCracken, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, that in order to check inflation there may be some rise in joblessness, Meany said:

"I don't buy the idea that we have to make that sort of sacrifice to get a stable economy." There is no sense in a policy of countering inflation, he asserted, "by putting more people out of work."

The council is scheduled to adopt later in its sessions comprehensive statements on the national economy and the question of inflation.

Meany briefly reviewed the 1968 election at the meeting of the COPE Administrative Committee, praising COPE for an outstanding job, especially in turning back the bid by George Wallace. The committee approved an annual register-and-vote drive to replace the biennial campaigns. The council will act on this later. (Story, Page 4.)

The opening sessions set out a number of policy positions highlighted by the creation of a pioneering AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center to develop trade union leadership

(Continued on Page 3)

Nixon Changes Lineup Of Poverty Programs

Pres. Nixon announced a reshuffle of key anti-poverty programs but told Congress he wants to continue the Office of Economic Opportunity as an "incubator" for new programs to help the poor.

As a first step, the President said, he is using his executive authority to delegate operation of a number of OEO programs to the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare and to the Labor Dept., effective July 1.

Nixon assigned the operation of the Job Corps to the Labor Dept., to be coordinated with other manpower programs administered by the department.

He delegated to Health, Education & Welfare the OEO's Head Start program for pre-school children, its Comprehensive Health Centers for poverty neighborhoods and its Foster Grandparents program under which retired volunteers receive modest payment for providing individual "grandfatherly" care to fatherless small children.

Several other OEO-initiated programs are already delegated to other agencies, including the operation of the Neighborhood Youth Corps by the Labor Dept. and the school-age Head Start Follow-Through program by HEW.

At least initially, supervision of Community Action programs will remain under OEO.

Although the announcement was

(Continued on Page 9)

$100,000 Grant Starts Fund for N.Y. Teachers

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council set up a special fund to demonstrate labor's support for New York City's union teachers and launched a nationwide fund drive with a contribution of $100,000 toward the $220,000 fine imposed on the union by a court.

Federation Pres. George Meany named Vice Presidents David Sullivan and Max Greenberg to a subcommittee created by the council to "coordinate and manage" the fund-raising campaign.

The council said in a statement that "it deplores one-sided, unfair laws" such as the Taylor Act under which the United Federation of Teachers was fined. Its president, Albert Shanker, was sentenced to pay $250 and serve 15 days in jail when the teachers stayed out in defense of the union's contract late last year.

The UFT—Teachers Local 2—was "forced to strike the New York City school system for the most fundamental trade union reason—to protect the job rights" of its members, the council observed.

"Throughout this long and painful strike," the statement related, "the teachers had the wholehearted support of the

(Continued on Page 2)

Conditions Set On Chartering Police Union

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Chartering of a national union of policemen by the AFL-CIO was authorized by the Executive Council at its meeting here as soon as certain conditions are met.

The council accepted the recommendations of a special subcommittee and authorized AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to issue a charter for a policemen's union if and when:

- A suitable constitutional structure has been drawn up, on a national basis, "with commitments of affiliation of police organizations in a representative number of cities."
- Satisfactory assurances are received that such an organization will "confine itself strictly" to its jurisdiction and "will not encroach upon areas of employment represented by existing AFL-CIO affiliates."

The subcommittee, headed by Federation Vice Pres. Herman D. Kenin, was named at the last council meeting after an application for affiliation had been received from New York City's Patrolmen's Benevolent Association.

The subcommittee said it was prepared to assist, in an advisory capacity, "any interim group or committee of police representatives in meeting these conditions."

SPECIAL SUBCOMMITTEE of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, Vice Presidents Max Greenberg and David Sullivan, right, will coordinate the nationwide labor campaign to help New York Local 2 of the Teachers to pay a $220,000 fine imposed on the union for striking in violation of New York's anti-strike Taylor Law. The council started the campaign with a $100,000 donation.

Labor Protests Slash In Vocational Education

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO warned Congress and the Administration that they must restore slashes of vocational education funds in the 1970 budget or they will ge guilty of "short changing" the training needs of America's work force.

The Executive Council issued a statement attacking deep cuts in funds authorized to carry out a greatly expanded vocational education program enacted last year.

The statement noted that the budget contains only $288 million for all vocational education programs for 1970 although Congress authorized $865 million for the year.

"As a matter of fact," the council said, "the proposed 1970 budget even reduces grants to the states for comprehensive programs, including research, by $28 million below the 1969 appropriations."

The council also expressed concern that programs for work-study, residential vocational schools, curriculum development and training of vocational education personnel will expire on June 30, 1970.

The federation's leaders called upon Congress to renew in this session "these very important parts" of last year's legislation.

The council described the legislation, known as the Vocational Education Amendments of 1968, as "a landmark in the history of vocational education." It noted that labor had "diligently" supported the measure.

Singled out for praise was one part of the legislation that consolidates all existing vocational education laws within the 1963 Vocational Educational Act and applies its standards in the allocation of federal funds.

Provisions of the legislation were cited as giving "new direction" to the total field of vocational training so as to aid students, unemployed workers, persons with special education needs, and the handicapped.

In other areas, the council pointed out, the new law authorized funds for training the poor and the disadvantaged, for consumer education, for innovative programs, and for testing new curricula and teaching methods in vocational education.

"Yet," the council concluded, "the substantial achievement inherent in this legislation, which greatly expands the federal government's commitments to the vital area of vocational education, is now threatened by the withholding of funds."

The statement also urged all state central bodies to participate "actively and resourcefully" with states advisory councils on vocational education.

Federal Unit Proposed To Channel Day Care Aid

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A single coordinating unit for child day care centers should be established within the federal government to meet an increasing need for these programs, the AFL-CIO declared.

An Executive Council statement pointed out that at present day care programs are so widely scattered through several departments "as to make it virtually impossible" for local communities to understand how to qualify or obtain funds for centers.

The new unit would take all applications for funds from communities and organizations and would establish a single set of rules for participation in federally-assisted day care programs, the council proposed.

The statement also called for change in existing federal law to permit employer contributions to trust funds set up by unions through collective bargaining to provide for day care programs.

The council further urged that:

- All states take full advantage of the federal matching funds available under Title IV of the Social Security Act for the establishment of day care centers.
- Congress appropriate the full $25 million it authorized last year under the Economic Opportunity Act to aid public or nonprofit agencies, including unions, in altering, renovating and operating day care facilities.
- The Head Start program for pre-school children, "which has been universally recognized as being an outstanding success, be continued at an expanded level."

The council said the need for day care facilities is "greatly intensified" by a steady increase in the number of working mothers.

Further, it continued, the need is increased "because many mothers who are public welfare recipients would voluntarily participate in work and training programs if adequate day care arrangements were available for their children."

Still others, it added, may be forced to use day care centers by mandatory provisions of the 1967 social security amendments that require many mothers to participate in training programs.

"We strongly believe that no mother should be forced to leave her children for employment," the council said, "but we also strongly believe that every mother ought to have available to her adequate day care arrangements for her children if she wishes to work."

The statement cited figures showing that the cost of day care per child is $2,000 a year, "an amount which very few working mothers can be expected to pay."

"Therefore," it concluded, "there should be federal funds available to defray at least part of the costs of day care for working mothers, including mothers now on public assistance after they obtain jobs."

Council Urges Savings Bonds Interest Hike

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO reaffirmed its support for the U.S. Savings Bonds payroll savings plan but urged that interest rates "be increased to the average interest rate on U.S. notes issued during the previous year."

An Executive Council statement "wholeheartedly" supported the Savings Bond drive and urged workers to step up their purchase of bonds under the payroll savings plan.

It stressed that purchase of bonds in this way gives workers a savings program which has a number of advantages not found in many other single methods of saving.

"Payroll deductions," it said, "provide workers with an ideal method of participating in a regular, systematic savings plan, easily convertible into cash in financial emergencies, but geared to longer-term investment."

The council urged all AFL-CIO affiliated unions "to join with us" in endorsing the Savings Bonds campaign.

Council Scores Fine:

$100,000 Kicks Off Fund for Teachers

(Continued from Page 1)

AFL-CIO. After the strike, the union was severely penalized because of New York's unjust law."

When the sentence was imposed, the State Supreme Court justice who set the penalty on Local 2 and Shanker "noted the extreme provocation of the other parties to the dispute," but none of the other parties who opposed the teachers was penalized, the council noted.

It said that a law like the Taylor Act "contributes to disputes, provokes strikes and penalizes unions for the just performance of their duty to their members."

The council set the following course of action:

"To demonstrate in a concrete manner the trade union movement's support for the courageous acts of union members, this Executive Council will undertake the task of raising the money necessary to pay the fine levied against the New York City local" of the Teachers.

"We urge every affiliate of the AFL-CIO to contribute its fair share to the Local 2 Emergency Fund which we are today establishing with a contribution of $100,000 from the AFL-CIO."

The statement closed with a declaration saluting Shanker, "who has been sentenced to jail because he did his duty as a union official."

"We assure him and the members he represents the firm, continuing, practical support of the entire trade union movement in the campaign to give teachers the rights and benefits to which they are entitled."

At the time Shanker and the local were sentenced, Meany announced that he would ask the council to set up the fund-raising program. It was the first time since the Danbury Hatters case nearly 60 years ago, in the recollection of veteran unionists, that the entire labor movement had been rallied behind strikers heavily penalized by a court-imposed fine.

In New York, the UFT expressed its appreciation to Meany, the Executive Council and other AFL-CIO unions.

Shanker first offered to begin serving his jail sentence without delay so that he would be released in time to lead his union's fight against the Taylor Act at sessions of the state legislature in March and April. But he agreed to await the result of appeals.

The UFT already has appealed a court refusal to allow a jury trial on the contempt of court citation on which the union and its president were sentenced.

The Court action under the Taylor law grew out of three UFT stoppages last fall in protest against layoffs of teachers by the experimental Ocean Hill-Brownsville school district in Brooklyn. The union charged that district officials had refused to carry out their contract terms or to reinstate the teachers under terms of an arbitration decision. The UFT also charged that groups of "millitants" had invaded classrooms, taken them over and removed the assigned teachers.

Labor Studies Center Set Up By AFL-CIO

(Continued from Page 1)

director of the Steelworkers, and Otto Pragan, assistant director of the federation's Dept. of Education.

Setting a target opening date for Labor Day 1969, the council said the center would be established temporarily in Washington, D.C., with a permanent resident facility to be selected there at a later date.

The center's objectives will be to develop trade union leadership through training programs in the various technical skills required of a union leader and through education programs in the social sciences and humanities "in order that technical skills be buttressed by a firm grounding in theory and philosophy."

In addition, the center will develop and engage in education programs "which will carry the labor movement's basic philosophy to all parts of the community and through its inter-union nature help involve its students in the total labor movement and thus strengthen all affiliated organizations."

A basic staff of full-time professionals for teaching and administrative duties will be recruited and will be supplemented with the part-time services of experts from other institutions.

The initial curriculum will include courses on the American system of unionism, labor economics, American society and civilization, effective reading and other subjects to meet the needs of the labor movement.

The center will establish special institutes to assist the various headquarters departments of the AFL-CIO and its affiliates; establish a special course of study to prepare union members for government service; "and ultimately, if appropriate, establish long-term courses and seminars in the social sciences and humanities."

Negro Voter Project Set As Salute to Randolph

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called on trade unionists throughout the country to honor the 80th birthday of federation Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph with a major outpouring of funds to finance voter education and registration projects in Negro communities.

The Executive Council adopted a statement noting the "tremendous contribution" made by Randolph to the trade union movement and his life's work of building a Negro-labor alliance.

Randolph, who stepped down recently as president of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, will mark his 80th birthday on Apr. 15. A special celebration will be held May 6 at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York City to launch the new fund.

The fund's objectives, the council noted, will be the "strengthening of the political coalition of labor unions, Negroes and liberals which can achieve those economic and social reforms that will bring greater democracy and enduring peace to this nation."

At Mid-Winter Sessions:

Council Sets Forth Key Policy Positions

(Continued from Page 1)

through varied educational training programs. (Story, Page 1).

The council gave preference as an early order of business to the fine imposed on the New York local of the Teachers, voting to contribute $100,000 toward payment of the fine imposed by the court and naming a two-man committee to raise the rest of the $220,000. (Story, Page 1.)

The resignation of Vice Pres. Ralph Helstein for reasons of health was accepted by the council effective Feb. 21. A subcommittee was designated to recommend applicants for that vacancy and two others caused by the recent deaths of Vice Presidents John J. Grogan and George M. Harrison.

Another subcommittee was established to study the possible restructuring and makeup of the council with action expected by the time of the next convention, scheduled to open Oct. 2 in Atlantic City.

In other actions, the council:

- Called for direct, good-faith negotiations between the Arab nations and Israel as the key to lasting peace in the Middle East and condemned the rejection of such talks by Egypt's Nasser and his allies as "tantamount to a . . . determination to wage a war of extermination against the Israeli people." (Story, this Page.)
- Authorized the chartering of a national union of policemen as soon as certain structural prerequisites are met and assurances received on jurisdictional limits. (Story, Page 2.)
- Voted to withdraw the AFL-CIO from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions following a recommendation to do so from the federation's international affairs committee. (Story, Page 4.)
- Strongly reaffirmed support for the farm workers strike and boycott of California table grapes, declaring "we are determined that they succeed and we intend to help them every inch of the way." It added that labor awaits with "great interest" the Administration report on coverage of farm workers under the national labor law. (Story, this Page.)
- Called for rejection of the proposed Uniform Consumer Credit Code by the individual states on an "as is" basis and urged amendments to get rid of the worst features of the code designed as a "model" law on consumer credit. (Story, Page 4.)
- Urged a single coordinating unit for day care centers at the federal level to meet the increasing need for such programs as well as changes in existing federal law to permit employer contributions to trust funds established by collective bargaining to provide for such programs. (Story, Page 2.)
- Called for updating the Hill-Burton Act to provide grants-in-aid for the development of complete health services and not just health facilities, along with comprehensive health systems. (Story, Page 9.)
- Called on Congress to restore budget cuts and provide all necessary funds to make the 1968 vocational education law operative, expressing its grave concern at the cutbacks. (Story, Page 2.)
- Rallied all unionists to support the 80th birthday celebration of A. Philip Randolph in New York May 6 and to contribute to the fund to be established in Randolph's name to finance voter education and registration projects in Negro communities. (Story, Page 2.)
- Voted support for the Oil Workers strike against companies that have still not signed the agreement reached with other companies and called for all possible assistance from affiliates and state and local central bodies. (Story, Page 4.)
- Urged affiliates to lend whatever support they can to the Upholsterers union in its dispute with Economy Furniture of Austin, Tex. (Story, Page 10.)
- Reaffirmed its support of the U.S. Savings Bonds payroll savings plan but urged that the interest rates on the bonds be increased to the average interest rate on U.S. notes issued during the previous year. (Story, Page 2.)

The council heard reports from Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the Dept. of Legislation, and Donald Slaiman, director of the Dept. of Civil Rights.

It discussed with Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.) the question of direct election of the President. Bayh is sponsoring legislation, along with a number of other senators, to abolish the Electoral College and provide for direct elections.

The council is slated to take a position on the question and other voting and electoral matters before the end of the sessions.

THE CHAIRMAN of the Senate's Constitutional Amendments subcommittee, Birch Bayh (D-Ind.), outlines his proposal for direct, popular election of the President to a session of the AFL-CIO Executive Council. He is flanked by federation Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. David Dubinsky.

Direct Israel-Arab Negotiations Called Key to Peace in Mid-East

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Lasting peace in the Middle East can only be brought about by direct, good-faith negotiations between the Arab nations and Israel, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

The council termed rejection of negotiations by the Nasser regime in Egypt and its allies "tantamount to a refusal to accept the existence of the State of Israel and a determination to wage a war of extermination against the Israeli people."

It warned that the most that can be expected of third party intervention in the smouldering dispute "is to separate the combatants temporarily."

To lay the foundations for "a just and lasting peace," the Executive Council said the United States, Soviet Russia, France and Britain should join in urging that:

- Nasser stop transferring to Jordan "the thousands of Palestinians now in the Egyptian army."
- The 15,000 Iraqui troops now stationed in Jordan be speedily sent home.
- Arming and assistance to guerrilla terrorist bands be halted by all governments and Israel discontinue all retaliatory measures.
- A conference of all governments in the Middle East be called, in cooperation with the United Nations, to devise joint action on the refugee problem. This should include compensation by Israel, contributions from "oil-rich" Arab lands, and resettlement of the Palestinians primarily in Arab countries.
- Israel should offer its Arab neighbors "generous peace terms" on the signing of a treaty establishing secure frontiers and the full rights enjoyed by other nations in use of the Suez Canal and the Tiran Strait.

The council statement charged that the Soviet role in the Middle East dispute has been that of "a firebrand rather than a fire brigade."

It said Moscow's effort has been to enable Nasser to gain through "diplomatic, political and economic pressure" that which he was not able to gain on the battlefield.

If these tactics should succeed, the council warned, "the cause of peace in the Middle East would be doomed, Soviet imperialist power enormously strengthened, and the likelihood of a global nuclear conflagration much greater."

The statement also denounced "the recent barbarous hangings" in Iraq as a step "which can only be roundly condemned by all decent mankind."

The council charged that the Soviet Union has to bear a major share of responsibility for the deteriorating situation in the Middle East.

It has provided Nasser and his allies with "the most sophisticated weapons for aggression," the statement said, and provided training and advanced weapons to thousands of Arab guerillas.

Although Moscow "has already suffered two costly failures" with Nasser, the council said, "it realizes that it cannot win without him."

Farm Workers' Union Draws Strong Support

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Farm workers are entitled to be treated "in exactly the same manner as other workers" now covered by U.S. labor laws, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared as it strongly reaffirmed support for the United Farm Workers and their California grape boycott.

"We are determined that they succeed," the council asserted, "and we intend to help them every inch of the way."

The statement noted that Pres. Nixon has instructed his Secretaries of Labor and Agriculture to report on the question of coverage for farm workers under national labor laws.

"We await this report with great interest," the council said, "for we are convinced that fair-minded men could make only one finding—that farm workers are entitled to be treated in exactly the same manner as other workers. . . ."

The council's statement related that the grape pickers and their union—the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee—are "continuing and expanding their fight for the fundamental rights now enjoyed by other workers—the right to unite freely in a labor union and the right to bargain collectively."

"Today those rights are denied to farm workers because of a specific unfair provision of the National Labor Relations Act," the council said. "There is no reason in justice for blocking farm workers from access to the law.

"Only the intransigent opposition of the employers keeps farm workers in this category of second class citizens."

In pursuit of their rights, the statement reported, farm workers have mounted a boycott of California table grapes with "millions of trade union members, civil rights supporters, members of church groups, clergymen, civic and political leaders, teachers, students and housewives" participating.

"Alarmed at the success of the boycott, which is now spreading to Europe, the John Birch Society, the National Right to Work Committee and the ultra-conservative American Farm Bureau Federation are now openly allied with the growers.

"This Executive Council affirms our intention of continuing to support these workers in their valiant efforts. These men and women, who are fighting for their human dignity, are entitled to have a union. We are determined that they succeed, and we intend to help them every inch of the way."

LABOR'S POLICY in broad areas of national concern is shaped by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its mid-winter meeting. Council actions dealt with problems of labor, the nation and the world.

NEWSMEN COVERING the mid-winter meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council question federation Pres. George Meany after a council session in Bal Harbour, Fla.

'Serious Drawbacks' Condemned In Proposed Uniform Credit Code

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO warned of "serious drawbacks" in a proposed "model" state law on consumer credit and called for its rejection as it now stands.

The federation's Executive Council said it can't endorse the Uniform Consumer Credit Code which is expected to be introduced in every state legislature meeting this year. The code was drafted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, whose members are appointed by the governors of the 50 states.

A major drawback, the AFL-CIO statement said, is the "extraordinarily high" ceilings on installment finance charges and interest rates. The council said it was "shocked" at the proposal to allow interest rates of 18 to 36 percent.

The so-called model law would repeal virtually all existing state laws on consumer credit—including some that do a better job of protecting the consumer interest than the proposed legislation.

While the code includes some needed reforms, the council statement stressed that it was drafted as a compromise between the interests of consumers and creditors and has major deficiencies from the consumer point of view.

Because existing state laws vary so widely, the Executive Council urged that AFL-CIO state central bodies take a long, hard look at the "lengthy, complex and sweeping" proposed code.

The council statement suggested:

"In states with a large body of existing legislation, state AFL-CIO central bodies will probably find it best to reject the code and instead seek improvements in their present laws, borrowing good features from the code where appropriate.

"In states with little or very deficient legislation, state central bodies may find it advisable to start with the code as a working basis, but should seek amendment of its worst features."

But in any event, the council said, the complex legislative proposal shouldn't be railroaded through as an unchangeable package.

The Executive Council statement spelled out these "principal objections" to the consumer credit code:

- The proposed finance charge ceilings of up to 36 percent "would inevitably result in exorbitantly high credit costs."
- The 10 percent interest rate which would be allowed on first mortgages is "excessive."
- Provisions on wage garnishment could result in lessening of existing protection for wage earners in a number of states. And labor "cannot in any case endorse a 'take' by creditors as high as 25 percent of a person's wages."
- The AFL-CIO is "alarmed" at the proposed general repeal of present state consumer credit legislation "regardless of whether it is superior to code provisions or covers subjects not covered in the code."

The council offered the assistance of the AFL-CIO staff to state central bodies in connection with credit code legislation.

It added that the federation will continue to seek consumer protection through federal legislation, wherever possible.

"Federal minimum standards in the consumer credit field may in fact be necessary to reach the states in which reform is most needed and where creditor lobbies are most likely to succeed in blocking it," the Executive Council concluded.

COPE Acts to Press Annual Voter Drives

Bal Harbour, Fla.—An annual register-and-vote drive has been unanimously approved by the COPE Administrative Committee as a key part of organized labor's year-round political education and action program.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council is scheduled to vote its approval later in sessions here and provide for financing the annual drive.

Since 1960 the AFL-CIO has mounted register-and-vote campaigns every two years. Experience has shown, the Administrative Committee reported, that the biennial drives lose their effectiveness because of voters moving, being purged from registration rolls and other factors. To keep registration and voting participation high, COPE urged the annual campaigns.

Earlier campaigns had been financed by a 5-cents-per-member voluntary assessment plus contributions from the federation.

The Administrative Committee—made up of members of the Executive Council plus presidents of about 25 federation affiliates and attended by fulltime union political action officials—concentrated on the 1969 city and state and the 1970 congressional elections.

It noted that of the 25 Democrats who will seek re-election to the Senate in 1970, there are 21 proven liberals with excellent voting records and that organized labor will have a "tough job" because of this arithmetic in the 1970 campaigns.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the session that COPE, under the direction of Al Barkan, did an outstanding job in the 1968 elections and that the trade union movement overall could congratulate itself on the job turned in—specifically on maintaining the liberal margins in the 91st Congress and in turning back the Wallace bid for President.

The polls showing George Wallace with about 30 percent of the vote of union members in early September were essentially correct, but the COPE effort turned this around and Wallace is estimated to have received between 6 and 8 percent of labor votes on election day, Meany said.

Oregonian Named To Manpower Post

The commissioner of Oregon's Dept. of Employment, J. Nicholas Peet, has been named U.S. Manpower Administrator.

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz said Peet will be "the principal operating administrator" for the "full range of manpower programs" under the Labor Dept. He will report to Arnold Weber, the recently named Assistant Sec. of Labor for Manpower.

The appointment in effect adds a new top management layer to the manpower program. Under the previous administration, Stanley Ruttenberg had served as both assistant secretary and manpower administrator.

Peet, 43, had been a career state employe in Oregon before being named commissioner in 1965.

Holdout Firms Hit:

Council Pledges Aid To Refinery Strikers

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Every influence available to the labor movement must be brought to bear on oil firms that refuse to bargain realistically with striking oil workers, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

The council said in a statement that it notes "with satisfaction" the settlements won by the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers from a number of firms in the strike of 60,000 OCAW members. The walkout began Jan. 4 at nearly 100 installations of several dozen companies.

"It is significant," the council said, "that a few companies continue to resist settlement with the striking unions on the same basis as has been accepted by most of the industry."

"The failure of Shell, Standard of California, Standard of Ohio, Continental and certain smaller companies to agree to fair and uniform settlements must not go unchallenged by the labor movement."

The strike has demonstrated, the council pointed out, that the oil industry "cannot deal arrogantly with trade unions but must bargain with them realistically." It called on all affiliated unions and central bodies to "render every possible assistance" to Oil Workers still on strike.

"Federal, state and local public officials and civic leaders should be made aware that the conduct of these companies will not be tolerated. We support the men on the picket lines and, if called on to do so, will support any consumer boycotts which may be declared."

OCAW Pres. A. F. Grospiron expressed the thanks of his members for AFL-CIO support, and asked continuance of that backing until the final contract is ratified. He described the settlements made so far and cited the aid received from AFL-CIO unions and departments, especially the Maritime Trades Dept. and the Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Grospiron announced the latest settlement—with Texaco for 7,400 employes on terms conforming to the previously established pattern. The union approved the company offer and sent it to the local unions for a membership vote. Return to work was set for Feb. 20 if the settlement is ratified.

That leaves some 8,000 union members still on strike, Grospiron said. Involved are employes of the four big firms listed by the council, plus Phillips, Skelly, Signal, Douglas, and a scattering of smaller refiners.

Shell Oil came to terms with the union for 1,600 employes at Houston, but imposed conditions at other locations that kept 2,600 other workers still on strike.

One Shell plant management demanded that all strikers take a physical examination before being permitted to return to work. Another wanted to penalize strikers on vacation pay, and others made demands that the union called "minute for such a multi-million-dollar corporation."

OCAW committees voted last July to seek major contract improvements from the highly profitable refining industry. The first agreement—with Union Oil and its Pure Oil division—was valued by the union at 69.6 cents an hour over two years. Later settlements have varied from 64 to 70 cents, including increased shift differentials and insurance programs.

AFL-CIO Withdraws As Member of ICFTU

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council, acting on the recommendation of the federation's international affairs committee, has voted to withdraw from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany announced the action at a press conference noting that the vote was unanimous with one member abstaining and one voting present. The Federation will pay its dues to the ICFTU through the end of February 1969.

Meany stressed that the AFL-CIO will continue to be extremely active in the international labor field with federation affiliates working with the international trade secretariats which are independent organizations and are not part of the ICFTU.

He said that the federation will continue its own activities through the American Institute for Free Labor Development which concentrates on South America, the African-American Labor Council and the similar organization created last year for Asia.

The AFL-CIO President told reporters that the federation had become "completely frustrated" over the past few years with the operations of the ICFTU and that there no longer was any justification for continued membership. The AFL and the CIO were founding members of the ICFTU in 1949.

The handling of the bid by the Auto Workers to join the ICFTU after disaffiliating from the AFL-CIO, was the "last straw" in the general conduct of affairs over the past several years, Meany said.

He noted also that despite ICFTU repeated policy statements against trade union contacts with Soviet bloc countries and the Soviet Union many members of the ICFTU have ignored the policy and are meeting with Communist officials as a part of a rapprochement policy. This, he said, undermines the original concept in founding the ICFTU as an anti-Communist organization.

The ICFTU Executive Board had tabled a bid by the UAW to affiliate despite a request from the AFL-CIO that it reject the proposal outright. Recently ICFTU committees met to review the matter and voted to recommend rejection to the board by a split vote of 5 for, 3 against and one abstention. The ICFTU is made up of national trade union centers from the non-Communist world with the understanding that only one such center can represent a country.

Daniel McLaughlin Dies, Ex-ANG Vice President

West Orange, N.J.—Daniel A. McLaughlin, veteran newsman and Newspaper Guild leader, died of a heart attack at 56. He was an ANG vice president until 1967, when ill health brought his resignation.

Anniversary of Labor's Magazine:

First Issue of Federationist Still Timely 75 Years Later

Labor's magazine, the American Federationist, takes a backward look this month to its first issue 75 years ago and finds many of the concerns of 1894 very relevant to today's labor movement.

The anniversary issue lets the founders of the magazine—Samuel Gompers was the editor—speak for themselves.

But allowing for differences in writing style, the more flowery prose of an earlier era, some of the reprinted articles wouldn't be out of place in today's labor press.

The magazine's first editorial touched on the flexibility of the trade union movement to respond "to changed industrial conditions" and to "meet the continual new requirements of the wage-working classes." (Excerpts, Page 6.)

It is reprinted in the anniversary issue, along with an article by a leading writer and social reformer of the times, Henry Demarest Lloyd, photos from the 1890's and prints of early union labels and emblems.

The current issue, reproducing the cover of the first Federationist on its own cover, also contains an interview with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by Saul Miller, Federationist executive editor (Excepts, Page 7), and an article on the magazine's history by Robert B. Cooney, its assistant editor.

The magazine "could not have been founded at a less promising time," Cooney notes, pointing out that the nation was in the grip of depression, industry was stagnant, millions were jobless, strikes were being crushed and "labor was on the defensive."

Yet the articles in the first issue, he says, were "impressive and serious discussions of the issues of the day by leading writers, inside and outside the labor movement."

Although massive unemployment, widespread poverty and the general weakness of organized labor that prevailed then are gone today, aspects of those problems still exist and in some areas are more critical than ever, Cooney observes.

He points to poverty and unemployment among Negroes, Mexican-Americans and residents of Appalachia; to denial of union rights for farm workers; to human misery in large-city ghettos.

"A sobering parallel between then and now has to do with labor's concern over monopoly power and price-fixing," Cooney states.

The article by Lloyd, reprinted from the issue of March, 1894, was a strong condemnation of business monopolies and their price-fixing practices. It preceded by only a few months publication of Lloyd's book, "Wealth Against Commonwealth," an expose of the oil trust.

That trusts are just as much a cause for labor's concern now is driven home by another article in the February issue—not dealing with the anniversary. It describes the "tidal wave" of conglomerate mergers that is moving through the nation with grave monopolistic implications.

The editorial—or "salutatory"—in the first issue of the Federationist stressed the purpose of the magazine in these terms:

"To voice the demands of the toiling masses, to advocate their rights, to expose the wrongs from which they suffer, to defend them alike from the attacks of avowed enemies and opponents. . . ."

In the interview, Meany said that experience has indicated that the founders of the magazine "were absolutely right" in recognizing the need for the publication.

While dissemination of news about unions by the media of communications "is much greater than it was" when the magazine was founded, he continued, this is largely due to labor's efforts at getting out news.

He added, however, that even today much of the press in the nation "by-and-large is not friendly to the trade union movement . . . not any more friendly than it was back in those days."

Meany praised the Federationist as having served the labor movement "very well" in presenting workers with news on national issues and problems. He said the magazine has adjusted to meet changing conditions and it will continue to keep up with the times.

AFL-CIO PRES. George Meany and Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan examine the 75th anniversary issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO's magazine. Looking on is Saul Miller, left, Federationist executive editor.

Pollock, Wilkins Protest Textile Contract Awards

The Nixon Administration was urged to reconsider a Defense Dept. award of multi-million dollar contracts to three southern textile firms found to have discriminated against Negro workers.

Protests against the contracts were made by Pres. William Pollock of the Textile Workers Union of America and Roy Wilkins, chairman of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights.

Pollock wrote Defense Sec. Melvin R. Laird and Labor Sec. George P. Shultz that the decision to award contracts to companies "on the basis of promises, rather than performance, is hardly a sound policy."

He noted the bypassing of the Labor Dept.'s Office of Federal Contract Compliance, which had reported earlier that the companies had refused to take "affirmative action" to remedy job discrimination.

Wilkins, in a wire to Pres. Nixon, said all three firms—J. P. Stevens & Co., Dan River Mills and Burlington Industries—have "long histories of job discrimination."

He termed the fact that the Defense Dept. did not specify what corrective action the companies had to take "incompatible with the public's right to know and the pledge of an 'open' administration."

Wilkins asked Nixon to order a review to determine if the companies "are indeed in full compliance" with non-discrimination policies.

Shultz, during an appearance on the Issues and Answers television program, said if the companies persist in discrimination, "you can be sure we will be quite willing to withdraw those contracts."

He said he considered it proper to use the government's contracting power to remedy discrimination but didn't think the solution was "to clobber people right and left with this kind of power."

Shultz said the companies had made "some progress, but not enough." However, he claimed that Deputy Defense Sec. David Packard had told the heads of the companies to change their policies, "no ifs, and or buts about it."

Pollock, in his letter, noted that the J. P. Stevens firm "has a long record of violations of the National Labor Relations Act." He said labor considers the denial of employment to workers who support a union "as blatant a violation of their civil rights" as denial of jobs because of race.

Instead of "making progress in the direction of using government contracts to enforce the law," Pollock charged, the Administration appears to be "condoning subterfuge and evasion."

75th ANNIVERSARY of continuous publication is observed by the February issue of the American Federationist. The AFL-CIO magazine reprints this cover from the first issue, published by the AFL in March 1894.

Rail Emergency Board Offers 3-Step Pay Hike

An emergency board in Washington has recommended a series of wage increases for railroad conductors and engineers, plus funds to correct pay inequities in both crafts.

The board, created Jan. 13 by Pres. Johnson to block potential strikes, handled separate disputes between the carriers and 15,000 conductors, represented by the AFL-CIO United Transportation Union, and 35,000 members of the non-affiliated Locomotive Engineers.

The board recommended pay increases adding up to 10 percent in three steps for conductors and engineers paid on a daily rate basis: 5 percent retroactive to last July 1, plus 2 percent effective Jan. 1, 1969, and 3 percent to become effective next July 1.

Conductors and engineers paid on a mileage rate, who generally earn more than daily-rate workers, would receive a 3.5 percent increase retroactive to last July 1, plus 2 percent on Jan. 1, 1969, and 3 percent next July 1.

For the conductors, the board called upon the carriers to put into a fund the equivalent of a 1 percent pay increase plus 5 cents per hour for each conductor. The union and managements would negotiate its distribution to correct inequities. Failing agreement, the issue would be submitted to arbitration.

The board recommended an eighth holiday for the conductors and lowering of their service requirement for two weeks vacation to two years from the present three. Fringe benefits were not involved in the engineers dispute.

The board urged further bargaining on the conductors' proposal to revise the present length-of-train provision so as to give further wage increases for longer trains.

In the case of the engineers, the board did not suggest amounts to be put into a fund to correct inequities, but in other ways the proposal was identical to the one advanced for conductors.

The three-man board also recommended that the unions accept a "moratorium" to the extent that any new notices served on the railroads would not be progressed under the Railway Labor Act to a strike stage before Jan. 1, 1970. In effect, this would mean the agreements would run for 18 months, from July 1, 1968 to Jan. 1, 1970.

The unions have been seeking substantially larger pay increases than the board offered. Both served notices for 15 percent general wage increases, and the conductors offered a variety of proposals for correcting inequities.

The board's wage recommendations adhered to a pattern previously negotiated by other unions and the railroads. However, the amount proposed for the conductors' fund went beyond the pattern and the railroads' last offer.

Spokesmen for the UTU, BLE and the rail managements declined comment on the board's recommendations pending further study.

Recommendations by an emergency board under the Railway Labor Act are not binding but are considered a basis for further bargaining and a settlement. There can be no strikes or imposition of new wages and rules by management prior to Mar. 14, when the law's 60-day "cooling off" period expires.

The board consisted of the Rev. Leo C. Brown of St. Louis University, chairman; Paul N. Guthrie, head of the University of North Carolina economics department; and Abram H. Stockman, a New York attorney.

Floyd E. Smith Nominated as IAM President

The Machinists announced that nominations for top union posts have closed with IAM Vice Pres. Floyd E. Smith of Cleveland, nominated without opposition to succeed Pres. P. L. Siemiller and Vice Pres. Eugene D. Glover of Chicago slated to succeed Sec.-Treas. Matthew DeMore.

Siemiller and DeMore will retire June 30 because of a compulsory retire-at-65 provision in the union constitution. Both took office July 1, 1965. Siemiller has been an AFL-CIO vice president since Dec. 12, 1965.

The IAM constitution requires that a candidate receive the endorsement of at least 10 locals in order to qualify for a place on the election ballot. Smith was nominated by 972 of 975 locals for president, with three locals supporting other candidates. Glover was supported by 968 locals, with two other candidates receiving one nomination each.

Eleven candidates for vice president will contest for nine places on the IAM Executive Council.

'The More Things Change . . .'

THERE IS AN OLD FRENCH MAXIM that every schoolboy exposed to the language somehow lingeringly remembers: The more things change, the more they remain the same.

The 75th anniversary issue of the American Federationist is perhaps the latest example of the innate wisdom of the French adage. In looking back to its roots in 1894, the magazine this month publishes the editorial in the very first issue entitled Salutatory. Here in part is what it said:

"We shall, no doubt, incur the displeasure of the special pleaders, the theorists who have 'just discovered' the most improved scheme by which all the injustice accumulated since the time of man's first existence, may be swept from the face of the earth at once—now.

"Nor are we unmindful of the truth that some of the impetuous and impatient of those who may even wish us well, may not be entirely satisfied.

"If we understand the purpose of the publication of the American Federationist correctly, and we think we do, it is to voice the demands of the toiling masses, to advocate their rights, to expose the wrongs from which they suffer, to defend them alike from the attacks of avowed enemies and opponents as well as those who, under the guise of friendship, would divert their entire efforts into such channels which would leave them defenseless against the rapacity of those who prey upon them today and will continue to prey upon them until the yoke of industrial serfdom is forever overthrown. . . .

"There is quite a number of very well-meaning people, who, having given the Trades Unions but superficial thought regard them as organizations, so rigid in character and form, that they cannot expand and accommodate themselves to changed industrial conditions. That this view is founded upon error every student and keen observer concedes. The same changes and development which are ever going on is reflected in and by the Trades Unions. In truth, there is no organization on earth which expands so readily, or which can so readily and effectually meet the continual new requirements of the wage-working classes as do the Trades Unions.

"The Trades Unions are the reflects in organized, crystallized form of the best thought, activity and hopes of the wage-workers. They represent the aggregate expression of discontent of labor with existing economic, social and political misrule. The Trade Unions are exactly what the wage-workers are and can be made exactly what they may please to make them. Active or sluggish; keen or dull; narrow or broad gauged, just as the members are intellectual or otherwise. But, represent as they may either of these alternatives, the Trade Union is the best form of organization for the toilers to protect their present interests as well as to work out their salvation from all wrong.

"In politics we shall be as we always have been, independent. Independent of all parties regardless under which name they may be known. The only interest we shall have in either is their real, not merely their avowed, attitude towards labor. . . .

"Our contemporaries—the labor press of America—we count not only as our friends, glad to give and entitled to receive mutual support and co-operation, but we also look upon them as the vanguard and pioneers of the grand army of organized labor. We shall endeavor to work together for the organization of our fellow-toilers, to spread the light and do yeoman service to usher in the dawn of that better day for which the history of the human family has been one vast preparatory struggle."

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

*George M. Harrison	David Dubinsky	Joseph Curran
M. A. Hutcheson	Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky
A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton
Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	Paul Hall
Herman D. Kenin	*John J. Grogan	I. W. Abel
P. L. Siemiller	David Sullivan	Hunter P. Wharton
Paul Jennings	A. J. DeAndrade	Ralph Helstein
William Pollock	Max Greenberg	John H. Lyons

Deceased*

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, February 22, 1969 No. 8

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

If You Can't Stand the Heat . . .

A Word Edgewise:

New Orleans Trial Marked By 'Alice in Wonderland' Air

By John P. Roche

WHILE IN GENERAL, as a professor of constitutional law, I am cautious about commenting on current trials, I must say that the proceedings in New Orleans are so far from the usual legal norms that I hardly consider them to fall into the category of adjudication. The "trial" of Clay Shaw for conspiring to murder Pres. Kennedy has an "Alice in Wonderland" quality about it that would make it comic if it were not so morbidly grotesque.

There is no point in exploring the weird atmosphere or the character of the evidence. One hopes District Atty. Jim Garrison will find that his quest for notoriety has led him down a one-way street to political oblivion. However, because Garrison has insisted on pushing his claim that Shaw was involved in a conspiracy, a number of Americans may once again begin to wonder about Dallas.

Nineteen-hundred and sixty-seven was the year of glory for the Dallas demonologists: it seemed as though once a week a book or article appeared indicating that there were really three Oswalds or five bullets or puffs of smoke from grassy mounds or deliberately suppressed evidence.

Most of the steam went out of this effort to undermine the Warren Commission Report when Lyndon Johnson announced he would not again run for President. Actually the attacks were on Johnson, not on the Warren Commission. The real thrust of the attack from the paranoidal left was designed to create what I called the "myth of the wicked stepfather." (The handsome young prince cut down and replaced by a sinister figure reminiscent of Grimms' Fairy Tales.)

While few went so far as to suggest that Johnson had been a party to the assassination, there was general agreement among the critics that 1. only in a basically corrupt society could John F. Kennedy have been killed; and 2. Lyndon Johnson was the incarnation of the forces that killed him. This was vicious rot, but it meshed into the general malaise that grew out of the escalation of war in Viet Nam and the urban riots.

For reasons of their own, the Kennedy faction in the Democratic Party (while never playing the vulgar game) did little to head off this sick onslaught. (This reminds me of the way "responsible" Republicans treated Joe McCarthy back in 1950-53: they didn't like the bull, but they were glad to see the matador cut up.) For example, the release of the autopsy photographs would have made it perfectly clear which direction the shots came from, but even the Warren Commission did not get access to these vital documents.

I can perfectly well understand the family's reluctance to put these baleful documents in the public record, though once the literature of conspiracy began to flourish—and the public began to doubt—the limits of privacy had been reached.

Even more important in undermining the conspiracy-mongers was the presence among the principal participants in the investigation of the Attorney General of the United States, who happened to be the brother of the slain President. Every conspiracy theory about Dallas has to come to grips with the existence of Robert F. Kennedy, and with one pathological exception, none of them do. Moreover, Bob Kennedy was to remain as Attorney General for almost a year after Dallas.

I WAS A POLITICAL opponent of Robert Kennedy's, but I had an extremely high opinion of his talents. Above all, I knew—as most people, I think, did—of his deep love and respect for his brother. Thus I believe it fair to state that had there been the slightest indication of a conspiracy, Atty. Gen. Kennedy, who supervised the work of the FBI, would have pursued the guilty parties to the ends of the earth. I doubt if he would have slept or eaten until they had been brought to book—or until all doubts had been clarified and uncertainties put to rest.

When Robert Kennedy declared himself satisfied that the murder was the work of a lone assassin, I closed the book on Dallas and have never reopened it. I hope that as Americans read about this "conspiracy" farce in New Orleans, they will recall Robert Kennedy's testimony. We have had some savage scars on our body politic these past years. Let them heal.

Meany Recounts Developments:

Role of Federationist Lauded —Labor's Voice for 75 Years

AFL-CIO PRES. GEORGE MEANY was interviewed in connection with the 75th anniversary of the American Federationist by Executive Editor Saul Miller. Following are excerpts from the interview.

Q: The Federationist was authorized by the AFL convention of 1893 and the first issue was published in March of 1894. In its first editorial, the Federationist declared that "the labor problem does not receive the attention due it by the recognized factors for disseminating knowledge, that such a dissemination in discussion is of the greatest importance to the welfare of the industrial classes." Has the problem of coverage of the trade union movement by the media changed much over the years?

A: Well, of course the first editorial set forth in very simple language the reasons why we needed a national magazine—we were not getting the attention from the regular news media of that time—the daily press. We didn't have any radio or television back in those days. And it was quite obvious that the AFL at that time, the Executive Council, felt we had to have some way of reaching our own people.

We couldn't depend on the ordinary news media to reach our people. Number one, they would not highlight the things that we thought were important; and number two, when they did they were liable to give a viewpoint that was not very friendly to the trade union movement because, in the final analysis, the daily press depends to a large degree on advertising to keep it financially solvent and it gets that advertising from people who are, in the main, employers of labor. They don't get it from trade unions.

This first editorial recognized the need for this sort of a publication and over the years, I would say, our experience has indicated that they were absolutely right.

Now, insofar as the problem of coverage changing over the years, of course we have a much larger population in America. We have spread all over the country since then. In addition to the Federationist, we have over 100 magazines representing different international unions; we must have four or five hundred separate papers throughout the country, local papers. I think that the Federationist encouraged this development. Coverage from a trade union point of view—dissemination of news from a trade union point of view—is much, much greater than it was and it has kept pace with the growth in population. This is largely due to the initiative taken by the American Federation of Labor when it established the Federationist.

Q: Mr. Meany, do you feel that today there is still a bias in the media in terms of how they handle labor news?

A. Oh, I think so, quite definitely. I think the regular daily press in this country, by-and-large, is not friendly to the trade union movement. I don't want to over-emphasize this, but I think this is a situation which has not changed to any great extent. My judgment would be that the daily press is not any more friendly today than it was back in those days. Insofar as referring to the daily press as the voice of our enemies, I don't buy that. I don't look upon the people that we disagree with as our enemies. I think we have come a long way since 1894.

However, this doesn't mean that we still don't have basic disagreements with the various corporations and what it is all about, as far as I am concerned, is very, very simple. The basic disagreement is not over the system, not over the type of society that we have. The basic disagreement is on how we share the fruits of our productive machinery in this country. I don't suppose we will ever see the day where there will be complete agreement on that.

Q: Seventy-five years ago, the Federationist talked of charges that the trade union movement was unable to expand and accommodate itself to new conditions. This is a theme that is heard again. How do you see it as it has evolved over the course of America's trade union history?

A: I think the history of the American trade union movement proves that this charge is absolutely without any foundation. The American trade union movement has grown with the growth of the country as a whole.

We are not only representative of our own membership; we really have become, in effect, an agency to air the grievances of all the people.

I can go down a long list of legislative achievements of the American trade union movement that are of benefit to all the workers of America, not just those who happen to belong to our unions—unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, minimum wages, health and protective legislation, education laws.

The list is almost endless and all of this is part of the daily work of the American trade union movement and practically all of these are in areas that were unheard of 75 years ago. So to say that we are unable to expand and accommodate ourselves to new conditions is completely ridiculous. I don't think there is any element in America that has adjusted itself to new conditions to any better extent than has the American trade union movement.

Q: Then you feel that Mr. Gompers and his colleagues in 1894 laid a pretty secure foundation?

A: I am quite sure they did because when you read the Salutatory, as they called the editorial in the first edition, you will find that the philosophy set forth in that editorial could be practically applied, word for word, to our situation here today. Basically, the philosophy of the trade union movement has not changed and while we have changed our methods, while we have become more active in some areas than in others, the basic philosophy of the trade union movement has not changed.

To sum it all up, the basic philosophy is that this is an American movement, it is part and parcel of the American society under which we live and its purpose is to make that society a little better. Our method of making it better is to make the life and the conditions of the wage earners better. That was the philosophy of Samuel Gompers and those associated with him in 1894 and it is still the philosophy of the AFL-CIO today.

Kircher Notes Gains:

Right Wing Claims Refuted On Farm Workers Organizing

LABOR'S CHIEF organizer took sharp issue with the claims made by the American Farm Bureau Federation and others that the farm workers organizing drive in California was faltering.

Pointing to the success of the nationwide boycott being conducted against California grapes, he said on Labor News Conference:

"The very presence of the coalition between the Birchers, the right-to-workers and the Farm Bureau is the best and most obvious indication of the great success of the farm worker organizing campaign."

William L. Kircher, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization, added, "If the organizing effort were failing—if the union were unattractive to the workers, why do these groups have misgivings about submitting" to a reasonable procedure, such as secret ballot elections.

He also debunked the coalition's charge that efforts to give farm workers the same legal protection most workers have had for 30 years was a device to "force unwilling farm workers into unions."

THE REAL QUESTION, he asserted, is "whether or not farm workers have the right to unionize" and to bargain collectively.

"Organizations like the John Birch Society, the National Right to Work Committee and the American Farm Bureau . . . are go-togethers, they work closely together, they have many similarities," he said. They "establish their own reasons for attacking" programs, he declared, and "whether or not those reasons relate to the truth of the facts of life makes very little difference to them."

By Press Associates, Inc.

OIL HAS SUDDENLY become a critical problem for Pres. Nixon. It's flowing toward him from all sides.

It became an issue even as he assumed office when charges were made against his nominee for Secretary of the Interior, Walter J. Hickel, that he was too close to the oil industry and was not sufficiently concerned with conservation.

After Hickel made numerous pledges to act as a conservationist, the Senate confirmed him.

But he was in office only a matter of days when catastrophe struck the rich and beautiful beaches of Santa Barbara, Calif., and surrounding waters.

The Union Oil Co., one of four firms exploring for oil in the area, encountered a leak, and 21,000 gallons of raw oil a day poured into an area six miles off shore. The loss of bird and sea life is beyond estimation. Thirty miles of beach are covered by the slick. Millions of dollars were lost in harbors and marinas.

The drilling could not be blamed on Hickel. The permit was issued by his predecessor, Stewart Udall. Hickel did fly over the stricken area and then for 24 hours halted the drilling. Apparently convinced that this did not affect the leakage of oil, he allowed it to be resumed.

Conservationists were livid. The Santa Barbara supervisor told a Senate hearing that the one-day shutdown "was tokenism at its worst."

It took 12 days before the leak could be stopped.

Involved here is a massive and powerful industry. Last year in rent, royalties and bonus payments, the federal government collected about $1.6 billion from the oil producers. Since these amount to about one-seventh of the gross income, the total to the oil companies can be well estimated.

Meanwhile, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.) is pushing his bill to fight water pollution by oil. He personally visited the Santa Barbara area.

MUSKIE AND HICKEL also figured in the next oil flap.

The initial episode took place during the Senate Interior Committee hearing on the confirmation of Hickel. Muskie asked him why, when he visited the Senator's office, he was accompanied by James G. Watt. Muskie explained that Watt, a registered lobbyist for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce in the area of natural resources including oil, had opposed his clean water bill and opposed federal control over areas mutilated by strip mining.

Hickel insisted that he had never seen Watt before but that someone had suggested he would be helpful to the Cabinet designee and knew his way around.

Some weeks later the Oil & Gas Journal disclosed that Watt had been placed on Hickel's payroll as an "oil specialist," his consultant on oil matters.

Muskie and Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.) bitterly protested the appointment. The Maine senator declared that "if the point of view of the Chamber of Commerce were to be adopted, in my judgment, it would destroy the water quality standard program as now established."

The 27.5 percent depletion allowance on oil and gas has also figured prominently in talk about tax reform. This is one of the most publicized tax loopholes and to permit it to stand would undercut any concept of meaningful reform.

Oil also figures prominently in foreign affairs, particularly in the volatile Middle East where the oil-rich Arab nations are engaged in a bitter confrontation with Israel.

Nixon has placed the Middle East at the top of his agenda on the world scene—along with Viet Nam.

CLAIMS THAT the California farm workers organizing drive is faltering were refuted by AFL-CIO Organizing Dir. William L. Kircher, center, on Labor News Conference. Questioning him were James Millstone, left, of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and Stanley Levey of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers. The AFL-CIO produced interview is heard Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

How to Buy:

Rash Shopping Habits Cause Homemakers to Overspend

By Sidney Margolius

SHOPPING FOR BEST food buys is difficult enough these days when a supermarket may have as many as 8,000 items, and many foods come prepackaged with inadequate information on what they contain, and are presold by mass TV advertising. Modern supermarkets really have become a trap for the unwary.

But often housewives are their own worst enemies. They whisk through the supermarkets spending in 18 minutes the $10 bill their husbands worked three hours to earn. They spend exactly three seconds buying their bread and other baked goods. They fail to study the ingredients shown on the package, or to calculate the cost per pound of the many products now sold in ounces and even fractions of ounces.

A Michigan survey found that nearly a fourth of the homemakers questioned shop by trial and error. Another fourth buy whatever they want without regard to cost. When they get home, only about half are satisfied with their selections, and feel they have done a good job.

Women perform this way nowadays not because they are lazy but because shopping has become more difficult. But trying to get through with it quickly, instead of treating it as seriously as earning money, makes you a target for manipulation.

One problem is that in an age of heavy advertising and prepackaged foods, many women have lost confidence in their own judgment. They tend to rely on a well-known name or to assume that a higher price means better quality.

A NUMBER OF TESTS have shown that sometimes the same item priced a little higher sold even better. One such test several years ago found that leaner pork butts and hams, called "meat-type" pork, sold better if they were priced 6 cents higher than if only 2 cents higher than regular pork.

Another example is the higher prices many people pay for produce because of prettier or more perfect appearance. For example, red-skinned apples are priced almost according to the amount of red. The redder, the more they cost, the U.S. Agriculture Dept.'s Consumer & Marketing Service points out. But there is little difference in the taste.

Similarly, oranges with greenish skins and grapefruit with rust-colored splotches also cost less but are the same inside. Perfectly-round onions command a higher price than those that are lopsided.

Large sizes of fruits and vegetables sometimes also command an extra price. But they are not always the best quality, let alone the most economical.

Here are other tips that can help you avoid some of the cost-raising myths about food values:

Canned Produce: Main difference between fruits in "heavy" syrup and the cheaper "light" syrup is less than an ounce of sugar which is worth less than 1 cent. Too, the lower-price canned fruits and vegetables may be simply irregular-shaped pieces, not the uniform pieces of the costlier brands. The nutritional value is exactly the same.

Eggs: Grade A or AA eggs are the same in nutritional value as Grade B or other cheaper eggs. The yolk is flatter and the white thinner in Grade B, so the egg spreads out more in the pan. Certainly for many uses, such as omelets, the lower grades are just as suitable.

Shell color, of course, has nothing to do with quality. In the Boston area, brown eggs command a higher price. In other cities, white eggs may cost more. This occurred because in the old days, when eggs from nearby farms were fresher, the local farmers happened to keep the breeds of hens that produced eggs of a particular color.

Meat: This is the biggest fooler of all. The expensive "choice" grade does not have as much lean as the cheaper "good" and "standard" grades. Thus, it does not have as much protein, and so is less nutritious. For example, assuming the same trim, a "choice" round roast has 76 percent separable lean; the "good" grade, 80, and the "standard", 86 percent.

The New Milks: With a number of new versions of milk coming on the market, you have to read the labels to understand what they provide. For example, Richard Magleby, in a report published by Penn State University, found many housewives reluctant to buy the new "2 percent milk." They believed it had fewer vitamins and proteins. While "2 percent milk" does have less milkfat than standard whole milk (usually 3½ percent), many brands contain 2 percent added solids. Thus, the "2 percent milk" really has more protein, calcium and other minerals than the higher-fat standard kind.

Copyright 1969 by Sidney Margolius

"This is my own personal pension plan, strike fund and vacation savings . . . approved by both labor and management!"

In 5-24 Age Bracket:

Accident Death Toll Increases for Youth

JUST BEING YOUNG can be dangerous as fatal accidents claimed more young people last year in the 5 to 24 age bracket: Here are the facts:

- Among children 5 through 14 years old the death total from accidents was up nearly 12 percent in 1968 (8,700 fatalities compared to 7,800 in 1967).
- Deaths among persons aged 15 through 24 increased nearly as much—9 percent (23,300 fatalities in 1968 compared to 21,400 in 1967).
- Traffic fatalities were up 600 among persons aged 5 through 14, and up 1,400 among persons aged 15 through 24.

These were among the findings of the 1969 Preliminary Condensed Edition of Accident Facts, released by the National Safety Council.

Council statisticians said the increase could be explained at least partially by the increase in population in these age groups.

Nevertheless, "we are just simply not meeting the needs of today's youth," said John D. Lawlor, NSC executive vice president. "Yesterday's shop-worn methods—the 'Johnny-Do-This' and 'Johnny-Don't-Do-That'—simply will no longer work," he said.

What is needed, Lawlor asserted, is a more positive approach to safety education and youth involvement at the earliest possible time—in the home, the schools, the church and youth organizations.

Specifically, he urged the nation's school districts and youth organizations to assume more responsibility for educating America's youth in proper behavioral patterns so that they will know and instinctively react in the proper—the safe—way in all life situations.

The report also shows that nearly twice as many persons—28,000—died as a result of home accidents during 1968 as compared to the 14,300 persons who died as result of work-connected accidents.

FATALITIES IN THE HOME, the report shows, were second in absolute numbers only to fatalities caused by motor vehicle accidents—55,500.

Public—but non-motor vehicle—accidents accounted for an additional 20,000 fatalities during 1968.

On a percentage basis, motor vehicle fatalities showed the greatest increase—up nearly 5 percent. Work-connected fatalities increased about 1 percent, public accident deaths remained virtually unchanged, and home accident fatalities decreased almost 2 percent compared to 1967.

Overall, fatalities from all accidents in the United States during 1968—an estimated 114,000—were up 2 percent compared to the approximately 112,000 fatalities from all accidents during the previous year.

The 1968 death rate per 100,000 persons was 57. The 1967 rate was 56.6.

There were 2,800 fatal firearms accidents—the same as during 1967.

Soup to Nonsense:

Famous Last Words Often Leave a Pungent Aftertaste

By Jane Goodsell

WORDS TO BE eaten: "Say, I know a sure cure for the hiccups. Here's a glass of water. Now what you do is hold your breath and take little sips while I place my fingers on this spot in front of your ears. It works every time."

"Don't bother setting the alarm. I have this funny knack of being able to wake up any time I set my mind to it."

"What we need is a real livewire chairman to set up a committee to study the problem."

"Me, jump rope? Say listen, I used to be the neighborhood champion when I was a kid, and I'll just bet I'm as good today as I ever was. Too bad there isn't a rope around so I can show you."

"Twenty-five cents? Listen, if we're going to bet, let's make it a real bet. I hate to take your money because I know for a fact I'm right, but if you insist on being stubborn, I'll put up $10 against your $5, okay?"

"No need to make a reservation. The maitre d' is a good friend of mine, and he'll fix us up with a choice table."

"Pick a card, any card. Now place it face down on the table while I cut the cards—like so. Now I'll just close my eyes for a moment and concentrate. Okay, now I've got it. It's the seven of hearts, right?"

"WELL, NATURALLY I can read my own writing. Just hand it over."

"Of course, they'll be glad to see us. They told us to drop in anytime, didn't they?"

"What do you mean, you don't know how to tie a square knot? Why, there's nothing to it. You just slip this end through this loop and this end through here, and pull it tight and. . . ."

"Well, so what if there aren't any prices on the menu? After all, you only live once, and dinner for two couldn't possibly cost more than $15."

"Oh, go ahead and park here. I'll stay in the car and if a policeman comes, I'll explain that you've just run down the street to get some change."

First Message to Congress:

Nixon Retains OEO, Shifts 2 Programs

(Continued from Page 1)

the first formal message Nixon has sent to Congress since taking office, it was strictly informational and did not request any immediate legislative action.

The President said he will later ask Congress to extend authorization for appropriations for the OEO for another year. And before June 30, Nixon said, he will submit "a comprehensive proposal for the future of the poverty program."

Nixon had both praise and criticism of the Office of Economic Opportunity in his message.

He said the anti-poverty agency "has been a valuable fount of ideas and enthusiasm."

Its "greatest value," Nixon said, "is as an initiating agency—devising new programs to help the poor, and serving as an 'incubator' for these programs during their initial, experimental phases."

This, he said, is the area on which OEO should concentrate.

He was critical of the management and loose financial supervision of some OEO programs.

"Even those most throughly committed to the goals of the anti-poverty effort recognize now that much that has been tried has not worked," the President said.

"The men and women who will be valued most in this Administration," Nixon added, "will be those who understand that not every experiment succeeds, who do not cover up failures but rather lay open problems, frankly and constructively, so that next time we will know how to do better."

In new areas, Nixon hinted at steps to overcome disadvantages which blight many children during the first four years of their lives—before Head Start comes into the picture.

"If we are to make genuine, long-range progress" in overcoming poverty, he suggested, much more attention must be given to those earliest years "which determine how far, throughout his later life, the child can reach."

Spinoff of OEO programs to other agencies has been a hotly controversial issue in past Congresses, with most Republicans and conservative Democrats favoring it and most liberals supporting the role of the Office of Economic Opportunity as the keystone of the anti-poverty effort.

IATSE Contracts Boost Wages in Film Industry

Hollywood—Thirty-two West Coast film industry locals of the Theatrical Stage Employes won a four-year contract to boost wages 21 percent in three steps for about 25,000 members.

Richard F. Walsh, president of IATSE, announced that the new contract, worked out a day before the old pact expired, went into effect Feb. 1.

The major items in the contract include:

- Wage increase of 12 percent immediately, an additional 5 percent the third year, and 4 percent at the start of the fourth year.
- Improved monthly payments under the Motion Picture Industry Pension Plan from $200 to $225 and higher supplemental payments for pensioners with longer service than the base rate requires.
- Additional benefits under the Motion Picture Health & Welfare Plan with employer contributions increased from 17.25 cents an hour to 22.55 cents.
- Provisions for distant location work, air travel insurance and incentive retirement pay.

Under the supplemental payments clause of the pension plan, a retiree who contributed to the fund would receive a total of $350 based on 60,000 hours and $444.37 for 90,000 hours.

Pension plan payments were increased for the employer from 20.3 cents an hour to 25.95 cents, and for employes from 12.8 cents an hour to 16.4 cents.

Vice Pres. George Flaherty of IATSE assisted Walsh in the negotiations. Ralph Clare was chairman of the committee representing the basic craft unions.

Earlier, IATSE signed a three-year contract in New York with major film distributors calling for increased wages and benefits for motion picture salesmen.

The pact is retroactive to Dec. 1, Walsh reported. It gives the salesmen an 8 percent raise in salary in the first and third contract years and $5 a week more at the start of the second year.

Starting pay for salesmen with at least a year of experience was raised from $115 a week to $125.

Walsh said the companies have agreed to provide air-conditioned cars for summer use and to replace all present autos. They agreed to full payment of Blue Cross insurance by the third year, and to raise the employer's contribution to the IATSE national pension fund to $8.55 by 1971.

Participating companies are Columbia, MGM, Universal, UA, W-7 Arts, 20th Century-Fox and Paramount Pictures.

New Approach Sought in Aid To Hospitals

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Updating of the Hill-Burton Hospital Construction Act by Congress to provide grants-in-aid for the development of complete health services and health systems has been called for by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

In urging the law's expansion beyond its present "bricks and mortar" approach, the council noted that the improvements it seeks have been recommended by an Advisory Commission on Health Facilities set up by Pres. Johnson.

At the time the law was passed in 1946, a council statement pointed out, the nation's greatest health need was to increase hospital beds from a level of 2.5 beds per 1,000 population.

"Today, thanks to the Hill-Burton program we have 4 beds for every 1,000 persons," the statement said.

Although new hospitals may be needed in some areas, the council continued, "the more urgent need today is to modernize or to replace obsolete facilities, particularly in urban areas and in poverty ghettos."

"Now is the time for new changes to meet new conditions," the council concluded.

FOUR YOUNG MEN at the Golconda, Ill., Civilian Conservation Center learn carpentry by helping to build a house under guidance from James T. Long, second from right, an instructor for a project sponsored by the Carpenters and the Job Corps. After a year of training the men will be placed in union apprentice programs in their home areas.

Future Carpenters Hone Skills At Illinois Job Training Center

Golconda, Ill.—Fifty-three young men are getting an opportunity to acquire construction skills and build better lives for themselves through a project sponsored by the Carpenters and a Job Corps center here.

The men, many of them school dropouts from ghetto areas, are being trained by instructors furnished by the union along with books and teaching aids.

The project at Golconda Civilian Conservation Center, about 125 miles southeast of St. Louis, is one of seven projects being carried out by the Carpenters at Job Corps centers across the nation.

All told, more than 350 youths are being trained in carpentry at sites near Portland, Ore., Sonora, Calif., Houston, Tex., Flatwood, W.Va., Anthony, Va., and Honolulu, Hawaii.

Although the program of 12-months training got under way only last summer some trainees at the centers have already graduated from the program.

Henry B. Mixen of Anna, Ill., coordinator of the project here for the union, described Golconda's three early graduates—they completed the course in six months—as "unusually proficient young men."

Mixen also drew a picture of the program as it operates here:

He explained that the graduates of the course will be placed in vacant apprentice carpentry jobs in their home areas or in areas of their choosing.

Advanced Apprentices

Normally, apprentice carpenters must remain in that grade for the first four years of their careers, Mixen said. The apprenticeship is reduced to three and one-half years for those who have completed the Job Corps Carpentry Program, he said. "Thus, higher wages are received sooner."

Mixen has five union instructors and a secretary on his staff which has headquarters on the center grounds. Work supervisor for the project is Lee Foote, a former Air Force pilot who retired with the rank of major.

The trainees are working on two major construction projects currently. One is a seven-bay warehouse at the Vienna, Ill., forest ranger station. The other is a new three-bedroom home at Jonesboro, Ill., for the district ranger of Shawnee National Forest.

Trainees alternate on a weekly basis between work assignments and classroom studies.

"The first challenge at the center is to motivate these high school drop-outs to want to follow a constructive program," Foote said.

"Remember that most of them reach the center with chips on their shoulders the size of boulders. The center's specialists are qualified to cope with this situation.

Rapid Progress

"Once these young men get their attitudes straightened out, they move ahead rapidly. This is a wonderful program."

About 70 percent of the corpsmen in the training course are Negro. Asked if that didn't mean that his union ultimately would have more Negro members, Mixen replied in the affirmative.

"As a matter of fact, that was one of the things the union had in mind in going into this thing," he said. "We welcome the chance to provide this opportunity to qualified men who want to enter the building trades."

T. Lamar Beasley, director of the Golconda center, said that a heavy equipment project in eastern Tennessee was so successful that the Office of Economic Opportunity turned to the carpentry instruction as a sequel.

"I have seen the overall program work and feel that it is effective in making a contribution to an improved society," Beasley said. "We think we are most fortunate to be one of the centers selected for the carpentry center."

To enter the program, Job Corps trainees are specially selected by the interest they have shown in carpentry as a profession and by their attainment of a seventh grade educational level in the Job Corps program.

CEILING MEASUREMENTS are taken by two trainees in carpentry at a Golconda, Ill., Job Corps center. Looking on, from left, are Henry B. Mixen, coordinator of the project sponsored jointly by the Carpenters and the center; Richard Lewis, a journeyman carpenter instructor, and Lee Foote, project supervisor.

Labor Rallies Support for Upholsterers

Bal Harbour, Fla.—AFL-CIO unions were rallied by the Executive Council to come to the aid of the Upholsterers, now in the third month of a strike against Economy Furniture in Austin, Tex.

The council called on affiliates to "lend whatever support they can" to the strikers and urged all union publications to "take immediate note of this struggle."

The Upholsterers won a representation election among 385 employes last May 17 by a 3-1 margin and were certified by the National Labor Relations Board last Oct. 14. But the company has refused to bargain in good faith, the council charged.

In addition, it said, company management "has demonstrated open bias by engaging in name calling, with particular emphasis on the Mexican-American ethnic background of the majority of its employes."

The council said it "deplores the unfair, unjust and biased acts of the company."

The Economy firm makes three lines of contemporary, modern and provincial furniture. Its employes voted to strike Nov. 27, 1968, when management refused to negotiate. No meetings to discuss the dispute have been held since then, the union said. It reported that the plant is continuing to operate with the aid of strikebreakers.

CONFERENCE OF TRANSPORTATION TRADES executive board, meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., receives a report from O. William Moody, Jr., its secretary-treasurer. Others, from left, are Railway Clerks' Pres. C. L. Dennis, conference chairman; Bruce Pike, conference executive director; and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Paul Hall, also head of the Maritime Trades Dept.

World Code Pressed To Curb Air Hijacking

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A free world trade union effort to set up an international code covering air piracy is an important step toward curbing an "increasingly acute" problem, a group of AFL-CIO unions declared here.

The executive board of the Conference of Transportation Trades called specifically on the U.S. Senate to ratify the Tokyo convention adopted in 1963 but not now in effect because it lacks the required number of ratifications. The board urged strengthening the pact along the lines of legislation introduced in the Senate.

It urged also that sister transportation unions in the Intl. Transport Federation "press their governments" to ratify the Tokyo convention which calls for the safe return of the passengers, crew, cargo and plane to the country of origin.

The convention was drawn up by a United Nations body—the Intl. Civil Aviation Organization—and while signed by 23 nations, only eight—four short of the required number—have ratified it.

The CTT board acted after reviewing a report by the Federal Aviation Administration documenting the history of air piracy since 1961 and a report by a House subcommittee on Inter-American Affairs.

Since 1961 there has been a total of 46 attempts to hijack commercial aircraft, most of them successful.

In 1968 there were 18 American airliners hijacked, all of them flown to Communist Cuba.

The Board pointed out that there is "no international law covering freedom of the air," in contrast to world treaties on piracy on the seas.

The resolution warned that proposals for paying a reward for those who aid in the conviction and apprehension of hijackers is risky and that "bounty-hunting citizens might endanger themselves, other passengers and the crew by rash acts of heroism."

The board also urged support for the proposal of the Intl. Air Transport Association to deny air service to any country which continues to provide a haven for hijackers of commercial aircraft.

The 28 unions affiliated with the conference also adopted a legislative report voicing strong opposition to forcing compulsory arbitration on unions in contract disputes in the transportation field, assailing proposals to extend injunction procedures against unions, attacking the "labor court" scheme and proposals to deprive workers of their democratic right to cast secret written ballots on contract proposals.

Public Employes Held Lacking Basic Rights

Bal Harbour, Fla.—There has been no significant progress in the past year "toward righting the wrong that has been perpetrated against the public employe," a special report to the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. executive board declared.

"It has been a year of justice delayed, and therefore of justice denied," an interim report on collective bargaining in the public sector concluded.

The conclusions came in a foreword from Jerry Wurf, chairman of the MTD committee created a year ago to conduct an intensive study of public employe problems. Citing the enormity of the problems involving the federal government and each of the 50 states, Wurf said current actions in the public employe sector "are neither taking place rapidly enough, nor are they moving in the right direction in terms of fair and equitable treatment."

The convention committee will continue its study for presentation to the next MTD convention, Wurf said, with the aim of developing basic guidelines "that will be equally useful to public employes and political subdivisions in developing a uniformly fair approach."

The 60-page report reviews the various dimensions of the public employe problem in terms of the "public interest" concept, the "special status" argument, the theme of "rights versus privilege" and the sovereignty doctrine. It reviews public employe strikes and the developments in collective bargaining at the federal and state and local level.

Under the heading of "some interim opinions," the report says that in the federal sector, after seven years of the executive order, what is needed is a law, not a directive, to safeguard workers' rights. It outlines an approach to such new legislation.

In the state and local sector it urges concentration on four areas: a clear-cut statement on the right to organize, the right of public employes to be represented by a union of their choice, to bargain collectively, and bargained and signed contracts setting out in detail wages and working conditions.

The continuing study, the report said, will examine more fully two areas: the scope of collective bargaining including all aspects of relationships involving the legislature and the civil service system and whether effective public employe collective bargaining is possible in the absence of the right to strike.

Visiting Latins Sharpen Skills On Bargaining

Nineteen Latin American trade unionists, from 12 countries, are taking a nine-month course at Georgetown University in Washington designed to help them strengthen their negotiating skills.

They are participants in the American Institute for Free Labor Development's third course in labor economics, which opened Feb. 3. The first course was held at Loyola University in New Orleans in 1967 and the second at Georgetown last October.

The curriculum includes classes in economics, statistics, industrial relations, and manpower programs, along with a special course in English—all directed to helping the students in assembling bargaining ammunition.

Lecturers for the course, in addition to AIFLD and Georgetown staff members, will include union, business and government officials.

John F. Regan Dies, N.Y. Plumbers Official

White Plains, N.Y.—John F. Regan, general organizer for the Plumbers in New York State since 1944, died at 66 of a heart attack and was buried Feb. 13 from St. Thomas Church, Jamaica Plain, Mass. He had been a pipefittter for 23 years at Charlestown Navy Yard, Boston.

After Four Days:

Consumer Adviser Quits Under Fire

After four controversial days as Pres. Nixon's consultant on consumer affairs, Willie Mae Rogers resigned rather than take a leave of absence from her job as chief dispenser of Good Housekeeping magazine's "seal of approval."

Both Miss Rogers and the magazine's advertising-linked "seal" had come under heavy fire and the short-lived appointment had all the makings of a monumental embarrassment to the Administration.

Miss Rogers had made it clear at a press conference following her appointment that her first love continued to be the magazine. It would continue to pay her salary while she worked for the President because "somebody has to pay my room and board."

There wouldn't be any conflict of interest, she insisted, because "I am basically honest."

Pres. Nixon apparently had some second thoughts on the propriety of this arrangement.

After the storm of criticism broke, he asked Miss Rogers to take a formal leave of absence without pay from her job as director of the Good Housekeeping Institute while she was serving on the White House staff.

But the lady wasn't willing.

In the polite language of White House announcements, it was reported that "Miss Rogers felt that, in view of the criticism of her and the Good Housekeeping Institute that has risen from a misunderstanding of her assignment, she could not perform her task in this sensitive field with full effectiveness."

The President said he "understands" her feelings, regrets the "unwarranted criticism" of "the integrity of Miss Rogers and the organization she represents," and "reluctantly" accepts her "decision not to serve."

One of the blasts at the appointment of Miss Rogers came from the chairman of a House Government Operations subcommittee which has been investigating the Good Housekeeping seal.

Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal (D-N.Y.) said the appointment had a "built-in conflict of interest." The subcommittee chairman noted that advertisers are required to increase their advertising in Good Housekeeping whenever they raise their overall advertising budget in order to keep the "seal of approval." Other congressmen and senators also voiced criticism.

Perhaps the sharpest criticism, however, followed the press conference at which Miss Rogers expressed her views—or lack of views—on the government's role in consumer protection.

She considered a question regarding the need for further consumer protection too "provocative" to discuss at a news conference. She thought the government should protect consumers "if necessary." She was "really staggered" to find out "the number of people involved and the amount of money" in government consumer programs.

As for her own qualifications, Miss Rogers expressed pleasure that "for the first time" a President has come for advice on consumer affairs "to someone who has had practical experience in this whole area."

Asked whether she planned to confer with Betty Furness, who was Pres. Johnson's special assistant on consumer affairs, Miss Rogers retorted, "On what?"

She was asked whether she was implying that her predecessors in the White House consumer post—Miss Furness and Esther Peterson—lacked "practical experience."

Miss Rogers replied, "Since this is my day, let's talk about me, okay?"

Her salary at Good Housekeeping, Miss Rogers said, was "too personal" to disclose.

As to whether she planned to have advisory committees on consumer issues, "I assume I can have them if I want them. But you know I am a pretty stubborn person. I have my own ideas."

Negro Apprenticeships Raised 46% in Chicago

Chicago—Efforts of a four-way partnership to recruit minority group youths into building trades union apprenticeship programs are paying big dividends.

Orvis L. Wertz, deputy regional director of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training, reports that the number of Negro apprentices in the construction industry here increased by 46 percent during the last six months of 1968.

He said the gain was the largest in any six-month period since the Chicago Apprenticeship Minority Program began in December 1965. There were 341 Negro apprentices in federally-registered construction apprenticeship programs here as of Dec. 21, compared with 234 a half-year earlier.

The Apprenticeship Minority Program was stepped up in February 1968 when the Chicago Building Trades Council, Building Construction Employers Association of Chicago, the Chicago Urban League and the Illinois Bureau of Employment Security signed the first local contract under an agreement between the Labor Dept. and the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. to recruit minority youth for apprenticeships.

These groups had been working together earlier through the Apprenticeship Information Center here.

Thomas J. Nayder, secretary-treasurer of the Chicago Building Trades Council and a member of the advisory committee of the Apprenticeship Information Center, has been conducting high school students on tours of job sites to demonstrate what it takes to become a building tradesman.

Since last June 30, the number of minority group apprentices has gone up by 17 in painting, 16 in sheet metal work, 12 in carpentry, 11 in structural iron work, seven each for bricklayers and cement masons, five in plumbing, three in electrical work, one in plastering.

The Operating Engineers' apprenticeship plan began operation in the last half of the year with 32 of the 57 participants members of minority groups. Asbestos Workers, registered with the Labor Dept. for the first time, have two minority group apprentices.

Wertz predicted that building plans on the drawing boards here will expand opportunities in most construction crafts.

New 'Atmosphere' Cited:

Ship Unions Buoyed By Maritime Outlook

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A sense of optimism that maritime reform and strengthening of the merchant marine will move ahead in the new Administration marked the two-day meeting here of the executive board of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.

MTD Pres. Paul Hall made it clear that there would be difficulties, but that having survived the past few years and with a new "atmosphere" in Congress and the White House matters would go a "great deal better."

The meeting received a message from Pres. Nixon declaring that "a strong and viable merchant marine is essential" to the quest for economic vitality and expressing his "deep interest in seeing our merchant marine play a more important role in world commerce."

The wire, addressed to Hall, said that the President looked forward "to working with your department and all of organized labor in achieving this goal and in building a stronger, more united nation."

Supporting the feeling of progress in maritime matters was a legislative report to the board which noted "a marked change in attitude about maritime affairs in official Washington circles." The report noted platform planks adopted by both parties last year, the President's position paper during the campaign, the appointment of Transportation Sec. John A. Volpe and his "awareness" of maritime problems, along with the appointment of Rocco Siciliano as Undersecretary of Commerce. It noted the sameness of the 91st Congress to the 90th Congress which adopted important maritime legislation including an independent maritime agency—a move vetoed by Pres. Johnson—and concluded:

"It is against this background that we take an optimistic view of the prospects for moving ahead in the legislative area in 1969. . . . Progress is in sight and it's achievable."

The keys to progress, the report emphasized and the board underscored in adopting resolutions, is reconstituting the Maritime Administration as an independent agency and a positive program of fleet development providing for new ships for the unsubsidized segment of the fleet, building of American flag ships exclusively in American shipyards, encouraging the unsubsidized operator to invest more private capital in ship construction and ending once and for all "double subsidies" for subsidized operators, mostly to 14 companies that receive 55 percent of the cost of constructing their vessels from government funds plus operating subsidies.

There is a need also for legislation covering the nation's fishing industry, the Great Lakes fleet, inland waterways, oceanography and other matters.

The board called strongly for vigorous enforcement of the cargo preference law so that foreign aid and Food-for-Peace shipments are carried in a much greater proportion on unsubsidized American vessels and that, if possible, 100 percent of those cargoes move in American vessels.

In addition to maritime matters, the board adopted policies in a number of areas of concern to its affiliates and the trade union movement generally, including support for the grape workers, the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner strike, policies to protect Fire Fighters against harassment and the Meat Cutters' boycott of Neuhoff products.

It voiced strong support also for legislation and other action to wipe out hunger and malnutrition in the United States and vowed to oppose in any form the introduction of compulsory arbitration into collective bargaining.

The board received an economic report reviewing developments in the economy in 1968 and the role of profits in triggering inflation. The surge in profits, rather than wage increases, is primarily responsible for higher prices, the report noted.

It called also for overhauling the nation's tax structure to provide equity for all taxpayers and end legal evasion of taxes by the wealthy.

THE FIRST WOMAN to take part in a meeting of the executive board of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. addresses one of its sessions in Bal Harbour, Fla. She is Penny Singleton, a vice president of the Variety Artists.

Longshoremen Achieve Pacts in 3 More Ports

New York—Striking Longshoremen won agreements from dock companies in three major ports and kept trying to win similar contract improvements from holdout employers in other Atlantic and Gulf ports where the strike that started Dec. 20 continues.

Members of ILA locals in Baltimore, Miami-Fort Lauderdale and New Orleans were summoned to vote Feb. 21 on acceptance or rejection of new pacts, won after a two-month strike.

The New Orleans vote was ordered by a court on petition of the National Labor Relations Board, which charged that a ratification vote had been delayed although agreement was reached Feb. 2 and 3.

A Baltimore ILA official called employer proposals there "the biggest and best" ever negotiated. Industry sources said it was equal to, if not better than, the master contract agreed to in New York City Jan. 14 and ratified in another court-ordered vote.

Dockmen in the port of New York voted 9,328-3,213 to accept a new three-year agreement and returned to work. The pact will give 22,000 ILA members a $1.60 package of improvements including wage hikes of 38, 25 and 35 cents in successive years and pension, welfare, vacation and holiday gains valued at 22, 25 and 15 cents additional over the contract term.

The Baltimore offer included a guaranteed work year of 1,800 hours for all dockers who worked 700 hours or more in one of two qualifying years. Hourly pay will be raised to $4 under the offer this year, retroactive to Oct. 1; $4.25 next year and $4.60 the third year—a total pay hike of 98 cents.

Employer payments into the ILA pension and welfare fund will be increased 46 cents over the three years. This will finance a $300 monthly pension for those with 20 years of service in the industry at age 62, the negotiators said.

The ILA also won agreement on a fifth and sixth week of vacation for those who work 1,500 hours or more per year, and 13 paid holidays.

Labor-Backed Group Health Plan Spurred by $300,000 U.S. Grant

New Haven, Conn.—A prepaid group health plan started and advanced by organized labor to provide comprehensive care for thousands of New Haven families has moved an important step ahead with a federal grant to help put the program into operation.

The plan, known as Community Health Care Center, has received a $300,000 one-year grant from the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. with a promise of $600,000 more in aid for the following two years.

The Greater New Haven AFL-CIO initiated the plan in 1964 after its survey of union members in the area revealed that their best medical insurance covered only about a third of actual medical expenses.

After several years of efforts to develop the plan, the local federation secured passage of an enabling bill in the 1967 Connecticut legislature despite strong opposition from physicians and dentists.

The plan was then incorporated under its present name, and opened to the public with a goal of providing health care for 10,000 families in the New Haven area.

New Haven AFL-CIO Pres. Vincent J. Sirabella serves as chairman of the center's board of directors, which includes medical, community, industrial and labor representation.

The New Haven project was the first prepaid group practice plan to be developed in New England. It is the first one to be started by an AFL-CIO local central body. Another plan sponsored by the Rhode Island AFL-CIO is in development in Providence.

Sirabella is enthusiastic about the plan and its evolution into a program widely supported by the community.

"The plan's subscribers will be assured of the most comprehensive and highest quality medical care possible," he declared, adding:

"We are eagerly looking forward to the successful demonstration that a well organized prepaid group practice medical plan can provide high quality care for a premium cost that is economically sensible."

He gave special credit in helping to advance the plan to Ruth Greenberg, chairman of the local AFL-CIO health committee, Prof. I. S. Falk of Yale University's Dept. of Public Health, and Richard Shoemaker, assistant director of the the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

The initial HEW grant is predicated upon the center being operational by Mar. 1, 1970, and on its directors raising an equal amount in matching funds. The second and third year grants call for a show of growth in subscribers.

The directors are optimistic about fulfilling all requirements. A spokesman for the plan said that the needed local financing is "in sight" and that a site for the health care center will soon be announced.

The plan is affiliated with the Yale-New Haven Medical Center, and indications are that its own center will be located nearby.

The seed money from HEW and matching funds will go towards organizing the plan's physicians' staff, hiring personnel, equipping and maintaining the center, purchasing supplies and enrolling members.

In its affiliation with the Yale-New Haven center, the Community Health Care Center will have access to specialists in all phases of medicine. In turn, it will provide additional education, training and research programs for the Yale-New Haven center.

The Community Health Care Center envisions a total full-time staff of 20 to 25 physicians, with each family-subscriber having its own doctor who will supervise the continuing care of each member of the family.

Planned services include full hospitalization; physician care at the center, in a hospital or at home; eye examinations; immunizations; diagnosis, X-ray, laboratory tests and the like. The center also expects to offer dental examinations and dental care.

The center's operation is to be simplified as far as possible to eliminate burdens to its members such as forms to fill out, correspondence, and application for claims.

Machinists Ratify Pact At McDonnell Douglas

St. Louis—Machinists ended a five-week strike at McDonnell Douglas Corp. here after voting 7,568 to 3,838 to accept a contract proposal submitted by their negotiating committee.

"This is the best contract in the aerospace industry anywhere in the United States," said Jim Malott, grand lodge representative who served as chief negotiator of District 837.

Malott said the whole package is worth $1.15 to $1.16 an hour over the life of the three-year contract.

The major improvement was a breakthrough on the cost of living pattern, Malott noted. He said the "caps" or maximum, was raised from 8 to 9 cents.

The new contract provides wage increases of 6 percent this year and 3 percent in each of the next two years. It is retroactive to Nov. 4. The average wage rate under the old contract was $3.82 an hour.

Another major breakthrough was in the field of health insurance, Malott said. The new insurance program provides for eye and dental care and the $15,000 ceiling on major medical benefits is renewable each year. The company pays the employe's share of the premiums, but not those for his family.

The new contract provides four weeks vacation after 18 years compared with four weeks after 20 years in the old contract.

A change in the effective date makes the wage increases retroactive to November instead of December. Malott said this amounts to about 3 cents more per hour over the life of the contract.

Malott said post-strike negotiations brought an increase in the wage package of 6.5 cents over the contract rejected by District 837 members Jan. 12, the day before the strike began.

Negotiations at the giant aerospace manufacturing firm got underway several months ago, but talks on economic matters were put off until District 837's collective bargaining certificate was renewed late in December.

District 837's right to represent the 18,000 McDonnell-Douglas hourly employes was challenged by the United Auto Workers union and a rebel organization that called itself Technical Employes of Aerospace Manufacturers (TEAM). The National Labor Relations Board certified District 837 as the bargaining agent after three elections were held at the plant.

NLRB Appoints Greene To Albuquerque Post

Albuquerque—C. Woodrow Greene has been named director of the National Labor Relations Board's regional office here, succeeding Charles M. Henderson, new Seattle director. Greene joined the NLRB in 1942, and served most recently as senior examiner coordinator at Fort Worth, Tex.

Full Amount Voted:

Hunger Probe Funds Restored by Senate

The Senate voted its concern for hunger and malnutrition in the midst of America's plenty.

It overwhelmingly rejected the budget-cutting recommendations of its Rules Committee and restored the full amount sought to allow a special committee to complete its investigation of hunger.

In congressional terms, restoration of the $100,000 slash in the budget of the Senate's Select Committee on Nutrition & Human Needs involved a minor expenditure.

On other occasions the Senate has added or deleted hundreds of millions of dollars with less debate and a smaller attendance.

But neither side considered the committee fund issue a routine vote.

The special committee, headed by Sen. George McGovern, was set up last summer after mounting evidence that existing food distribution programs were not reaching or helping families living in destitution—often in rural shacks or ramshackle migrant camps.

It heard testimony that starvation diseases believed unknown in America were found among children in the Mississippi Delta—and in more prosperous areas of the country as well.

The question before the Senate—in the opinion of the committee's supporters—was whether evidence of hunger should be swept under the carpet to avoid offending local or state pride or spotlighted and documented to prod federal, state and local governments to action.

So one-sided was the debate that the Senate leadership dropped plans for a rollcall vote to avoid embarrassing the conservative-dominated Rules Committee which had recommended a 40 percent cut in the subcommittee's funds.

Republicans as well as Democrats, conservatives as well as liberals, spoke up for fund restoration. A "compromise" to restore a portion of the 40 percent budget cut was decisively rejected.

Even Sen. Harry F. Byrd, Jr. (D-Va.), noting drily that "it is not often that the senator from Virginia supports an appropriation greater than that recommended," said a "good case" had been made for the higher amount and he would support it.

Perhaps the most convincing testimony came earlier in the day when Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, who was governor of South Carolina before coming to the Senate, testified before the hunger committee on his travels through some of the poorest rural and urban areas of his home state.

He came before the committee with three other South Carolinians, two Negroes and one white, who joined him in describing starvation and malnutrition in the state.

The senator bluntly confessed that "as a public official, I am late to the problem."

As governor, he acknowledged, he had joined in "the public policy of covering up the problem of hunger" in the interest of attracting new industry to the state.

But the people he saw on his tour, he said, "couldn't possibly work" because of the effects of malnutrition made them "blighted for life."

His stand, which he suggested would probably hurt him politically back home, contrasted sharply with the position of South Carolina's other senator, Republican Strom Thurmond, that reports of hunger have been unsubstantiated.

The Senate committee, its funds approved, is scheduled to complete its work during the current year.

The House also had a committee controversy—involving the future role of its Un-American Activities Committee.

The committee's new chairman, Rep. Richard H. Ichord (D-Mo.), won approval of a resolution changing the title to the House Internal Security Committee. He said it would more clearly define the role of the committee as one dealing with subversion and not dissent.

On the key procedural vote, 262-123, opponents included both those who sought to transform the committee into a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee and those who wanted to abolish it outright. The final vote approving the change was 305-79.

HEARST IN TROUBLE? That's the indication given by this upside-down flag, the international distress signal, atop Hearst's struck Herald-Examiner plant in Los Angeles. Management returned to the contract bargaining table as annual advertising reports showed a 30 percent drop in advertising lineage in 1968 when its employes were on strike or locked out and strikebreakers were on the job.

Advertising Skid Hits Struck Hearst Paper

Los Angeles—Hearst's strike-bound Herald-Examiner lost 29.2 percent of its advertising linage last year in the face of a nationwide AFL-CIO-backed boycott by 1,500 striking and locked-out employes.

The paper sold 31.7 million lines in 1967 but only 22.4 million in 1968, according to figures compiled by Media Records. Throughout the year of decline, eight AFL-CIO unions tried without success to get Hearst management to bargain realistically on new contract terms.

Negotiations resumed here in January after a two-month layoff. One union—the Printing Pressmen—reported "some progress" at a Jan. 27 meeting but a spokesman cautioned that "long, long negotiations lie ahead."

The Stereotypers met with Hearst management Jan. 28, while the Pressmen scheduled more meetings. The Typographical and ITU Mailers' unions are due at negotiating sessions Feb. 25.

The Newspaper Guild faced a major roadblock in bargaining when management announced it planned a new system of independent newspaper distributors to replace 250 Guild-covered circulation district managers.

When the Guild submitted counterproposals, Hearst agreed to answer questions about the proposed new system at the bargaining table. But ANG negotiators warned that "the Guild never will accept a settlement which requires 250 men to just disappear."

The figures on Her-Ex advertising losses indicated that the paper's lost linage was picked up by the Los Angeles Times, which reported a 10 percent increase for the year.

In December, the Herald-Examiner dropped 906,866 lines of advertising while the Times added 1.57 million lines for a gain over the preceding December of 17 percent. The Times has long been the U.S. leader in lines of advertising sold.

The strike committee reported that during the week of Jan. 26, the Herald-Examiner's ratio of advertising to news copy fell to 42.9 percent—9 percent below the ratio for the same week last year, and a record low for the six months that unions have been keeping tabs.

Two unions on the one-time flagship of the Hearst newspaper fleet walked out Dec. 15, 1967, when contract negotiations reached a dead end. All other unions were locked out by Hearst.

The unions launched a nationwide Do Not Buy campaign and the AFL-CIO Executive Council established a special strike-relief fund with a $25,000 donation. Since then the striking unions have supported the defense effort with the aid of the labor movement.

Survey Shows Abel Winner Of Steel Vote

Pittsburgh—A committee supporting top officers of the Steelworkers for re-election announced that its survey of results shows Pres. I. W. Abel and two running-mates have been re-elected to new four-year terms "by decisive margins."

USWA District Directors Joseph Germano and James P. Griffin, co-chairmen of the Abel campaign committee, said that an unofficial tabulation of election returns in 3,486 locals—96 percent of the totals—shows Abel leading 264,568 to 186,945 for Emil Narick, a union attorney.

Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Burke's total was running "uniformly higher throughout all districts," the committee said as tellers prepared to start tabulating the tally sheets Feb. 24. Official results will be announced on or before May 1.

Vice Pres. Joseph P. Molony was unopposed. He first took office June 1, 1965, with Abel and Burke.

With all large locals included except one, Abel's margin of victory had increased to 77,623 votes, his committee said. A dispute over the vote count in Local 1397, at Homestead, Pa., will not affect the outcome, the committee said because the remaining unreported votes are in sections of Canada where the Abel team has been running "consistently strong."

More than 400,000 members cast ballots Feb. 11 for 50 offices in the union and its districts.

At least one incumbent director was reported defeated in close district races. He was Paul E. Schremp, Cleveland, O., who lost to Pres. Joseph E. Kender of USWA Local 2265. Waiting for the official count were candidates in the New York State, Quebec, Baltimore, Homestead, Pa., Ambridge, Pa., Wheeling, W.Va., Youngstown, O. Duluth, Birmingham, Ala., and Los Angeles districts.

2-22-69

Administration Seeks Price Curbs Without 'Appreciable' Loss of Jobs

Curbing inflation without an "unacceptable" or "appreciable" increase in unemployment was advanced as the chief economic goal of the Nixon Administration in testimony before the Joint Economic Committee of Congress.

With slightly varying degrees of emphasis, testimony by Chairman Paul W. McCracken of the President's Council of Economic Advisers was reiterated by Treasury Sec. David M. Kennedy and Labor Sec. George P. Shultz.

None of the witnesses spelled out how much of a rise from the present 3.3 percent unemployment rate would be "acceptable" to the Administration.

All agreed, however, that an abrupt brake on the economy would risk throwing the job market into a tailspin.

McCracken said that some increase in joblessness might result from the Administration's efforts to curb the price rise. "No one can assure that the distortions from three years of economic overheating and price inflation can be corrected with no effect on unemployment," he said.

Kennedy took an even stronger anti-inflation position. The Treasury secretary said "firm restraint" should be imposed on the economy until there are "unmistakable signs" that inflation has been curbed.

He suggested that the Johnson Administration had taken off the brakes too soon in 1967 when economic indicators pointed to a slowdown and a possible recession. The economy picked up but, Kennedy complained, "the inflationary trend was never broken."

Shultz appeared to lean somewhat in the other direction, agreeing that the price rise needs to be slowed but stressing that anti-inflation steps should be "gradual."

He warned that "a policy prescription that would halt inflation at the cost of producing a sharply rising level of unemployment would also prove disastrous for our efforts against poverty. For many families, the way out of poverty is more productive employment, and firms that are forced to reduce their operations are not apt to provide this opportunity."

Thus, he said, the price rise must be slowed without what he termed "an appreciable rise in unemployment."

Shultz said the increase in the proportion of workers employed in "service producing industries" such as trade, transportation, utilities, services, finance and government, tends to stabilize the employment picture. These industries, he said, do not have the sharp fluctuations of employment found in manufacturing and construction.

Without giving specific recommendations, Shultz also told the committee that the unemployment insurance system "needs improvement if it is to play a fully effective role in combatting economic and human adversity."

Instant Handicapper Left at the Gate

Los Angeles—Hearst's struck Herald-Examiner has created a new breed of sports specialist—the instant handicapper.

Press box regulars at Santa Anita track reported that a young man asked numerous questions on the art of handicapping. Shortly they recognized his name in an announcement of the Herald-Examiner's new "race expert."

The expert got off to a bad start by listing a horse named Toyman as scratched. He forgot to tell Toyman about it, and the horse paid $25.20 to win and was the second half of the winning daily double.

Council Programs Focus On Nation's Critical Needs

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year

Saturday, March 1, 1969

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

No. 9

MEETING BETWEEN Labor Sec. George P. Shultz, right, and AFL-CIO Executive Council was described by Federation Pres. George Meany as "constructive" and "cordial." Shultz extended an invitation to the council from Pres. Nixon for a White House meeting.

New Emphasis, Directions Set

By Saul Miller

Bal Harbour, Fla.—AFL-CIO programs to combat inflation, eliminate poverty, spur full employment and advance the welfare and wellbeing of all Americans were spelled out at a busy, intensive meeting of the Executive Council here.

Taking a long and careful look at new developments, including the new Administration in Washington, the council updated existing programs and policies and turned them in new directions with new emphasis.

It broke new ground also in terms of the labor movement, creating the first national Labor Studies Center in trade union history and stepping up political action and education by putting register and vote drives on an annual basis with direct federation financing.

On the central problem of curbing inflation without increasing unemployment, the council received assurances from Pres. Nixon in a letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany that a solution must be found "without asking the wage earners to pay for the cost of stability with their jobs."

The President's letter called also for strengthening the collective bargaining process and making it responsible to "the needs of a changing economy, while preserving the freedom of private decision it guarantees." (Text, Page 3.)

Meany termed the President's letter "very favorable," and described the council's session with Labor Sec. George Shultz as "constructive" and "cordial." Meany had said earlier at press conferences held during the six-day meeting that he foresees "reasonable relationships" with the White House.

The council set out its views on the inflation problem in a statement on the national economy which sharply assailed the concept that prices can be stabilized only at the cost of a rise in joblessness. The real key to checking inflation is "lower profit margins and reduced profit rates of return on investment." The inflation of recent years, the council asserted, has been "largely a profit inflation." (Story, this page.)

Shultz told reporters that he had a "constructive discussion" with the council covering a wide range of issues and that he had invited the council to visit with the President at the White House on the President's return from his European trip.

He said he told the council that the style he hopes to give the Labor Dept. is best conveyed by the words "open", "direct" and "professional."

Before taking "another bold step" in the minimum wage area, Shultz said, he would prefer a close analysis of the problem, especially the relationship of minimum wages to youth unemployment. The council called flatly for enactment of a $2-an-hour minimum wage and universal coverage. Meany told reporters that he was satisfied that Shultz had "not made his mind up fully" and is open to discussion on the minimum wage question.

In the dozens of statements and position papers adopted by the council:

It reaffirmed earlier AFL-CIO positions calling for direct election of the President and abolition of the Electoral College. Pres. Nixon's proposals would not improve the current situation and would worsen it in some respects, the council said. (Story, this page.)

It assailed the concept of "black capitalism" to aid Negroes and minority groups as a dangerous delusion that contains the threat

(Continued on Page 3)

Jobs 'Trade-Off' Notion Scored:

Swollen Profits Called Root Of Inflationary Price Hikes

Bal Harbour, Fla.—"Lower profit margins and reduced profit rates of return on investment" are the key to fighting inflation and will produce stable prices "without a growing army of unemployed."

That was the position spelled out by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in its assessment of the state of the national economy and of the economic analysis that a substantial rise in joblessness may be required to achieve greater price stability. (Excerpts, Page 6.)

That notion, the council asserted, is "economically false and loaded with social dynamite. Advocates of this Neanderthal view have never explained how a million additional unemployed can possibly reduce such price pressures as physicians' fees, hospital charges, auto and property insurance rates, which have risen sharply in the past decade."

And a rise in unemployment would hit the most recently hired, the least skilled, particularly Negroes, other minorities and young workers, the council declared.

The inflation of recent years has been "largely a profit inflation, with business profits soaring "far out of line with other major types of income."

Rising business profits, the council asserted, "should be based on an expanding sales volume rather than on swollen profit margins at the expense of consumers and workers" to curb pressures on the price level.

The council warned that the outlook for 1969 "is clouded by uncertainty about the degree of slowdown during the course of the year and the policies of the new Administration." It noted that the pace of economic expansion is already slowing down and the government's brake on economic growth may be "going too far."

It pointed at "new restrictive government measures" imposed during the early part of 1969 including the increase in FHA and VA mortgage interest rates to 7.5 percent, the hike in the prime interest rate by commercial banks to 7 percent, the high interest rates on new federal securities and the Federal Reserve Board's squeeze on bank credit.

The council said that the imbalance in the nation's income in favor of profits and the continuing investment by profit-laden corpo-

(Continued on Page 5)

Worker Buying Power Shows Sharp Decline

The buying power of workers across the nation dropped sharply in January as the cost of living rose by three-tenths of 1 percent, the Labor Dept. reported.

It attributed the drop in workers' real earnings to price increases, higher social security contributions, effective in January, and a decline in the work week.

The rise in prices sent the Consumer Price Index to 124.1 percent of the 1957-59 base period. This means that it cost $12.41 in January for goods and services that cost $10 in the 1957-59 period.

Although the increase in January was less than the average monthly advance in 1968, it left the index 4.6 percent above January 1968.

Gross average weekly earnings of production workers edged down 12 cents over the month to $110.63, as a three-tenths of 1 hour decrease in the workweek more than offset a 2-cent gain in hourly earnings.

For the worker with three dependents, weekly take-home dropped 53 cents from December to $96.97. For the worker with no dependents the decline was 54 cents to $88.03.

Real spendable earnings—take-home pay adjusted to take account of price rises since 1957-59—averaged $78.14 a week for workers with three dependents

(Continued on Page 12)

Popular Vote Endorsed In Election of President

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The President of the United States should be elected by direct popular vote of the American people, the AFL-CIO said.

The federation's Executive Council urged complete abolition of the Electoral College system and opposed any alternative which could result in the election of a President who received fewer votes than his opponent.

Action by the council came only a few days after Pres. Nixon urged Congress to initiate a constitutional amendment changing, but not abolishing, the electoral vote system of choosing a President.

Nixon's proposal, the AFL-CIO Executive Council said, would be "worse, not better, than the present system."

The President told Congress that his "personal feeling" is that "the candidate who wins the most popular votes should become President."

But he said he didn't think a constitutional amendment "proposing abolition or substantial modification of the electoral vote system" would be approved by the necessary three-fourths of the states before the 1972 election.

On this, the AFL-CIO council disagreed. It noted that the direct election amendment proposed by Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.) "has re-

(Continued on Page 8)

NEW VICE PRESIDENTS of the AFL-CIO, elected to fill vacancies on the federation's Executive Council, are from left: Matthew Guinan, president of Transport Workers; C. L. Dennis, president of Railway & Airline Clerks, and A. F. Grospiron, president of Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

Grospiron, Guinan, Dennis Fill Executive Council Vacancies

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council filled three vacancies in its ranks by electing A. F. Grospiron, Matthew Guinan and C. L. Dennis vice presidents of the federation.

Grospiron is president of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers; Guinan is president of the Transport Workers; Dennis is head of the Railway & Airline Clerks.

The vacancies on the council resulted from the deaths of John J. Grogan and George Harrison and the resignation because of ill health of Ralph Helstein. Helstein was named a vice president emeritus.

All three of the new council members are veteran trade unionists whose road to international union office began when they were elected by their shopmates to local union office.

Grospiron, 52, was born in Burton, Tex., and worked in oil refineries in the state starting in 1935. In 1942, he helped organize his Texas City refinery and in later years served in various local union offices, including the presidency and the full-time post of secretary-treasurer.

He was elected an OCAW board member in 1959 and in 1962 became secretary-treasurer of the OCAW.

Grospiron won election as OCAW president in 1965, succeeding O. A. Knight, who retired. He was reelected without opposition at the union's 1967 convention.

Guinan, 58, was born in Offaly, Ireland, and came to the United States in 1929. He started work in 1933 as a trolley operator for the Third Ave. line in New York and helped organize his fellow workers into the TWU.

In 1942, Guinan became a full-time organizer for the union's big Local 100, was elected vice president of the local in 1945 and its president for six two-year terms, starting in 1949.

He was chosen to the new post of executive vice president of the TWU in 1952 and in 1956 took on the additional job of secretary-treasurer.

Guinan, along with other top TWU officers, spent nine days in jail in 1966 for refusing to call off New York City's transit strike. He became the second president in the history of the Transport Workers that year, when Mike Quill died.

Dennis, 60, was born into a railroad family in Breadstown, Ill. Sixteen members of his family are or have been railroad workers, including his wife, a son, two daughters and five sisters.

He joined the Railway Clerks when he started work as a freight handler for the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy in 1928. Dennis held almost every local office and later was division chairman. In 1939, he won the union's grand prize for signing up the largest number of workers into the union.

Dennis was elected an international vice president of the union in 1959 and assigned to work in the growing field of airline clerks. He served for 19 years as general chairman of the Chicago & North Western System Board.

Dennis was first elected president in 1963 and reelected without opposition in 1967.

Helstein Designated Vice Pres.-Emeritus

Bal Harbour, Fla. — The AFL-CIO Executive Council accepted the resignation of Ralph Helstein for reasons of health "with deep and sincere regret" and expressed "heartfelt thanks for his services" as an AFL-CIO vice president.

The resolution named Helstein a vice president emeritus of the AFL-CIO.

Helstein was elected to the council in 1965, when he was president of the Packinghouse Workers, since merged with the Meat Cutters. He was reelected to a two-year term at the 1967 AFL-CIO convention.

No Panacea:

Black Capitalism Hit As Illusory Scheme

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The concept of "black capitalism" is an illusion at best, a dangerous, divisive delusion at worst and contains the threat of conflict and frustration, the AFL-CIO said.

It spoke out sharply in a statement adopted by its Executive Council of its unalterable opposition to separatist schemes, of its consistent commitment to integration, and of full and equal opportunity for all Americans. (Text, Page 7.)

"For the vast majority of Negroes and other minorities, the route into America's mainstream is manpower skills, education and jobs at decent wages." The essential underpinning is a national commitment to full employment—government policies of maximum economic growth supplemented with a national public service employment program.

Sound government and private efforts to assist Negroes and other disadvantaged minorities who wish to establish business enterprises should be provided, the council declared. The critical need is capital formation and technical assistance. Tied in with policies and measures to move members of the minority groups into the mainstream, this approach would be useful.

But to abandon this route and policies in favor of "black capitalism" would "undermine or kill the jobs-skills-education-housing measures that are essential for the overwhelming majority of Negroes and other minorities."

The council noted that "black capitalism" is offered as a "panacea by extremists, both black and white, some businessmen who see a chance for profit and a few well-intentioned but misguided liberals." It added that "attempts to build separate economic enclaves with substantial federal tax subsidies within specific geographically limited ghetto areas is apartheid, anti-democratic nonsense."

Separatist schemes offer no hope for real advancement of minorities "but they do present a real threat of further division, additional conflict and bitter frustration."

The council said that despite the persistence of the problem of minorities remaining outside the economic and social order, there have been advances. The trouble, it added, is while there have been significant advances there is a "long and hard road ahead."

Yet, the achievements of recent years point the way toward the only "rational means" of achieving a sound solution: "massive federal money, manpower and muscle" into jobs, manpower training, education, housing and civil rights programs.

The American goal must be the rapid elimination of ghetto conditions and the ultimate elimination of the ghetto itself, the council asserted. The nation knows the route to solving its minority problems, "it needs only the will to reach its goal."

Mortgage Trust Seeks More Union Investors

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO has embarked on an expansion of its Mortgage Investment Trust to help provide adequate housing to meet the nation's needs.

The Executive Council, noting the campaign in a statement on housing, urged the participation of all affiliates and the "allocation of regular percentages of union investments" in the trust. It pointed out that in addition to providing badly needed housing, the trust will provide a reasonable return on union funds and help create jobs.

The federation has begun a national campaign to attract general treasury and pension and welfare funds of AFL-CIO affiliates and qualified labor-management funds. The mortgage investment trust was set up a number of years ago and has made a number of investments in housing and mortgages. The current drive is to expand the scope of its activities in terms of the 1968 housing act.

The council declared that it is essential that the intent and purpose of that act—a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family—be fulfilled by full funding from Congress. It pointed out, however, that the gravest threat to homebuilding is the unprecedented high interest rates that threaten a recession in the industry.

It called on the government "to take immediate and effective action to shelter residential construction—particularly low and moderate-income housing—from the adverse effects of unprecedented interest rates and tight money."

The statement cited the building and construction trades affiliates of the AFL-CIO for their cooperation in carrying out the social objectives of AFL-CIO backed housing projects, citing the investment trust financed plan to rehabilitate houses in a St. Louis ghetto, in which the building trades have played an important role.

It noted also the trades' involvement in the "outreach" programs designed to give full access to skill training to minority group youth. Union-sponsored programs are now in operation in 52 cities with more than 2,500 in apprentice programs.

Union Age Top Of 55 Termed Discriminatory

A union refusing to accept members 55 years old or older would violate the Age Discrimination in Employment Act if the law "otherwise applies," according to an opinion from Ben P. Robertson, acting Wage-Hour Administrator.

The opinion, issued in response to an inquiry, pointed out that the 1967 law prohibits employers, employment agencies and labor unions from discriminating against persons between 40 and 65 on the basis of age in hiring, discharge, compensation, and other terms of employment.

He cited a section making it unlawful for a labor organization "to exclude or to expel from its membership, or otherwise discriminate against" an individual because of age.

Robertson emphasized, however, that the law does not require a union or employer to provide older workers "with the same pension, retirement or insurance benefits as provided to younger workers" under established plans.

Council Urges Repeal Of Wiretap Provisions

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Repeal of the wiretapping and bugging provisions of the 1968 anti-crime law was "strongly urged" by the AFL-CIO to preserve individual rights and privacy.

Pending such repeal, the federation's Executive Council called on the Administration to "reconsider its decision to resort to wiretapping measures that hold such awesome potential of reducing the nation to a police state morality."

In addition to repeal, the council statement called for adding a title to the Crime Control & Safe Streets Act providing stiff penalties for the use of wiretapping and eavesdropping, except in those instances involving national security cases, "and even then this one exemption must be closely guarded."

The council noted the declared intentions of the Administration to make extensive use of wiretapping and electronic devices as an aid in the fight against crime, citing the statements of Atty. Gen. John Mitchell and Deputy Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst to congressional committees as to how they would apply the 1968 law.

That legislation permits widespread wiretapping and bugging in the investigation of a broad variety of crimes after obtaining a warrant or court order and permits taps or bugs to be used for 48 hours without a warrant or court order in instances where a prosecutor "reasonably" determines that an "emergency" situation exists.

Former Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark refused to use the authority to wiretap contained in the legislation on the basis that it transgressed traditional American freedoms, the council noted.

"The AFL-CIO abhors the crimes committed and the violence that runs rampant in our land," the council said. "But it does not believe that the 'new road' that holds such frightening potential for wholesale encroachment on the privacy of the individual can combat crime and still protect our cherished heritage of freedom."

Federal aid to state and local communities in developing more qualified law enforcement officers and the practical utilization of new technology in the detection and prevention of crime would seem the more sane and rational approach, the council said, along with a massive attack on the root causes of crime—poverty, ignorance and disease.

The council pointed out that "the assumption that in practice the use of wiretapping and eavesdropping affects only criminals is fallacious and totally unwarranted. In our free society, the ends of law enforcement do not justify any and all means. Even if crime could to a degree be prevented, we should not choose the use of those ends that assuredly portend flagrant violation of the 'right to privacy.' "

IUD Appointments Fill Key Staff Posts

Appointment of Stephen J. Harris and Philip J. Daugherty to major staff positions in the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. was announced by IUD Pres. I. W. Abel.

Harris, assistant director of the department's collective bargaining services section since 1961, was named IUD research director. Daugherty, of Office & Professional Employes Local 2, was named a legislative representative.

Council Spells Out Labor's 1969 Goals

Mid-Winter Sessions Put Focus On Pressing National Problems

(Continued from Page 1)

of conflict and frustration. (Story, Page 2.)

On the continuing pressing need to eliminate poverty, the council spelled out a series of specific programs keyed to full employment and a $2 minimum wage and scored single-shot plans for a guaranteed income, a negative income tax and family allowances as over-simplified and completely inadequate approaches. (Story, this page.)

On matters affecting the trade union movement the council elected three new members to fill existing vacancies—A. L. Grospiron, president of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers; Matthew Guinan, president of the Transport Workers; C. L. Dennis, president of the Railway & Airline Clerks. (Story, Page 2.)

Subcommittees Established

It voted also to set up subcommittees to study the possible restructuring and makeup of the council and to review the financial structure in terms of new activities undertaken by the federation.

It voted its support of organizing efforts by the American Federation of Teachers, with a $120,000 appropriation to back the drive, and voiced its support for a number of national organizations by continuing financial contributions.

Earlier it had voted to give the New York Teachers Union $100,000 toward paying the $220,000 fine imposed on the union by the courts for its strike in support of teacher job security.

Acting on a number of additional domestic matters, the council:

- Called for state and federal action to give the right to vote to millions disenfranchised by state residence requirements and other restrictive voter registration laws. (Story, Page 8.)
- Launched a state-by-state drive to preserve one man, one vote apportionment against the threat of a constitutional convention. (Story, Page 9.)
- Urged Congress to pass a strong occupational health and safety law. (Story, Page 10.)
- Asked extension of the Fair Labor Standards Act to all workers, with an increase in the minimum wage to $2 an hour. (Story, Page 4.)
- Adopted a six-point program to improve job opportunities and living standards for rural Americans. (Story, Page 10.)
- Urged higher social security benefits and a major expansion of Medicare. (Story, Page 9.)
- Asked new consumer protection legislation, vigorous enforcement of existing laws and establishment of an independent federal agency to represent consumers. (Story, Page 4.)
- Warned Congress and the Administration that budget slashes could wreck programs needed to conquer the nation's domestic problems. (Story, Page 10.)
- Demanded an end to the double standard in the federal tax system that allows the wealthiest to escape taxes while a bigger burden falls on low and middle income families. (Story, Page 5.)
- Asked uniform federal minimum standards for public welfare and repeal of the ceiling on the number of children who can be helped. (Story, Page 9.)
- Urged Congress to repeal the wiretapping and eavesdropping provisions of the 1968 crime control law and asked the Administration to reconsider its decision to make extensive use of wiretapping. (Story, Page 2.)
- Endorsed the Keep America Beautiful campaign and urged unions to cooperate in its anti-litter efforts. (Story, this page.)

In the international affairs area, the council voted to withdraw from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions but to continue vigorous AFL-CIO activities in South America, Africa, Asia and other areas. It also:

- Urged that the United States devote 1 percent of its national income to foreign aid programs geared to helping the people and strengthening the economies of the developing nations. (Story, Page 4.)
- Asked steps to curb "greedy businessmen" who run across the border to Mexico to exploit low wages for greater profits. (Story, Page 5.)
- Reaffirmed its cooperation with the Vietnamese Confederation of Labor (CVT). (Story, Page 4.)
- Called for UN condemnation of "guerrilla outrages" against Israel and economic sanctions against governments that continue to shelter and support terrorist groups. (Story, Page 4.)
- Asked international agreement to halt hijacking of airliners and end sanctuary for hijackers. (Story, Page 8.)

On matters affecting the trade union movement, the council:

- Pledged full support to the coordinated bargaining program of AFL-CIO affiliates representing nearly 200,000 General Electric and Westinghouse workers. (Story, Page 10.)
- Urged improved collective bargaining procedures for federal workers and called for higher pay and more adequate fringe benefits. (Story, Page 11.)
- Heard a report that the federation's Human Resources Development Institute now has trained field representatives in 30 cities coordinating programs to open job opportunities to the hard-core unemployed. (Story, Page 9.)
- Urged affiliates to earmark part of their investments so that the AFL-CIO Mortgage Investment Trust can help finance housing to meet the nation's needs. (Story, Page 2.)
- Voted to continue support for the AFL-CIO Demonstration Arts Project and study the feasibility of creating a National Labor-Arts Foundation. (Story, Page 8.)

The council also approved a recommendation by its Economic Policy Committee to set up a conference with key government officials at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Apr. 14-16, to discuss economic policy problems.

It approved mergers of the Railway Clerks with the Transportation-Communications Union and the Railway Patrolmen and set up a special subcommittee at the request of the Fire Fighters to arbitrate a dispute on the representation of large and small locals at the union's convention.

Award to Gardner

It approved a Community Services Committee recommendation to present the Murray-Green Award for 1970 to John Gardner, former Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare and presently head of the Urban Coalition.

The council approved also a draft of a "white paper" on the disaffiliation of the Auto Workers and authorized its publication and distribution. Meany said the document will contain all the facts involving the UAW and its charges against the federation and will become part of the permanent record of the AFL-CIO.

A council subcommittee dealing with enforcement of the Landrum-Griffin Act will be revived to discuss problems in this area with Labor Sec. Shultz, Meany announced. The objective is to secure fair play enforcement of the law, he said.

Contributions were voted to the Urban League for its LEAP program, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, National Institutes on Rehabilation & Health, National Campaign for Agricultural Democracy, Group Health Association, National Council of Senior Citizens, National Housing Conference, Conference for Economic Progress.

The next meeting of the council was set for May 14-15 in Washington.

Council Commends Anti-Litter Effort

Bal Harbour, Fla. — The "effective" drive of Keep America Beautiful to promote anti-littering campaigns throughout the United States received commendation from the AFL-CIO.

An Executive Council statement described its programs, particularly aimed toward developing clean streets, which are being supported by unions, industries and government agenices.

"We urge our fellow citizens to continue to support the program of Keep America Beautiful in every way possible," the council said.

NATIONAL ISSUES are discussed by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie during a visit to the AFL-CIO Executive Council. The Maine senator also thanked the AFL-CIO for its support of the Humphrey-Muskie ticket in the 1968 presidential campaign.

Multiple Attack Pushed On Causes of Poverty

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The many complex causes of poverty can best be attacked through "radically improved employment, wage, social insurance, welfare" and other programs, the AFL-CIO declared.

The federation is convinced "no one program can eliminate poverty," the Executive Council said in a statement, because a profile of poverty in America "shows it has many and diverse origins" and the treatment calls for specific remedies for specific causes.

The job cannot be done, the council said, by the proposed guaranteed annual income plan, the negative income tax or the family allowance plan.

The advertised attraction of the first two of these plans are usually the "seemingly mechanical and simple approach that is supposed to do away with all or most social insurance, minimum wage and and other existing programs," the council commented. It added that at almost any conceivable level of guaranteed income "in the period immediately ahead, there would still be the need for individual programs such as welfare assistance to supplement guaranteed income receipts."

The family allowance plan can provide only a modest supplement to other forms of income but could be of some use for larger than average families, the council noted.

Basic to a solution to the poverty program is to reduce unemployment to no more than 2 to 2.5 percent of the labor force. A large scale public service employment program and a nationally coordinated manpower program are also essential.

Full employment coupled with a $2 minimum wage and universal coverage "is the best basic approach toward eliminating poverty for the greatest number of people."

To eliminate poverty among the elderly it advocated an increase in social security benefits; for those who are poor because of chronic illness or physical disability it urged increased payments and extended coverage under social security; for those subject to frictional unemployment it called for improved unemployment compensation programs; for mothers and children in fatherless homes, strengthened welfare programs adequate to provide decent living standards.

"It is especially noteworthy," the council pointed out, "that the poor are not work-shy idlers. Indeed, three out of five poor people are in families headed by an employed person and if the involuntarily unemployed are added, the figure is probably as high as two-thirds."

The council warned that some of the advocates of single-shot solutions present a "discernible danger," that they couple simplistic solutions with simultaneous attacks on social security, minimum wage, welfare and other programs. "It is a reactionary attack by opponents of all social welfare programs. These new proposals must not be permitted to serve as vehicles to depress wages and to abrogate the federal government's responsibilities in eradicating poverty."

Text of Nixon Letter

Following is the text of a letter from Pres. Nixon to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Feb. 19, 1969.

Dear Mr. Meany:

You have my warmest good wishes as you meet with the other members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council to discuss many of the problems that beset our nation—and how best to insure maximum opportunity in a prosperous economy.

To find solutions to these problems will require the best cooperative effort of those in both the private and the public sector.

We must find ways to curb inflation, which robs working men and women and their families of hard-earned gains. And we must do this without asking the wage earners to pay for the cost of stability with their jobs.

Our goal should be to provide for each citizen the opportunity to develop his full potential. And to help do this, we must revitalize our manpower and educational efforts to prepare all our people more effectively for rewarding employment. I hope it may be said of 1969 that a priority item of business in America was to see that every citizen—whatever the color of his skin—has a fair chance to realize the promise within him.

Together let us strive to strengthen the collective bargaining process, and make it responsive to the needs of a changing economy, while preserving the freedom of private decision it guarantees.

As we seek new paths to social justice, new ways to enrich our national life, I ask for your counsel and cooperation and for the understanding of the millions you represent.

I hope this meeting will be successful for each of you, and for the country you so ably serve.

Sincerely,

/s/ Richard M. Nixon

VIET NAM LABOR'S relentless opposition to Communist aggression was emphasized by Pres. Tran Quoc Buu of the Vietnamese Confederation of Labor (CVT) to the AFL-CIO Executive Council meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla. Listening from left, are Irving Brown, executive director of the African-American Labor Center and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Dubinsky.

Labor Urges 1% of GNP For Foreign Aid Fund

Bal Harbour, Fla.—America can afford to expend at least 1 percent of its national income on foreign aid programs in line with its "national interest and humanitarian concern," the AFL-CIO declared.

Attainment of that standard was among recommendations advanced by the Federation's Executive Council for expanding foreign aid, particulary to the developing nations.

The expansion, a council statement warned, is "essential" if the United States is to continue its own economic growth and check the spread of communism.

Past economic assistance programs, it pointed out, have helped create areas of economic progress that otherwise "would today be pockets of political chaos and pawns in the hands of agrressors bent on world domination."

The statement noted that the United States is now providing 0.85 percent of its national income for economic aid to other nations—a lower proportion than the 0.93 percent expended on the average by 16 other industrial countries.

The council said that labor is "not particularly concerned" about reports that the Nixon Administration will give a new name to the Agency for Intl. Development, which handles aid programs.

But it stressed that the AFL-CIO "will oppose vigorously all moves—regardless of their guise—to sap the strength or alter the basic nature of AID by 'restructuring' it in such a way as to deprive it of its vital functions."

If there is a new agency, the council said, its working staff should be accorded "the same status and prerogatives" now enjoyed by State Dept. foreign service personnel.

In other areas — to help the United States more effectively fulfill its "world role and responsibilities in promoting freedom, peace and social justice"—the council recommended that:

- Congress appropriate biennially for foreign aid, instead of annually, to give the program greater authority and stability in funding various projects.
- The Foreign Assistance Act be amended to permit a wider range of aid to democratic institutions and social projects, such as those being carried out by trade unions.
- "Increasing emphasis" be given to expansion of organizations like the American Institute for Free Labor Development, the African-American Labor Center and the Asia-American Free Labor Institute because their programs offer direct aid to people and promote democratic institutions.
- Military assistance and aid for economic and social development should be separated from each other through congressional action.

The statement attacked "false charges" that AID has discouraged private investments in foreign aid. It stressed that it is the "private investors" who should be criticized for not showing enough interest in helping developing nations.

UN Urged to Act Against Arab Terror

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The United Nations was urged by the AFL-CIO to condemn "guerrilla outrages" against Israel, which are being fostered and financed by Arab governments and Russia.

The condemnation, the federation's Executive Council said, should be issued by the Security Council along with a warning to all governments that they will be subject to "severe economic sanctions" for harboring and supporting Arab terrorist groups.

The council said recent Arab commando attacks against Israeli airliners in Athens and Zurich show "that no nation will be safe from terrorist violations of its sovereignity unless the international community acts decisively to halt such brutal crimes."

The statement also called attention to the volume of Soviet weapons poured into the Middle East since the war there in June, 1967. It said this exceeds even "the huge arsenal of Russian arms lost by Nasser and his allies in the six-day war."

"This continuous flow of war materiel constitutes a serious threat to the security of Israel and world peace," the council warned.

To reduce the danger, it added, the U.S. should speed delivery of the Phantom jets it recently sold to Israel and provide that country "with all other military assistance it requires for assuring its national security."

New Safeguards Sought:

Full Federal Agency Status Urged for Consumer Affairs

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council urged establishment of an independent federal agency to represent consumers and called on Congress for more protective measures against frauds and high-pressure merchants who prey on the public.

The council said the record of the 89th and 90th Congresses in passing consumer legislation was "most impressive" but "full and impartial enforcement of protective measures is also essential" and "much additional legislation" to protect and inform the consumer is necessary.

The council report cited such "notable achievements" of the past as legislation on the use of drugs, auto safety, truth in packaging and lending, meat and poultry inspection and similar measures.

The American consumer, it said, requires much more protection against unsafe food and drugs, dangerous household chemicals, medical men disguised as merchants and gypsters preying on the poor.

The council also commended the launching by Congress of comprehensive studies of auto insurance, consumer credit and product safety.

On the subject of legislation previously enacted, the council declared "the American people expect and believe that public officials, entrusted with the administration of these programs, will do their job."

The 91st Congress, it said, "can and should maintain the recent momentum and continue productive activity on behalf of the consuming public."

"The time has arrived," the council's statement declared, "when Congress should consider seriously the longstanding proposals to provide unified and permanent consumer representation in the Executive Branch of the government.

"We commend the record of Pres. Johnson's Special Assistant for Consumer Affairs, and his Committee on Consumer Interests.

"We urge that statutory recognition now be given to the consumer through a Dept. of Consumer Affairs, an Office of Consumer Affairs or other independent agency within the Executive Branch."

The council said Congress should also encourage consumer representation and consumer protection in state governments through a system of grants-in-aid for state consumer offices.

In the field of consumer safety, the council called on Congress to match the Wholesome Meat & Poultry Products acts with a comprehensive Wholesome Fish & Fishery Products Act. Also, it said, Congress should move to close longstanding loopholes in the Federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act.

It urged Congress further to "strengthen the tools and the authority of the Federal Trade Commission to proceed against fraudulent and deceptive sales practices." In particular, it declared, the commission should be authorized to obtain temporary restraining orders from the courts pending the completion of complaint proceedings against law violators.

The council called for extension of the FTC's jurisdiction through a broader definition of interstate commerce and "stiffer penalties for violations of the FTC Act."

Authorization and money should be provided, the council continued, for a previously proposed investigation of home improvement "sales rackets."

Recently released government reports on warranties and guarantees and on household appliances "documented innumerable cases of meaningless promises, fine print exclusions and inadequate servicing," the statement said. It urged "appropriate legislative action to remedy this unsatisfactory state of affairs."

In the field of consumer information, the council said "the public has increasing need for unbiased and reliable facts on product performance and characteristics." It recommended that government consumer information services be expanded and improved and that product information and testing results be made available to the public.

The council welcomed the prospective study of consumer credit by the new National Commission on Consumer Finance but said "Congress should proceed promptly to remedy known credit evils." It called for:

- A reasonable "cooling off" period in which consumers who buy from high-pressure door-to-door salesmen could change their minds.
- Legislative remedies for the excessive costs of credit life, accident and health insurance "exposed by the Senate Antitrust and Monopoly Subcommittee in 1967."
- A ban on the distribution of unsolicited credit cards by banks and other financial institutions.
- Legislation to curb the known abuses of consumer credit rating bureaus with respect to misinformation in their files and their failures to protect the confidentiality of their records.

The council urged continuation and completion of congressional investigations into the pricing structure of auto insurance with a view to re-establishing the federal jurisdiction previously surrendered to the states.

Vietnamese Labor Pledged Cooperation

Bal Harbour, Fla. — The AFL-CIO reaffirmed its cooperation with the Vietnamese Confederation of Labor (CVT) "for the advancement of free trade unionism, democracy, social justice and a just, enduring peace."

The council issued a statement after hearing CVT Pres. Tran Quoc Buu report that he was encouraged by an increasing friendliness to labor by South Viet Nam's government.

The statement also hailed an announcement by the Agency for Intl. Development that it would contribute substantially toward a $100 million fund to aid the government in speeding land reform.

Success of the program and safeguarding it from Communist sabotage "can best be assured" through organizations like CVT participating actively in it, the council stated.

Top Priority Given Goal Of $2 Minimum Wage

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Legislation to raise the federal minimum wage to $2 an hour and extend coverage to all workers will be one of labor's "top priority" goals, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

Every previous increase in the minimum wage has helped the nation's economy, the council said. And none of the "dire predictions of disaster" made by opponents has been borne out.

Now, the AFL-CIO said, "it is time to make further progress toward wiping out the most shameful type of poverty in America—the poverty of the working poor."

The council reiterated the AFL-CIO position that "the best way to combat poverty is to assure job opportunities that pay sufficient incomes to support a family."

It said the last series of minimum wage increases moved the nation closer toward that goal. But "too many millions of workers are still excluded from coverage and the minimum wage is still too low."

One very needed improvement, the council statement stressed, is equality for farm workers under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

When they were brought under the minimum wage law for the first time in the 1966 amendments to the law, they were started at the same $1-an-hour rate as other newly-covered workers. But while other new groups were to be brought up in annual steps to the basic $1.60 wage floor, the cutoff for farm workers was set at $1.30.

Farm workers reached the $1.30 level this year. Unless the law is changed, their wage floor will go no higher.

The council statement cited the report to Congress by former Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz shortly before he left office as evidence that the latest round of increases in the minimum wage did not curtail employment opportunity. In fact, employment increased in the areas newly covered by the legislation, including the large farms brought under the minimum wage.

On balance, the Labor Dept. report indicated, "both the position of low-paid workers in particular and the economy in general" were strengthened by the higher minimum wage and expansion of coverage.

The council statement concluded with this declaration:

"The AFL-CIO goal in the 91st Congress will be a $2 minimum wage with universal coverage. We shall make achievement of this goal a top legislative priority for the need is great and the cause is just."

Job Picture Steady In Major Centers

Only six of the nation's 150 major job centers are listed in the substantial unemployment category —6 percent or more—for February, the Labor Dept. reported. In February, 1968, there were 11 centers in that category.

The six areas still in the substantial unemployment category are Fresno and Stockton, Calif.; Muskegon-Muskegon Heights, Mich.; Mayaguez and Ponce, Puerto Rico, and Wheeling, W. Va.

To Plug Loopholes:

Tax Reform Called Key Legislative Goal

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The double standard in the nation's income tax system that allows the wealthiest to escape all taxes while forcing those in poverty to pay must be corrected, the AFL-CIO declared.

To allow the situation to go unchecked will further sap public confidence in the tax system as it places an unfairly great part of the burden of running the federal government on the shoulders of America's middle income families, the Executive Council said.

The need for tax reform is overriding and Congress and the Administration "must assign top legislative priority" to substantial and thoroughgoing reform, the council added, noting its approval of the tax reform investigation being conducted by the House Ways & Means Committee.

To achieve a standard of tax fairness the council called for:

- Elimination of the loopholes of special tax privileges for wealthy families and corporations.
- A minimum tax on all income over a total which would provide protection for legitimate small investors but which would require at least some tax payment from those whose huge incomes are now preferentially taxed or totally tax exempt.
- Removal of the impoverished from the federal income tax rolls.
- Reduction in the relative tax burden for low and moderate income families.
- Rejection of proposals for new tax loopholes which would create even more inequities in the federal tax structure.
- Dismissal of all proposals for a federal retail sales tax whether called "value-added" taxes or offered clearly as a tax on consumers.
- Repeal of the provision for double depreciation on all new construction, except low and moderate-rental housing, and the 7 percent tax credit for business investment in machines and equipment.

The dimensions of the tax inequities were sketched in by the council which pointed out that in 1967 there were 21 individuals who reported incomes above $1 million and 155 who reported incomes of $200,000 or over who "paid not a dollar of federal income tax."

In contrast, some 2.5 million persons whose incomes fell below the government's "poverty line" paid $100 million in federal income taxes.

The council statement stressed that three major loopholes—capital gains, exemption of state and local bond interest and tax windfalls on oil, gas and other mineral operations cost the Treasury about $7 billion in 1968. The 7 percent tax credit on investment in machinery and equipment produced over $2 billion for corporations.

It pointed out that there are now tax forgiveness proposals to provide incentives to industry for on-the-job training and inner-city industrial development, proposals that "would further reward those who already more than adequately share in America's affluence, and use as their excuse the plight of those who are today in trouble because they do not have their fair share."

Neither will "no strings" federal aid plans that are not subject to congressional scrutiny of specific programs be in the national interest, the council declared.

It singled out specifically "talk of adding new tax gimmicks for real estate operators, many of whom are now more accurately considered in the business of constructing tax shelters rather than shelters for people."

Sanctions Ended For Two Unions

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Sanctions required under the AFL-CIO's internal disputes plan have been removed from two unions that had been found in non-compliance with determinations of the impartial umpire.

Removal of sanctions against the Railroad Signalmen was approved by the other union in the dispute, the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. In the case of the Switchmen's union, the sanction was removed when the union merged with the Trainmen and other unions to form the United Transportation Union. The Trainmen's union was the other party to the dispute.

Unions remaining under sanctions required by Article XX of the AFL-CIO Constitution are the Air Line Pilots, the National Maritime Union, the Intl. Typographical Union, the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union, and the Intl. Leather Goods, Plastics & Novelty Workers Union.

The report on the disputes plan showed the continued effectiveness of mediation with 60 percent of complaints filed settled at that level.

'Help!'

NEW TEAM of top Labor Dept. officials joined Labor Sec. George P. Shultz in meeting with the AFL-CIO Executive Council and in this news conference. From left: Joseph Loftus, special assistant to Shultz for communications; Jerome Rosow, who will fill a new post of assistant secretary for policy development and research; W. J. Usery, Jr., assistant secretary for labor-management services; Shultz; Under Sec. James D. Hodgson; Commissioner of Labor Statistics Geoffrey Moore; Curtis Counts, director of the independent Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, and Arnold Weber, assistant secretary for manpower.

U.S.-Mexican Controls Urged To Halt Exploitation of Workers

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO has appealed for "immediate" government actions to curb "greedy businessmen" who are increasingly running away to Mexico to exploit low wages for greater profits.

The so-called Mexico border development program, supposed to improve U.S.-Mexican relations and cut joblessness in a high unemployment area, "is a complete failure on both counts," the Executive Council declared in a statement.

These failures, the statement said, are compounded by "another and interrelated problem" — the widespread hiring of "green carders" by U.S. employers. The "green carders"—so designated for the color of the alien permits issued to them—are admitted under immigration laws that allow them permanent resident status.

The "green card" holders and other border crossers "are used as pawns in strikebreaking and other anti-labor activities by ruthless employers in the border areas," the council said.

It charged that the combination of the mounting runaway pattern and the "green card" abuses has resulted in "a system of exploitation on both sides of the border affecting tens of thousands" of already poor Mexican and U.S. workers.

The runaway lure is based on a "twin plant" scheme under which a firm makes parts in a U.S. plant, ships them to a Mexican plant for assembly, and re-imports the finished product.

The U.S. tariff is based not on the cost of the product, but on the "value added" in the Mexico plant —essentially the low wages of Mexican border workers.

The council charged that the term "border program" is misleading because its abuses now "extend far north and south of the United States-Mexican border." The program, it said, has provided an ever-increasing number of big U.S. corporations "with soaring income and the opportunity to evade both Mexican and U.S. laws."

In the process, the statement continued, it has "victimized" thousands of unskilled Mexican job-seekers who have moved northward into an already glutted job market and has thrown thousands of U.S. workers out of jobs. It has also led to industrial strife in Mexico, including at least one strike by 1,400 Mexican workers, the council noted.

Although the runaways are hiring Mexican workers for wages as low as 29 cents an hour, the council observed, neither workers nor consumers in the two countries "share in the vast savings to the border companies" because prices of products are not lowered.

Since the program began in 1965, the council reported, apparel imports from Mexico have jumped from $174,000 to $9 million a year, and imports of electrical equipment have soared from $350,000 to nearly $34 million annually.

To end "this festering source of inter-governmental anxiety" and terminate "widespread abuses at both countries' expense," the council called for:

- Repeal of the section of the U.S. Tariff Code that allows firms to duck adequate tariffs on imported products.
- Laws requiring adequate labeling of the country in which products are partially made or assembled by foreign workers but sold under U.S. brand names.
- An end to cooperation by government agencies with firms that "increase the nation's unemployment by crossing the border into Mexico" and a request by the U.S. government to the Mexican government to keep U.S. firms from locating in Mexico "under these circumstances."
- Broadening of an import plan governing cotton textiles to include wool and man-made fibers and enforcement of the cotton import agreement with Mexico to prevent abuses of its provisions.
- Action by the U.S. government to halt importation of strikebreakers from Mexico which undermines nonfarm workers' standards and adds "to the troubles of such exploited groups as the California grape workers."
- Administrative action by the Defense and Labor Depts. to plug loopholes in the use of government funds to export jobs and undercut minimum wage and other laws.

"These concerted actions," the council concluded, "can eliminate both the 'green card' myth and a program which greedy men have degraded into a cruel hoax on the very people it was designed to help."

Swollen Profits Termed Basic Inflation Factor

(Continued from Page 1)

rations in new plant and equipment threatens "to create a future gap between the economy's rapidly growing capacity to produce and lagging demand for goods and services."

It cited the 91 percent increase in after-tax profits between 1960 and 1968, the 84 percent rise in dividends over the same years compared to a 31 percent hike in weekly, after-tax take-home pay for the average non-supervisory worker.

To meet the problem the council laid out a program calling for a full employment policy coupled with a public-service job-creating program and manpower training measures; sheltering residential construction from high interest rates; easing government monetary policies at the first sign of a general economic softening; pegging continuation of the temporary surtax to the trend of unemployment and the level of military expenditures in the months ahead; reform of the tax structure; a substantial rise in the buying power of wages, salaries and fringe benefits to strengthen the consumer foundation of the national economy, and curbs on the adverse trends of the accelerated rate of economic concentration.

Ernest Eaton Dies, Retired Organizer

Sanford, Me.—Ernest A. Eaton, who helped organize a United Textile Workers local at the former Goodall-Sanford mills and was an AFL-CIO staff representative for 11 years, died here after an illness. He was 80.

Eaton was a farmer, woodsman and teamster before becoming a spinner at the mills, now operated by Jagger Bros. He was the first secretary-treasurer of UTW Local 1802, and in 1944 was assigned by the former AFL to the regional organizing staff. He retired in 1958. His wife, five children, 12 grandchildren and four great-grandchildren survive.

The National Economy

1. THE AFL-CIO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL insists that full employment must be the nation's primary economic goal. The government's tax, expenditure and monetary policies for an adequate rate of economic growth should be supplemented by manpower training measures and a federal program to create jobs for the remaining hard-core unemployed and under-employed in providing needed public services.

2. Residential construction must be sheltered from the ravages of the credit-squeeze and unprecedented interest rates.

The 7 percent investment tax credit should be repealed—to curb the flow of available funds into business investment and provide additional funds for home-building.

The development of the new form of government security, authorized by the Housing Act of 1968—government-backed mortgage bonds—should be speeded up, to attract new investment funds into housing.

3. The government's monetary policy should be eased at the first signs of a general economic softening and rising trend of unemployment. Moreover, a thorough congressional review of monetary policy is needed—for the development of a policy that is in the best interest of the nation and the American people, rather than merely the banks and other lenders.

4. The trend of unemployment in the months ahead and the level of military expenditures should be key factors in deciding whether the temporary surtax should be terminated in mid-year, phased out or continued.

A rising trend of unemployment in the coming months would be a strong reason to terminate this temporary tax or to begin to phase it out. If the surtax is continued for another six months or a year—or if part of it is maintained—the surtax rate should be applied to income that is now excluded from federal taxation.

5. Reform of the tax structure is long overdue—to eliminate loopholes of special tax privileges for wealthy families and business, to establish a minimum tax that will end tax avoidance and to reduce the relative tax burden on low- and moderate-income families.

6. A substantial rise in the buying power of wages, salaries and fringe benefits is needed to provide wage and salary earners with a fair share of economic progress and to strengthen the consumer foundation of the national economy.

The lag of real wages and salaries must be ended. Rapidly rising productivity and great business profits make possible substantial improvements in workers' earnings, within the context of a relatively stable price level.

7. Rising business profits should be based on an expanding sales volume, rather than on swollen profit margins at the expense of consumers and workers—to curb pressures on the price level and to provide an improved economic balance between wages, profits, dividends and other forms of income.

8. We are disturbed by the accelerated rate of economic concentration in the past few years—including conglomerate mergers and one-bank holding companies—and the impact of this trend on the national economy. We urge the Congress and appropriate government agencies to make the facts fully known to the public and to curb the adverse impacts of this trend.

—Excerpted from statement by AFL-CIO Executive Council, Feb. 21, 1969, Bal Harbour, Fla.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, March 1, 1969 No. 9

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'This'll Knock His Hat Off!'

A Word Edgewise:

Only France Can Finish No. 1 In De Gaulle's Grand Scheme

By John P. Roche

WHEN FRENCH PRES. Charles de Gaulle set off a diplomatic grenade on the eve of Pres. Richard Nixon's visit to Europe, a number of people suggested it was conclusive proof that the old man had achieved full senility.

I strongly disagree. The fact is that de Gaulle's fundamental course was charted during World War II, and his memoirs provide us with a clear reading of his major assumption: that international politics is a zero-sum game. In practical terms, this means that de Gaulle believed, and still believes, that the only way France can achieve greatness is at the expense of everyone else, allies included. There can be no shared "grandeur;" in a zero-sum game (e.g., seven-card stud) there is only one winner and all the others are his victims.

There is nothing novel about this concept. It was the classic view of diplomacy in the 16th and 17th centuries and led to countries shifting sides in the middle of a war, to Catholic nations working with the Turks against other Catholic nations, and to all sorts of mysterious shenanigins. The problem we have may be likened to that of a suburban doctor in 1969 confronted with a case of cholera: it is hard to diagnose an archaic malady.

But if we start with the proposition that de Gaulle believes that France can become powerful only if everyone else is pushed down, we get a quite consistent pattern of behavior. Outside of Europe, what this policy has amounted to is the effort to prevent any stable spheres of influence from emerging—or, alternatively, of trying to disrupt those that do exist. Given the power configurations in the world this has led to vigorous anti-Americanism. There is nothing personal about this. If the Tamils exercised the same world role, de Gaulle would be anti-Tamil.

De Gaulle, for instance, has made two excursions into the Western hemisphere. In the first, a few years back, he wandered around Latin America indicating that Latin civilization was highly preferable to domination by the "Anglo-Saxons."

The Latin Americans were charmed by his rhetoric, but persisted in asking what the French were prepared to pay to support this new cultural alignment. That ended that. More recently, de Gaulle gave strong endorsement to the French separatists who are trying to tear Canada apart, another shot at the Anglo-Saxons.

He has been accused of inconsistency in the Middle East, but again because critics have not grasped his working thesis. He wanted an Israel strong enough to disrupt the Arab world, not an Israel which, by its power, could generate Arab unity, a tight Arab-Soviet alliance, and American involvement in the area. A besieged Israel merited French support; a militant Israel became in his eyes an instrument of American power.

Without boring the reader with further details, I think it is fair to say that de Gaulle's support for the Viet Cong, for Biafra, and for the Republic of South Africa is cut from the same cloth. He even tried the gambit in Eastern Europe, but got put down rather hard in Poland.

PRES. NIXON'S GREETING from de Gaulle was therefore hardly startling, unless one believes that the problems Presidents Kennedy and Johnson had with the French "emperor" arose from misunderstaning, pique, and the war in Viet Nam. A new Administration has, of course, the right to blame its difficulties on its predecessors. God knows, we engaged in that sport. The important question is: Do they believe their own press releases?

De Gaulle's latest maneuver was (as the French insist) quite predictable. In the last few weeks he has seen two events that suggested a tightening of NATO and an effort to isolate France: the strong statement of British-German accord which emerged from the Wilson-Kiesinger meeting, and the London meeting of the Western European Union (which he boycotted). A Western Europe unified without France might be in a position to talk turkey with an American President so de Gaulle, with a vested interest in chaos, struck back.

One can hope that Mr. Nixon's reintroduction of French wines in the White House will endear him to "Charles le Grand," but nothing short of our turning in our chips as a world power could significantly alter the viewpoint of the French president.

'Black Capitalism' No Solution:

Statement on Minorities

Following is the text of the statement Economic Progress of Minorities, adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council, Feb. 21, 1969.

THE FACT THAT large numbers of Negroes, Mexican-Americans and other minorities remain outside the mainstream of America's economic and social order is among this nation's most pressing domestic problems.

Despite the persistence of this problem, the significant advances of recent years are testimony to America's capacity for attaining a solution. Federal legislation, assuring equal opportunity, is now on the statute books. The nation's economic progress—built in part on the recent federal manpower, housing and anti-poverty programs, minimum wage legislation and the historic breakthrough of federal aid to education—has planted seeds whose results are yet to be fully realized.

As a result, unemployment among nonwhite adult men declined from 11.7 percent in 1961 to 3.9 percent in 1968—solid and unmistakable progress. Despite this improvement, unemployment among adult nonwhites is double the rate among whites and joblessness among Negro teenagers in 1968 was 25 percent, a disastrous level.

Recent improvements in employment, education and skills have brought increases in the family incomes of many Negroes and other minorities. By 1967, the median income of nonwhite families was up to 62 percent of the median of white families—an unsatisfactory situation, but a considerable improvement over the 50-55 percent ratios of most of the 1950s and early 1960s.

These beginnings need encouragement, support and expansion. There is yet a long and hard road ahead. But the achievements of recent years point the way toward the only rational means of achieving a sound solution of this problem.

For the vast majority of Negroes and other minorities, the route into America's mainstream is manpower skills, education and jobs at decent wages.

The essential underpinning is a national commitment to full employment. Federal expenditure, tax and monetary policies for maximum economic growth must be supplemented by a national public-service employment program—to create jobs, linked with training and supportive services, for the unemployed and seriously under-employed in both rural and urban areas.

Federal manpower programs should be expanded and adequately financed—to provide the unemployed and under-employed with adequate skills that are needed in the job markets, as well as literacy training, counseling and medical assistance.

The forward momentum of federal aid for education, including vocational education, must be maintained. Adequate educational opportunities, to the maximum of the student's capacity, must be made available to all, regardless of race, creed, color or family finances.

Full funding, implementation and expansion of the housing and community facilities legislation of recent years is essential if America is to provide decent homes for all her citizens in the next ten years.

Effective enforcement of the civil rights legislation of recent years is a must.

Sound government and private efforts to assist Negroes and other disadvantaged minorities, who wish to establish business enterprises, should be provided. The critical need is capital formation and technical assistance. The government should establish machinery to provide long-term, low-interest loans and technical assistance to meet this need.

These varied policies and measures are essential to accelerate the upward mobility of members of minority groups into the nation's mainstream.

To do this, America's goal must be the rapid elimination of ghetto conditions and the ultimate elimination of the ghetto itself.

Some people, however, have urged that this route be abandoned for an emphasis on so-called "black capitalism."

At its best, this policy is an illusion. In a society where 90 percent of those who are at work are wage and salary earners—on private and public payrolls—only a small number of people can move into the economy's mainstream through self-employment and small business. Thus sole or major emphasis on this policy would undermine or kill the jobs-skills-education-housing measures that are essential for the overwhelming majority of Negroes and other minorities.

At its worst, "black capitalism" is a dangerous, divisive delusion—offered as a pancea by extremists, both black and white, some businessmen who see a chance for profit and a few well-intentioned but misguided liberals.

Attempts to build separate economic enclaves, with substantial federal tax subsidies, within specific geographically limited ghetto areas, is apartheid, anti-democratic nonsense.

It is also unworkable, for the ghettos are, in fact, a part of the nation, their inhabitants are Americans, and small pockets of urban or rural poverty cannot be made into viable, separate economic entities. The gross national product, produced by the inter-dependent national economy, should be shared fairly by all Americans.

Moreover, the "black capitalism" proposals to create huge, new tax loopholes for business to locate in ghetto areas is also bad tax policy. If enacted, these loopholes would attract small sweatshops or some marginal plants of big companies—with little additional employment at decent wages, but with considerable tax benefits to the companies.

SOME LEGISLATIVE proposals for separate economic enclaves would create development corporations, in each ghetto area, with authority to control the economic life of the area. Such control could be used by extremists to harass businessmen, black and white alike, within these geographically defined enclaves.

Separatist economic schemes offer no hope for the solid advance of the overwhelming majority of disadvantaged minorities into America's mainstream. But they do present a real threat of further division, additional conflict and bitter frustration.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council is unalterably opposed to separatist schemes. We reaffirm our consistent commitment to the principle of integration and the goal of full and equal opportunity for all Americans.

We will continue and redouble our efforts to enable Negroes and other disadvantaged minorities to move as rapidly as possible into the nation's mainstream.

The way to do it is to put massive federal money, manpower and muscle into the programs we have endorsed in this statement—within a framework of full and equal opportunity for all Americans.

America knows the route to solving its minority problems; it needs only the will to reach its goal.

Seek Federal Agency:

Consumers Press Drive

NEW CONSUMER PROTECTION and new strength for those already in force will be major issues in the new Congress, a consumer affairs adviser for organized labor predicted in a network radio interview.

Evelyn Dubrow, legislative representative for the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union, said unions and consumer organizations would seek a federal consumers' department or agency, product warranties and guarantees and legislation dealing with door-to-door sales practices.

Miss Dubrow, who is also chairman of the AFL-CIO legislative subcommittee on consumer legislation, said that "the consumer has become very popular in Congress" and there is growing demand that consumer interests now come into "full maturity and citizenship."

"The rich have always been concerned with what happened to their consumer dollars," she asserted. "Now, for the first time," she noted, "the middle- and low-income people have joined those ranks and there is a common front."

Miss Dubrow also cautioned state legislators to carefully explore all the implications of the proposed Uniform Consumer Credit Code before taking action on it. She warned that in some states, the code may be used "to make the federal truth-in-lending act less effective."

By Press Associates, Inc.

FOR MANY YEARS the labor movement has insisted that every American boy and girl should have the right to as high a degree of education as he or she is capable of.

A century ago this meant largely eight years of elementary school with a diploma as the passport to a decent job.

In the past few decades the elementary diploma as the necessary passport has been escalated to a high school diploma, representing four more years of schooling.

Now there are increasing signs that some college education and ultimately a college diploma will be the basic need when a young man or woman goes job hunting.

The constant growth of educational requirements has just been dramatized by announcement that the AFL-CIO will inaugurate a labor studies center in Washington for the training of labor leadership.

Attainment of higher and higher levels of education as the necessary goal of young American workers is not simply a romantic concept based on social justice and democratic principles. Hard statistics compiled by the U.S. Dept. of Labor show that while a high school diploma is a "must" as we go into the 1970s, attainment of some degree of college education is rapidly becoming a "must," too.

As industrial life becomes more complex, educational standards are being forced up as in many occupations.

In a study published in the current issue of the Monthly Labor Review, Economist Elizabeth Waldman reports that by March 1968, five out of eight American workers 18 years and older had finished at least four years of high school. One out of five workers with a high school diploma had completed college.

"This all time high level of educational attainment is the result of an uninterrupted educational upgrading of the work force for the past decade and a half," Miss Waldman wrote.

Her statistics show that almost two-thirds of the American work force in 1968 had completed high school, compared with only 43 percent in 1952. One out of every eight had completed four years of college compared with one out of every 12 in 1952. For the work force as a whole, the statistics showed that workers had had 12.3 years of schooling in 1968 compared with 10.9 years in 1952.

Further analysis of these figures shows that the non-white population has trailed behind the white worker force with the inevitable consequence of an unemployment rate double that of whites and employment patterns at the low wage—frequently poverty—level.

THE STATISTICS SHOW that while 64.5 percent of white workers had completed high school in 1968, only 42.8 percent of nonwhite workers had reached this educational level. The college-level story is even more tragic. While 13.1 percent of white workers had four years or more of college education in 1968, only 6.8 percent of nonwhite workers had reached this level.

But nonwhite workers in recent years have shown considerably more progress in the percentage of those getting higher education than whites. While white college graduates went from 8.6 percent to 13.1 percent between 1952 and 1968, nonwhite college graduates shot up from 2.6 percent to 6.8 percent over the same period.

Figures compiled by the Manpower & Training Administration show that by 1975, 16.8 percent of the working population over 25 will have had a college education compared with the 12.4 percent of all workers in 1968. For workers in the 25 to 34 year group, the percentage will be almost one-fifth—19.7 percent.

The lesson is clear. Tomorrow's worker—if he is to get and keep any kind of a decent, well-paying job—is going to have to increase his skills and learning through education. Today's dropouts, far from catching up with the procession, will lag even farther behind.

A FEDERAL consumers' department or agency, product warrantees and guarantees and door-to-door sales practices will be major consumer issues in the 91st Congress, Evelyn Dubrow, legislative representative for the Ladies' Garment Workers, predicted on Labor News Conference. She was questioned by Frank, Swoboda, left, of United Press Intl. and Murray Seeger of the Los Angeles Times. The AFL-CIO produced interview is broadcast Tuesdays on Mutual Radio.

PAINTINGS AND SCULPTURE by union members, including an oil painting by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, were exhibited in Toronto, Ont., at the Steelworkers' art gallery, the only permanent art gallery operated by a union in Canada. The exhibition, open to the public for three weeks, was sponsored by the Labor Council of Metropolitan Toronto.

State, Federal Action Proposed To Reform Voting Registration

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO called for state and federal action to give the right to vote to millions of Americans who are disenfranchised by unduly restrictive voter registration laws.

At least 5 million Americans were unable to vote for President last year because they didn't meet residency requirements, the federation's Executive Council said. Others were discouraged from voting by inconvenient places and times of registration or the closing of voter lists well before the date of the election.

The council urged AFL-CIO state central bodies to press for immediate action in state legislatures to modernize registration and election procedures.

It also instructed the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation to work for a federal constitutional amendment that would guarantee the right to vote in presidential elections to persons unable to meet state residency requirements.

In companion statements, the Executive Council called for lowering the voting age to 18 and urged a system of federal subsidies to help meet the cost of presidential campaigns.

Experience in states which have lowered the voting age, the council said, justified extending the 18-year-old vote to all states. The resolution endorsed 18-year-old voting proposals pending in both state legislatures and Congress.

On campaign financing, the council warned that continuation of the present system will mean that political parties will be even more dependent on wealthy contributors or that only the rich would be able to afford to run.

The best solution, the Executive Council said, would be "direct federal subsidies to political parties to help them meet the costs of presidential campaigns."

Vouchers 'Worth Trying'

A voucher system, allowing each voter to earmark a certain amount of federal funds to the candidate or committee of his choice, is another system "worth trying," the council said. It noted that a tax checkoff plan, with the same goal, was enacted by Congress in 1966. The statement expressed regret that the law was repealed before it had a chance to go into effect.

The AFL-CIO statement said a tax credit for political contributions would be "an acceptable, though less desirable, alternative." But it said the federation is "unalterably opposed" to allowing tax deductions for political contributions since this would work to the advantage of persons in the higher income brackets.

A tax credit means that the amount contributed—up to a specified limit—could be subtracted from the amount of tax a person owes the government.

A tax deduction means that the amount of income on which tax must be paid—for persons who itemize their deductions—is reduced. The higher the income bracket the person is in, the greater is the reduction in taxes.

The council statement also urged Congress to direct the Federal Communications Commission to prepare detailed proposals requiring TV and radio stations to provide free time for political broadcasts. This, it said, would do much to lower the costs of campaigns and serve the public interest.

Old Plan Backed

In its analysis of voter registration laws, the Executive Council endorsed the recommendations made years ago by a presidential commission appointed by Pres. John F. Kennedy. Its findings, the statement said, while "almost completely ignored," are still valid.

The council statement said election reform "should include truly permanent, personal registration so that a citizen, once registered, remains registered."

It said that "a government which is able to devise procedures for keeping permanent records for income tax and social security participants can certainly devise and maintain a permanent vote registry."

The Executive Council urged state central bodies to work for procedures to bring registration books to the neighborhoods to make it easier to register. It noted with approval the Idaho law which authorizes registrars to undertake a house-to-house canvass for eligible voters. As a result, it noted, Idaho has been "a leader in voter turnout" on Election Day.

All-Out Effort Pressed To Solve Air Hijackings

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The U.S. government must "spare no diplomatic, political and economic effort" to reach an international accord to end hijacking of airliners, the AFL-CIO Executive Council stressed.

For months, it pointed out, world aviation—particularly flights in the U.S.—have been plagued by "piracy in the air" and in 1968 the pace of hijacking has increased.

The situation, a statement declared, "gravely endangers" not only passengers but also the pilots and the airborne crew "whose attainment of high skills took many years of training and development."

"The very foundations of all civilized society," the council said, "are imperiled by the continuation of this banditry of the air whose criminal perpetrators have to date found haven in Havana, Algiers and Cairo."

The council urged the U.S. government to ratify the 1963 Tokyo Convention, adopted by numerous countries around the world, to provide for the quick return of hijacked passengers and planes to the country from which they were taken.

Beyond that, it called for the U.S. to press for an international pact to provide that:

- No government shall permit the planes of its country to fly to any country which offers a sanctuary for hijacked planes, their hijackers, or both.
- All governments shall agree to extradite the hijackers to the country in which they committed their crime.

The council urged the Intl. Federation of Airline Pilots Associations to support the federation's position "unreservedly and firmly."

Abolish Electoral College:

Popular Vote Urged To Elect President

(Continued from Page 1)

ceived far wider support in Congress than any other proposal, and according to polls is favored by the vast majority of the American electorate. If it cannot be adopted, there is little reason to suppose that any other plan can."

Nixon's substitute proposal calls for some system of allocating the electoral vote of each state so as to "more closely approximate the popular vote."

He did not spell out just how this would be done, declaring he was "not wedded" to any specific plan. However he noted that in the past he has endorsed a proposal to divide each state's electoral votes in proportion to the popular vote breakdown in that state.

One effect of this would be to lessen the importance of winning a large industrial state since the winning candidate, instead of taking all the electoral votes, would probably receive only one or two more electoral votes than his nearest opponent.

This, the AFL-CIO statement noted, "could have the same unfortunate consequences as the existing system—it could elect a President receiving a smaller popular vote than his opponent."

In fact, the council pointed out, that's exactly what would have happened if a proportional electoral vote system had been used in the 1960 presidential election. Nixon would have been elected President, even though John F. Kennedy received more popular votes.

Nixon also proposed abolishing individual electors, a relatively noncontroversial reform which would prevent "faithless" electors from disregarding their pledge and supporting another candidate.

Under Nixon's proposal, the candidate with the most electoral votes would be elected President provided he received at least 40 percent. If no candidate received 40 percent of the electoral vote, there would be a runoff election between the two top candidates—to be decided by popular vote.

To this, the Executive Council commented: "If direct election by popular vote is feasible in a runoff, as the President proposes, it is feasible in the first place."

A proportional division of the electoral vote would enable third or fourth party candidates to claim electoral votes from states in which they received only a small portion of the vote. The council warned that this "would favor the development of splinter parties and undercut the two-party systems."

The Executive Council noted that past AFL-CIO conventions have called for abolition of the Electoral College and direct popular election of the President and Vice President.

"We reaffirm that position," it declared.

AFL-CIO Extends Aid To Pilot Arts Projects

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Financial support for the AFL-CIO Demonstration Arts Project and authorization for a study of the feasibility of creating a National Labor-Arts Foundation were voted by the federation's Executive Council.

A council subcommittee cited encouraging results in cities where seminars on the performing arts have been held and reported the renewal of a $20,000 grant by the National Endowment for the Arts.

The Council voted to approve two subcommittee recommendations:

- That AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany be authorized to spend up to $10,000 in the next six months to help finance labor's Demonstration Arts Project.
- That the subcommittee, with the assistance of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities, the Council of AFL-CIO Unions for Scientific, Professional & Cultural Employes and the national arts coordinating consultant, be given the authority to study the feasibility of establishing a National Labor-Arts Foundation to increase the involvement of union members in leisure-time activities.

The subcommittee reported that two-day seminars have been held in four pilot cities—Buffalo, New York City, Minneapolis and Louisville—to launch local projects with the aid of local and national union leaders, representatives of performing arts unions and local arts institutions.

"Results of these seminars were encouraging," the subcommittee said. "National and local media and labor press response was extensive and enthusiastic. Dialogue between labor and the local arts institutions has begun."

Buffalo's demonstration program was called the "most advanced" to date. A coordinator is at work with a salary grant from the New York Council on the Arts, and a Central Labor Arts Committee is actively directing the program.

All major arts institutions and agencies are included on a discount coupon arrangement for union members only. A promotional campaign to enroll 10,000 members is being prepared, and labor leadership has been included in planning future projects.

A Minneapolis Central Labor Arts Committee is, the report said, functioning well. New York City is screening applicants for the post of arts coordinator, and specific projects are in process.

The subcommittee reported that the Louisville project, after an "apparently good start," is presently "stymied." Should this condition continue, it said, labor and arts sponsors may want to pick another city.

T. C. Douglas Wins Canadian Seat

Vancouver, B.C.—A by-election in a British Columbia district returned the leader of Canada's New Democratic Party to the House of Commons.

T. C. Douglas polled 19,712 votes on the NDP ticket to 12,728 for the Liberal Party candidate and 1,948 for the Conservative.

Douglas had narrowly lost his seat in a different district in the last general election. The death of an NDP House member, Colin Cameron, brought about the special election in the Nanaimo area district. The turnout for Douglas brought the NDP both a bigger total vote and a bigger share of the vote than at the last election in the district when the labor-endorsed party had a plurality but not a majority.

Major Changes Sought:

50% Hike Pressed In Social Security

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Major changes in the Social Security Act to make it "a fully adequate law, realistically tailored to meet the needs of all the beneficiaries" were called for by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

Its statement emphasized the need for increases in social security benefits "to make the goal of a 50 percent increase a reality as soon as possible."

The council reaffirmed labor's call for a National Health Insurance program as the only means of guaranteeing all Americans — rich and poor alike—"their right to health."

And until that goal is reached, the statement stressed, the AFL-CIO will press for improvements and expansion of Medicare—a program that labor helped bring to birth.

The AFL-CIO "cannot be content with the pace of progress in any of these areas," the council said, because "too many overwhelming gaps remain. These gaps must be filled by immediate legislative action."

The council noted that the 1967 AFL-CIO convention called for a 50 percent increase in benefits in several steps and Congress enacted a 13 percent boost that same year.

"We joined with the aged in hailing that increase as a down payment toward our goal," the council said. "We also shared their disappointment as the increase was quickly eroded by price increases."

The statement cited harsh statistics underscoring the need for improved benefits:

Eight million social security beneficiaries remain below the level of poverty. Without their social security checks, only 5 percent would be above the $3,900 annual income the Labor Dept. says is needed to maintain "even a moderate standard of living for an elderly couple." The average social security check for a retired worker is $98 a month, about $166 for aged couples. Millions receive less including nearly 3 million who get the $55 a month minimum.

The ultimate answer to erosion of benefits by increased living costs "will continue to be a serious problem until an automatic adjustment of benefits is included in the system," the council said.

The statement advocated that additional benefits be financed from general revenue, employer-employe contributions and an updating of the earnings base on which contributions and benefits are based. It urged that the improvements be followed by periodic adjustments linked to increases in active workers' earnings so that retired citizens can participate in rising living standards.

On Medicare, the council urged Congress to eliminate "a major shortcoming" in the program by including prescription drugs in its coverage.

Eighty percent of persons over 65 suffer from at least one or more chronic ailments and "they purchase drugs nearly three times more often than do persons under 65," the council noted.

It also endorsed the recommendation of the Advisory Council on Health Insurance for the Disabled that Medicare be extended to the disabled and that the hospitalization and supplementary medical insurance programs be combined into one system.

Pointing out that the average monthly social security benefit for the disabled now is $112, the council said it is impossible for them "to meet their high medical costs from such meager payments."

"The disabled, like the aged," it observed, "are a high cost, high risk group who frequently need extensive health services at a time they can least afford them."

Further, the council called for enactment of a greatly expanded child health program as an extension of Medicare "to assure readily accessible comprehensive health services for all mothers and their children, including pre- and post-natal care."

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING is working better than most Americans realize, officers of the Institute of Collective Bargaining & Group Relations tell press conference at Bal Harbour, Fla., after meeting with AFL-CIO Executive Council. From left are: Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists; Victor Borella, labor consultant for Rockefeller Center; Board Chairman E. T. Klassen, deputy postmaster general; Lane Kirkland, institute president and executive assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany; Theodore W. Kheel, arbitrator and adviser to the institute.

HRDI Serves Jobs Program In 30 Cities

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Trained AFL-CIO manpower representatives are at work in 30 cities coordinating programs that will help provide good jobs at decent wages for the hard-core unemployed, the federation's Executive Council was told.

It received a report from the Human Resources Development Institute, set up in September 1968 by the AFL-CIO in a contract with the Dept. of Labor, outlining the progress made in the first five months.

Julius Rothman, associate director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Urban Affairs and president of HRDI, told the council that 27 field manpower representatives are now servicing 30 cities. The total professional staff of the institute has been recruited from 20 different internationals and includes Negroes, Mexican Americans and women.

The work of the HRDI representatives varies from city to city, Rothman said, but the goals in each community are the same:

- Striving for maximum involvement of AFL-CIO unions in existing manpower programs, along with management and government.
- Evaluating existing programs to see if they are training the hard-core for jobs that actually exist and permit advancement.
- Encouraging AFL-CIO unions to sponsor meaningful and innovative programs of their own, making use of government funds for experimental and research projects as well as for straight training.

Rothman noted that the institute is working with model cities administrations, apprentice outreach programs and the buddy system set up under the JOBS program.

Abner Takes AAA Post, Quits Mediation Service

The Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service announced the resignation of Willoughby Abner, special assistant to the director, to become a vice president of the American Arbitration Association and director of its Center for Disputes Settlement.

FM&CS Dir. J. Curtis Counts praised Abner for helping develop programs to reduce disputes in the public sector.

May Conference Slated On Bargaining Issues

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A major conference on collective bargaining in its modern setting will be held in New York City May 12-13, the Institute of Collective Bargaining & Group Relations announced here.

The conference will bring together key representatives from labor, management, the academic world and the public for an intensive two-day look at the current problems in the bargaining area.

Officers and board members of the institute met with members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council at a luncheon announcing the conference. Four members of the council are on the board of directors.

Theodore W. Kheel, adviser to the institute and widely known arbitrator and mediator, told a press conference following the luncheon session that collective bargaining is working better than most people realize and rather than searching for a substitute the major effort should be to make it work better.

Those from the government and academic community who constantly attack collective bargaining and ask for substitute approaches are doing a "great disservice," he said.

Lane Kirkland, institute president and executive assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, said the primary objective of the institute is to strengthen collective bargaining through voluntary methods.

The CBI is supported by both labor and management and was formed last year to improve the bargaining process and give the public a better understanding of how it works and why it is important in a democratic society.

E. T. Klassen, deputy postmaster general and former president of American Can Co., is chairman of the board with Machinists Pres. P. L. Siemiller, vice chairman. Victor Borella, labor consultant to Rockefeller Center, serves as vice president. The coordinating director is Dr. Matthew A. Kelly of the New York State School of Industrial Relations at Cornell University.

Federal Welfare Plan Held Essential For Poor

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Federalization of public welfare is an essential first step if the nation is to meet "the needs of the most impoverished Americans so they can live in decency, dignity and security," the AFL-CIO declared.

Such federalization, the Executive Council said, must spell out methods of financing, standards of eligibility and minimum payments under plans now being largely run by the states.

The call for the federal program, advocated by former Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen and a growing number of leaders in both parties, was included in a council statement on public welfare.

The council also urged repeal of a "harsh, punitive and coercive" freeze on the number of children who can be helped under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program.

The freeze, enacted by Congress in 1967 and set to take place July 1 of this year, would mean that about 1.1 million children "would be eliminated from the rolls altogether or have their payments reduced," the council said.

"No just nation," it emphasized, "can tolerate this kind of treatment for the least fortunate children."

The council also hit action by Congress in 1967 to require mothers to participate in mandatory training, employment and daycare programs when there aren't enough of these available. It appealed to Congress to exempt those mothers who have pre-school age children or children attending school other than during school hours.

The statement urged Congress to require states to make AFDC benefits available to families with a jobless father living in the home, while maintaining the requirement for fathers to accept suitable employment or training.

This, it pointed out, would eliminate "the cruel dilemma" faced by many destitute fathers who feel they must leave their families to make them eligible for assistance.

Although its separate proposals are urgently needed, the council continued, they will not in themselves be enough because public assistance payments are inadequate in most states.

Labor Mobilizes Drive To Protect 1 Man, 1 Vote

Bal Harbour, Fla.—American labor mobilized for a state-by-state drive to preserve one man, one vote apportionment of state legislatures.

The campaign was launched by the AFL-CIO Executive Council and the front line troops will be the federation's state central bodies.

The goal is to block the move to call a constitutional convention to initiate an amendment which would nullify the Supreme Court rulings which ended minority, rural domination of most of the state legislatures.

Under a never-used provision of the Constitution, legislatures of two-thirds of the states can cause such a convention to be held. There is considerable controversy over the number of states which have passed valid resolutions to convene a convention but the Executive Council termed the threat "critical."

"We intend to fight to uphold the landmark Supreme Court decision now under attack by reactionary forces," the AFL-CIO statement said.

Warning that both representative government and effective state action to meet the urban crisis are endangered by the move to amend the Constitution, the council declared:

"We call on all AFL-CIO state central bodies to fight in their respective legislatures against those who would convene a constitutional convention.

"We urge state central bodies to work to rescind resolutions calling for such a convention in those states where such regressive action has been taken.

"In those critical states where no action has been taken, state central bodies should fight the attempts by reactionary forces to adopt such resolutions."

The AFL-CIO warned that "this state-to-state battle will determine whether the nation retains or discards democracy's most basic precept."

General Clay Cited for Aid To Refugees

New York—Gen. Lucius D. Clay, former commander in chief of all U.S. forces in Europe, received the Freedom Award of the Intl. Rescue Committee here for his efforts on behalf of refugees over more than 20 years.

The 1969 award went to Clay for "taking a leading role" in aiding the resettlement of thousands of refugees who fled from East Germany to West Germany, and for his more recent help for Czechs fleeing Soviet aggression.

Leo Cherne, chairman of the board of the Rescue Committee, which provides relief and rehabilitation services around the world, made the presentation at a dinner attended by nearly 1,000 leaders in labor, industry, government and civic affairs.

Willy Brandt, foreign minister and vice chancellor of the West German government, who flew here for the occasion, was the main speaker. Messages of congratulations to Clay came from Pres. Nixon and all three living former Presidents — Johnson, Eisenhower and Truman.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, recipient of the Freedom Award in 1965, sent a message from Florida where the Executive Council was meeting. He termed the choice of Clay for the award "most fitting and appropriate" in view of recent Communist pressures against free Berlin.

Clay also was "one of the first of our nation's great military leaders to recognize the indispensable role of free trade unions" in developing a democratic, socially just society, Meany noted.

DON'T BUY campaign against Frosty Morn, Valleydale and Reelfoot brand meat products gets a boost from colorful new poster viewed by Meat Cutters Vice Pres. Donald H. Smith, left, and Pres. John Russell of Asheville, N. C., Local 525. Central bodies in all southeastern states have mailed posters to all affiliated unions in support of strikers at three plants of Lorenz Neuhoff chain which has refused to bargain over acceptable contract terms.

Budget-Cutting Assailed As Tempting 'Disaster'

Bal Harbour, Fla.—"Political one-upmanship" to see whether Congress or the Administration can slash the budget the most would be disastrous to the nation, the AFL-CIO declared.

The federation's Executive Council warned that key programs "to combat the nation's domestic ills and to improve the quality of America's lives" could be destroyed by budget cutbacks.

A large part of the budget consists of mandatory expenses or national defense programs, the statement noted. Only about 10 percent is earmarked for "all other programs, including social and economic commitments to decaying cities, to the schools, to the disadvantaged, the young, the old, the ill and the jobless," the council said.

"Unfortunately," the statement added, "it is these commitments—enacted through bipartisan support—that will be singled out for the most critical attention and the most severe onslaught, all in the pursuit of economy."

The council warned against a repetition of last year's budget-cutting spree, when the new Housing Act received only one-third of its authorized funds, when educational programs were given less than half of the amount authorized by law. Health and job-training programs were also cut back from scheduled levels.

"Once again these programs face funding crises in the new Congress," the Executive Council said. "Virtually all will require considerably greater funds to properly meet the original goals that Congress prescribed."

The council noted "with dismay that already the cry for budget cutting has been heard from within the new Administration." It cautioned also that "the political fact of a Republican Administration and a Democratic Congress provides an arena of great political temptation, which will require great statesmanship and responsibility to resist.

"Budget-cutting for political one-upmanship must not become the sport of Congress and the Administration.

"For Congress to enact new programs which hold forth promises of a better life and then to cruelly deny the necessary funds is to tempt a disaster that would shatter far more than the nation's budget stability."

Council Renews Call For Job Safety Law

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Enactment of a strong federal safety and health measure was urged by the AFL-CIO Executive Council as the initial step in attaining a goal of "a safe and healthful place of employment" for all working Americans.

A council statement also called on "the many responsible elements of business management to adopt a constructive and positive approach to occupational health and safety legislation before the 91st Congress."

The statement noted that the Occupational Health & Safety Act proposed by Pres. Johnson in 1968 "was killed by some business groups, through the use of vicious and misleading propaganda."

Last year, the council observed, there was "no visible improvement in scattered and inadequate" existing safety laws and reduction in the mounting toll of deaths and injuries in the workplace.

"A concerned nation can and must reduce this appalling toll," the council declared.

It proposed legislation to:

- Empower the Secretary of Labor to promulgate, develop and enforce standards governing occupational safety and health.
- Provide a stronger role for the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare in developing occupational health standards, aided by creation of a statutory Occupational Health Center.
- Assure strong federal inspection, enforcement and penalty provisions, with court review for aggrieved persons affected by application of the standards.
- Furnish effective federal guidelines for state occupational health and safety plans as a condition for federal planning and grants-in-aid.
- Require all federal agencies to establish and maintain health and safety standards for federal employes in line with those in private industry.
- Provide adequate authorizations for research, education and manpower training in the areas of occupational health and safety along with adequate representation for labor on all advisory committees.

"We believe that such a program, adequately funded and staffed, will constitute the first decisive step in federal health and safety history," the council concluded.

Automation Group To Hold Film Fair

New York—A film fair aimed at helping to bridge the gap between jobless youths and prospective employers will be sponsored here May 21-22 by the American Foundation on Automation & Employment.

The foundation, a non-profit labor-management organization, said the fair will offer employers, labor organizations and anti-poverty groups a chance to view films or job training programs in ghetto areas.

The fair will also include seminars with film-makers and community action groups and presentation of awards to outstanding films in various categories. Articles about films and listings of availability will be distributed to participants.

Theodore W. Kheel, president of the foundation, said that backing for the fair has been obtained from many prominent leaders in industry, labor, government, community groups and civil rights organizations.

Ex-AFL-CIO Staffer Aaron Velleman Dies

Malden, Mass. — Aaron Velleman, retired AFL-CIO field representative and a contemporary in the Cigar Makers of Sam Gompers, first AFL president, died here at 88. He had been a business representative for the Office & Professional Employes and an AFL-CIO organizer from 1938 until his retirement 11 years ago.

To Check Migration:

Rural Aid Programs Called Vital to Cities

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A major national program to aid rural Americans is both simple justice and a key step in solving the urban crisis, the AFL-CIO declared.

In a comprehensive statement examining the problems of rural America the federation's Executive Council set out a specific six-point program to improve job opportunities and living standards in the countryside.

Stressing that the one-fourth of the nation's total population that remain in the rural areas "encompass one-half of the nation's poor" and that the "shocking magnitude of rural poverty has persisted" since the exodus from the farms started after World War II, the council proposed:

- A reasonable ceiling on federal income maintenance benefits paid to any farm, that "excessive payments to large and profitable agri-businesses cannot be justified."
- Measures to help farmers bargain collectively for a reasonable price for their products in the marketplace.
- Coverage of farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act, minimum wage law, state unemployment and workmen's compensation laws. This involves no taxpayer cost and the "benefits can well be supported by the large and profitable commercial farms that employ most of the nation's farm laborers."
- Minimum federal welfare standards covering all states must be enacted and enforced. Food distribution programs must be federally administered wherever states and local communities refuse to cooperate and they must be dedicated to meeting human needs rather than serving primarily as a means to unload agriculture surpluses.
- Greater resources be made available to implement the Appalachia program, the Economic Development Act and other federal programs.
- Closing the tax loopholes that cost the U.S. Treasury a billion dollars a year, particularly the one that allows so-called farm losses to be used as an offset against non-farm income.

Tracing the development of poverty in rural America, the council statement pointed up the "unprecedented technological revolution in agriculture on the one hand and the failure of public and private policymakers to take adequate measures to forestall the tragic human consequences, on the other."

Since World War II the number of farm units has been cut in half by the growth of ever larger and more efficient enterprises. Of the remaining 3 million farms, the 300,000 largest account for nearly two-thirds of total sales. Less than 5 percent of the labor force produces more food and fiber than Americans can consume.

Farmers and farm workers constitute less than one-quarter of the work force in rural America, with the remaining three-quarters employed at low-paying off-farm jobs or either under-employed or totally jobless.

The council warned that the wholesale migration from the rural areas to the "crisis-ridden cities" will continue unless counter-measures are quickly taken. Solving the urban crisis, it emphasized, partly depends on the ability to meet the desperate needs of the rural areas.

Coordinated Bargaining Termed 'Essential' Tool

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Coordinated bargaining has proved its worth, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared in pledging full support for the 1969 bargaining program of 10 affiliates representing nearly 200,000 General Electric and Westinghouse Electric workers.

Delegates from 270 local unions that have contracts with GE and Westinghouse will meet in Washington, D.C., Mar. 6 to define their common goals in negotiations this year. The unions, as they did three years ago, will coordinate their efforts through a committee headed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

"The 1966 negotiations established both the practicality and the legality of coordinated bargaining," a council statement noted. The contracts achieved by the various unions were substantially better than the "first and final offer" which in previous years had been imposed on the then-divided labor forces by the two giant firms, it said.

The statement recalled that the courts and the National Labor Relations Board have ruled in several leading cases that "coordinated bargaining, conducted with scrupulous regard for the letter of the law, is a legitimate function of the labor movement which management must accept."

In practical terms, coordinated bargaining is "an essential tool in the achievement of justice for workers in large companies where two or more unions are involved," the statement continued.

Only through coordination can unions overcome the "divide and conquer" tactics of a totally unified management, the council declared.

"Therefore the AFL-CIO Executive Council reiterates its wholehearted support of coordinated bargaining in principle, and in particular its continued application in General Electric and Westinghouse.

"The 1969 bargaining program of the GE-Westinghouse committee will have the full support of the AFL-CIO in reaching a successful conclusion."

U. S. Median Age Remains at 27.7

"Americans have stopped getting younger," the Census Bureau said in reporting that the median age of 27.7 years was unchanged between fiscal 1967 and 1968 for the first time in 15 years.

The median age, midpoint at which the population divides equally, half younger and half older, reached a peak of 30.3 years in 1952 after steadily rising from 16.7 in 1820.

The report said that 1.5 million Americans reached age 65 during fiscal 1968, up slightly from the previous year, and 3.8 million people became 21, up 1 million from the number reaching that age in 1967.

New BLS Survey:

9.5% Jobless Rate Recorded in Slums

Workers living in the slums in six cities had a 9.5 percent unemployment rate in the summer of 1968, more than two-and-one-half times the national average, the Labor Dept. reported.

Jobless rates among all classifications of workers exceeded national averages, the department said, and unemployment among slum youths was "especially severe."

Nearly 110,000 persons living in the slums—about one out of every five who worked or looked for work—were jobless at some time between mid-1967 and mid-1968.

The findings highlighted the department's first Urban Employment Survey, a program established to examine the job situation, barriers to employment and attitudes of residents in slum areas.

The survey by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, with cooperation from the Manpower Administration and Census Bureau, was made for the period July-September 1968 in slums in Atlanta, Chicago, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles and New York.

Similar information covering a 6-month period for the six cities will be published later this year, BLS said.

68 Percent Negro

Approximately 825,000 men and women 16 years and over resided in the slum areas in the six cities. Of this total, 68 percent were Negro. The remainder were about equally divided between Spanish-speaking Americans and other white persons.

Unemployment rates in the slum sections were 5.2 percent for adult men and 9.3 percent for adult women, compared to their national rates of 1.9 and 4 percent, respectively.

Among Negroes in the slums, the jobless rate was 10.4 percent compared to a 6.8 percent rate for Negroes throughout the nation. The unemployment rate for whites in the slums was 7.2 percent against 3.2 percent in the nation as a whole.

The 30 percent unemployment rate for teenagers living in the ghettos compared with 12.2 percent for all teenagers and 24.4 percent for Negro teenagers in the entire country.

Of the 110,000 slum residents with some unemployment during 1967-68, BLS said 25 percent of them were out of work for 15 weeks or more, about the same proportion as for the nation as a whole.

More alarming, according to the report, was the fact that one out of four slum residents who experienced unemployment did not work at all during the year, "more than twice the proportion in the entire nation."

The survey found that a fourth of the full-time and part-time workers in the slums earned less than $65 a week, about the equivalent of the federal minimum wage for a 40-hour week.

Median weekly earnings for all full-time workers were $92, with men averaging $106 and women $74. With part-time workers considered, the median was $85.

In looking at family income, the survey revealed that 20 percent of the four-member families in the slums had incomes of less than $3,500 a year over a 12-month year, putting them in the "poverty" category.

The median annual income for all families living in the poorest sections of the cities was $5,400, compared to the 1967 median of $8,000 for all families in the nation.

During the survey period, 59 percent of the persons 16 and over in the slums were in the labor force—that is working or looking for work. This was about the national proportion.

However, BLS found that 23 percent of slum residents considered not in the labor force said they wanted a job "now," as compared to 8 percent of the non-participants on a national basis.

On the subject of educational attainment, it was discovered that slum area workers 18 years and over averaged 10.7 years of school completed, compared with 12.3 years for all of the nation's workers.

Only 37 percent of the workers in the slums had completed four years of high school or more, compared to 60 percent of the workers in the entire U.S.

THE NEWSPAPER GUILD presented its annual Heywood Broun award for the best newspaper work in the Broun tradition to Chicago Daily News columnist Mike Royko. From the left, ANG Pres. James B. Woods; Royko; Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin (D-Calif.), one of the judges in the competition, and Arthur Rosenstock, past ANG president. Broun was a crusading columnist who headed the Guild until his death in 1939.

Chicago Writer Wins Guild's Broun Award

The Newspaper Guild's annual award for the best newspaper work in the crusading spirit of Heywood Broun, its first president, went to Mike Royko, columnist for the Chicago Daily News.

A panel of three judges—all outside Guild jurisdiction—chose Royko's 1968 columns on racial injustice, police behavior, school busing and the troubles of the "little man" as most in keeping with the work of Broun, himself a widely-read columnist until his death in 1939.

It was the first time since 1963 that the winner was a Guildsman, said Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin (D-Calif.), one of the three judges, who presented Royko with a Guild citation and a check for $1,000.

Two runners-up, also Guildsmen, got special mention—Richard Zimmerman of the Cleveland Plain Dealer for a "sophisticated series" on a juvenile accused of murder in a small Ohio town, and Carl West of the Covington, Ky., Kentucky Post and Times Star for reporting that "led directly to the prosecution of two persons for manipulating FHA-insured mortgages and falsely inflating the prices of homes."

Van Deerlin is a past president of the San Diego Guild who described himself as the only Broun contest judge who ever entered the award competition in his reporting days. His fellow judges were Charles B. Seib, Jr., managing editor of the Washington Evening Star, and Stephen D. Isaacs, metropolitan editor of the Washington Post.

At least two dozen of the 95 entries in the 1968 contest appeared to meet the standards set by Broun, the judges said. But "the work of Mike Royko—sardonic, bold, courageous, always stressing the little man and what our society sometimes does to him—seemed to us to be in special harmony with Broun's concept of journalism."

Royko's columns, which the judges called "extremely well written," have appeared daily in the Chicago Daily News for five years. The column is syndicated in 90 other papers.

Royko offered his appreciation to "several million people who, for most of last year at least, were underdogs."

The 1968 award was the 28th in a series sponsored by the Guild after Broun's death. Standards used for judging are those exemplified in Broun's columns for the defunct New York World and later the World-Telegram.

Present at the Washington luncheon were ANG Pres. James B. Woods, St. Louis; former Pres. Arthur Rosenstock, chairman of the Broun awards committee; and members of the ANG executive board, in the city for a quarterly meeting.

Nixon Appeals For Boost in Debt Ceiling

Pres. Nixon asked Congress to raise the ceiling on the national debt and urged a permanent change in the method of computing the debt ceiling.

Congress has insisted on tight limits on the national debt and every Administration has been forced to seek temporary increases to meet the fluctuations in the amount of government bonds outstanding and the flow of tax revenue to the Treasury. During Democratic administrations, Republicans have tended to use debt ceiling bills as occasions to denounce government "spenders."

Nixon said that under the present method of computing the debt, the current temporary limit of $365 billion should be raised to $382 billion by mid-April.

But he urged that instead Congress exclude from the debt limit the amount the government owes to itself, such as money from the social security trust fund which is invested in government bonds. If that were done, he said, the debt ceiling could be lowered to $300 million.

U.S. Urged to Assure Federal Employe Rights

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The federal government's own collective bargaining system is riddled with inequities, the AFL-CIO Executive Council charged.

The council called for prompt action to remedy the problems encountered by AFL-CIO unions representing more than a million federal and postal workers.

It noted the lack of any means of breaking a stalemate in collective bargaining. It protested the lack of binding arbitration of grievances. And it pointed out that "there is no single body responsible for administration of the federal government's entire union management relations policy for its employes."

The "logical" step is to write an improved labor relations policy into law, the council said. Policy is presently set by presidential executive order.

Until legislation is enacted, the council added, the AFL-CIO will continue to seek improvements in the program through administrative action.

The council statement also urged major improvements in the pay, fringe benefits and rights of federal employes.

It said the government should follow the example of many private employers and pay the full cost of life insurance and health coverage for its workers.

The council urged "immediate steps" to raise federal salaries in line with private industry pay trends. It called also for modernization of the civil service retirement system.

Congress was urged to revise the Hatch Act so that federal employes, while free from political pressure, would not be barred from exercising their political rights as citizens.

The council said the postal service should remain a department of the government and declared that needed changes could be accomplished without the "drastic change" of turning over the system to a government-owned corporation.

Race Unity Urged For Mississippi

Indianola, Miss.—Black and white people must work together "if the real problems of Mississippi are to be solved," Mississippi AFL-CIO Pres. Claude Ramsay told a meeting of 250 persons here.

The meeting was called to deal with school issues here and in Sunflower County, and Ramsay particularly emphasized the need for a joint effort by blacks and whites toward solving educational problems.

Pointing to the role organized labor plays in helping to bring progress in the state, Ramsay emphasized that union membership brings workers job security and the opportunity to participate in community affairs on an organized basis.

N.Y. Teachers Protest Ford Foundation Role

A spokesman for New York City's union teachers protested to the House Ways & Means Committee that tax-exempt Ford Foundation funds were used to generate "bitter racial and religious tensions" and block settlement of the citywide teachers' strike.

Testimony on behalf of the city's United Federation of Teachers—Local 2 of the American Federation of Teachers—was presented by Dan Sanders, assistant to UFT Pres. Albert Shanker.

He told the committee, during hearings on tax-exempt foundations, that the $1.4 million the Ford Foundation pumped into so-called school decentralization experiments in New York—including financing for the Ocean Hill-Brownsville district—reaped dividends of "chaos, bitterness, conflict and confrontation."

Sanders stressed that "the Ford Foundation, like other great tax-exempt foundations, has an important role to play in providing funds for many worthwhile activities and philanthropies."

But he said that when it "enters the arena of community-school relations, instead of sensible proposals for change based upon the needs of children, we seem to be faced with confrontations . . . people standing at the school door and barring the way to school employes. . . . We get little 'revolutions' by extremists who are more interested in political power than in educating children."

Whatever the argument may be for "revolutions," the UFT spokesman commented, "we tend to doubt whether they should be federally funded."

Sanders spelled out the role of the Ford Foundation in first promoting, then financing, the decentralization program.

Throughout the long dispute, he noted, a number of community extremists who blocked a settlement continued to receive weekly payments from the foundation. Ford Foundation money, Sanders charged, paid for "anti-union activity and political propagandizing." And he noted that members of the city's school board have obtained Ford Foundation money for outside projects.

Urging that federal guidelines be issued to prevent tax-exempt foundations from straying from their proclaimed role, Sanders warned: "New confrontations are brewing and the Ford Foundation continues its involvement in them."

Lowry Heads Department:

Railway Clerks-TCU Merger Completed

A long-planned merger that brings the Transportation-Communication Employes into the Railway & Airline Clerks as an autonomous division has taken place.

Details of the merger, effective Feb. 23, were announced jointly by BRAC Pres. C. L. Dennis and TCU Pres. A. R. Lowry, with both acclaiming its advantages.

Under the merger, TCU will become the Transportation-Communications Division of the BRAC, with about 40,000 members. Since BRAC's previous membership was 270,000, the merger puts the union over the 300,000 mark.

Lowry will serve as president of the new division. In addition, he becomes a member of BRAC's executive council. Other officers of the TCU continue in similar posts in the new division.

Merger negotiations between officers of the TCU and BRAC opened early in 1967 and continued into 1968.

Last July, delegates to the TCU convention, by more than a two-thirds margin, authorized the union's grand lodge and general officers to consider the TCU-BRAC plan along with any other merger possibilities.

The convention decided further that any plan approved by a majority of the officers would then be submitted to the membership which would ratify it by a majority vote.

After determining that no merger possibilities with other unions could be worked out, TCU officers further discussed and debated the TCU-BRAC plan, approved it and submitted it to the members.

The plan was ratified by a substantial margin of the union's members in the United States and Canada in a mail referendum held during October 1968.

In their joint statement, Dennis and Lowry said the merger means "that the members of our two organizations will be able to enjoy the many benefits of belonging to one stronger union."

"Both the BRAC and the TCU have played important roles in winning higher pay and improved benefits for transportation employes in the United States and Canada," they said.

"Now, under one union roof, we anticipate continued progress through the use of modern collective bargaining."

In another development, BRAC announced that it is in negotiations on a merger with the Railway, Transport & General Workers of Canada, an independent union representing some 35,000 workers.

Court Upholds New York Law On Rail Crews

The U.S. Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of New York's "full crew" law requiring a fireman on every diesel locomotive in freight service.

It did so by refusing to review a ruling handed down in 1965 by a Special Court of the New York Supreme Court, which in turn was upheld last November by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Ten railroads operating in New York had challenged the law, covering only engine crews on freight trains. They claimed they did not want to dispense with the "second man" in the cab but wanted him to be a brakeman instead of a fireman.

The appeals court found that it was legislative intent that the second man should be a fireman and that a brakeman's duties frequently prevent him from being in the cab.

It agreed with the state court's decision that "the fireman is the only crew member in position to take and pass signals and act as lookout on the left-hand side of the cab."

The decision marked the second time in recent months that the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled for state-enacted "full crew" laws. It upheld the constitutionality of two Arkansas laws last November.

ST. LOUIS UNIONS helped provide food, clothing and shelter for 20 members of four Mexican-American farm families who took to the road telling the story of the strike against non-union California table grape firms. Shown with some of the 25 caravan members are, from the left, Fred Speckmann of Machinists District 9, AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Del Garst, Regional Organizer Harold Hamilton and Msgr. James Johnston, director of Father Dempsey's Charities.

AFL-CIO Joins In Mourning Eshkol

The American labor movement joined Histadrut, Israel's trade union center, in mourning the death of Premier Levi Eshkol.

Eshkol, 73, was one of his nation's pioneer settlers and headed its government since 1963.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wired the federation's "heartfelt sympathy" to Histadrut Sec. Aharon Becker. Meany said Eshkol "fought valiantly in the defense of freedom and all who believe in democracy mourn his death."

TWU Strikes Airline After 10-Month Talks

New York—The Transport Workers struck American Airlines coast to coast in a contract dispute and stationed pickets at company facilities in 22 major cities. It was the first TWU strike against the line in nearly 20 years.

The union reported that all American Airlines flights were canceled shortly after the walkout began. On strike are some 15,000 mechanics, ground and fleet service workers, communications employes and stock clerks.

Among the cities affected are New York, Washington, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Boston and Dallas.

The union had been negotiating for 10 months for better contract terms. It issued the strike call after rejecting a last-minute company offer. Both sides said they were willing to resume talks at the call of the National Mediation Board.

TWU first sought wage increases effective last May 1. When that failed, it reopened the entire contract and continued negotiating past the expiration date, Jan. 1, 1969.

American is the nation's second largest air carrier. At the strike's start, it suspended all operations and shifted passengers to flights on other airlines.

Grape Boycott Gaining International Support

Free world labor is responding to an appeal for help from U.S. farm workers by refusing to handle struck California grapes.

First to join the international boycott was the Swedish Landworkers' Union, one of the largest European importers of California table grapes for its consumer cooperatives, followed by transport unions in the other Scandinavian countries.

The Intl. Transport Workers' Federation, trade secretariat for 315 unions representing 7 million transport workers in 84 countries of the free world, called on all affiliates Feb. 11 to support the boycott of the AFL-CIO Farm Workers Organizing Committee by refusing to buy, sell or unload grapes picked by non-union employes of struck growers.

Similar action was taken a few days later by unions affiliated with the Intl. Federation of Plantation, Agricultural & Allied Workers.

ITF reported to its affiliates that the UFWOC's "Don't Buy California Grapes" campaign had been "tremendously successful" since UFWOC members struck in 1967 for recognition of their union and the right to bargain for better working conditions.

The appeal to buyers has been so successful, ITF related, that "the growers are now trying desperately to export to other countries grapes which they are unable to sell on the home market."

For that reason UFWOC has enlisted the "sympathetic support of unions and the public in Europe, Latin America and Asia," and has sent a special representative to Europe to enlist such aid, according to ITF.

Its letter warned that the grape growers may try to hold down their losses "by increasing exports to other countries or by using back-door methods to get grape consignments into countries where transport unions have pledged not to handle" such cargoes.

"This may be done by switching cargoes to ports in other countries and then attempting to transport them by road, rail or air to their original destination," it said.

Such switching was tried in Sweden when the Landworkers refused to handle grape shipments from the U.S., the ITF stressed.

The Don't Buy movement was launched in the U.S. to draw public attention to the refusal of California grape growers to recognize the field hands' union or to allow a representation election. Farm workers are not covered by the labor act as industrial workers are.

3-1-69

Worker Buying Power Shows Sharp Decline

(Continued from Page 1)

and $70.93 for the worker without dependents. These figures were down 68 and 63 cents respectively.

For the worker with no dependents, real spendable earnings were down nine cents from last January, but for the worker with three dependents they were up 78 cents from a year ago.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics said that the decline in purchasing power between December and January ran through all major industry divisions.

The January rise in consumer prices equaled that of a year ago, and was "considerably larger than the average for the month during the preceding three years," BLS said.

Chief contributors to the rise were higher than normal increases in food prices, a boost in gasoline prices and a seven-tenths of 1 percent jump in the cost of consumer services.

The increase in the services area of the index was led by a "sharp" climb in automobile insurance premiums, boosts in home maintenance costs and a rise of nine-tenths of 1 percent in medical care prices, BLS reported.

The increases in various items more than offset declines in apparel and new car prices, both of which dropped less than usual for January.

Arnold Chase, BLS assistant commissioner, attributed the price increase to burgeoning demand. "Demand is putting pressure on prices—it's as simple as that," he said.

The Wholesale Price Index—often a forerunner to further price increases—rose by eight-tenths of 1 percent in January, its largest monthly increase in almost 3 years. Preliminary data point to another rise in this index in February, BLS said.

More than 630,000 workers will receive cost-of-living pay boosts as a result of the rise in the January Consumer Price Index. For 500,000 trucking industry employes the increase will be 4 cents an hour, the maximum permitted for their second annual review of prices under a 3-year pact. Other workers will receive increases ranging from 1 to 8 cents an hour.

Robert Moran Named Wage-Hour Chief

The nomination of Robert D. Moran of Springfield, Mass., as administrator of the Labor Dept.'s Wage-Hour and Public Contracts divisions was announced by Labor Sec. George P. Shultz on behalf of the President.

Moran will direct the divisions which administer the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act and the Service Contracts Act.

Moran, 39, is an attorney and labor arbitrator. Since 1966 he has served Massachusetts as chairman of the Minimum Wage Commission, chairman of the state conciliation board and associate commissioner of labor and industries.

Convict Labor Barred From Coast Farms

San Francisco—Superior Court Judge William A. O'Brien made permanent a previous temporary order barring the use of convict labor to harvest California farm crops.

The injunction puts some teeth into a provision of the state constitution which the California AFL-CIO accused Gov. Ronald Reagan (R) of ignoring.

Judge O'Brien entered a permanent restraining order against Reagan and the state government "for all the reasons fully set forth" in the preliminary injunction won by state labor Nov. 14, 1967.

Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts of the state federation said the injunction closes "one more door" to the use of cheap, captive farm labor by California's farm corporations. Prisoners, he said, were used to harvest crops of non-union growers who "hadn't even attempted to meet the federal government's minimum wage and work criteria" on importing farm workers.

Labor Pushes Direct Vote for President

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, March 8, 1969 | No. 10

Meany Hits Profits Spiral, Warns on Danger to Jobs

Amendment Pressed For Vote Reform

The AFL-CIO urged Congress to initiate a constitutional amendment providing for election of the President by popular vote rather than seek a mere "patchwork" change in the present Electoral College system.

Federation Pres. George Meany presented labor's views to the House Judiciary Committee which is considering a smorgasbord of proposals for electoral reform. (Excerpts, Page 4.)

Meany took issue with Pres. Nixon who suggested a "proportional" system of dividing a state's electoral votes because he didn't think a direct election amendment would be ratified by the required three-fourths of the states.

On the contrary, Meany insisted, direct election is the one proposal that has broad public approval—demonstrated by big majorities in public opinion polls and in endorsements by a wide range of organizations, including the American Bar Association and Chamber of Commerce.

"None of the other proposals has any comparably broad support," Meany noted. And all suffer from a common weakness—they could result in the election of a President who received fewer votes than an opponent.

Meany told the committee that the AFL-CIO supports a constitutional amendment which would:

- Provide for the election of the President and Vice President by direct, nationwide popular vote.
- Require a runoff between the

(Continued on Page 6)

FULL EMPLOYMENT must be nation's top goal, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany tells Joint Economic Committee of Congress. With Meany at the witness table are AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nat Goldfinger, left, and Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller.

Interest Rate Rise Threat To Economy

By David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany warned Congress that the nation's economy could be thrown into a skid if the government jams too hard on the economic brakes in an effort to hold down prices.

"Full employment must be the nation's primary economic goal," Meany told the congressional Joint Economic Committee. If jobs are sacrificed to heavy-handed anti-inflation measures, the price to the nation will be "human misery for hundreds of thousands of families."

Meany stressed labor's view that the roots of the current rise in living costs are excessive interest rates and price-gouging by industry and business.

He spoke sharply of the "swollen profits," which have risen during this decade "almost 200 percent faster than the weekly take-home pay of the average non-supervisory worker." The basis for higher profits, he said, should be "an expanding sales volume" and not a big profit margin on each sales dollar.

Meany told the committee, made up equally of congressmen and senators, that the record-high interest rates on borrowing money are reflected in "the prices of almost everything we buy. . . . In addition, they are being built into the payments that consumers will make on installments and mortgage loans for years to come."

He warned that the nation's housing goals are endangered by the

(Continued on Page 8)

'Disaster' Feared:

School Aid Renewal Called Vital to Cities

Federal aid to education has saved America's school system from total collapse and must be continued and expanded, the AFL-CIO told Congress.

Walter G. Davis, the federation's education director, warned that city school systems "face disaster" if Congress abandons the federal grant program which has helped elementary and secondary schools meet the educational needs of children from the poorest families.

The landmark Elementary & Secondary Education Act was launched four years ago by the 89th Congress and Davis urged the House Education & Labor Committee to extend it another five years.

It hasn't solved all of the nation's educational problems and "no one ever supposed that it would do so," Davis noted. But, he stressed, without this massive federal aid "many of the major school systems in America would have collapsed altogether."

Joining Davis in presenting the AFL-CIO position were Legislative Rep. Kenneth Young and Jack Sessions of the federation's education staff.

They supported the five-year extension bill which has been introduced by Committee Chairman Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.).

Davis warned that "the entire structure of federal support for education" could be destroyed if the existing program were scrapped and Congress substituted "block grants" that states could spend for any education programs they wished.

He reminded the committee of the many years that federal aid legislation was blocked in Congress

(Continued on Page 7)

New Mexico House Kills R-T-W Bill

Santa Fe—A backdoor attempt to put over a "right-to-work" law in New Mexico by attaching it to a civil rights bill was soundly beaten in the state House of Representatives.

Earlier, by an identical 41-29 vote, the House rejected a move to bring the union shop ban before the electorate in either a general or special election as a constitutional amendment.

Although "right-to-work" may still come up in the Senate, the twin House actions seemed to

(Continued on Page 3)

Bogus Union Reveals Grape Growers' Role

Two top officers of an organization set up to undermine the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee have admitted that their outfit was formed and financed by grape growers who have opposed union rights for their workers.

Facts on the founding and activities of the Agriculture Workers Freedom to Work Association came to light in a report filed with the Labor Dept. to comply with reporting requirements of the Landrum-Griffin Act.

The document — filed by AWFWA Pres. Gilbert Rubio and Sec.-Treas. Shirley Fetalvero—revealed that the organization was conceived at meeting attended by Rubio, Jose Mendoza and a group of about ten grape growers.

Mendoza, general secretary of AWFWA, recently made a national tour to denounce UFWOC and its president, Cesar Chavez—a tour he said was financed by the National Right to Work Committee.

(Continued on Page 6)

Court Reaffirms Union Self-Government Rights

Philadelphia—A stern warning against courts invading the area of union self-government to set themselves up as types of "super internationals" was issued by the 3rd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here.

Such action, the appeals court emphasized in reversing the Philadelphia District Court, threatens the whole concept of "union self-determination" which Congress recognized in establishing labor policy.

A three-judge appeals panel upheld the State, County & Municipal Employes' expulsion from membership of Frederick E. Lewis, a former business manager and president of Local 403, representing Philadelphia street employes.

The union acted in June 1967, under its disciplinary machinery, after the city charged Lewis with violating the local's no-strike contract by causing two work stoppages

(Continued on Page 2)

Craft Tutoring Programs Set In Three Cities

Unemployed youths from minority groups—110 in all—will be trained for skilled crafts in Fort Worth, Omaha and Denver under Apprenticeship Outreach contracts announced by the Labor Dept.

A contract for one year provides $50,258 in federal funds to the Fort Worth Building & Construction Trades Council to prepare 50 youths in that city to take apprenticeship entrance tests.

The one-year "outreach" contract in Omaha, providing $52,036 in federal assistance, is with the Omaha Urban League to train 30 youths for the same purpose.

In Denver, the Urban League will prepare 30 youths for apprenticeship examinations under a one-year contract approved for $50,305.

The Denver grant represents an extension of a previous outreach contract through which the Urban League successfully placed 55 Negro youths in apprentice training, while another 25 have passed training and await openings.

All of the contracts call for 10 weeks of training, using the "tutor and cram" techniques developed in the outreach program, the Labor Dept. said.

It reported that the contracts bring to 53 the number of major industrial cities currently participating in the program, with a total placement goal of 3,100.

The department said that the Fort Worth project is the 14th being sponsored by an AFL-CIO Building Trades Council. It noted, too, that the Omaha and Denver projects are being backed by local building trades unions.

Organized labor is involved in all 53 current programs, providing the tutoring, coaching and contact services with various union locals.

Union Backs Bill to Protect Fur Animals

A union representing fur workers joined with conservation groups in support of legislation to protect species of animals threatened with extinction.

The Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen testified before a House subcommittee on a bill to prevent rare animals from being slaughtered for fur or skin and to ban importation of prohibited products. The designation of species threatened with extinction would be made by the Secretary of the Interior.

At the same time, the union urged a House Merchant Marine & Fisheries subcommittee to amend the bill to instruct the government to seek an international treaty dealing with threatened wildlife.

"Obviously," the union said, "the goal of conserving species will not be met if the United States bans the importation, but others do not. Also, we greatly fear that unless other nations provide a similar ban, U.S. fur and leather jobs may be exported."

The Meat Cutters took the initiative in working with conservation groups on a legislative approach which would protect threatened wildlife without the risk of job losses seen in legislation introduced, but not acted on, in the last Congress.

Rep. John D. Dingell (D-Mich.) is chairman of the subcommittee considering the bill, which was introduced by Rep. Edward A. Garmatz (D-Md.), chairman of the full committee. The legislation was endorsed by both the Johnson and Nixon Administrations.

ORGANIZING EFFORTS of Mrs. Lillian Roberts, organizing director of State, County & Municipal Employes District 50, are recognized with the presentation of the A. Philip Randolph Award at a reception in New York. Mrs. Roberts, who was sentenced to 30 days in jail and fined for her part in the SCME strike against New York state mental hospitals, was cited for her "perseverance and sacrifice in organizing the unorganized and thereby helping the working poor lift themselves out of the cycle of poverty. . . ." From left are AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Donald Slaiman, Mrs. Roberts, Actors' Equity Pres. Frederick O'Neal and Bayard Rustin, executive director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute which sponsored the reception with the National Council of Negro Women.

Coleman Strike Rings Of Early Anti-Unionism

Somerset, Pa.—It seems like the "bad old days" to old-timers in this area sandwiched between the Pennsylvania Turnpike and the coal belt. The town is full of Pinkerton guards and state police escorting strikebreakers and strawbosses through a picket line to help a rich absentee tycoon bust a union.

The union is newly-chartered Steelworkers Local 7494, and the tycoon is Sheldon Coleman of Wichita, Kan., president of the Coleman Co., Inc., makers of stoves, lanterns and other items of camping equipment.

Coleman campaigned vigorously against unionization of his employes. He's against unions and in favor of far-right extremist groups like the John Birch Society, the strikers say. Nearly 300 strong, they've been on the picket line four weeks while 50 imported strikebreakers and 100 supervisors are brought from their motels to the Coleman plant every day in chartered buses.

Only six members of the town's newest union have yielded to what the strikers call management's "massive intimidation." The majority walk and wait—but Coleman isn't ready to negotiate yet.

The use of Pinkerton "security" guards, many of them patrolling areas not owned by Coleman, doesn't sit well with town regulars. The Pinkertons carry sidearms and use two-way radios to communicate with guards posted atop motels near the plant while others photograph pickets braving the icy wind off the Allegheny Mountains.

Company spokesmen emphasized a "law and order" line to convince local authorities they should call in the state police, according to the union. USWA members protested to Gov. Raymond P. Shafer but patrol cars and troopers remained.

John Tabor, state secretary of labor and industry, came to Somerset to offer his services but Coleman still refused to negotiate.

USWA Rep. Andrew Koban reported that contract talks last year proved futile and charged that Coleman is determined to throttle any meaningful union representation for its Somerset employes. He said the firm succeeded in decertifying a union at its Culver City, Utah, plant after importing nonunion workers and negotiated at its Toronto, Ont., facility only after a bitter nine-month strike by steelworkers.

One union has bargaining relations at the Wichita headquarters plant—Mine Workers District 50, unaffiliated.

The Washington, D.C., Post identified Coleman as one of the strongest financial backers of the John Birch Society in the Midwest. Two weeks before the strike began he announced that company sales jumped by $10 million to $79 million in 1968.

Automobile Insurance Cancellations Scored

Nashville—Tennessee AFL-CIO Pres. Matthew Lynch told the Govtrnor's Advisory Committee on Automobile Insurance that policyholders are subject to arbitrary cancellations if their cars are damaged—even if they are clearly not at fault.

Calling for state action to curb abuses, Lynch cited one case where a policy was cancelled because a car properly parked and locked in its owner's driveway was hit by another vehicle.

Invasion Admonished:

Governing Rights Of Unions Upheld

(Continued from Page 1)

at the city's street department yard, and further threatening to "shut down" the department.

The union pointed out that Lewis violated the contract which made SCME vulnerable to damage suits from the city and threatened the loss of jobs for members of the local.

After participating in the union's hearing that led to his expulsion, Lewis challenged the decision in court, claiming his rights were violated under the Landrum-Griffin Act.

In April 1968, the District Court ruled in his favor, holding that the expulsion was not justified because there wasn't sufficient evidence against him. It also exonerated him of causing the work stoppages.

In its appeal, the union said that Lewis did not specify the manner in which his rights were violated, as the law requires, and the court "totally usurped" the international's trial function under its constitution.

"The courts have consistently held that the requirement of a fair hearing" under the law's section protecting rights "does not authorize" the court to weigh the evidence at a union trial or judge its merits, a union brief said.

The brief was submitted for the SCME by Attorneys Henry Kaiser and Ronald Rosenberg of the law firm Van Arkel & Kaiser, and Richard Kirschner, of the Wilderman, Markowitz & Kirschner firm.

It pointed out that Lewis received 15 days advance notice of the union's trial, the hearing ran for 16 hours, Lewis "extensively" cross examined all parties who testified against him and was given the right to testify and present witnesses.

The finding that Lewis had not caused the walkout "ran contrary to undisputed and irrefutable facts," the union declared. It noted that Lewis' lawyer hadn't even argued that point before the lower court.

The appeals court panel agreed that there was "sufficient evidence" for the union's finding that Lewis played a "significant" role in calling and directing work stoppages on May 4 and May 18, 1967.

Although the panel decided the evidence before the union's trial was sufficient to expel Lewis, the decision voiced greater concern over the lower court substituting "its own judgment for that of the union's tribunal."

Once the court determines that the findings were "not without any foundation of evidence," that the proof related to the charges and due process was observed, "the action of the union tribunal must be upheld," it added.

"The court has no authority to enter into any evidence-weighing process and it may not substitute its judgment for that of the union tribunal," the ruling emphasized.

Such a limitation, it concluded, is vital "if we are to prevent the federal courts from becoming a super-international trial board appeals tribunal" in direct conflict to "the concept of union determination as reflected in the spirit of our national labor policy."

Work Ailments Brought Under Wyoming Law

Cheyenne—State AFL-CIO leaders hailed passage of two bills to strengthen Wyoming's workmen's compensation law during the recent 40-day session of the state legislature.

One measure empowers the courts to extend benefits for total disability beyond the duration prescribed in the law. Another makes occupational diseases, including employment-related heart disease, compensable under the law. Wyoming was the only state without occupational disease coverage.

The legislature also passed a labor-backed state health and safety law, which sets up a seven-man committee to promulgate standards, inspection procedures and penalties for violators.

John D. Holaday, Wyoming AFL-CIO executive secretary, said the three proposals were passed with support from Gov. Stanley K. Hathaway (R) and Republican and Democratic legislators.

There were a number of anti-union bills introduced, including one that would have imposed curbs on labor's political activities, but none of these were enacted, Holaday added.

Repeal of Wyoming's "right-to-work" law was killed in the Senate by a 15-15 tie vote.

NEW LOCAL of Steelworkers maintains winter picket line at Somerset, Pa., plant of the Coleman Co., makers of stoves, lanterns and other camping equipment. Employes voted for the union last November and struck when contract talks were unproductive. USWA Local 7494 says company Pres. Sheldon Coleman, long identified with John Birch society causes, brought in 50 strikebreakers and 100 supervisors from other plants, now balks at negotiating.

Civil Rights Rider:

New Mexico Rejects Twin R-T-W Moves

(Continued from Page 1)

spell doom for it in this session of the legislature.

A "right-to-work" proposal to outlaw union shop agreements in the state previously appeared on the state ballot as a constitutional amendment in 1948 and was defeated by a substantial margin.

The measure has been pushed unsuccessfully in the legislature in nine of the last 10 sessions by New Mexicans for Right to Work with assistance from the National Right to Work Committee and the Farm Bureau.

The proposed constitutional amendment on "right-to-work" came to the House floor this year with a 7-3 "do not pass" recommendation from the Labor Committee. The committee acted after holding a three-hour hearing attended by more than 50 persons.

Proponents at the hearing were led by Pres. W. A. Langanegger of the New Mexico Farm Bureau and representatives of oil drilling companies. Langanegger said he feared unions in agriculture. The oil drillers attacked organizing efforts of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

A key opponent, Brother Raymond Ogden, political science professor at St. John's College here, said, "I think it is a proposal to keep the lousy low wages we have in this state."

Roland Kool, an Albuquerque attorney, said the law's chief aim "is to weaken organized labor."

When the measure came to the floor, debate followed similar lines. Proponents claimed it would prevent unions from getting too strong and bring industry to the state. Opponents said it was plainly designed to hold down wages and weaken union organizing drives.

Meanwhile, just before the House turned down the constitutional amendment, its Appropriations & Finance Committee reported out a human rights bill with a recommendation for passage. By a 9-6 vote the committee adopted an amendment to make the union shop illegal under the law.

When the legislation reached the floor, the amendment was the immediate center of attack in debate, and it was stripped from the rights bill before the House went on to approve the balance of the measure.

The bill as it went to the Senate prohibits discrimination in employment because of sex, race, religion, color or national origin. It also bars discrimination in housing and public accommodations. A five-member commission would administer it.

The New Mexico legislature is under Democratic control and most of the votes that defeated "right-to-work" in both instances came from Democrats.

In Pennsylvania, a "right-to-work" bill has been introduced but has not moved. In Idaho and California open shop forces have organized drives, but no bills have been introduced.

In Kansas, "right-to-work" was adopted by a constitutional amendment in 1958 but the state has never passed necessary enabling legislation. This year labor is fighting against an enabling bill in the legislature.

TRANSPORT WORKERS on strike against American Airlines in 52 cities want a living wage, these demonstrators tell the public in a turnout at Washington National Airport. Leading the pickets are, from the right, TWU Pres. Matthew Guinan, Pres. Thomas Corbin of Washington Local 510 and TWU Executive Vice Pres. James F. Horst. The union scheduled similar demonstrations at all American locations in support of 15,000 ground crew members, out since Feb. 27.

Federal Employe Unions Hit Release of Pay Plan

AFL-CIO unions representing more than 1 million federal workers joined in a sharp protest against "premature" announcement by the government of proposed salary adjustments to take effect July 1.

The proposal would give the biggest percentage raises to persons in the top government grades and no increase at all to those in the lowest pay grade.

The AFL-CIO Government Employes Council, representing 35 unions with members working for the federal government, said the effect of the announcement has been to undercut a requirement in the salary comparability law that unions be consulted in the preparation of pay recommendations.

The new pay scales, supposedly based on comparability with similar jobs in private industry, were drawn up by the Civil Service Commission and the Budget Bureau for submission to the President.

Technically, the pay tables released to the press by the two agencies are still tentative. The unions were given copies of the proposed salaries at the same time as the newspapers and will have an opportunity to argue for improvements.

But the Government Employes Council charged in a statement that the publication "seriously hampers" the chances that the agencies will agree to significant changes. And the GEC says there are a lot of improvements needed.

Earlier, a joint statement by the American Federation of Government Employes, Letter Carriers and Postal Clerks had termed the publication of the tentative pay proposals "a gesture of bad faith."

The three unions charged that the action "reflects the long-outdated management concept that unions are mere window-dressing."

Under a 1967 law, this year's round of pay increases doesn't require congressional action. They can be put into effect automatically by the President. However Congress can pass legislation changing the pay schedules or adding additional increases.

Booklet Hails Missile Sites Labor Record

Labor-management cooperation in minimizing work stoppages at missile and space installations is documented in a new booklet, "The Missile Sites Labor Commission," published by the government.

The analysis of the commission's work, from its creation in 1961 by a presidential executive order through 1967, was written by Dr. Wayne E. Howard, assistant professor, Wharton School of Finance, University of Pennsylvania.

In one section, Howard points out that the program, based on a no-strike, no-lockout pledge by unions and managements, was "extremely effective" in preventing stoppages.

A limited number of the 88-page booklets are available at the offices of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, Room 1212, Dept. of Labor Building, Washington, D.C.

AFGE Charges Southern Jobs Shortchanged

New Orleans — The American Federation of Government Employes charged that the federal government is shortchanging many of its employes in the South.

AFGE Pres. John F. Griner said this is being done by assigning southern workers to lower salary grades than employes doing the same work in other areas of the country.

He charged that this is direct defiance of civil service classification rules which are supposed to ensure "equal pay for equal work."

Griner told a news conference that a number of federal agencies are apparently following "the law of supply and demand" rather than the civil service law.

"In the large metropolitan areas, where there is competition for the skills of the employes, the government is willing to pay the price," Griner said. But when it can get people to work for less, as in parts of the South, he added, it hires them at lower civil service grades than their jobs should carry.

The union's executive council, meeting here, protested the practice.

Does 1 Vote Count? Better Believe It

Orangeburg, S.C.—The importance of "one little vote" was underscored as the Communications Workers won a union representation election at the Smith-Corona Marchant plant here. The final tally: CWA 531, no union 530.

The narrow victory came after the National Labor Relations Board ruled that four challenged votes should be counted.

Of the challenged votes, three went to no union, but the fourth, for CWA, was enough for the union—just enough.

In the campaign that preceded the election, CWA leaders and local union officers fought against a barrage of company-inspired anti-union propaganda directed at employes.

Transport Union Rallies Airline Strike Support

The Transport Workers staged demonstrations in 52 cities coast to coast to rally public support behind 15,000 members on strike since Feb. 27 at American Airlines.

"Our members had no alternative except to strike," TWU Pres. Matthew Guinan said after leading more than 300 demonstrators at Washington National Airport. "Ten months of talks got them nowhere."

Guinan was accompanied by union Executive Vice Pres. James F. Horst and other officers, in Washington for an effort by the National Mediation Board to get contract talks started again.

Mediators headed by NMB member Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., have been meeting separately with company and union negotiators. No joint meetings have been held since the strike started.

The airline halted all flights when the walkout was called by TWU mechanics, inspectors, fleet and ground service crews and communications employes. Members of other aviation unions respected TWU picket lines at all AA locations, including terminals, hangars and ticket offices in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Boston, Dallas and other cities.

The first TWU strike against American since 1950 was voted by employes who rejected management offers on wages, pensions and insurance plans as below comparable conditions in the air transport industry.

Negotiations on new contract terms began last April. Contracts expired May 1 as to wages and Jan. 1 on all other issues, but the union continued talks under a contract extension in the hope of reaching a settlement without a strike.

After all the processes of the Railway Labor Act had expired, including a 30-day cooling-off period, members stopped work everywhere on the system and the line grounded all flights. Passengers were transferred to other airlines.

American is one of the airlines which has a mutual-aid agreement with other major carriers under which increased income is shared with struck lines. Under that agreement, American paid out $29 million in 1966 when four lines were struck by the Machinists. This time American will share in the increased income of other lines, a company spokesman said.

The struck airline had been carrying about 45,000 passengers a day on flights between cities in the United States, Canada and Mexico.

Among those not on strike but affected by the shutdown are 3,700 American Airlines stewardesses, 3,457 pilots and 591 flight engineers.

Rep. Morton Picked As GOP Chairman

A Maryland congressman, Rogers C. B. Morton, will replace Ray C. Bliss as the Republican Party's national chairman.

Bliss, highly regarded as a party organizer, will resign in mid-April.

Copper Unions Weigh Appeal In NLRB Case

Unions in the copper industry are expected to appeal a finding by a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner that they tried to force Kennecott Copper Co. to bargain with them on a nationwide basis for 16,000 members.

A spokesman for 10 unions which struck the industry for eight months in 1967 and 1968 said they are asking an additional 30 days to decide whether to file exceptions to Examiner David Karasick's recommendations to the board.

Karasick ruled that the unions acted unlawfully by insisting and striking for "integrated and indivisible demands." These, he said, included common expiration dates for all contracts, economic terms to be applied equally on a company-wide basis with some minor allowances for local conditions, and a requirement that agreements be reached in all units before any operations would resume.

The law forbids any action aimed at enlarging a union bargaining unit unless the parties agree, the examiner held.

The Kennecott dispute was part of the strike by nearly 60,000 members of 21 unions against 11 copper firms which started July 15, 1967, after months of unproductive bargaining. Pres. Johnson assigned a special panel to mediate in the eighth month of the walkout, but agreement was not reached at all locations until July 1968.

Voting for President

PERHAPS the most important objection to the present electoral college system arises from the provisions which call for election by the House when none of the candidates for President has an electoral vote majority. While it is true that this has actually happened only twice in our history, the possibility has been an ever-present threat to stable transfers of power from one administration to another, as in the Hayes-Tilden contest in 1876.

In this connection, it should not be forgotten that it was the settlement of that contest, achieved through a compromise designed to avoid having the choice between those two contestants go to the House of Representatives when neither appeared to have an electoral vote majority, that paved the way for the deprivation and postponement of equal voting and civil rights for Negroes and other minorities for a period of nearly 90 years.

Indeed, the spectre of that dark history was ever-present even in our latest Presidential election in 1968, when George Wallace of Alabama dreamed of the possibilities of another deal as in 1876.

There are arguments, of course, in support of the present Electoral College system, not the least of which is that it has survived virtually unchanged since the Constitution was written in 1787. By and large, however, the arguments in behalf of this system are negative in character and the fact remains that the hazards which it presents continue to hang like a cloud over every presidential election.

WE BELIEVE that any amendment which is adopted by Congress should provide for election of the President and Vice President by direct nationwide popular vote. It would be desirable, we think, to provide that a candidate must obtain at least 40 percent of the popular vote in order to be elected, and that there should be a national run-off popular vote between the two top candidates in the event no candidate receives at least 40 precent of the popular vote. We also approve of provisions which would require the President and Vice President to be voted for jointly.

However, we respectfully suggest that the amendment does not go far enough in providing for federal control of eligibility to vote for President and as to the places and manner of holding presidential elections and the inclusion of candidates' names on ballots.

We think the constitutional amendment should itself provide for universal suffrage in presidential elections, that is that all persons 18 or over shall be qualified to vote in presidential elections. Further, we think that the amendment should provide that the places and manner of holding presidential elections and the inclusions of names of the candidates on ballots shall be prescribed by the Congress.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE system was from the outset a compromise that proved from the first presidential election on to be wholly unworkable and was the subject of one of the earliest amendments (Amendment No. XII) to the Constitution. Conceivably the Electoral College system seemed to the drafters of the Constitution to make sense when the country was young and because of difficulties of transportation and communications.

In practical fact, the federal principle today finds its strongest institutions, not in the Electoral College, but in the state governments, the Senate of the United States and, above all, the substantive provisions of the Constitution itself. We are convinced that direct election of the President and Vice President will do no violence to the federal principle but will strengthen and make far more workable our constitutional system of government.

—Excerpted from testimony by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to the House Judiciary Committee, Mar. 6, 1969.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the
American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W.
Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, March 8, 1969 No. 10

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Weak Link

A Word Edgewise:

Nixon Hasn't Fumbled Yet— But Is He Carrying the Ball?

By John P. Roche

The AFL-CIO News will carry weekly in this space a column by John P. Roche, noted political scientist and historian who occupies the Morris Hilquit chair of politics and history at Brandeis University.

Roche served as special consultant to former Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson for two years after an earlier stint as national chairman of Americans for Democratic Action. He is the author of more than a dozen books on political thought, government and history and has served as a consultant to the State Dept. and the Civil Rights Commission.

His column "A Word Edgewise" will provide a running commentary on current events and politics.

PRES. NIXON correctly interpreted the election returns as indicating the 57 percent of the American electorate wants less government, wants a letup in the crisis atmosphere that has pervaded Washington since the election of John F. Kennedy. In addition, his political sense tells him that one way to get in trouble is to start making decisions. And now here he is with Gallup's reporting that two-thirds of the people think he is doing a good job. The press keeps saying that he hasn't yet "fumbled the ball." The liberals' gurus are immensely impressed because he hasn't set up any concentration camps. In short, life is wonderful.

I have been patient with the new President, but I believe the time has come to blow the whistle. It is absolutely true that Nixon has not yet fumbled the ball. Indeed, he has not yet called a play. Politics, both domestic and foreign, has been notable for a permanent floating huddle. Anyone who has played football knows that freezing the ball is a useful strategy to stay ahead when the clock is running out. But you really can't substitute a huddle for a kickoff.

President Johnson may have had a credibility gap, but it was based on alleged conflicts between his statements and his actions. Mr. Nixon certainly has avoided this pitfall, but the consequence is that American policy is suffering from a therapy gap. Every time a problem comes up, it is rushed into a huddle with vague assurances that our best minds are working on it.

For example, look at the recent European tour. Difficulties in NATO did not suddenly begin on Jan. 20. For more than a decade NATO has been trying to figure out what it was going to be when it grew up, and one of the most thoughtful American commentators on the subject was Prof. Henry Kissinger, now of Mr. Nixon's staff. To be more specific, NATO could be either a trip-wire or a conventional military force.

In the first case, NATO strategy would be wholly based on nuclear deterrents: if the Warsaw powers invaded Western Europe, the big bombs would go off. For trip-wire purposes, a battalion would serve as well as a division.

However, if we are to avoid total reliance on nuclear weapons, NATO must be given conventional military assets which will at least serve to create "breathing space" in case of invasion; forces that can hold off the enemy until support arrives. For some time now NATO has been far too weak to handle this task, and the brilliantly mounted Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia has underlined the conventional capabilities of our opponents.

IT WAS NICE of Pres. Nixon to go around Europe listening, but all the sympathetic understanding in the world will not alter the options. The notion that Prime Minister Harold Wilson is going to reinforce the British Rhine army because he likes Nixon, or that a generous tribute to de Gaulle will bring France back into NATO, is pure fantasy. (De Gaulle did agree to come to the United States for another discussion.)

What is essential is an American NATO policy which the President not only expresses but implements. In my judgment, the United States has been playing a middle hand in a high-low game. Either we should opt for Nikes and cut back conventional force levels or tell our allies to pull up their socks and contribute adequately to NATO's conventional capacity.

When you play a middle hand in high-low, you lose both ways. I strongly oppose trip-wire strategy, but it is preferable to the present shambles in which nobody knows precisely what we would do if, say, Berlin were strangled. The most dangerous development in a situation like this is ambiguity, which erodes the credibility of our commitment. And ambiguity is invariably a product of commissions, committees, task-forces, and councils. It was Gen. Grant, I think, who once observed caustically that no council of generals ever recommended a battle.

In other words, no matter how many therapeutic sessions are devoted to them, Pres. Nixon's NATO options are not going to change. The time has come when he must start being Chief Executive, not chief psychiatrist, and, at the risk of fumbling the ball, start calling the plays.

No One-Shot Solution:

Multi-Program Thrust Held Best Antidote for Poverty Crisis

The following is excerpted from a statement, "Toward Eliminating Poverty," adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council on Feb. 21, 1969.

TODAY, DESPITE EIGHT YEARS of unparalleled national prosperity, 22 million individuals remain in the ruts of poverty. And at least 10 million others marginally exist near poverty's income rim of $3,500 a year for a family of four.

In the face of poverty's persistence, some single solutions have been offered as cures, such as the guaranteed annual income, the negative income tax and the family allowance plan.

The AFL-CIO is convinced no one program can eliminate poverty. There are no simple solutions. Indeed, a profile of poverty in America shows it has many and diverse origins and treatment of the malady requires not a nostrum, but specific remedies for specific causes.

It is especially noteworthy that the poor are not work-shy idlers. Indeed, three out of five poor people are in families headed by an employed person and if the involuntarily unemployed are added, the figure is probably as high as two-thirds.

Basic to solving the poverty problem is a national commitment to a full employment policy, with a firm undertaking to reduce unemployment to no more than 2 to 2.5 percent of the labor force. A large scale public service employment program will be needed, which will provide employment for those who can work but aren't working because of lack of education, training, job information, or other similar reasons.

To prepare workers for available and socially desirable jobs, America needs a national, coordinated manpower program. The core of such a program must be job training and related services, designed to meet the specific needs of the "hard core" unemployed. This program must be designed to meet the actual needs of the present job market and it must consider the future job market. Training for non-existent jobs and "dead end" jobs offers no permanent solution to unemployment or poverty and adds nothing to the dignity of the worker.

For those who are working but do not receive incomes above the poverty line, we recommend a statutory minimum wage of $2 an hour and that minimum wage coverage be extended to millions of workers presently not covered.

To eliminate poverty among the elderly, we recommend a minimum monthly social security benefit of $100 and a 50 percent increase in all benefits paid. These increased benefits would remove an estimated 4.5 million Americans from the rolls of poverty.

About 60 percent of non-working, head-of-household males, who are poverty stricken, are either chronically ill or suffer from physical disability. One way to raise these men and members of their families above the poverty line, is to increase payments and extend coverage under the disability insurance phase of the Social Security program.

Crevice-like poverty also stems from frictional unemployment. To cure this cause, we recommend broader coverage of the unemployment insurance system, at higher benefit levels and for an extended duration. We also urge elimination of harsh and unjust disqualification provisions.

We are convinced the best way to improve the workmen's compensation and the unemployment insurance system is to federalize them, or at the very least, establish adequate minimum federal standards for both programs.

BUT WORK and work-related social insurance would not help another segment of the poor, who cannot work or cannot be expected to work. Primarily, these are mothers and children in fatherless homes. To help them, the existing welfare program should be overhauled and strengthened. Welfare payments in most states are at sub-poverty levels and should be made adequate enough to provide decent living standards for those who must depend on them.

To assure uniform treatment of recipients and adequate financing throughout the country, the welfare program should be administered and entirely or largely financed on a national basis.

We believe the above several and specific programs obviate the need for the single-shot solutions currently being discussed in some circles. The advertised attraction of the negative income tax of other general guaranteed income scheme is usually its seemingly mechanical and simple approach that is supposed to do away with all or most of the social insurance, minimum wage and other existing programs. At almost any conceivable level of guaranteed income, in the period immediately ahead, there would still be the need for individual programs, such as welfare assistance.

While a program of family allowances is another plan being discussed, this plan cannot be regarded as a panacea for poverty. In those industrial countries where the family allowance is used, the payments provide only a modest supplement to other forms of income. For larger than average families, however, the possibility that family allowances might be one effective way to meet the special needs faced by them should be expected.

We believe there is a discernible danger in the arguments of some of the proponents of these simplistic solutions and in simultaneous attacks on the social security, minimum wage, welfare and other social programs. It is a reactionary attack by opponents of all social welfare programs. These new proposals must not be permitted to serve as vehicles to depress wages and to abrogate the federal government's responsibilities in eradicating poverty.

Follows Federationist Tradition:

Widely-Circulated Labor Press Saluted for Its Achievements

AFL-CIO PRES. GEORGE MEANY saluted the nation's labor press on the network radio program, Labor News Conference.

Meany singled out the AFL-CIO's official magazine, the American Federationist, for special tribute, as it rounds out its 75th year. He noted that through the "encouragement" of the American Federationist, more than 500 union newspapers and magazines now reach union members and other citizens in all parts of the country.

The role of the labor press in the dissemination of news about events and policies affecting the trade union movement is as essential today as it was when the American Federation of Labor established the American Federationist in 1894, Meany said.

"The regular daily press is not any more friendly (to organized labor) than it was back in those days," he said. But, he added, "I don't buy" the idea that "the daily press is the voice of our enemies . . . I don't look upon the people that we disagree with as our enemies." He said that while "a great many corporations" once saw unions as "absolutely detrimental to their interests," that is not the "prevailing feeling today."

"THE BASIC DISAGREEMENT is not over the system, not over the type of society that we have," but rather, "how we share the fruits of our productive machinery in this country," he declared.

Also appearing on the program was Saul Miller, executive editor of the American Federationist. Miller pointed out that "from the very beginning, the Federationist has drawn on the best writing abilities and the best thinkers in the country" for its in-depth analysis of issues. The magazine will continue this "rich tradition" of the "perceptive approach that will bring news events into focus," he said.

Miller, who is also director of the AFL-CIO's Dept. of Publications, said the modern, professional labor press has a "direct effect, not only on members of the trade union movement, but on the general public as well." It is "often one of the few lonely voices taking up the many great problems and the many great causes in this country," he noted.

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S decision to continue the war on poverty has been highlighted by a special report just issued by the Dept. of Labor, analyzing the job situation and economic status of six of the nation's largest cities where slum conditions exist. The cities studied were Atlanta, Chicago, Detroit, Houston, Los Angeles and New York City.

The report shows that while the war on poverty has had its victories, there are still great areas where much remains to be done. It found that:

1. Workers living in slum areas have an unemployment rate 2.5 times higher than the national average.

2. Unemployment among teenagers is especially severe: 30 percent of slum youth are unemployed.

3. Weekly earnings under $65 were reported by one out of six full-time workers.

About 825,000 men and women 16 years and over lived in the areas survived. Of these, 68 percent were Negro and the remainder about equally divided between Spanish-American and other white persons.

The study sought to get a clear picture of job conditions in slum areas, barriers to employment, and the attitudes of slum area residents. First results show certain common patterns as follows:

Educational Attainments: Workers in slum areas generally averaged about 10.7 years of schooling compared with 12.3 for all of the nation's workers and 11.1 years for Negro workers. Only 37 percent had completed high school compared with 60 percent for the nation in general.

Labor Force Participation: About 59 percent of workers in the slum areas were in the labor force—about the same as for the nation in general—but the proportion of adult women in the labor force was somewhat higher than that for the nation and the proportion of men somewhat lower.

Unemployment: The jobless rate in the slum areas was 9.5 percent compared with 3.6 percent for the nation as a whole. The jobless rate for Negroes was 10.4 percent compared with a 6.8 percent rate for all Negroes. White workers in the slums had a jobless rate of 7.2 percent compared with 3.2 percent for white workers in general.

Work Experience: Nearly 110,000 persons in the slum areas surveyed were jobless at some time during the year before. This was one out of every six compared with one out of every eight in the nation as a whole in 1967. Negro workers were more likely than white workers to be jobless at some period.

Earnings: About one out of six full-time workers had earnings of $65 or less, with women four times more likely to be among the low earners. On the other hand, about one out of seven full-time workers earned $150 or more a week, indicating inability to find housing outside of the slum area. Median earnings for all workers were $85 a week in the third quarter of 1968.

Family Income: A disproportionate number of slum area residents are members of family groups with very low yearly incomes, including welfare payments. About 20 percent with 4 persons in the family received less than $3,500 annually—the "poverty line." Median income for all families in the surveyed areas was $5,400, compared with $8,000 for all American families, and $5,100 for all Negro families.

It may well be that some of the worst conditions in American slums have been relieved somewhat by the "War on Poverty" and programs that have brought some measure of hope to thousands of men and women who have been deprived of the chance to move on as the nation has moved on.

But, the Labor Dept. study makes it bitterly clear that the "War on Poverty" is far from over; that thousands of fellow citizens in our great cities are still outside the main stream of American life; that the job of helping them to climb to a decent economic status is far from over.

"THE PERCEPTIVE APPROACH" that gives labor news "focus"—a 75-year tradition of the AFL-CIO's official magazine, the American Federationist—has served the nation and the labor movement well, AFL-CIO Dir. of Publications Saul Miller, right told Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc., on Labor News Conference. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, editor of the magazine, was also on the program, broadcast Tuesdays on Mutual Radio.

ARMY OFFICERS of 16 Allied countries are briefed on the operation of an automated engine room carried on modern American merchant ships during a tour of the Maritime Union's Upgrading School in New York. The tour is part of the advanced engineering course for allied officers offered by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers at Fort Belvoir, Va.

Bogus Union Discloses Grape Growers' Role

(Continued from Page 1)

Rubio and Miss Fetalvero said that among those attending AWFWA's founding meeting in a Bakersfield, Calif., restaurant last May were John Giumarra, Sr., and John Giumarra, Jr., treasurer and general counsel respectively of Giumarra Vineyards, which has led grower opposition to farm workers' unionization.

Others attending the meeting, according to the statement, included Jack Pandol, another grower, and representatives of the Di Giorgio Corp., which had previously signed a contract with UFWOC.

The document made it clear that AWFWA was founded by growers, not workers, to counteract efforts to organize farm workers and the UFWOC boycott of grape growers who refused to hold union representation elections.

"We were to tell workers not to be afraid of Chavez, to be united, and we would support and protect workers and oppose efforts to organize and boycott," Rubio and Miss Fetalvero said.

The document brought out that Rubio and Mendoza were offered $120 a week. That money, along with other sums, it added, was paid to AWFWA through another organization called Mexican-American Democrats for Republican Action (MADRA).

The AWFWA officers listed dozens of checks ranging up to $500 which were allegedly used by AWFWA after they came through MADRA.

Records of AWFWA's activities, according to the statement, were kept by Donald Gazzaniga, head of Public Research Institute, part of a firm known as California Editors Publishing Co.

Authored R-T-W Tract

Gazzaniga has published a booklet, "California's Number One Industry Under Attack," a denunciation of unionizing of grape workers. It has been distributed by the National Right to Work Committee.

Gazzaniga gave money to Rubio and Mendoza "under the cover that they were researchers" for the publication, Rubio said.

He charged that Mendoza is now trying to dissolve AWFWA, presumably because it is no longer useful.

John Giumarra, Jr., denied the charges "that we gave money to Mendoza" and said "we will fight them in court."

He contended that Rubio had once supported UFWOC, then joined AWFWA to fight the union, "and now he seems to have switched again."

U.S. Aid Opens College Doors To Poor Youths

Increased availability of federal financial aid is helping students of poor families get a better chance at college education.

The U.S. Office of Education estimates that 11 percent of the full-time freshmen students enrolled last fall came from the lowest quarter of the American family income structure. This compares with 7.5 percent from the same income group in 1966.

Topped Estimates

Enrollments of first-time students on college campuses last fall were about 230,000 more than educators anticipated on the basis of the 1956-66 trend. About 65,000 of these freshmen were from families with annual incomes of $5,000 or less. Another 217,000 came from families with incomes of $11,600 or less.

The Office of Education study shows that students from the lowest quarter of family income were running 70 percent above the enrollment trend last fall.

All types of higher education institutions shared the increase, but public two-year colleges and technical institutes enrolled more than twice the number of students expected from this group.

During the 1966-67 academic year, about 900,000 students received some kind of financial aid from the Office of Education because of their low or moderate family income status.

But in the 1968-69 academic year, more than 1.5 million students are expected to benefit from these federal programs, the Office of Education estimates.

NLRB Ruling Hits Actions of Thomson Daily

The National Labor Relations Board has faulted a U.S. newspaper owned by Lord Thomson, British and Canadian press tycoon, for following an illegal labor relations policy.

The NLRB ruled that the Dothan, Ala., Eagle, of Thomson Newspapers, failed to pay regular six-month pay increases to apprentices in its pressroom and stereotype room "for the purpose of undermining the union and discouraging employe adherence" to the Printing Pressmen.

The ruling marked the first time the NLRB has cracked down on the Roy Thomson chain since its chairman began buying up U.S. newspapers.

Other unions, however, have had their troubles with the press lord—the Newspaper Guild, on strike at the Peterborough, Ont., Examiner since December; the Typographical Union, which struck the Sudbury, Ont., Star for two days last month; and the Cleveland Guild, negotiating with the Canton, O., Repository for more than six months for a first contract.

Thomson, aged 74, owns more than 50 U.S. and Canadian dailies in addition to publications in England and Scotland. Asked by an interviewer why he is buying so many U.S. newspapers, he replied "That's where the money is." To another reporter he described small-town newspapers as being "like cash boxes."

The NLRB ruling upheld a trial examiner's findings that the Dothan management failed to bargain in good faith after the Pressmen won an election on the Alabama daily in 1966.

The company stopped giving progression raises, as had been its practice in the pressroom, after the union filed its election petition, Examiner John M. Dyer found. He ruled the evidence showed that Thomson negotiators headed by James M. Baysinger, labor relations consultant for the chain, had no intention of negotiating an acceptable agreement with the Pressmen.

Labor Education Internship Offered

Applications for the 1969 labor education internship are now being accepted by Teachers Local 189. The deadline is Apr. 30.

The internship, sponsored annually by the local of labor education staff members, provides ten weeks of practical experience in union education and an $800 scholarship to cover expenses.

The internship is intended for a younger man or woman who would like to make a career in labor education but needs training. Application blanks and further details may be had by writing Labor Education Internship, 535 Clemens Drive, Florissant, Mo. 63033.

Cites Electoral College Flaws:

Meany Backs Bid For Popular Vote

(Continued from Page 1)

two top candidates if no candidate receives at least 40 percent of the popular vote.

- Establish a single constitutional standard guaranteeing that all persons 18 or above have the right to vote in presidential elections.
- Authorize Congress to pass legislation governing the conduct of presidential elections and the requirements for being listed on the ballot.

Meany rejected the argument that direct election of the President would be a departure from the federal system of government.

He pointed out that the Electoral College system, as initially conceived in the Constitution, quickly proved unworkable and remains an "anachronism" in the American political process.

Three times, he noted, it has resulted in election of a President who trailed in the voting.

Worst of all, Meany stressed, is the procedure for throwing the election into the House of Representatives if no candidate has a majority in the Electoral College—under a procedure giving each state one vote.

Some of the proposals for electoral reform would correct some of the potential dangers in the present system, Meany noted.

Thus a proposal to abolish the Electoral College and cast all of a state's votes for the winning candidate would eliminate the problem of "faithless" electors who disregard the voters' choice to cast their ballots for a different candidate.

And a proposal to have a joint session of Congress choose the President if no candidate wins an electoral majority would be preferable to the present system, since each congressman and senator would cast a vote.

But despite some improvements, Meany declared, the AFL-CIO cannot endorse such an amendment "since it still would permit the popular will as demonstrated by the votes of the people to be disregarded. At the present time, and under present-day political, economic and social conditions, we do not believe this is any longer tolerable."

The same objection applies to proposals for selection of electors from each congressional district instead of a "winner take all" statewide contest or to the proportional division of a state's electoral votes, Meany said.

Under the most-touted "district" system, Meany told the committee, Nixon would have been elected President in 1960 with 278 electoral votes to 245 for John F. Kennedy—even though Kennedy polled more popular votes.

Meany noted that Nixon said his "personal preference" would be for direct popular election.

There would be a better chance for its ratification, Meany suggested, if the President would give "unequivocal support" to popular election.

"If the proposal for direct popular election cannot be adopted," Meany said, "there is little reason to believe that any other plan can."

In response to questions Meany reiterated that the common weakness of all alternatives to direct popular election is that they don't assure majority rule, "the essence of democracy."

He was asked whether a requirement for a runoff election if no candidate received 40 percent of the popular vote would invite a "deal" by which the candidate who was eliminated would throw his support to one of the runoff candidates.

To this, Meany replied that the present system involving the Electoral College and the House of Representatives invites undercover deals. Any "deal" under a popular vote runoff, Meany noted, "would have to be made on the front pages of the newspapers, not behind a kitchen sink." And most important, he added, the final decision would be with the voters.

Supreme Court Outlaws 'Subtle' Curbs on Voting

The Supreme Court handed down a broad interpretation of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, declaring that two southern states had violated the law by changing local election procedures without getting the consent of the Justice Dept. or the federal courts.

But the court refused, nevertheless, to order new elections sought by Negro petitioners in Mississippi and Virginia. Whether the challenged local laws must be given a federal review before the next elections in effect is up to Congress. The Voting Rights Act will expire in 1970 unless Congress extends it.

Two of the Mississippi laws point up the issues which were before the court.

One authorized two counties to elect members of the Board of Supervisors at-large instead of by election districts as in the past. The effect was that all Negro candidates were defeated, while several might have been elected under the district system. Another law abolished election of school superintendent in 11 counties with large Negro populations and made the job appointive.

The majority decision, by Chief Justice Earl Warren, held that the Voting Rights Act applied because it "was aimed at the subtle, as well as the obvious, state regulations which have the effect of denying citizens their right to vote because of race."

The Voting Rights Act imposed special restrictions on those states where the low percentage of the Negro voting age population participating in the 1964 presidential election was considered a presumption of racial discrimination.

In those areas, literacy tests were voided and new restrictions on the right to vote were banned unless either the Justice Dept. of a three-judge federal court in the District of Columbia ruled they were not discriminatory.

The Supreme Court's ruling was based on failure to follow this procedure. Justice Hugo L. Black dissented from the decision. Justice John Marshall Harlan dissented in one case, involving the at-large election. And three justices William O. Douglas, Thurgood Marshall and Harlan—argued that having found that the states had violated the law, the Supreme Court should have ordered new elections.

Harlan complained that "the decision pays lip service to the Voting Rights Act but gives it no effect."

'Disaster' Feared:

School Aid Renewal Called Vital to Cities

(Continued from Page 1)

until a way was finally found to maintain separation of church and state and at the same time "meet the understandable concern of parents of children in non-public schools that their children share in the benefits of federal aid."

The solution, Davis noted, was to allocate the bulk of federal funds "on the basis of child needs rather than school needs." The allocation is based on the number of school-age children from poverty-level families in a school district, whether or not they are attending public schools.

Another drawback of block grants, Davis said, it that "political pressures" on state boards of education might result in shortchanging the city schools where the needs are greatest.

Several congressmen have suggested adding a general aid to education program to the existing legislation and Davis told the committee there is some merit in the concept.

Starved for Funds

But he said it wouldn't make any sense to try to add on new aid programs when the basic program is still starved for funds.

Congress last year appropriated less than $1.5 billion of the $3.25 billion authorized under the Elementary & Secondary Education Act.

"As a result," Davis said, "the available funds have been spread too thin to accomplish their purpose." It has been, he suggested, "a case of too little money and too many poor children."

The pending legislation does not actually provide money for the program; that requires separate legislation, handled by the Appropriations Committee. Davis stressed that the AFL-CIO has repeatedly "testified strongly for full appropriations."

It has also, he noted, criticized the Johnson Administration for not seeking as much money as Congress authorized for aid to education. Adequate funding of the basic program, Davis said, "is a national—not a partisan—issue."

He said the AFL-CIO believes "that the present emphasis should be on obtaining the full appropriations which are presently authorized and upon increasing the authorizations to more realistic levels, rather than upon developing still new programs."

Extension of the present law, Davis said, should be accompanied by "forward funding" of the program — advance appropriations commitments which make it possible for school districts to know what federal funds are available when they draw up their budgets and plan their programs.

In separate testimony, spokesmen for the American Federation of Teachers endorsed extension and expansion of the federal aid program.

Improved Performance

Carl J. Megel, the union's legislative representative, said improvement in student performance has resulted from special programs financed by the federal grants.

A panel of AFT leaders from big city locals testified to the urgency of the need and endorsed the legislation. The delegation included the presidents of AFT locals in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Boston and Minneapolis.

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL AID to elementary and secondary education is necessary to save city school systems from collapse, AFL-CIO witnesses testified at House Education & Labor Committee hearings. From left: AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis, Committee Chairman Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.), Jack Sessions of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education staff and Kenneth Young, AFL-CIO legislative representative.

John Connors Closes Lengthy Labor Service

John D. Connors, executive secretary of the AFL-CIO safety committee and special assistant to Federation Pres. George Meany, has retired after 29 years of service to the federation.

Connors said he plans to travel and "putter around" the house at 8602 Woodbrook Lane, Chevy Chase, Md. 20015, where he lives with his wife Gertrude.

Born in Medford, Mass., Connors taught economics and consumer problems in his home town high school after graduation from Boston University and Harvard College. At New Bedford, Mass., he helped organize a Teachers' local in 1931-32 and started a union career that lasted nearly 40 years. For 10 of those years he was a vice president of the American Federation of Teachers.

Connors became special asistant to former AFL Pres. William Green in 1940; helped charter new Teachers' locals in New York and Philadelphia; and was named the AFL's first director of education in 1943. He took his latest post in 1961.

He is a former chairman of the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council and represents the conference on the NSC board of directors.

Court Asked to Prod Mediation Unit to Act

The Machinists went to court for an order compelling the National Mediation Board to act in the union's dispute with National Airlines.

In asking for a preliminary injunction, the IAM told the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia that the board promised last Dec. 23 to assign a mediator but has since taken no action.

More than 1,100 IAM members—mechanics and allied ground crewmen—were locked out Jan. 21 in a dispute growing out of deadlocked contract negotiations between union and management.

Meanwhile, National Airlines continued to fly reduced schedules while doing maintenance work principally through the use of supervisors, according to union reports.

In its court petition the IAM asked the U.S. court to rule either that the mediation board has "violated its duty" to mediate, as required by federal law, or that it erred when it docketed the case for mediation services at the request of the company.

If the case docketing was in error, the IAM said, the court should declare the dispute outside the NMB's jurisdiction. The union then would be free to strike, Pres. P. L. Siemiller noted.

Seimiller recently asked Chairman Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) of the Senate Labor Committee and Chairman Harley Staggers (D-W. Va.) of the House Interstate Commerce Committee for help in "obtaining fair and just treatment from the Mediation Board."

Suspensions Cited

The union's disagreement with National developed while the IAM was trying to negotiate new contract terms with eight major airlines. National suspended three IAM members at New York's John F. Kennedy Intl. Airport here and then "fired" 1,100 other machinists at all National locations who refused to work until the three were reinstated.

National secured court orders against the locked-out Machinists and then sent telegrams demanding that they return to work or be fired. The union says they were locked out because they protested a unilateral management decision to use two men, instead of three, in taxiing planes from airport terminal to hanger.

Meanwhile the airline went into U.S. District Court at Miami with an amendment to an earlier complaint. National asked the court to order the IAM to pay compensatory damages for losses the company said it incurred because of what it calls an "illegal strike" by the union.

The company charged that strikers disobeyed two federal court orders and telegrams from the union advising them to return to work.

U.S. Urged to Beef Up Loans to Poor Nations

The AFL-CIO has urged Congress to help replenish funds of the Intl. Development Association, which provides low-interest loans to developing nations.

The association, a subsidiary of the World Bank, was set up by bank members, including the United States, in 1960. It has since loaned more than $1.7 billion, almost entirely to poor nations.

Congress must approve U.S. money for IDA and a bill authorizing the government to share in a "second replenishment" of its funds before the House Banking Committee.

In a letter to Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.), committee chairman, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller praised the association and its objectives.

The AFL-CIO, he said, believes that helping "the poorest countries, as IDA does, is a wise policy, in terms both of humanity and security for the United States to follow.

"The IDA way of achieving this goal, through a multilateral approach shared by other industrialized countries, seems to us eminently sensible and worth continuing."

He said the federation was "impressed that under the terms of the second replenishment proposal, the U.S. balance of payments position is protected."

Except for purchases made in the United States, none of the U.S. contribution is to be used prior to June 30, 1971, or if the U.S. payments problem persists, for as long thereafter as IDA's resources will permit.

"This arrangement," Biemiller said, "allows IDA's borrowers to buy goods freely from American factories and farms, while the U.S. payments position is safeguarded."

The letter noted that in the years since 1960 "nearly a quarter-billion dollars worth of U.S. goods have been bought by U.S. borrowers," with only Great Britian exceeding the United States as a source of supply for IDA borrowers.

Subsequently, the committee approved a bill to authorize a $400 million appropriation.

Nixon Sends Congress Coal Mine Safety Bill

Pres. Nixon has sent legislation to Congress designed to reduce deaths from coal mine accidents and protect miners from "black lung" disease.

Hearings on the legislation, which drew bipartisan support, were opened immediately by a House Labor subcommittee headed by Rep. John H. Dent (D-Pa.).

Nixon's proposal is similar to one by Pres. Johnson last September. The deaths of 78 miners in a Farmington, W. Va., coal mine explosion in November have since intensified demands for mine safety measures.

In a message accompanying the proposed legislation, Nixon said that miners and their families "have too long endured the constant threat and often sudden reality of disaster, disease and death."

He added, "Catastrophes in coal mines are not inevitable. They can . . . and must be prevented."

The Administration's bill would empower the Secretary of the Interior to issue regulations covering such matters as mine roof support, electrical equipment, ventilation, illumination and fire protection.

Another section would direct the secretary to set a limit of 4.5 milligrams of respirable dust for each cubic meter of air in a mine, with the limit eventually to be lowered to 3 milligrams.

At present, according to Interior Dept. officials, the average mine has a dust reading of about 6 milligrams.

Fines of up to $10,000 would be authorized against operators whose mines exceed the 4.5 milligram standard. There would also be provisions for shutting down mines with excessive dust concentrations.

Nixon also called for expanded research into "black lung" disease, which the Public Health Service said affected more than 100,000 of the nation's 135,000 soft coal miners over a five-year period.

In other areas, the measure would require three inspections of mines each year along with spot inspections, and provide for additional mine inspectors and increase their training.

Labor Pays Tribute To Job Safety Pioneer

Greetings and thanks from the the trade union movement went to Dr. Alice Hamilton, pioneer battler for better working conditions in mines, mills and factories, on her 100th birthday at her home in Hadlyme, Conn.

Labor is "deeply grateful for your lifetime of dedicated service which has contributed so greatly toward improving the health and safety of workers," said a message from Dir. Bertrand Seidman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security. Dr. Hamilton exposed health hazards in the "dangerous trades" until her retirement.

NLRB Case Filings Dip To Reverse Long Trend

The National Labor Relations Board reported that new cases filed in the last three months of 1968 did not—for a change—break any records.

For the October-through-December quarter of 1968, labor and management filed 7,110 cases of all types—election petitions and unfair labor practice charges. That was a decrease of nearly 2 percent in new cases filed during the quarter, in comparison with 7,235 cases filed in the comparable quarter a year earlier.

After many quarters of constantly rising caseloads, the NLRB hazards no guess on what caused the slight decline in new filings. A spokesman did predict, however, that the decrease in business will not be a permanent condition.

In 1968's last quarter, unfair practice charges were filed against 2,819 employers—100 less than in the previous fourth quarter; and 1,491 against unions, down 171.

At the end of last December, 631 cases awaited decision by NLRB members, as against 605 pending Oct. 1, 1968, and 641 pending on Dec. 31, 1967.

The NLRB staff conducted 2,012 representation elections in the past quarter, when 140,764 workers, or 88 percent of those eligible to vote, cast ballots for or against union representation. Of these, 61 percent were in favor of unions.

AFL-CIO unions won a majority in 629 of the 1,237 elections in which they were on the ballot.

Sees Threat to Economy:

Meany Scores Talk Of Sacrificing Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

sharp boost in mortgage interest.

"A slowdown of residential construction is threatened instead of the vast home-building expansion that is needed," Meany cautioned. "Past experience teaches that high interest rates and tight money hit home building fastest and hardest—the tight money, high interest rate policy of 1966 threw residential construction into a deep recession."

Meany told the committee he "welcomes" Pres. Nixon's message to the AFL-CIO Executive Council declaring that inflation must be curbed "without asking the wage-earners to pay for the cost of stability with their jobs."

It was a welcome contrast, Meany indicated, to "statements by some officials of the new Administration—as well as by business spokesmen—that a rise of unemployment may be required to achieve greater price stability."

He warned that the chief victims of such unemployment would be "the most recently hired, the least skilled" and especially racial minorities and young workers.

He called for repeal of the 7 percent investment tax credit as an important step in redressing the imbalance in the nation's economy.

As to the 10 percent tax surcharge, Meany said its retention should depend on "the trend of unemployment in the months ahead and the level of military expenditures." He said a rise in unemployment would be a "strong reason" to end the tax or begin to phase it out.

If the decision is to continue it, Meany urged, the same tax rate "should be applied to income that is now excluded from federal taxation, as a result of the major loopholes for capital gains, oil and mineral depletion allowances and income for state and local bonds."

And if the economy is to rest on a sound basis, he said, "the lag of real wages and salaries must be ended." He said increased productivity and high profits permit a "substantial" rise in wages "within the context of a relative stable price level."

Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.), chairman of the joint committee, and Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.), vice chairman, headed an unusually large turnout of committee members for the hearing.

Broad-ranging questioning, lasting more than an hour, followed the formal testimony by Meany.

In the course of it, Meany firmly rejected the argument that the job picture would be hurt by an increase in the minimum wage.

The same argument has been made against every increase in the minimum wage for the past 30 years, Meany said, but the experience has been that "everyone benefits" when the wage floor is raised and coverage expanded.

Several questions touched on labor's efforts to open up job and training opportunities for Negroes and remedy past discrimination and Meany told the committee of the efforts made by the AFL-CIO and its affiliates to meet the problem.

"I don't say we shouldn't be criticized," Meany said. There is still "a long way to go" to completely uproot all traces of discriminatory attitudes in the trade union movement.

But "I'm quite proud of the record of recent years," he declared.

Meany described union participation in the "outreach" programs to bring Negroes and other minority groups into apprenticeship programs for the highest-paid skilled trades.

The problems of training, opportunities, education and discrimination which has held down the percentage of Negroes in the most highly skilled, best paying jobs isn't confined to the building trades, Meany stressed. The trade union movement is very much of a cross-section of the nation, he noted.

But the unions are working actively to open up opportunities and the result, he observed, is "progress" that can be documented.

Meany presented to the committee key policy statements adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its recent meeting and concluded with this affirmation:

"We in the AFL-CIO have faith that the American system will be able to meet the economic challenges that face us.

"In our system is the strength and the ability to meet our problems—including economics problems—and come up with solutions that will benefit all of our people.

"That, we contend, should be the goal of governmental economic policy—to serve all the people, not just a favored few. That, in truth, is the economic guideline America needs."

Sports Fans Shun Hearst Track Meet

Los Angeles—This city's Sports Arena seats 16,000 people.

But when the union-busting Los Angeles Herald-Examiner co-sponsored a heavily publicized invitational track meet, only 400 persons turned out for the afternoon program and fewer than 2,000 attended the evening main events.

MIAMI BEACH Mayor Jay Dermer, left, presents ceremonial key of the city to Honorary Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers at meeting of 2,000 ILGWU retirees in the Florida city. At right are Pres. David Sullivan of the Service Employes and Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO. The retirees called for a 50 percent increases in social security benefits and major improvements in Medicare.

Two New Leaflets Offered by COPE

Two new COPE dollar-drive leaflets are available for mass distribution at no charge to emphasize the importance of workers contributing to help elect liberals in 1970.

They are COPE Publication No. 200-C, "Give $1 to COPE in 1969, Win in 1970," and No. 201-C, "Sure It's Fun to Play the Market." Order by publication number from COPE, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D C., 20006.

Labor Safety Group Seeks Award Entries

Chicago—The Labor Conference of the National Safety Council has called for entries in its annual safety awards contest which recognizes outstanding efforts by unions and members toward accident and disease prevention.

Tom Dillon, chairman of the conference's awards committee for 1969 and a Machinists' business representative in Joliet, Ill., stressed that the only requirement to enter is affiliation with the National Safety Council.

Unions may enter if they are dues-paying members of NSC, and individuals are eligible if they are members of such unions or hold individual public service memberships in the council.

Three awards are presented to organizations—the Harry Read Award of Honor, the Harry Read Award of Merit and the Harry Read Award of Commendation.

These awards honor the late assistant to the AFL-CIO secretary-treasurer for his work in promoting labor safety. Read was one of the founders of the conference and served on its board.

Citations are presented to individuals for distinguished, outstanding and meritorious service in stimulating safety on or off the job.

Written evidence of safety achievements should emphasize their scope and effectiveness. Entries and further inquiries should be addressed to the Labor Dept. of the National Safety Council, 425 North Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60611.

Court Voids Union Ban For Carolina Firemen

A three-judge federal court at Charlotte, N.C., struck down as "unconstitutional on its face" a 1959 North Carolina law forbidding public employes to join unions.

Upholding a suit by Charlotte firemen and the AFL-CIO Fire Fighters, a U.S. Court of Appeals judge and two District Court judges ruled "there is no valid state interest in denying firemen the right to organize a labor union."

The judges also struck down a section of the 1959 law making union membership punishable as a misdemeanor. They declined, however, to set aside another section forbidding any state or subordinate body to enter into contract agreements with any union.

The no-contract section is, the court wrote, a "valid exercise of the legislative authority" of the state and public employes are free to lobby against it.

IAFF Pres. William H. McClennan called the decision "truly a landmark for U.S. public employes." The union had tried for 10 years to invalidate "this tyrannical law, which in our opinion deprived fire fighters and other public employes of a basic American right," he declared.

Concern Removed

McClennan said his union was concerned that the North Carolina law might spread to other states. With that fear removed, the IAFF will now prepare to organize other firemen in that state, he asserted.

Before enactment of the North Carolina law, Charlotte firemen were members of IAFF Local 660. The local ended its affiliation but continued to negotiate with the city until the city manager and the city attorney advised against it. The city withdrew recognition of the union and ended a dues deduction for city employes.

Two years ago the firemen formed the Charlotte Firemen's Assembly to bargain with the city, but failed to win recognition. They filed suit, joined by the IAFF.

The court decision held that the law forbidding city employes to join unions is "void on its face as an abridgement of freedom of association protected by the 1st and 14th amendments."

The judges said they do not question the power of the state to deal with emergency situations but "we do question the overbreadth" of the law in question which "strikes down indiscriminately the right of association in a labor union—even one whose policy is opposed to strikes."

The state did not participate in the lawsuit. The city did not indicate whether it will appeal.

69-8-8

Andrew Gibson Nominated for Maritime Post

Pres. Nixon nominated Andrew Edward Gibson, 46, as Maritime Administrator and the Senate scheduled hearings on the nomination for Mar. 6.

Gibson started a maritime career in 1942 after graduating from the Massachusetts Maritime Academy. Three years later he was captain of an ocean freighter at the age of 22, the youngest captain in recent merchant marine history, according to a biographer.

After graduating from Brown University cum laude in 1951, he was a Navy lieutenant for two years. From 1953 to 1967 he was with the Grace Line, where he became senior vice president for operations. He served since then as vice president of the Diebold Group, a management consultant firm.

Gibson has been vice president of the New York Shipping Association; a member of the Merchant Marine Academy advisory board; and a governor of the Propeller Club of New York.

Oil Workers Condemn Industry's Price Claims

Denver—Gasoline companies that boost prices on the basis of labor costs are using labor as "a whipping boy for increases they probably were going to make anyway," Pres. A. F. Grospiron of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers charged.

Grospiron and the union's executive board issued statements after some firms raised prices and contended that higher rates were necessary because of increased labor costs.

The union recently negotiated improvements in wages and benefits in the industry, but OCAW leaders insist that the cost of its package is more than offset by increasing productivity.

"The fact is," Grospiron said, "that unit labor cost—the cost per gallon of gasoline produced—is lower than a decade ago and is continuing to decline due to increased productivity."

"If present oil profit rates on the order of 13 percent return on investment, after taxes, are not adequate," the executive board said, the companies should make it clear that the "desire for greater profits is their reason for raising prices."

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, March 15, 1969 | No. 11

10-Union Conference Sets GE, Westinghouse Goals

BROAD-RANGING DISCUSSION of domestic and world issues marked 70-minute meeting of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Labor Sec. George P. Shultz with Pres. Nixon at the White House. Shultz told newsmen the President hopes to have "periodic meetings of this type" and to meet soon with the full AFL-CIO Executive Council.

Coordinated Talks Slated For 200,000

By Eugene A. Kelly

Delegates from 10 AFL-CIO unions representing 200,000 workers adopted a set of common goals and agreed to coordinate their bargaining efforts in 1969 negotiations with two of the nation's most profitable corporations—General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Corp.

The goals are "sound, sensible and justified," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told 475 delegates from 270 local unions at a collective bargaining conference in Washington. The conference was called by Meany as chairman of the AFL-CIO Coordinated Bargaining Committee, which he established in 1966.

"Coordinated bargaining is no longer an experiment," Meany said in summing up the advances made in the first coordinated negotiations with GE and Westinghouse three years ago. "You have proved that it works."

Coordinated bargaining is a system under which all unions holding contracts with the same employer meet to draft their individual proposals, sit in on bargaining sessions with the employer as guests of the negotiating union, and exchange information on developments and future plans, as employers in many industries have done for years.

Coordinated bargaining is not joint bargaining, and the conference was advised that "we do not plan nor intend to engage" in joint bargaining.

Justice, Meany said, "demands

(Continued on Page 3)

Jobless Rate Remains at 3.3 Percent

By Duane Emme

The nation's unemployment rate in February remained at 3.3 percent for the third consecutive month to match the 15-year low reached in December, the Labor Dept. reported.

Non-farm employment rose by 380,000 seasonally adjusted, to nearly 70 million for the fifth straight month in which a sizable advance was recorded.

Total unemployment in February was 2.9 million, about the same as in January and about 350,000 less than in February 1968. The decline over the year was broken down as follows: 250,000 adult men, 50,000 adult women, 50,000 teenagers.

The unemployment rate for adult men was 1.9 percent, down one-tenth of 1 percent from January. For adult women and teenagers the rates were unchanged at 3.5 and 11.7 percent, respectively.

The rate for full-time workers was virtually the same as in January at 2.8 percent, and the rate for married men held at 1.4 percent for the third straight month.

Jobless rates for non-white and white workers were 5.7 and 2.9 percent, respectively. The non-white rate was down three-tenths of 1 percent over the month while that for whites was one-tenth of 1 percent lower.

In line with this pattern, jobless rates for most occupational groups either declined or were unchanged between January and February, with the greatest drop occurring for blue-collar workers.

On the jobs side, Harold Goldstein, BLS deputy commissioner, noted that non-farm employment has increased by 1.6 million since September, an average of 325,000 a month.

"That's a very substantial increase, and I don't think we can keep it up," he added.

The February employment rise was broadly based, with gains recorded in all major industry sectors except mining.

The greatest increase was in construction, where employment rose by 110,000, seasonally adjusted, to nearly 3.5 million. It was an all-time February high for construction employment, which usually shows a decline in that month.

Manufacturing employment rose by 75,000 in February to just over 20 million, with about half of the gain attributed to the end of strikes by some locals of oil workers.

In transportation and utilities, employment increased by 30,000 to 4.4 million, with much of that rise due to a return to work by striking New York longshoremen.

(Continued on Page 4)

Damage Suit Hits Bogus Farm Union

Bakersfield, Calif.—A $10 million damage suit has been filed by the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee against an organization shown to have been formed and financed by grape growers to fight the union.

Named in the suit, filed in a state court here, are the Agricultural Workers Freedom to Work Association, its officers, a long list of growers and farm suppliers, California for Right to Work, and the John Birch Society.

The National Right to Work Committee recently sponsored Jose Mendoza, general secretary

(Continued on Page 5)

For Public Employe Strikes:

Penalties Stiffened In N.Y. Taylor Law

Albany, N.Y.—Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) signed into law harsh new penalties voted by the Republican-controlled New York Legislature against public workers and their unions.

The governor and the legislature acted despite sharp warnings from many quarters that the move would be self-defeating.

Under the amendments to the Taylor law governing public employe labor relations, effective Apr. 1, for any day of absence during a strike a worker will lose two days' pay and must serve a year's probation with loss of job tenure. Fines against unions, formerly a maximum of $10,000 a day, were made possibly co-extensive with the union's treasury and assets. Dues checkoff rights now may be suspended without limit instead of an 18-month maximum period under the original Taylor law.

The 1967 law had in it no prohibitions against unfair employer practices. The new amendments prohibit some such practices, effective Sept. 1, but fail to list others and provide no penalties for employer violations.

Law Favors Employers

State AFL-CIO Pres. Raymond R. Corbett had opposed the new law, noting that penalties in the law as enacted in 1967 had tipped the balance in bargaining power in favor of government employers and that the changes would mean a further imbalance with still greater inducement for some agency heads to take advantage of public workers in contract bargaining.

In a statement issued following passage, Corbett asserted that the action "deals a devastating new blow to fair and full worker-employer relations in government." He added that "this punishment binge on which the legislature's leadership and the state administration has embarked, is not only illogical and unreason-

(Continued on Page 5)

Labor Dept. Streamlines Manpower Unit

The Labor Dept. will reorganize its sprawling Manpower Administration to consolidate bureaus, give greater responsibilities to regional offices and simplify the lines of communication from headquarters to field offices.

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz predicted that the changes will "improve the delivery of manpower services to the nation" and Pres. Nixon said the result will be "more in the way of job training for less in the way of tax dollars."

Shultz readily acknowledged that the new setup has "strong similarities" to the reorganization plan announced last fall by former Manpower Administrator Stanley Ruttenberg and former Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz.

Both plans, he told newsmen, were designed to simplify a complex organizational structure involving

(Continued on Page 10)

High Court Urged to Uphold FCC On Rebuttal to Broadcast Attacks

The AFL-CIO has asked the Supreme Court to uphold a Federal Communications Commision rule requiring radio and television stations which broadcast personal attacks on individuals to give the victims a chance to reply.

Two broadcasting networks and an association of radio and television news directors challenged the rule, claiming it interfered with their freedom of speech and would be burdensome. A federal appellate court in Chicago agreed with them and held the rule unconstitutional.

On the contrary, the AFL-CIO argued in its brief to the Supreme Court, meaningful freedom of speech requires that the public have access to the publicly-owned airwaves. Unlike other forms of communication, the number of channels available for broadcasting are limited. In licensing a station, the AFL-CIO said, the government has both the right and duty to insist that basic rules of fair play be followed.

While the AFL-CIO is not directly involved in the litigation, the federation filed a friend-of-the-court brief in support of the FCC.

Labor has a stake in the broad issue involved, the federation said in explaining its interest in the case. It cited examples of unions being denied air time to present their views during organizing drives, strikes and legislative campaigns.

If anything, the AFL-CIO said, the government has been "overly cautious" in acting to assure public access to the airwaves. The specific rule that is being challenged is not only reasonable but also a necessary protection of the public's rights, the federation said.

The rule in question assures the right of reply "when, during the presentation of views on a con-

(Continued on Page 10)

SUMMER RECREATION ACTIVITIES for Ladies' Garment Workers and their families at Unity House were cancelled this year after fire swept through the administration building of the huge Pocono Mountains resort in eastern Pennsylvania. The ILGWU is already formulating building plans to replace the destroyed facilities.

Fire Shuts ILGWU's Unity House, Union Pledges to Rebuild Resort

Unity House, Pa.—Unity House, the spacious Pocono Mountains resort operated by the Ladies' Garment Workers, was closed for the 1969 season after a fire levelled its administration building. But the union promptly pledged to restore the resort, which has provided summer recreation for thousands of ILGWU members for nearly half a century.

The blaze destroyed the main dining room, several smaller dining rooms, kitchen, offices and lobby in the arena-like structure. Also lost in the fire were 13 murals painted by the noted Mexican artist Diego Rivera.

None of the other buildings on the 1,000-acre resort was damaged, the ILGWU reported.

The ILGWU board decided to cancel the 1969 season for Unity House following reports by resort manager Saul Gold and James Lepsig, assistant executive secretary.

But it ordered immediate planning for the rebuilding of the destroyed facilities with hopes of reopening the resort next year.

Several generations of garment workers have spent summers at Unity House, which was making preparations for its 50th anniversary. In recent years, the resort also was visited by members of other unions, labor and government officials—including the late Pres. John F. Kennedy.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has held a number of its meetings at Unity House.

The ILGWU resort was noted for its wooded land, rolling hills, deep blue lake—supplemented by excellent cuisine and top-notch entertainment.

The administration building was constructed at a cost of $325,000 after a fire destroyed the original lodge in 1934. The building also replaced several smaller rustic structures to provide more modern comforts.

A $250,000 renovating project was under way in the building when the blaze destroyed it Feb. 28. The fire apparently started in a new kitchen which was under construction, the union said.

No guests were at the resort, since it closed between seasons. The building's fire sprinkler system had been shut off because of subfreezing temperatures.

Space heaters were being used in the construction area of the building the night of the fire. Caretakers at the resort reported hearing a series of small explosions prior to the blaze.

Unity House, formerly called Forest Park Hotel, was a favorite hunting and fishing refuge for a group of German-American bankers and businessmen before World War I.

When it floundered financially, the resort was purchased in 1919 by a party of New York dress and shirtwaist workers who had been operating a smaller resort in Pine Hill, N.Y.

The ILGWU took over Unity House in 1924 when its Local 25 was unable to maintain its upkeep.

The curved ceiling of the administration building was considered an architectural feat with its use of interlocking beams rather than ordinary fasteners. The Rivera murals also attracted many art students.

Unity House at times was referred to as a "palace in the Poconos" which offered "a millionaire's vacation for garment workers at union-scale rates."

ILGWU Pres. Louis Stulberg promised that a new administration building and huge dining room will replace the ashes of the destroyed structure. He added:

"It will be a structure in which the original spirit" of the builders of the union resort "will persist for coming generations of garment workers."

Fire Fighters' Drive Revives Charlotte Local

Charlotte, N.C.—The Fire Fighters moved swiftly after a successful court battle and reinstated its Charlotte local in a ceremony conducted by IAFF Pres. William H. McClennan.

McClennan installed acting officers of the local less than a week after a panel of federal judges overturned a 10-year-old North Carolina statute barring police and fire fighters from union membership. The local began operations after a whirlwind organizing campaign that gave it a membership that includes more than 80 percent of Charlotte's fire fighters.

McClennan also announced that he expected soon to reinstate other locals that were forced out of existence when the state passed its union membership prohibition law in 1959. Several fire fighter representatives from other North Carolina cities were present at the Charlotte ceremony.

The suit which overturned the law was brought by Charlotte fire fighters with the support of the IAFF.

As Unfair Practice Remedy:

High Court Asked To Back Cardcheck

An order compelling an unfair employer to bargain with a union on the basis of signed membership cards is the best presently available remedy against union-busting firms, the AFL-CIO said in a brief filed with the Supreme Court.

The "rising tide" of illegal employer opposition to union organizing is a direct result of the impotence of other National Labor Relations Board remedies, the federation's counsel said in urging the court to reverse rulings of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond, Va., in three disputed cases.

The NLRB has asked the high court to review a 4th Circuit Court finding that the Taft-Hartley Act gives employers an absolute right to demand an election, before a union can be certified and bargaining can commence. The cases involve Meat Cutters Local 347 in the Charleston, W. Va., area, and three employers—Gissel Packing Co., Inc., Heck's, Inc., and General Steel Products, Inc.

In each case the NLRB ordered the firms to negotiate with the union after they attempted to smash its majority support by illegal threats and promises. The appeals court refused to enforce the board order.

"The 4th Circuit Court position is clearly wrong," the AFL-CIO brief maintained, citing evidence that Congress did not intend to make elections the only legal way of determining employe choice. The brief also said a 1956 ruling in United Mine Workers v. Arkansas Oak Flooring "has seemingly escaped" the notice of the Richmond court.

In the Arkansas case, the high court decided that since a majority of employes had authorized a union to represent them, "the employer is obligated to recognize" the union.

The brief declared that "the critical cases that come before the board are those, such as the instant ones, in which the employer has violated . . . the act in a manner which makes it fair to say that the unfair labor practices were calculated to frustrate unionization."

When an employer violates the law during an organizing campaign, the brief continued, "the union and its employe supporters have the right to expect an adequate remedy. The bargaining order meets this just expectation."

The order "is the only presently available remedy which does so fully, and which tends to deprive the employer who has interfered with an organizing campaign with the fruits of his wrongdoing."

Employers, the brief said, have a "variety of powerful economic weapons at their control: they may replace economic strikers permanently; they may lock out employes in support of legitimate bargaining demands; and they may close down their operations for anti-union reasons as long as the purpose is not to chill unionization in other plants."

A union's strength, on the other hand, "tends to be dissipated" when an employer uses the many delaying avenues open to him. It is "plain that effective remedies" are essential, the federation brief said.

Parley Urged To Focus on Litter Problem

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The executive board of the Glass Bottle Blowers has called for a national conference of industry and union representatives to attack the nation's litter and solid waste disposal problems.

Expressing concern over legislation to penalize or ban non-returnable bottles, the union's board authorized Pres. Lee W. Minton to call such a conference under sponsorship of the union.

The board's statement noted that non-returnable glass containers account for about one-third of the glass container industry's production.

"Our industry and our union members have an unmistakable responsibility in this national problem," the board declared. "The products we create are being increasingly blamed for the overall problem of litter. While this blame is wrongly applied, we must meet the challenge in defense of products and jobs."

The board's statement also pointed out that potential legislation could affect jobs of thousands of other union members who produce convenience containers and packaging.

$1.30 Package Settles Jewelry Union's Strike

New York—Jewelry Workers Local 1 reached agreement on contract improvements estimated at $1.30 an hour and submitted it to a vote of 2,500 members, on strike since Feb. 1 against 125 precious jewelry manufacturers.

Local 1 Pres. Joseph Tarantola said the tentative settlement contained the largest package of contract benefits ever negotiated by the local. It was reached, he said, with the aid of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

Besides wage increases of 30, 20 and 25 cents an hour at yearly intervals, the three employer groups involved agreed to better vacation, holiday and insurance clauses and new fringe benefits including a cost of living escalator clause, full seniority on a departmental basis, and shopwide upgrading keyed to seniority.

Starting rates will be raised from $1.66 an hour to $2, with automatic increases at frequent intervals to raise the lowest rate to $2.75 an hour within 13 months.

The employers offered one more paid holiday for a total of nine; two weeks' vacation after 18 months, instead of after two years of service; a third week for 13-year men, effective at once, and for 10-year men in the second contract year.

The proposed pact raises pension benefits from $50 a month to $70 this year, $90 in the third year. Other provisions include fully-paid Blue Cross coverage, major medical benefits, improved life insurance, and vested pension rights at any age after 20 years of service in the industry.

Local 1 members produce gold, platinum and diamond jewelry in shops centered in the midtown area.

For Coordinated Talks:

GE, Westinghouse Unions Adopt Goals

(Continued from Page 1)

that these two giant corporations provide a reasonable gain in spendable wages—a gain that GE-Westinghouse workers have not really achieved in nine long years" because inflation has wiped out contract gains.

The delegates voted unanimously to press, when negotiations open next August, for improvements in 83 specific areas, including the following:

- A "realistic" cents-per-hour wage increase, based on the increase in the cost of living since 1966, increased worker productivity, and wage settlements in other industries.
- A 37.5-hour work week, with 40 hours' pay for all covered workers.
- A full cost-of-living clause with a minimum quarterly increase keyed to the rise in the government's Consumer Price Index.
- A "meaningful" across-the-board wage supplement for increased skills, for both salaried and hourly workers, and increases for incentive workers, applied to the base rates.

The program calls for a union shop with no "free riders" in any shop; elimination of all area wage differentials, measured day work and so-called merit raises; a non-contributory pension system and health plan; job protection; full arbitration rights; and improved vacations and holiday benefits.

"Unity is the key that will unlock the door to progress at GE and Westinghouse," Chairman James Compton of the steering committee told the delegates. He is executive assistant to IUE Pres. Paul Jennings.

Meany presented a plaque to David Lasser of IUE, who retired Mar. 1 from his union post and as steering committee head, for his work as "spark plug" of the coordinated effort. Lasser, who will continue work as a consultant, thanked Meany for the "persistence and courage" he showed in helping win contract settlements three years ago for unions allied in the committee.

Pres. James Woodside of the Technical Engineers was conference chairman. Speakers included Pres. Charles Pillard of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Pres. Edward Carlough, Sr., of the Sheet Metal Workers; Sec.-Treas. Matthew DeMore of the Machinists; AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis, and Jennings.

Meany congratulated the unions for "establishing both the practicality and the legality of coordinated bargaining" in spite of intense opposition by GE management.

Legal Battle Won

The unions "fought and won the battle against GE before the National Labor Relations Board and in the courts," he said. "In light of this spirit, and because of this hard work, I am sure that 1969 will bring gains that are far beyond those of 1966."

Meany revealed that ballots will be sent to all GE-Westinghouse workers, who will be asked to list the issues they think most important. Before negotiations start, "grass roots" meetings will be held also to encourage full employe participation.

Earlier the AFL-CIO Executive Council pledged full support to the unions involved. They are the IUE, IBEW, Steelworkers, Machinists, Allied Industrial Workers, Flint Glass Workers, Plumbers, Carpenters, Sheet Metal Workers and Technical Engineers.

The one-day conference heard reports on goals from committees headed by IAM Vice Pres. Gilbert Brunner, Dominic D'Ambrosio and Boyd Shinn of AIW, Paul Menger of IBEW, William Cleary of AFTE, Allen Roberts of Sheet Metal and Albert Vottero of the Flint Glass Workers.

GOALS OF THE 10-UNION Coordinated Bargaining Committee in fall negotiations with General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Corp. are "sound, sensible and justified," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany tells committee meeting in Hotel Mayflower, Washington. The committee achieved substantial gains in 1966 negotiations and should be even more successful this year for the 200,000 workers it represents, Meany and other speakers said.

Civil Rights Group Hits Textile Contract Awards

The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights has urged the Defense Dept. to hold up any new contracts to three textile firms with past records of race discrimination—until it has actual evidence that the job discrimination has been corrected.

The firms involved are J. P. Stevens & Co., whose name has become synonymous with union-busting, Burlington Mills and Dan River Mills.

Despite findings that the firms had failed to take "affirmative action" to remedy job discrimination, Deputy Defense Sec. David Packard authorized multi-million dollar supply contracts last month after receiving "personal assurances" from the heads of the firms that discrimination would be corrected.

More recently, Labor Sec. George P. Shultz, whose department is charged with enforcement of a presidential order against discrimination in firms dealing with the government, announced that the government will follow through to see that the companies live up to their promises.

He said the Labor Dept. and Defense Dept. are working on a questionnaire that the firms will have to fill out quarterly.

It will require, he said, "detailed information in writing regarding actions taken and results achieved in recruitment, hiring, placement, upgrading and treatment of employes, including the use of company facilities."

The Defense Dept. went ahead with the contracts, with the concurrence of Shultz, after Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) had sharply protested the threatened disqualification of the firms.

Officials of the civil rights leadership group wrote Packard their concern that the leniency shown the three textile firms may weaken enforcement of the government's policy. Other federal departments, the letter said, might follow the Defense Dept. example.

There should be no contracts, the civil rights group said, until both the Defense Dept. and the Labor Dept. determine that the requirements of the executive order are being fully met.

The letter was signed by Clarence M. Mitchell, legislative chairman, and James Hamilton, compliance and enforcement chairman of the leadership conference.

Union-Busting Ruling Stands Against GE

The Supreme Court upheld a four-year-old charge by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers when it declined to review a lower court ruling that the General Electric Co. illegally smashed the union's majority at a company plant in Gainesville, Fla.

The court let stand a National Labor Relations Board finding, and a 1968 ruling by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, New Orleans, that GE tactics caused a majority of the workers to abandon the union after a one-year contract.

The NLRB ruled that GE had refused to bargain meaningfully over wages in 1965 negotiations on a new contract, and also that it unfairly withheld wage information needed by the union.

As a result of company misconduct, the board said, workers filed a decertification petition. Management then put a plant-wide wage increase into effect unilaterally, according to the NLRB.

The board's finding was that the IBEW's loss of bargaining rights was "directly attributable" to GE's unlawful refusal to bargain in good faith. It ordered the company to bargain with the union on a new contract, and GE appealed.

The company claimed the NLRB had failed to prove that GE caused the workers to disaffiliate. The appeals court rejected this claim.

State-County Adds 5 New York Units

New York—Five major New York State security personnel organizations, representing 6,800 members, have affiliated with the State, County & Municipal Employes and have received SCME charters.

The five units involved are the Correction Officers Benevolent Association, the Safety Officers Benevolent Association, the Narcotics Correction Officers Benevolent Association, the University Police Benevolent Association and the Long Island Parkway Police, Local 2016.

Delegates from the five groups unanimously adopted a resolution calling on Gov. Nelson Rockefeller "to abide by the decision of the Public Employment Relations Board to immediately conduct a representation election among our combined group so we can begin the collective bargaining process."

High Court Opens Files On Illegal Wiretapping

Defendants in criminal cases have the right to examine transcripts of conversations obtained by the government through unlawful electronic eavesdropping to see if their constitutional rights have been violated, the Supreme Court ruled.

The court, however, limited the requirement for such disclosure to cases in which the defendant is the subject of the surveillance or it takes place on his premises.

The court held that persons who were not overheard or whose premises were not compromised could not object to the use of illegal evidence gained by wiretaps or eavesdrops.

In allowing disclosure, the court made no distinction between ordinary criminal cases and those involving espionage. It also opened inspection to the defendant's attorney.

The ruling, which split the justices into several combinations of 5-3 votes, came in decisions handed down in two cases.

One involved the conviction of Willie I. Alderman of Las Vegas and Felix Alderisio of Chicago for conspiring to threaten the life of a Denver lawyer to collect a debt.

The second concerned the conviction of John W. Butenko, an American engineer, and Igor A. Ivanov, a Russian chauffeur, for conspiring to spy for the Soviet Union.

The cases were sent back to lower courts to decide whether any of the defendants had his constitutional right against "search and seizure" violated by unlawful surveillance.

The court rejected the Justice Dept.'s contention that any disclosures might bring serious risks to national security, and possibly weaken law enforcement techniques.

Also rejected was the argument that the defendant's rights would be adequately protected if trial judges read the transcripts of "bugged" conversations and disclosed to the defense what seemed relevant to the trial.

The impact of the ruling will be heaviest on past or pending cases because the decision applies only to illegal surveillance. Last year, in enacting a Crime Control Act, Congress made court-approved surveillance legal. But that law remains to be tested on constitutional issues.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its recent meeting, called for repeal of the wiretapping and bugging provisions of the 1968 law to preserve individual rights and privacy.

In addition, it proposed an amendment to provide stiff penalties for the use of wiretapping or eavesdropping except in those instances involving national security, "and even this exemption must be closely guarded."

Pending legislative action, the council urged the Nixon Administration to "reconsider" its recent decision to expand the use of electronic spying in criminal cases.

Meany Pushes Drive to Pay Teachers' Fine

Widespread participation by the labor movement in the campaign to raise $220,000 for the teachers' union in New York City was urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a message to the presidents of all affiliated unions.

"The more widespread the participation" by labor, Meany wrote, "the more significant will this action be as an expression of trade union solidarity in the face of misguided and punitive efforts to destroy the effectiveness of public employe and other unions through the device of oppressive financial penalties."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council voted at its meeting last month to sponsor the campaign to pay a fine imposed on the United Federation of Teachers—Local 2 of the American Federation of Teachers—for walking out in violation of the state law forbidding public employe strikes.

The council contributed $100,000 toward the payment and Meany named Vice Presidents David Sullivan and Max Greenberg to coordinate the campaign for the balance.

UFT Pres. Albert Shanker was sentenced to serve 15 days in prison and the union itself was fined $220,000 although no penalties were imposed on those "actually responsible for the disruption of the city school system" or the failure to deal effectively with disorders in the schools, Meany's letter observed.

*Agreements covering 1,000 or more workers.
Agreements covering 5,000 or more workers.
Source: Bureau of Labor Statistics, U. S. Dept. of Labor.

20 Largest Areas Show 1968 Employment Gain

The employment picture for the nation's 20 largest metropolitan areas showed improvement between 1967 and 1968, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The annual BLS study of these areas revealed that they had a combined unemployment rate that averaged 3.4 percent in 1968, a drop of five-tenths of 1 percent from 1967.

BLS also said that the 20 areas, including their central cities and suburbs, averaged combined employment of about 25.1 million last year, up 310,000 from 1967.

Total unemployment in the areas averaged about 893,000 during 1968, a drop of about 125,000 from the previous year.

In the combined central cities, where unemployment was 489,000 in 1968, the jobless rate was 4.1 percent compared to 4.7 percent in 1967.

There was a drop in the rate for both white and non-white workers, with averages of 3.4 and 6.3 percent respectively in 1968. However, BLS noted there was little change in the near 2-to-1 ratio between white and non-white rates.

In the suburbs, whose population is about four-fifths white, the ratio was higher—2.7 percent for whites compared to 6.5 percent for non-whites.

Unemployment rates for white adult men and white adult women in the 20 areas averaged 1.9 and 3.1 percent respectively, compared to rates of 4.1 and 5.6 percent for non-whites.

For white teenagers in the areas the rate averaged 10.6 percent compared to a rate of 25.3 percent for non-white youths.

Together the 20 areas accounted for 30 percent of the white and 40 percent of non-white unemployment in the nation in 1968, BLS said.

The civilian labor force in the combined areas rose by about 200,000 to just over 26 million in 1968, with all but a small portion of the increase taking place in the suburbs.

BLS said that the jobless rates ranged from about 2.5 percent in Boston, Dallas, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Paterson-Clifton-Passaic and Washington to about 4.5 percent in Los Angeles-Long Beach, Pittsburgh, and San Francisco-Oakland.

The largest declines in jobless rates between 1967 and 1968 occurred in Los Angeles-Long Beach (5.6 to 4.7 percent), St. Louis (4.4 to 3.1 percent) and New York (3.7 to 3 percent).

Jobless rates increased in Washington (2.3 to 2.7 percent), Minneapolis-St. Paul (2.2 to 2.4 percent) and Cincinnati (2.8 to 2.9 percent). In Houston the rate remained unchanged at 3.3 percent. All other areas reported some lowering of their rates.

Jobless Rate Holds Steady At 3.3 Percent

(Continued from Page 1)

February job figures in other industry sectors, all seasonally adjusted, were:

Government, 12.5 million, up 55,000 from January; services, 10.8 million, up 54,000; finance, insurance and real estate, 3.4 million, up 15,000; wholesale and retail trade, 14.4 million, up 40,000; and mining, 642,000, down by about 1,000.

The civilian labor force grew by 500,000 in February to 80.4 million. Goldstein pointed out that the labor force has been growing by an average of 400,000 a month since October.

In another area, the Labor Dept. reported that average hourly earnings of rank and file workers on non-farm payrolls rose by 1 cent in February to $2.95. Average weekly earnings were up 37 cents over the month to $111.00, a new high.

The seasonally adjusted workweek for all rank-and-file workers averaged 37.8 hours in February, unchanged from January. An increase in the workweek in construction was offset by declines in manufacturing and trade.

The average workweek in manufacturing, at 40.5 hours, was down one-tenth of an hour, the fifth consecutive monthly decline on a seasonally adjusted basis.

Goldstein observed that the manufacturing workweek was at its lowest level in about a year and three-tenths of an hour below last February. He speculated that the downtrend might be due to a tapering-off in economic growth.

Bargaining Outlook:

Major 1969 Contract Talks Affect 2.4 Million Workers

More than 750 major contracts involving 2.4 million workers will be up for negotiation this year, the AFL-CIO American Federationist reports in a review of 1969 bargaining.

While the number of workers involved is less than last year's total, additional millions of union members will benefit from contract talks affecting workers in groups of less than 1,000, the magazine says in its current issue.

The article, by Economist Rudolph Oswald and Research Assistant Francis Burkhardt of the Federation's Dept. of Research, singles out the electrical manufacturing industry for major negotiations, along with the maritime, oil, West Coast lumber, men's shirt and construction industries.

Union contracts with General Electric, Westinghouse and other manufacturers of electrical goods will start expiring in August. Ten AFL-CIO unions representing some 200,000 workers recently announced they will coordinate their bargaining at GE and Westinghouse, as they did for the first time with notable success in 1966 talks.

The Federationist related also that more than 6 million additional workers—a record figure for any one year—will receive deferred wage increases in 1969 based on contracts negotiated in prior years.

These deferred increases will average 4.1 percent or 14 to 15 cents an hour, the authors write.

Deferred increases in 1969 will go primarily to workers in steel, aluminum, aerospace and the railroads, where agreements were negotiated last year, and to employes of the construction, rubber, meat packing, auto, farm equipment and trucking industries under agreements reached in 1967, the magazine reports.

The Steelworkers' basic steel contract calls for a deferred increase of 12 cents an hour on Aug. 1, plus an increment raise of three tenths of 1 cent between labor grades.

Aluminum workers are due for a 12-cent wage boost in late spring. Railroad operating and non-operating employes got a 2 percent adjustment in January and will get another 3 percent raise in July.

The article notes increases of 13 cents an hour due to 93,000 rubber workers; 11 cents an hour, plus living-cost adjustments in meat packing; a 3 percent increase plus cost of living bonuses in the aerospace and auto pacts.

Deferred increases in the construction industry, the Federationist says, will average 5 to 6 percent, with more than half of the raises for 30 cents an hour and up.

Last year, employes of the electrical manufacturing, airline and oil industries got deferred increases. These contracts are up for renegotiation in 1969, according to the article.

Other highlights of the bargaining picture:

- Wage increases negotiated in 1968 in contracts covering 1,000 workers or more averaged 7.5 percent during the first contract year, but less than that for the full contract term—typically 5.1 percent a year as against a 5 percent average annual wage gain in the previous year, 3.9 percent in 1966 and 3.3 percent in 1965.
- One million of the 4.5 million workers who won wage increases in major 1968 negotiations got hikes of 8 percent or more in the first contract year.
- The average wage adjustment for all covered workers averaged 5.5 percent in 1968, according to a Labor Dept. report.

The article says living costs measured by the Consumer Price Index rose 4.2 percent in 1968, compared with 2.8 percent a year earlier, 2.9 for 1966 and 1.7 for 1965.

The Federationist notes that "wages under many contracts negotiated in 1966 for a three-year term have barely kept even with rising prices during those years."

"Workers not covered by cost-of-living clauses had to obtain at least a 4.2 percent pay increase in 1968 to keep pace with price increases. Wage gains . . . were quickly diminished by higher prices for housing, clothing, medical services and public transportation."

The magazine reports that union members, to keep pace with rising costs and to advance their buying power, sought and gained larger pay increases in 1968 than in recent years, more cost-of-living escalator clauses, better pensions and greater health protection.

NAM Pushes Attack On Federal Spending

The chief economist of the National Association of Manufacturers called for a heavy slash in government spending as the nation's prime weapon against inflation.

The NAM spokesman, George G. Hagedorn, testified before the Joint Economic Committee of Congress the day after AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany presented labor's position. Meany charged that swollen profits have been the chief cause of higher prices and warned that heavy-handed anti-inflation measures could throw the economy into a recession.

Hagedorn appeared to disagree both with the AFL-CIO and with Nixon Administration officials who have agreed that it would be dangerous to employment and prosperity for the government to jam hard on the economic brakes.

He professed not to know what the Administration means by the term "gradualism" but said that if it means taking a longer time to change the direction of the economy, he is against it.

Hagedorn said he blames government spending more than union-negotiated wage increases for inflation, but he said prices are higher than they would be if there were no unions.

The NAM official discounted the need for tax reform and said it would be unfair to change the rules for high-income taxpayers who "have made their long-term plans" on the basis of the present law.

The best thing that could be done, he suggested, is to cut the federal budget sharply enough so that the 10 percent tax surcharge could be eliminated and still leave a surplus.

The Chamber of Commerce appeared to take a different tone than the NAM. Its chief economist, Carl M. Madden, endorsed what he termed "the new Administration's determination to fight inflation persistently, but not so drastically as to raise the overall unemployment rate excessively."

He did not directly spell out the jobless rate he would consider "excessive." But in one section of his statement, Madden said that as a result of government fiscal restraints "belatedly started in mid-1968" and "monetary restraints tardily applied by the Federal Reserve in late fall," the price rise this year "may be held to about 3 percent." This, he said, would still be too high, although a reduction from last year.

As for joblessness, he predicted, "the unemployment rate will probably rise slightly over 4 percent in the second half of the year." That would be a significant increase in the number of people without jobs over the current 3.3 percent rate.

AN INTER-REGIONAL TONE is added to the installation of officers of the Greater Washington Central Labor Council as Pres. Miles Stanley, right, of the West Virginia AFL-CIO administers the oath. Among the labor officials being sworn in are Sec. George W. Apperson, second from left, and Pres. J. C. Turner. They will serve two-year terms.

For Public Employe Strikes:

Penalties Stiffened In N.Y. Taylor Law

(Continued from Page 1)

able, but will in the final analysis prove self-defeating."

"This is the most repressive labor legislation ever passed in the free world," Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes asserted. "And like all repressive laws, it will create chaos in labor-management relations."

Pres. David Selden of the Teachers labeled it "out and out class legislation" that will force "teachers and other public employes . . . to enter in politics on a much more extensive and far wider scale than in the past."

Theodore W. Kheel, who has mediated numerous public employe disputes, said that the revisions "will do more harm than good." He added that they were rushed through the legislature "without an opportunity for deliberation, debate or public comment."

Twice in the week the bill was slated for action, the New York Times sharply criticized the measure, warning that the Taylor law's predecessor, the Condon-Wadlin law, had been a failure for the 20 years of its existence because penalties on individuals were so severe they were unenforceable. To reinstate such penalties, it said, "may give legislators an outlet for their frustrations but it will never bring civil service peace."

It called the measure "a legislative monstrosity" and the penalties "so punitive that they may prove self-defeating."

The New York Post tagged the bill "ill conceived" and a "mindless regression" deserving a "blunt gubernatorial veto."

That was an idle hope, however, since the terms of the bill had been hammered out during weeks of conferences that included Rockefeller, members of his staff and Republican legislative leaders.

However, calling up the bill Mar. 7 was delayed more than five hours as the leadership worked frantically to round up the required 76 Republican votes necessary for passage in the Assembly. In the final 76 to 71 tally, two GOP members voted with the Democrats in the negative. With a comfortable party majority, no problem was met with passage in the Senate, though one Republican joined the Democrats in the 32 to 25 vote.

Debate on the bill took more than three hours in each house, with proponents belatedly revealing that to meet specific inconsistencies readily seen in the bill, additional bills were to be introduced, passed and sent to the governor.

Normally a bill requiring amendment is changed in committee or from the floor. This requires, however, a delay of several days before a vote. But the emphasis was so much on speedy passage that it was announced that "chapter amendments"—bills to correct the basic bill—would be scheduled for action shortly.

'Threat' Vanishes

The speed had initially been invoked because of a threat of a strike by an unaffiliated organization of state employes set for Mar. 13. But the strike had been called off days before the bill was to be acted on.

Since the Taylor law enactment, there had been two strikes by New York City union teachers and one by sanitation workers. Last November the first work stoppage by state employes, involving non-professional personnel in mental hospitals, occurred as the workers insisted on the right—until then not given them—to choose their own union to bargain for them rather than an organization designated by the governor.

STRIKING MEMBERS of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Local 963 in Fort Wayne, Ind., maintain a long record of service to others by bringing free coffee to 2,000 auto license applicants. Local members boosted dues $1 a month during 10-month nationwide copper strike for strike assistance, also raised food for IUE strikers at Hastings-on-Hudson last year. Local 963 struck Phelps Dodge Magnet Wire plant Jan. 15 to protest regressive contract proposals. Full support has been voted by nine other unions in the AFL-CIO Wire Mill Council.

National Maritime Union Re-Elects Curran Slate

New York—Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union since its founding in 1937, was returned to office at the head of a Curran-endorsed slate of 95 candidates in a union-wide secret ballot referendum.

All candidates on the Curran slate were elected for terms ending in 1973. Most had been previously elected in 1966 but a special election was ordered by a court at the request of the Labor Dept.

The Honest Ballot Association, which supervised the election, reported that Curran got 17,395 votes to 3,747 for Richard J. Haake and 1,144 for two other candidates.

Sec.-Treas. Shannon J. Wall drew 13,507 votes to 7,317 for James Morrissey, who had challenged the 1966 results.

Also on the winning slate were Vice Presidents Mel Barisic, James J. Martin and Rick S. Miller, returned by a 3-1 margin over three opponents; National Representatives Robert Nesbitt, Peter J. Bocker and Leo Strassman; New York port agent Joseph Labaczewski and 13 other port agents; 14 field patrolmen and 59 port patrolmen.

Losing candidates in the 1966 election objected to a provision in the NMU constitution that candidates for the eight top national offices must have had prior service in some union office. A federal court ordered new balloting but made no finding of wrong-doing by the union or its officers, the NMU pointed out.

The losing candidate for secretary-treasurer said he would ask Labor Sec. George P. Shultz to "review" the balloting.

Service Union Wins Two Key Georgia Votes

Atlanta—The Service Employes recently won two organizing efforts representing breakthroughs for the union in Georgia.

SEIU Local 579 won recognition from United Building Maintenance Service when it presented cards signed by most of the firm's 40 employes. Then it negotiated an initial contract—its first in the Atlanta area—providing wage hikes of about 30 cents an hour over a three-year period; seven paid holidays, and a workweek of five consecutive days, with time and a half pay for overtime on the sixth day, double time on the seventh.

Most workers had been getting the federal minimum wage per hour, SEIU Southern Rep. Val Cox said. One group of workers —utility men—will be raised from $1.60 an hour to $2.

The same union won its first election in the private nursing home field and prepared to negotiate a union agreement. The vote at Faith, Hope & Charity Medical Nursing Home was 23-4 in favor of SEIU in a National Labor Relations Board tally, local Pres. William Niebarnd said. The home is at Rex, Ga., 20 miles from Atlanta.

SEIU will continue its efforts to organize an additional 1,500 janitorial workers, and nearly a dozen area nursing homes, its officers said.

Owner-Operator

Bogus Union, Growers Named in Damage Suit

(Continued from Page 1)

of AWFWA, on a nationwide tour to denounce UFWOC, its president, Cesar Chavez, and the boycott of non-union California grape growers.

Jerome Cohen, UFWOC attorney, said the John Birch Society is named because its members were involved in helping to form AWFWA and later supported it.

The court action, an amendment to a suit filed against AWFWA last September, is based on new information revealed when the organization's two top officers filed a report with the Labor Dept. to comply with the Landrum-Griffin amendments to the National Labor Relations Act.

"We had some information as a basis for the original suit, but the report gives us more information," Cohen said. "We have named a number of new defendants."

While the federal labor law's reporting requirements apply to all organizations in the labor-management field, its protective provisions do not cover farm workers.

A California law, however, specifically forbids employers to finance, dominate or control organizations ostensibly formed to represent workers. It provides for payment of damages to legitimate unions harmed by such bogus organizations.

In the Landrum-Griffin report, AWFWA Pres. Gilbert Rubio and Sec.-Treas. Shirley Fetalvero said their organization was formed at a meeting attended by Mendoza, Rubio and about 10 employers at a restaurant here last May.

Listed among those attending were John Giumarra, Sr., and John Giumarra, Jr., treasurer and general counsel respectively of Giumarra Vineyards Corp., which has led grower opposition to farm workers' unionization.

Others attending the meeting, according to the document, included Paul Marrufo, head foreman for Sabovich Bros. grape growers; Jack Pandol, another grower, and a number of accountants for growers.

"We were to tell workers not to be afraid of Chavez, to be united . . . and oppose UFWOC efforts to organize and boycott," Rubio and Miss Fetalvero said.

"This meeting and other meetings," they added, "decided AWFWA would also try to enlist workers and obtain information on UFWOC's plans and activities."

The document brought out that Mendoza and Rubio were to be paid $120 a week and that "the Giumarras" would furnish office space and supplies for Mendoza.

Arrangements were made to pay Mendoza and others in AWFWA through another organization called Mexican-American Democrats for Republican Action (MADRA).

The document lists dozens of checks ranging up to $500 which were deposited in bank accounts maintained by MADRA and AWFWA during 1968.

Among those identified as issuing the payments were California for Right to Work, many growers' corporations and a number of agricultural suppliers.

Rubio and Miss Fetalvero also reported that Giumarra Vineyards paid a salary directly to Mendoza in "an unknown amount," made "loans" to other AWFWA leaders, and provided them with gasoline for automobiles.

These were some of the activities AWFWA was set up to perform, according to the document:

- Counter-picket and "try to drown out" UFWOC members when they picketed grape growers; hold rallies for workers "to listen to speeches against Chavez;" picket advertisers of the Catholic Register which supported Chavez.
- Appear on radio, TV and the news with attacks on Chavez; "take action to halt or disrupt" UFWOC activities such as parades and picnics; circulate literature attacking UFWOC and the boycott.
- Picket stores selling New York made products after markets in that city decided not to handle California grapes and picket news media in Los Angeles for "biased coverage for Chavez."
- "Use all of the above methods to get headlines, newspaper and TV coverage with statement farm workers are not on strike and the boycott is just another trick to force the union on the workers."

The New Left

THERE ARE NEW and encouraging signs that the "new leftism" that has noisily and brazenly anointed itself as the student spokesman in the Sixties is being challenged by the democratic forces on the campuses.

Central to the "new left" approach has been a deep contempt for democracy, a non-specific anarchism that spills over into violence and a sneering dismissal of the American worker and trade union member as completely unimportant.

This approach has been neatly isolated and exposed by a Harvard undergraduate student, Steven Kelman, in an article in Commentary. He writes in part:

"One can only hope for—and work toward—the development of a trend within the student movement that will reject the middle class snobbery which has separated intellectual protests from the mundane and often inarticulate desires for change that are part of the feelings of a majority of the American people. . . . The present contemptuous dismissal of the trade union movement, a force without which any progressive majority is simply numerically impossible, is a good example of the loss of perspective.

"One need not believe—as I do—that the labor movement is the major mass force for social progress in our society to recognize that during the past decade American left intellectuals, following the lead of some of the most conservative interests in America, have underestimated the role of the labor movement in social change.

"While foundation officials, clergymen, and even businessmen are viewed as capable of being won to the cause through moral and intellectual appeals, trade union officials are viewed as 'fat cats' with vested interests and ingrained conservative prejudices. This view has allowed Nelson Rockefeller to appear as a spokesman for the 'new politics,' while making George Meany a leading symbol of reaction.

"But more importantly it has led to a dismissal of any thoughtful discussion of the basic economic structure of the country as an obsolete vestige of the '30s. . . ."

"The 'new' student liberalism has accepted and propagated the opinion that union rank-and-file members are largely reactionaries and even 'honkies.' It has blamed rioting and crime in the Negro community on a generalized 'white racism' or, more specifically, on the police, rather than on the real estate interests, low-wage employers and political conservatives whose policies have been responsible for ghetto conditions in the first place.

"It permits those who went to high school in the suburbs or to prep school in New England to sneer 'racist' at low-income urban whites who are rightly concerned with crime, living conditions or keeping their jobs—and to cop out on the more difficult task of providing alternative answers to these problems. . . ."

"If students who are drawn to the democratic framework still hope to accomplish anything of lasting value, they will have to put forward not only alternative tactics to those of the New Left but an alternative political philosophy and social morality as well. . . ."

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: John M. Barry

Assistant Editors:

Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, March 15, 1969 No. 11

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Window Shopping

A Word Edgewise:

Bombing Halt Stories Reveal Weakness of 'Instant History'

By John P. Roche

MARCH 1968 WAS a strange month in Washington. Obviously there were great things afoot with regard to Viet Nam. Recently both Newsweek and the New York Times have attempted to reconstruct the course of events that led to Pres. Johnson's curb-the-bombing speech on Mar. 31. There is a good deal of hard data in both analyses, but they suffer from a key weakness. Lyndon Johnson is in the shadows and his principal aides are apparently engaged in a tug of war for his "mind." In addition, Dean Rusk is billed as a marginal figure whose role was essentially negative—a hawk as the story goes, stubbornly committed to bombing while the "good guys" centered in the Dept. of Defense succeeded in converting Sec. Clark Clifford to a dove position.

As is usually the case, the primary sources of these stories were those men who saw themselves as the formulators of the new policy. I believe Clifford to be one of the most intelligent men I have ever met and his part in the policy shift should not be underestimated. At the same time it should be realized that the basic components of Johnson's Mar. 31 position were in the works before Clifford became Secretary and, oddly enough in terms of Vietnamese mythology, the man who proposed them was Sec. of State Rusk.

There is a good deal of confusion about the problem of bombing North Viet Nam. This arose because the initial justification (that Hanoi would decide to negotiate to avert punishment) had simply not paid off. However, bombing was clearly valuable in tactical support of troops in I Corps, who were subjected to hit-and-run invasion through the DMZ. Bombing the panhandle of North Viet Nam was a form of mobile artillery.

Thus, if one looked at the map of North Viet Nam in military terms, he could distinguish between bombing airfields and factories near Hanoi and bombing North Vietnamese troops and supply lines near the DMZ—distinguished, that is, between strategic and tactical air power. (The Air Force would argue that the line is not that neat. In theory it is right, but experience had shown that strategic bombing of the North had not seriously affected the enemy's capabilities. World War II type saturation bombing might have made a difference, but this would have violated the ground rules of limited war and was never seriously considered by the President.)

NATURALLY, there were numerous maps of North Viet Nam around Washington with lines drawn on them—the lines being efforts to distinguish the strategic zone from the tactical. For our purposes the important one was the property of Dean Rusk, who on Mar. 2, 1968, proposed to the President that we offer to stop bombing north of the 20th Parallel to encourage negotiations. The President's response was "get on your horses" and bring in a detailed plan. On Mar. 3, Rusk returned with details and Johnson told him to present his scenario to Gen. William Westmoreland and Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker in Saigon and to our allies.

Meanwhile, on a different track, the President was moving forward with plans for a major speech on Viet Nam and the announcement of his noncandidacy. This involved constant meetings, numerous drafts, and an endless flurry of rumors. On Mar. 15, UN Ambassador Arthur Goldberg privately recommended that all bombing of the North be ended and his letter was given inch-by-inch analysis by Johnson in a long personal discussion on Mar. 20. It was also brought to the principal officials in the departments of State and Defense and was strongly opposed by both Sec. Clifford and the Joint Chiefs.

Rusk, who I suspect sometimes kept secrets from himself, apparently had not briefed his staff on his proposal and on the outcome of his meeting with the President on Mar. 3. He took off for the Pacific to handle the briefing of our allies and was replaced in the conferences by Under Secretary Nicholas Katzenbach, a strong advocate of a complete bombing halt. The groups involved in preparing the President's speech went on joyously to re-invent the wheel. The core of the speech was precisely the 20th Parallel proposal that Johnson and Rusk had worked out on Mar. 3.

What this highlights is the danger of writing "instant history." The Johnson-Rusk relationship was a crucial factor in forming policy decisions, but the two men shared a passion for secrecy. This was understandable in terms of the leakage that occurs in the Olympian levels of government, but it makes it almost impossible for historians to do an adequate job until the Johnson files are open.

Decentralization Issue:

Schools Need Central Focus To Maintain Quality, Equality

The following is excerpted from an article by Albert Shanker, president of the New York United Federation of Teachers, entitled "Quality and Equality in Education" which appears in the March 1969 AFL-CIO American Federationist.

THE SCHOOLS OF AMERICA have become the center of a great controversy which reflects the fundamental issues facing our society today. Confronted with the challenge of equality, we are being asked to provide educational excellence for all of our children and economic justice for all of our citizens—both black and white.

How we proceed on these issues is a matter of strategy about which there is presently much disagreement. There are some who wish to take the road of racial separatism, black capitalism and community control of local institutions while others, many of whom are a part of the labor movement, advocate a program of full employment and integration.

There is no better way to illustrate this difficulty than to examine the problems we have had in the field of education. We are faced in New York—and in every urban center in the country—with the massive educational retardation of the poor. Some people have found it convenient to blame individuals for this tragedy. Depending on one's point of view, it is the fault of the teachers, the parents or the children.

But I would prefer to look for the root of the problem in a social system that produces poor children and poorly-trained teachers, as well as remarkably uniform educational results in schools where these two groups predominate. Certainly, common sense should tell us that if a child is brutalized by poverty, if he must come to school without breakfast, attend class with 35 similarly impoverished children, and be taught by an inexperienced and overworked teacher—then surely that child will have difficulty learning to read and write.

And beyond common sense there is educational research, particularly James Coleman's study, "Equality of Educational Opportunity," which indicates that the socio-economic background of the child and the skill of his teacher are the two major variables that determine educational achievement.

By posing the problem in these terms, we might not only moderate the hostile climate of blame-placing which has obtained in recent years—we might also find a solution to our difficulties.

For I maintain that if poverty is a major factor which contributes to educational retardation, then we must struggle for massive social programs that will eliminate poverty; and no political and economic institution in America is in a better position to lead such a struggle than the trade union movement.

And if a poorly-trained and overworked teaching staff is a second such factor, then we must plan and carry out programs that will improve the quality and performance of that staff; and no group in the field of education is in a better position to accomplish this than organized teachers. Even if poverty persists, I believe we can make our teachers and our schools good enough to enable children to overcome its constricting and debilitating effect.

There have been major advances because of the efforts of the UFT but, of course, we have not been able to go far enough. We are still faced with a situation in which most of our poor and minority group children perform below standard in reading and arithmetic and, however much we experiment with new methods and techniques, I am afraid this situation will persist until our society is willing to make the investment of resources that will provide genuine quality education for every child.

It is not surprising, then, that in the absence of a reorientation, our children continue to fail and their parents grow increasingly frustrated and outraged. Nor should we be amazed that these emotions have given rise to a politically explosive situation which the city fathers of New York and elsewhere are searching for ways to defuse. In New York, this defusion is presently taking the form of school decentralization and I introduce this subject with these skeptical observations because I am convinced that it cannot be understood apart from the volatile political context in which it was conceived and promoted and that it is fundamentally not an educational reform but an attempt to pacify bitter emotions.

Despite the many potentially dangerous and regressive features of decentralization, some form of it appears inevitable. Therefore, I should like to propose several guidelines to help make it a creative reform.

DECENTRALIZATION must not be permitted to institutionalize racial segregation and, therefore, local districts must be few enough and large enough to contain a heterogeneous population.

Secondly, local boards should have the right to hire and fire the district superintendent, but teachers should be appointed by a central agency. Where there are grievances of parents against teachers or teachers against the local board, there should be recourse to an impartial third party (such as an ombudsman or a civilian review board) whose ruling will be binding.

And there must be a central focus for all local districts, which should include the establishment of a basic city-wide curriculum, the determination and enforcement of educational standards by a central agency and the evaluation of district performance by that agency.

Greater community participation in the schools thus can be a progressive reform. It can not only enhance the education process, but it can bring parents and teachers together into a working alliance. But if the regressive aspects of community participation and decentralization predominate, then such an alliance will be destroyed and the children will suffer.

To Add 'Cohesiveness':

AFL-CIO Studies Center Seen Stimulus to Labor Education

THE AFL-CIO education director predicted that the federation's new Labor Studies Center will be "a shot in the arm" to labor education in the United States. The center will open in the Washington, D. C., area next Labor Day.

Questioned by reporters on Labor News Conference, Walter G. Davis said the national center won't cut into the many established labor education programs now conducted by unions and colleges. But, he noted, it will give them the "cohesiveness" and stimulation they need to expand and develop even further.

Davis said the initial thrust of the Labor Studies Center will be such "tool courses" as collective bargaining, labor law and history, grievance handling and economics. He said the college-level curriculum will employ newly-developed adult education techniques.

The union educator stressed that growing and complex demands on today's labor leaders make broad-range skills and knowledge increasingly important to their maximum effectiveness, both in behalf of union members and in service in a variety of community and public programs and activities. When unions are represented by people with broad-range skills and knowledge, he asserted, there is "a more rational bargaining situation" that is "helpful to both the country and to the trade union movement."

"Many of our people have gained their expertise through experience," he said, and "we feel that today, in the complexities of our world, there is a need for more in-depth understanding of the things we are doing."

ENROLLMENT in the center—at least, in the beginning—will be limited to full-time union officers and staff, he said. Although there will be no tuition, the various unions will have to pay the living and other expenses of the students they sponsor, he said, and a program of scholarships is planned to help smaller unions participate fully in the center.

By Press Associates, Inc.

AT A RECENT MEETING of bankers, Fred Sullivan of Walter Kidde & Co. declared that becoming a business conglomerate "is the American way of business" and will soon be obligatory.

Another top conglomerate businessman predicts that in 10 years there will be only 200 major industrial companies in this country, all conglomerates.

Fortune magazine, in a lead article, reports that "the rising tide of mergers and acquisitions is beginning to stir doubt and dismay."

The magazine, one of the most widely respected in the business world, even carries a special feature, "How To Fend Off a Take-Over." It lists suggestions to help "unwilling targets," pointing out that "practically every sizable U.S. corporation, whether it realizes it or not, is under scrutiny by some other corporation as a prospective acquisition."

There have been merger movements in this country before. There was one in the 1890s and another in the 1920s. Each one lasted about a decade. The current one which started in the 1950s is not only of far longer duration but is of a volume and size that dwarfs all the others.

In 1968, for example, the number of mergers was more than 10 times greater than in 1958. Estimates by the W.T. Grimm & Co. of Chicago show that last year there were 4,462 mergers of all kinds and that the number will rise to more than 5,400 this year.

"The tide seems virtually unstoppable," Fortune says. "Even a sharp market decline, Wall Street believes, would probably stay it only for a while."

RICHARD W. McLAREN, head of the Justice Dept. Antitrust Division, broke a long silence recently in a speech before the National Industrial Conference Board in New York.

He said that the federal government should sue to block large conglomerate mergers, adding:

"I believe we can and should go after some big-company mergers of a somewhat 'pure' conglomerate nature."

During the Johnson Administration there were some differences of opinion among Justice Dept. lawyers on whether new legislation was needed to stem the conglomerate trend.

The Federal Trade Commission is currently undertaking an "in-depth" study of the problem and may come up with some recommendations for legislation.

Chairman Emanuel Celler of the House Judiciary Committee is planning hearings in May on conglomerates for his Antitrust Subcommittee. Questionnaires have been sent out to a group of conglomerates such as Intl. Telephone & Telegraph, Ling-Temco-Vought, Litton Industries and Gulf & Western.

A spokesman for the committee said it is intended that the hearings lead to legislation.

Conglomerates, which are basically altering the economic structure of the nation, must be of immediate concern to all citizens, particularly trade unionists.

When some unions negotiated industry-wide contracts it was felt that they had achieved a foundation for sound and equitable bargaining. Now, with more and more businesses moving into more and more industries, the entire pattern has been upset.

There are no laws on the statute books which make business conglomerates illegal. What organized labor is seeking is to establish coordinated bargaining committees to deal with the conglomerates on an equal basis.

This is only one part of the conglomerate problem—but for organized labor a vital part.

THE AFL-CIO LABOR STUDIES CENTER will be a "shot in the arm" to labor education all over the country, predicted Walter G. Davis, center, director of the federation's Dept. of Education, as he was questioned by Neil Gilbride, left, of the Associated Press and Alan Adams of Business Week magazine on Labor News Conference. The public service program is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on Mutual Radio.

How to Buy:

Pointers on Income Tax Filing Save Workers from Overpaying

By Sidney Margolius

THIS IS THE YEAR Congress finally may enact tax reforms. It's also the year to make sure you take all the legitimate tax-savers available when you file your own return. Because of the surtax you are paying higher taxes this year. Since the government is very generous in the loopholes allowed oilwell operators, mine owners, wealthy investors in stocks and bonds, and real-estate speculators, you can trust that it does not want you to overpay.

Unions and other spokesmen for moderate - income families have been pleading and crusading with increasing determination for reform. Presently, some very wealthy people are able to get away with little or no tax payments at all.

There even were 155 taxpayers with incomes of $200,000 a year or more who paid no federal income tax at all in 1967, including 21 who had incomes of over $1 million.

Chief victims are the families with incomes of $7,000 to $20,000 who usually pay taxes at full rates. They pay over half of all the federal income taxes. These families, in fact, shoulder heavier taxes because of the estimated $50 billion lost through various loopholes and special dispensations.

Thus, you will overpay twice if you don't take the trouble to learn all the tax savers available.

Especially pay attention to these three points:

1. Choose the most suitable type of return. If you use the short form tax return 1040A merely because it's easier, you may pass up savings available only on the long form 1040. These include "sick pay" which can be excluded from taxable income under rules listed in the tax instructions; "moving expenses" also under specific rules; "employe business expenses" if your work requires you to be away from home overnight or if working on a temporary job away from home.

Too, you can itemize deductions only on the long form. The short form allows only for the standard deductions.

2. Choose the deduction method yielding the largest total deduction. On the short form, you have a choice of the "10 percent standard deduction" or the "minimum standard." The latter allows you $200 plus $100 for each exemption listed on your return.

On the long form you also can itemize deductions. For homeowners, certainly, this is usually the best choice. But it also would pay a non-homeowner to itemize if you had large medical expenses in 1968, suffered a sizable casualty loss, gave large donations, or had other large deductible expenses.

THERE IS ONLY ONE WAY to find out; make a trial estimate of your total if you itemize, and compare it with what the 10 percent or minimum-standard allowances would give you.

3. Make sure you take all legal deductions. We won't try to list all possible deductions here, but want to call your attention to several newer ones or those sometimes overlooked:

Medical: Remember that you now can deduct one-half of the amount you pay for health-insurance premiums up to $150 without regard to the usual 3 percent limitation. You can take this deduction whether or not you have enough other medical expenses to itemize (meaning, medical expenses over 3 percent of your adjusted gross income).

The other half of your health insurance premiums, plus the excess over the $150 limit, also is deductible subject to the 3 percent limitation. Keep in mind that you can include all hospital and medical insurance bills, including your payments towards any employer or union-provided health insurance, and also, the medical payments portion of your auto insurance premium. (That's a fast tip you probably won't get elsewhere.)

Work Expenses: You can, of course, deduct union dues; expenses of distinctive work uniforms, special safety clothing and shoes; tools and repairs; vocational education expenses (under specified rules); technical books and publications, etc.

Contributions: As well as cash, you can deduct the fair market value of goods given to charities and churches, and out-of-pocket expenses and costs of uniforms for serving qualified organizations such as Scouts, hospitals, schools, Red Cross, etc.

And Keep In Mind: Other potential deductions include other taxes you pay; interest and finance charges on mortgages, loans and installment debts (within specified limits); child and disabled-dependent care (by working women and sometimes men, but within limits); theft insurance.

Copyright 1969 by Sidney Margolius

FINANCIAL AID is extended to the striking farm workers and their grape boycott as Pres. S. Frank Raftery, right, of the Painters presents a $1,000 check to Vice Pres. Andrew Imutan of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee. Two members of the Painters' executive board, which voted the contribution, take part in the presentation.

Terms Defined:

Labor Dept. Criteria Applied to the 'Poor'

THERE ARE SO MANY conflicting definitions of what the term "disadvantaged" means that the U.S. Dept. of Labor has come up with its own definition of the word as it is applied in federal manpower programs.

The department describes a "disadvantaged person" as a "poor" person who does not have suitable employment and who is either (1) a school dropout, (2) minority member, (3) under 22 years of age, (4) over 45, or (5) handicapped.

"Poor" is described as referring to a person who is a member of a family which receives cash welfare payments, or whose annual net income in relation to family size and location does not exceed the following criteria:

Family Size	Income Non-Farm	Income Farm
1	$1,600	$1,100
2	2,100	1,500
3	2,600	1,800
4	3,300	2,300
5	3,900	2,800
6	4,400	3,100
7	4,900	3,400
8	5,400	3,800
9	5,900	4,100
10	6,400	4,500
11	6,900	4,800
12	7,400	5,200
13 or more	7,900	5,500

A family consists of one or more persons living in a single household who are related to each other by blood, marriage or adoption. An individual living alone or in group quarters is considered a family.

People who do not have suitable employment are defined as the unemployed, the underemployed, and persons hindered from seeking work.

Unemployed persons are those civilians who have no employment and are available for work, and have tried to get a job within at least the past four weeks.

'Underemployed' Defined

Underemployed persons are those working below their skill capacity, or who are or have been notified they will be working less than full-time, or those who have received notice they will be unemployed because their skills are becoming obsolete.

Persons hindered from seeking work are defined as those who are not seeking work but who would enter the labor force if given appropriate assistance in overcoming barriers to employment.

Examples of such persons are those who would be working or looking for a job if they thought jobs, transportation or child care facilities were available; or those who do not seek employment because of their attitudes or motivational problems.

Members of minority groups could be Negroes, American Indians, Japanese, Chinese, Filipinos, Koreans, Polynesians, Indonesians, Hawaiians, Aleuts, Eskimos, Mexican Americans, Puerto Ricans and other people with Spanish surnames.

A handicapped worker is one who has a physical, mental, or emotional impairment or chronic condition which could limit work activities.

Soup to Nonsense:

Bit of Superstition Haunts All, Whether They Admit It or Not

By Jane Goodsell

I FEEL ABOUT superstitions the way I feel about ghosts. I don't believe in them exactly, but I'm not a bit sure I'm right. I wouldn't dream of spending a night in a house that's supposed to be haunted.

Neither can I see any point in walking under a ladder when it's just as easy—well, almost as easy—to walk around it. In fact, I distrust people who do make a point of walking under ladders. There is something unnatural about such self-assured cockiness. Either these individuals are insensitive clods who fancy themselves immune to the vagaries of fortune; or else they are show-offs who feel compelled to prove themselves superior to the rest of us who sensibly avoid taking unnecessary risks.

Unquestionably, some people are more superstitious than others. Not only do they harbor more superstitions but they are unembarrassed about admitting to them. I have a neighbor who has neatly and directly solved the problem of Friday the 13th. She simply spends the day in bed.

I did once go to the dentist on Friday the 13th because I was unaware that it was. When the dentist complimented me on my derring-do in keeping the appointment, I couldn't very well grab my coat and rush out. Well, I could have, I guess, but I'd have felt pretty silly. Still, it was what all my instincts alerted me to do. And rightly so. He found three cavities and a filling which had to be replaced.

I KNOW A PHYSICIST who not only seats 13 at his dinner table, but announces this fact lest it escape the attention of his guests. He has lost a number of friends by his lack of concern for their feelings and, if you ask me, it serves him right. Still, I was willing to excuse his behavior on the ground that, being a scientist, he is irrationally rational. Then one day, while lunching across the room from him in a restaurant, I saw him tossing spilled salt over his shoulder. Can you beat it?

The thing to remember is that we must treat other people's superstitions as protectively as we treat our own. Yet, even with the best intentions in the world, it isn't always possible to avoid mishaps.

Fund Gap Cited:

Strong Bill Pressed On Water Pollution

The AFL-CIO called on Congress to pass "the strongest possible legislation" to curb water pollution.

Action is needed now, AFL-CIO Economist George Taylor stressed, before the pollution of the nation's water supply becomes completely unmanageable. Taylor testified before both the House and Senate Public Works Committees.

The two committees are considering similar bills to expand the Federal Water Pollution Act to deal with contamination of waterways by ships and oil wells, including off-shore drilling of the type that spewed an oil slick bigger than the state of Rhode Island off the coast of Santa Barbara, Calif.

One of the legislative proposals would provide a new method of federal financial help to communities to build and modernize sewage disposal plants. It would involve federal underwriting and purchase of municipal bonds. This would enable immediate starts on a backlog of projects, but spread the cost over a number of years.

Taylor said the AFL-CIO supports this concept as "a temporary stopgap" since there appears to be no likelihood this year that Congress will close the gap between the amount authorized for the anti-pollution program and the money actually appropriated.

The 1966 water pollution legislation contemplated a steady increase in federal grants for sewage treatment plants, with a $450 million authorization for the 1968 fiscal year, and $1 billion for the 1970 fiscal year, which begins next July 1.

The actual budget requests and appropriations have been far below the amount authorized—$203 million in fiscal 1968, $214 million in fiscal 1969, and the same amount in the fiscal 1970 budget requests.

This gap has already "done great damage to the national goals" of the program, Taylor testified.

As an example of the urgency of the water crisis, Taylor cited a federal report on pollution of Lake Erie, and gave this summary of its findings:

"Every possible source of man-made pollution—silt, chemicals, human wastes, garbage and trash, phosphorus and other nutrients, uncontrolled dredging—is slowly killing Lake Erie. Thermal pollution and oil and gas drilling are added threats, together with pesticides and radioactive substances."

Taylor warned that "this plague is spreading to Lake Michigan and will inevitably pass on to the other Great Lakes."

Because "nature has put a limit on America's water resources," the answer lies in prevention of pollution, "not merely ameliorative efforts after the fact, like cleaning up oil spills."

Chances of a strong water pollution control bill appear to have been enhanced by the nationwide outcry over the off-shore oil leakage.

Last year, when business groups lobbied heavily against strengthening the pollution control program, both the Senate and House passed separate bills which died with adjournment. On the final day of the 90th Congress, the House rejected Senate amendments which would have extended pollution controls to off-shore oil installations and sent the measure back to the Senate. But when the Senate adjourned two hours after the House acted, the bill had still not reached the Senate chamber.

BRIEFING SESSION on labor's role in the nation's capital is held at AFL-CIO headquarters for members of the Vocational Industrial Clubs of America, in Washington on VICA's fourth annual visit to Congress, labor and business. From left are, Adviser Dominic S. Catalano of the Burgard High School chapter of VICA in Buffalo, N.Y.; Stuart P. Brock of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, and four Burgard students—Douglas Goston, VICA Regional Vice Pres. William Fuller, Randal Litke and John Juszkiewicz. Funds for the trip were raised with the aid of Buffalo AFL-CIO Pres. George Wessel and unions including the Meat Cutters, Postal Clerks and Printing Pressmen. Wessel is himself a graduate of Burgard.

Antitrust Ruling Upheld Against Tucson Papers

The Supreme Court has sustained an antitrust judgment against two newspapers in Tucson, Ariz., with a decision that may have far-reaching repercussions.

The court, 7-1, ruled that it was illegal for the evening Citizen and the morning Star to join in fixing advertising and subscription rates and pooling profits.

Such an agreement, the court said, violated the Sherman Antitrust Act's bans on unreasonable restraint of trade and monopolies "beyond peradventure of doubt."

Although the decision applied directly to the two newspapers, it may force the Justice Dept. to decide whether to seek antitrust action against newspapers in San Francisco, Birmingham, Albuquerque, Salt Lake City and many other cities with similar agreements.

In a friend of the court brief in support of the Tucson newspapers, the American Newspaper Publishers Association said that newspapers in more than 20 other cities "have a vital interest" in the outcome of the case.

Justice William O. Douglas, writing the court's opinion, said that "the only real defense" available to the two newspapers was to prove that the Citizen was a "failing" newspaper when the agreement was made in 1940.

But, he added, there was no evidence that owners ever tried to sell the Citizen or were anywhere near the brink of failure.

In consolidations such as the one in Tucson, the court said, it must be shown that prior to the consolidation substantial efforts were made to sell the alleged "failing" company to a noncompetitor and that the efforts failed.

The Justice Dept. filed suit against the Tucson agreement in 1965 after the Citizen acquired the Star and the two papers were merged. The Arizona U.S. District Court found the newspapers had violated both the Sherman and Clayton Acts. Under the Clayton Act, it ordered the Star be reestablished as an independent newspaper. That ruling wasn't appealed, so the only issue before the Supreme Court was the Sherman Act violation.

After the Justice Dept. won the case in the lower court, former Sen. Carl Hayden (D-Ariz.) introduced a bill to exempt the Tucson agreement and similar consolidations from antitrust prosecution.

Similar legislation has been introduced in the new Congress.

The Newspaper Guild, the Typographical Union and other newspaper unions, backed by the AFL-CIO, have opposed the measure on grounds that it would help destroy competing newspapers and ease the way to local monopolies.

The unions have called instead for a law to require that a truly failing paper be offered at a fair market price to a purchaser committed to continuing independent publication before it could be sold or merged with a competitor.

Justice Dept. 'Time Study' Irks Lawyers

Management sometimes works in wondrous ways, as nearly 1,200 Justice Dept. attorneys in Washington are discovering.

The government lawyers have been ordered to keep a running record of how they spend each 12-minute segment of the day. Then, before wash-up time, they are supposed to consult a code book and summarize their day's work in computer language on another tally sheet.

A 10-page memo from the new deputy attorney general, Richard G. Kleindienst, broke the news to the lawyers. They were then called in groups to a 90-minute "no questions allowed" briefing session for further explanation of the complexities of the new program.

The reason for it all, as given at one of the briefing sessions, "is to develop a body of data to prove to Congress that the department is understaffed."

This, of course, gave rise to speculation that the thousands of man-hours involved in devising, explaining, record-keeping, tabulating and computerizing might suggest just the opposite to congressional budget-watchers.

Rep. Charles S. Joelson (D-N.J.), who is a member of the House Appropriations subcommittee that handles the Justice Dept. money bill, seemed to be of this opinion. He described the time study program as "nonsense."

The department's lawyers aren't organized, but a federal workers' union spoke up for them anyway.

Pres. John F. Griner of the American Federation of Government Employes denounced the time sheet program as "an undignified nuisance imposed upon a group of hard-working federal employes."

Cambodia Becomes 119th ILO Member

Geneva—Cambodia has become a member of the Intl. Labor Organization, bringing the membership of the United Nations agency to 119 countries, ILO Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse announced.

The new membership became effective when Cambodia accepted obligations of the ILO constitution.

Tax-Dodge Curb Urged For 'Runaway' Shipping

Positive federal action to halt the flight of American-owned shipping to foreign registry was proposed by Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr., (D-N.J.), at a luncheon sponsored by the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.

"As a minimum," Thompson declared, "we ought to set a high price on 'runaway' shipping; as a maximum, we ought to work to have these vessels restored to American registry."

He said this goal could be at least partially accomplished by closing present tax loopholes which allow American companies that register their ships abroad to escape paying U.S. income taxes. Thompson voiced support for legislation to achieve this goal introduced by Rep. James J. Howard (D-N. J.), adding:

"Perhaps in this way—by raising the ante on these 'runaway' operators, we can take some of the 'convenience' out of this scheme of building, registering and crewing their ships abroad.

"At least we will force them to pay some of the cost of running the government — and the tax revenue which results could all be earmarked for the rebuilding of the American fleet which they have helped to destroy.

"And perhaps it will help convince these operators that there would be more wisdom in bringing their ships back to American-flag registry where they belong."

Thompson expressed concern over a recent report published by the Maritime Administration which disclosed that, in terms of carrying capacity, the "runaway-flag" fleet is now larger than the U.S.-flag fleet —16.5 million deadweight tons as compared to only 15.3 million.

He acknowledged that, in terms of numbers of ships, the American fleet is larger, but emphasized that the "runaways" are larger, newer and faster. "Four out of five American-flag ships are over 20 years of age," the congressman continued, which means "that they very soon will be obsolete."

While American shipbuilding is virtually at a standstill, the American firms whose ships are registered abroad have another 68 vessels, with an additional 9.5 million deadweight ton carrying capacity, under construction or on order—and, Thompson observed "all of them to be built in foreign shipyards."

He also called for a step-up in American ship construction, declaring:

"If we can find the endless billions of dollars that are needed for other programs like space exploration, then we can find the dollars that are necessary to save our fleet from total destruction."

He urged that prompt attention be given to a new maritime program that would concentrate on development of vessels "built in this country, registered in this country, and crewed by seafarers from this country," and stressed that it be "fair and equitable to all segments of this industry," instead of serving just "a few selected companies."

Raids Rebuffed By Two Unions In Los Angeles

Los Angeles—Two affiliates of the AFL-CIO and the Los Angeles-Orange Counties Organizing Committee defeated attempts to destroy them in recent raids, the committee reported to AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher.

The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers retained their bargaining rights in a decertification attempt at the Packard Bell Electronics Corp. here, a division of the giant Teledyne Corp. The vote in a National Labor Relations Board election was IUE 396, no union 299, with 826 eligible to vote.

The American Bakery & Confectionery Workers beat back a double raid by the expelled Bakery & Confectionery Workers and a shop union at the Dobbs-Pizza division of the Fairmont Foods Co. at Long Beach, Calif. With 145 workers eligible to vote, the result was ABC 114, B&C 0, shop union 19, no union 1.

IUE and ABC officers expressed appreciation to the staffs of both unions, to the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers for staff assistance, the AFL-CIO subregional office and the two-county organizing committee.

Drivers Extend Transit Strike In St. Louis

St. Louis—Bus drivers and mechanics for the public transit system here rejected a company contract offer for the second time in a week and voted to continue a strike that started Feb. 28.

Members of Transit Union Local 788, who include about 1,460 drivers and 340 mechanics, shouted down a slightly changed offer made by the Bi-State Transit System. Union officers headed by Harold A. Smith of the ATU executive board and Local 788 Pres. Harold W. Dreimeyer said the offer fell "far short" of meeting the needs of transit workers.

The strike has halted operation of 1,000 buses serving St. Louis city and county, East St. Louis, Ill., and other communities in Madison and St. Clair counties across the Mississippi River.

The rejected offer called for a 50-cent increase in wages over two years. The union had asked for wage boosts of 60 to 70 cents an hour, plus an improved pension plan and better working hours.

A major cause of the strike, the union said, is the "stretch-out" of hours. Drivers say they must work and stand by a total of 13.5 hours to earn eight hours' pay. Only drivers with high seniority can avoid working split shifts. The union wants management to reduce the split time from 13.5 hours to 10 or fewer.

Managers of Bi-State Transit, a publicly owned firm, claim the system has been operating at a loss and cannot raise wages without raising fares and reducing service. The system gets no subsidy of any kind now, they say.

The vote to reject company proposals was 1,656-44 on Mar. 5 and 1,120-152 a week later. The latest offer changed the effective dates of a 50-cent wage hike and the terms of the company proposal on fringe benefits but did not meet minimum union objectives on wages and shifts.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT providing for election of the President of the United States by direct, popular vote was urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany when he testified before the House Judiciary Committee. Welcoming Meany to the hearing is Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.).

High Court to Weigh NLRB Delayed Action

The U.S. Supreme Court has agreed to decide whether a lower court's charge of "inordinate delay" by the National Labor Relations Board justified reduction of the agency's back-pay order in a case going back nearly 15 years.

The high court will review an NLRB appeal of a decision by the 5th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in a case that grew out of a Clothing Workers' strike at a New Orleans plant of J. H. Rutter-Rex Mfg. Co. in April 1954.

In 1956, the board ruled that the strike resulted from the firm's refusal to bargain in good faith. It ordered Rutter-Rex to bargain with the union and reinstate with back pay all strikers who applied for their old jobs.

Before the NLRB order was issued, however, the strike had ended and the company and the union had arranged for the reinstatement of some, but not all, of the workers involved.

The appeals court upheld the NLRB's order in 1957, but it was not until November 1961 that the board issued a supplemental order, determining that 207 employes hadn't been reinstated and were entitled to back pay totaling about $342,700.

After the court refused a company move to block the order, there were further NLRB proceedings, and in 1966 the board decided Rutter still owed $159,000 in back pay to 171 workers through June 30, 1961, with pay for the succeeding period to be decided later.

Company Appealed

Rutter-Rex went back to court, contending it should not have to pay anything. The appeals court refused this contention. But it decided back pay should be cut off at July 1, 1959, because the board "did nothing" between 1957 and 1961.

It cited as the basis for its decision a section of the Administrative Procedure Act which says that a federal agency "shall proceed with reasonable dispatch to conclude any matter presented to it."

The NLRB pointed out that the four-year "time lag" was due to an extremely heavy caseload while manpower resources were severely limited.

In an appeal to the Supreme Court, the board also contended that neither the act nor any other law authorizes the courts to penalize a regulatory agency for delay. Further, it said, the appeals court decision penalizes the workers who have the back pay coming.

In another labor case, the Supreme Court agreed to decide whether the Railway Labor Act prohibits a railroad from changing work assignments at a time when a union is in negotiations to block such an action.

A Toledo District Court issued an injunction for the Firemen & Enginemen, now part of the United Transportation Union, restraining the Detroit & Toledo Shore Line Railroad from unilaterally assigning engine crew members to a new terminal point, and the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the injunction.

Transit Union Leader Urges Fare Elimination

Pittsburgh—Total elimination of fares on transit systems may be an ultimate need in helping cities solve "intense social problems," Pres. John M. Elliott of the Amalgamated Transit Union declared here.

"Certainly the free transportation concept is worthy of a fair try," Elliott told an international conference on urban transportation attended by transportation, government, education, labor, and management officials.

Elliott called attention to a conclusion of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders that urban disturbances have in part resulted from the frustration of ghetto dwellers who are unable to reach places where jobs are.

Free transportation, he said, would make public transportation "an instrument for economic and social equality" available to the poor, the elderly, the handicapped and "other members of our non-motorized population."

The loss of fare boxes, he suggested, could be made up for in taxes levied on a per capita basis among the residents of a metropolitan area served by a transit system.

Noting that the tax in most cases would not exceed $2 to $4 a month, he said that "in terms of the true benefits that such free transportation might provide, this additional tax burden might well be worth the price."

In his address, Elliott also said that his union takes "particular pride" in pioneering the "exact fare collection system" to relieve bus drivers and other transit operators from carrying change.

The system was first sought by the union in Washington, following the fatal shooting of a bus driver in a robbery. The idea has since been adopted in Oakland, Calif., Baltimore, Pittsburgh, and other cities.

Requiring passengers to have the exact fare and not seek change, has reduced holdups of transit systems and provided the public with safer and faster service, Elliott said.

He noted that the program, first greeted by management in Washington as a "harebrained scheme," has since won nearly unanimous approval in the cities where it has been tried.

David Obey Wins Wisconsin Primary

Wisconsin Rapids, Wis.—State Assemblyman David Obey, backed by a strong COPE endorsement, easily won the Democratic nomination for the 7th District congressional seat vacated by Melvin Laird, now Secretary of Defense.

Obey, 30, defeated two rivals in the primary and will face State Sen. Walter J. Chilsen, the Republican candidate, in the Apr. 1 special election.

To Improve Program:

Shultz Reshapes Manpower Service

(Continued from Page 1)

dozens of separate lines of supervision and communication between headquarters and field operations. Shultz quoted his assistant secretary for manpower, Arnold R. Weber, as comparing the Manpower Administration's organizational chart to "a wiring diagram for a perpetual motion machine."

The Ruttenberg-Wirtz reorganization was held up after opposition developed from a number of state governors and employment security administrators who were concerned that it would be a step towards "federalization" of employment service operations.

Shultz said his new reorganization has been discussed with all interested groups, including governors, congressional leaders, state employment security administrators, labor, veterans and business organizations.

The reorganization, which does not require congressional action, goes into effect immediately at the Washington level and just one week later for field operations.

These are among its main features:

At the top level, the assistant secretary for manpower will direct policy, while a separate manpower administrator will serve under him as operating director of the program. Both jobs had previously been held by the same person.

There will also be a deputy manpower administrator for employment security, thus helping to overcome some of the state fears that this function would be swallowed up in the federal bureaucracy.

As was contemplated in the Ruttenberg reorganization plan, all employment, work-experience and training programs will be consolidated in a single operation. Its new title is the U.S. Training & Employment Service. The existing employment service carries the initials USES; the new initials will be similar, USTES. It will encompass the major programs of the old U.S. Employment Service and the Bureau of Work-Training Programs.

A completely separate Unemployment Insurance Service will operate independently of the USTES.

The present Veterans Employment Service and Farm Labor Service will retain their identities but come under the USTES. The Farm Labor Service will be given a new title as the Farm Labor & Rural Manpower Service.

The Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training will be kept intact in the Manpower Administration, with its own regional offices and state and local repersentatives.

Apart from the separation of policy and operating direction of the program, many of the differences from the previous proposal were minor, sometimes just a matter of semantics. But they helped persuade state officials that the goal was efficiency rather than a federal takeover.

Nixon's statement on the reorganization added that the action "opens the door to reorganization of the Job Corps, and an elimination of those phases of the program which have proved inefficient and ineffective in meeting the problem of job training."

When asked about the future of the Job Corps, which will be brought under the Labor Dept., Shultz said he is not yet ready to announce specifics, that future plans are still under discussion. He said the Administration will try to retain the "good points" of the Job Corps program, while discarding portions that have not worked out.

Three Appointed To AFL-CIO Staff

Two new staff members have joined the AFL-CIO Dept. of Public Relations and a new legislative representative has been named to the federation's Dept. of Legislation.

Joining the legislative staff is Richard D. Warden, whose most recent position was deputy director of the Office for Civil Rights in the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. Warden is a former state editor of the Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune, where he was a member of the Newspaper Guild. He has served on the staffs of Sen. Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.), and Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.).

The new public relations staffers are Richard E. Greenwood and Mrs. Susan Ellis.

Greenwood was press secretary to Sen. Carl Hayden (D-Ariz.) for four years. Before that he worked as a reporter in Phoenix and was executive secretary of the Polk County AFL-CIO in Des Moines, Ia., in 1961-62.

Mrs. Ellis was a reporter on the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner and joined her fellow Newspaper Guild members in the strike which began in December 1967 and is still continuing. She has also worked as a television newswriter.

Labor Backs FCC Rule On Broadcast Rebuttal

(Continued from Page 1)

troversial issue of public importance, an attack is made upon the honesty, character, integrity or like personal qualities of an identified person or group."

It exempts a broad range of programs, including newscasts and news commentary.

The FCC brief warned that a Supreme Court decision invalidating its personal attack rule would also act to undermine the long-standing "fairness doctrine" which requires that more than one side of controversial issues be presented by broadcasting stations.

Its brief dealt also with a companion case before the Supreme Court, involving the refusal of Station WGCB in Red Lion, Pa., to provide free time to author Fred J. Cook after he was viciously attacked on the right-wing Christian Crusade program of Rev. Billy James Hargis.

In effect, this case is a specific example of the personal attack rule even though the FCC order to the Red Lion station preceded the rule. Actually the general rule was an outgrowth of the controversy over the Red Lion case..

In the Red Lion case, a different federal appellate court upheld the authority of the FCC to insist on the right of reply to a personal attack. Thus the Supreme Court has two conflicting appellate court decisions involving the same basic principle.

In arguing for the right of reply, the AFL-CIO brief stressed that "radio and television stations are not the private preserve of the licensees. . . . The airwaves cannot, consistent with the Constitution, be made the exclusive domain of those in the business of broadcasting."

Wide Gap Cited:

Full Funding Urged For '68 Housing Act

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan appealed to Congress to close "an enormous gap" between its legislative promise and its funding performance in enactment of the 1968 Housing Act.

Keenan also advanced labor's program to "shelter residential construction from the credit squeeze and excessive interest rates" in an address to the 38th National Housing Conference in Washington.

The two-day conference, attended by more than 400 delegates, adopted a series of resolutions further emphasizing the need for fully funding the law and reducing mortgage interest rates.

Sessions were addressed by a number of leaders in government, including Sec. of Housing & Urban Development George Romney; Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.) and Sen. John J. Sparkman (D-Ala.), chairmen of the House and Senate Banking Committees.

Most of the sessions centered on the new law, which authorized $5.3 billion in federal expenditure as a start toward a 10-year goal of six million housing units for low and moderate income families.

It was repeatedly noted, as the AFL-CIO Executive Council recently pointed out, that only about one-third of the authorized funds in the law have thus far been appropriated.

Concern over "this failure to match the promise with performance" was stressed by Keenan, who is secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. He also is chairman of AFL-CIO Housing Committee and serves on the NHC's board of directors.

"The need for decent housing is at the heart of the crisis in our cities," he said. "The declaration of intention made by the law must be made good through its fulfillment."

To "shelter" residential construction from tight credit and high interest rates, Keenan proposed:

Repeal of the 7 percent tax credit for business investment to allow channeling of more funds into home building; repeal of a double depreciation provision on new construction except low and moderate rental housing; development of government-backed mortgage bonds; and a directive from HUD to the Federal National Mortgage Association to aid low and moderate income housing at the lowest possible interest rate.

Romney, who brought his top staff officials with him to the conference, promised to fight for full funding of the law. He defended his recent action in increasing FHA interest rate from 6.75 to 7.5 percent as a necessary move to slow down inflation. At the same time, he said, the increase should be considered "temporary" and removed as soon as possible.

Patman sharply criticized the interest hike, charging the secretary with "falling for a bunch of high interest nonsense from one of the Republican whiz kids somewhere in the Administration."

He urged Pres. Nixon to seek Federal Reserve Board compliance with statutes that give it authority to purchase housing mortgages in the open market. If the board won't comply, he added, Nixon should issue an executive order requiring it to do so.

He suggested that Congress also consider removing some of the board's present powers and turn them over to the Federal Home Loan Bank Board so that it might increase the supply of credit in the housing market.

The Texas lawmaker spoke at NHC's annual banquet, where he was presented with a plaque honoring his "invaluable leadership and support for far-reaching programs for housing and community development."

Sparkman said there must be no doubt about the nation's capacity to meet the goal of the 1968 law of "a decent home and suitable living environment for every American family."

Pledging to press for full funding, he said "There was not much use in passing the law unless there is a follow-up with adequate appropriations and effective administration."

The conference elected two labor representatives as new members of its board. They are Sec.-Treas. Martin J. Ward of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters and Pres. Peter J. Brennan of the New York Building & Construction Trades Council.

Among other board members are Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Presidents Edward J. Leonard of the Plasterers, John H. Lyons of the Iron Workers, S. Frank Raftery of the Painters; and Sec. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Housing Committee.

RESOLUTIONS adopted by the National Housing Conference in Washington are discussed by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, left, who addressed the conference, and William J. Guste, Jr., a Louisiana state senator and chairman of NHC's resolutions committee. Both are on NHC's board.

OLDER WORKERS and retired workers have a tremendous potential for activity that should be more widely utilized, Sec.-Treas. Matthew DeMore of the Machinists and Treas. Peter Terzick of the Carpenters tell first meeting of AFL-CIO Technical Committee on Older and Retired Workers. From left are Mrs. Shirley Amos of the AFL-CIO staff, DeMore, Terzick, Dir. Bert Seidman of the federation's Dept. of Social Security, partly hidden, and Mrs. Marjorie Mueller, associate research director of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

Needs of Older Workers, Retirees Aired by Special Panel on Aging

The AFL-CIO and its unions are becoming increasingly aware of the special needs of older members, and will continue to stress programs for the over-45 group both before and after retirement, a special AFL-CIO committee reported.

The nation has 19 million retirees and over-65 individuals, many living on small social security benefits alone, members learned at the first meeting of the AFL-CIO Technical Committee on Older and Retired Workers. By 1980 it will have 34 million workers aged 45 and over, and 24 million over 65.

The committee was established by Federation Pres. George Meany in December with AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman as coordinator. Representatives of more than a dozen unions attended the first session, presided over by Treas. Peter Terzick of the Carpenters.

Speakers at the day-long meeting included Meany, Sec.-Treas. Matthew DeMore of the Machinists, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew Biemiller, Assistant COPE Dir. Joseph Rourke, Assistant Labor Secretaries Arnold Weber and William Usery, Dir. William Hutton of the National Council of Senior Citizens, and William E. Oriol, staff director of the Special Senate Committee on Aging.

Meany emphasized labor's concern for the needs of older workers. He said "I can remember when we didn't have this concern —a worker was just fired when he got too old, and not given a pension or anything else."

Weber reported that the nation's manpower program needs older workers, and that while increasing age brings problems, it also provides assets in the form of greater skills, discipline and the advantages of seniority.

One of the greatest achievements of the labor movement, he said, was its work in helping build strong pension plans—a movement that "became a revolution in my time."

He urged employers to help develop a "second career" for older workers to provide for transferability of skills, and to avoid layoffs.

Usery said the Labor Dept. welcomes the aid of organized labor in spreading knowledge of the new law forbidding discrimination against any worker because of age. The AFL-CIO, he said, has given long and thoughful attention to the needs of older workers because the cost of disregarding such a worker's employment potential is high "not only in human terms, but in dollars."

DeMore reported that the IAM has helped organize retiree clubs for more than 20,000 of its 75,000 retired members, and is in the process of organizing clubs for 31 local unions representing an additional 5,000 retirees.

"There is no group more enthusiastic in doing a job their union asks them to do," he said.

Other active retiree groups were reported by Vice Pres. Matthew Schoenwald of the Ladies' Garment Workers; James Greenwood of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, and James O'Brien of the Steelworkers.

Oriol said the Committee on Aging, headed by Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr., (D-N.J.) has scheduled a series of hearings in 1969 on the economics of aging; on housing, the needs of Mexican-American citizens, health and other areas of interest to older workers and retirees.

The income gap between the employed worker and the retiree is getting steadily larger, he reported.

Training Center Readies Workers for Retirement

Amherst, Mass.—The University of Massachusetts Labor Relations & Research Center has begun a program to help retiring workers deal with health, financial, housing, leisure time and other problems.

Backed by $41,256 from the Administration on the Aging, of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, the labor center is conducting a two-year pilot project in pre-retirement training for a group of trade union members and spouses in the Greater Springfield area.

The target group includes those persons between the ages of 62 and 64 who are members of local unions affiliated with the Pioneer Valley Labor Council of Springfield and the central labor unions in Westfield, Holyoke and Northampton. The central labor bodies assist in the recruitment.

Prof. Harvey L. Friedman, assistant director of the Labor Relations & Research Center, is principal investigator for the project, and Bernard Moreau, a longtime member of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters and president of the Hampshire County Building Trades Council, is project director.

Planned are three training programs running concurrently on different days of the month, two in Springfield and the third in another section of the area. Each program involves eight once-a-month two-hour sessions for 30 union members and their spouses.

The program will include briefings on Medicare, social security, union retirement income, consumer problems and general finances; instruction on available community services; and information on housing, health care, nutrition and use of leisure time.

The University of Massachusetts project is the first multi-union approach to pre-retirement training. Previous programs of this type have either been by public organizations, large companies or single unions.

Luna Stresses Board Terms In Rail Dispute

Pres. Charles Luna of the AFL-CIO United Transportation Union "strongly urged" settlement of a railroad conductors' dispute on the basis of an emergency board's recommendations before a no-strike requirement expires.

Without a settlement, UTU's 12,000 conductors would be free to strike on Mar. 15, after expiration of the 30-day no-strike period required under the Railway Labor Act following a board's report.

The board recommended pay increases adding up to 10 percent over an 18-month period. It also called upon the railroads to put into a fund to correct inequities the equivalent of a 1 percent pay increase plus 5 cents per hour for each conductor.

Luna charged that in negotiations since the board reported in February the railroads have insisted on a fund that "falls far short" of the board's recommendations and is "unacceptable."

Describing the board's recommendations as "fair" to both sides, Luna added: "We cannot be held responsible if this nation reaches a crisis point simply because the railroads failed to meet their responsibilities."

In another development, the non-affiliated Locomotive Engineers said they have settled with the railroads for a 12 percent wage increase over 18 months.

Shultz Assigned:

Nixon Orders Study Of Key Labor Issues

Pres. Nixon has directed Labor Sec. George P. Shultz to "report on the advisability of establishing a labor court to help deal with labor-management problems."

The Labor Court is one of a number of proposals designed to gut the National Labor Relations Board, which employer groups have charged with being "pro-union." In the version sponsored by Sen. Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.), the NLRB would be stripped of nearly all its powers and a 15-member special court would deal with all unfair labor practice charges and union certifications.

Nixon also asked Shultz for "an evaluation and recommendations concerning the role which the Davis-Bacon Act may have played in increased construction costs."

The Davis-Bacon Act requires that prevailing wages and fringe benefits be paid on all government-financed construction. Non-union contractors have complained that it prevents them from underbidding contractors who pay union wages and benefits.

Both directives were disclosed by the White House in a tabulation of instructions Pres. Nixon has given to his Cabinet and other top Administration officials.

Sixteen of the 94 requests for policy recommendations or action went to the Secretary of Labor. Some were previously announced, such as the joint request of the Secretaries of Labor and Agriculture for recommendations on whether to bring farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act. But others were disclosed for the first time in the White House tally.

The White House announcement said that while each of the directives "shows the President's lively concern for a particular problem area, it does not necessarily mean that he will take executive action or make legislative recommendations on a specific issue in the immediate future."

Nixon also asked Shultz for:

- Recommendations concerning "the proposed increase in the minimum wage and its impact on employment opportunities."
- A report "on the deficiencies of the current system of unemployment compensation, and recommendations as to how these shortcomings can be corrected."
- Establishment of a new task force "to develop a basic policy with regard to public employes' labor disputes."
- Recommendations on a pilot program to encourage the unemployed to move to locations where jobs exist.
- Recommendations on new occupational safety legislation.
- Recommendations on "possible amendments" to the Pension & Welfare Plan Disclosure Act, in cooperation with the Secretary of Commerce.
- Together with the Secretary of Housing & Urban Development, "an appraisal of the present supply of skilled construction workers and the membership practices of construction unions, together with recommendations concerning this problem."

Instructions to other Cabinet-level officials included reports on federal tax-sharing with states and cities, tax incentives to encourage business programs in poverty areas, social security changes including an automatic cost-of-living adjustment, and an analysis of Medicare.

CHRISTENING CEREMONIES for the Seafarers' schoolship "Charles S. Zimmerman" were addressed by the Ladies' Garment Workers' vice president it honors. Formerly the Mt. Vernon excursion ship, the vessel was renamed to honor Zimmerman's long efforts for civil rights and social justice. The ship will be used to train seamen at SIU's Harry Lundeberg School of Seamanship, Piney Point, Md.

Lasser Retires From IUE Post

David Lasser, assistant to Pres. Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, has retired after 19 years of service with the IUE. At 66, he will write, lecture, and offer advice as a labor consultant.

Lasser started his labor career in 1933 when he led the Workers Alliance in a drive for higher appropriations for the unemployed on WPA work relief. He became a consultant for then Commerce Sec. W. Averell Harriman, and served with Harriman in Paris on development of the Marshall Plan for the reconstruction of Europe.

Lasser joined IUE in 1950. His latest role was as steering committee chairman for unions engaged in coordinated bargaining.

Justice Dept. Plans Court Action To Block Conglomerate Mergers

The head of the Justice Dept.'s antitrust division told Congress that the wave of conglomerate mergers—the takeover of companies in unrelated industries—is "alarming" and "the matter is too pressing to wait for Congress to pass legislation."

Assistant Attorney Gen. Richard W. McLaren told the House Ways & Means Committee that the government is planning to move ahead with suits to block conglomerate mergers—and perhaps even undo some that have already taken place—even though its powers to do so under existing antitrust laws have not yet been tested in court.

At the same hearing, a Federal Trade Commission economist warned against the concentration of economic power resulting from the conglomerate mergers.

The economist, Willard F. Mueller, said that if the present trend continues, all major economic decisions in the United States may be made by less than 200 persons within a decade.

He agreed with the suggestion by Ways & Means Chairman Wilbur D. Mills that the growth in conglomerate mergers is destroying the free enterprise system.

Mills has introduced legislation to limit the tax deduction corporations can take on interest for money they borrow to purchase another company.

As Congress moved into the third month of the session, only a trickle of legislation had moved out of the committee stage to the floor of the House or Senate.

Foreign affairs dominated the week's slim legislative budget.

The House voted 247-150 approval of an Administration and labor-supported bill to replenish the Intl. Development Association's bankroll for assistance to developing nations.

The IDA, an affiliate of the World Bank, uses money advanced by 18 nations to make long-term loans at very low interest rates to countries with the lowest per capita incomes. The House-passed legislation authorized the United States to contribute $160 million a year over the next three years to build up the loan fund. Other nations are also putting in more money.

With the proposal having the backing of a Republican President, House GOP Leader Gerald R. Ford (Mich.) mounted a successful effort to win over Republican congressmen who have opposed the program in the past. He ended up with about 100 Republican votes for the bill despite opposition from a hard-core bloc of Republican and Democratic conservatives.

The Senate, meanwhile, continued to debate ratification of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and test votes appeared to indicate that the necessary two-thirds majority will approve the treaty.

Two attempts to attach reservations to U.S. approval of the agreement were defeated by margins greater than two-thirds.

An old area of controversy—the relative roles of Congress and the White House in shaping America's foreign policy—moved toward a showdown stage.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted 11-1 approval of a resolution calling on the executive branch not to enter into any foreign commitments without advance approval from Congress.

Committee Chairman J. William Fulbright said the intent of the resolution was to recapture for Congress the "proper role" in foreign policy which it lost through "erosion and default."

The State Dept. had opposed the action, contending that it failed to take into account the President's constitutional authority in foreign affairs.

3-15-69

House Study Group Analysis Shows Many Chairmen Pseudo-Democrats

Some of the most influential Democrats in Congress—the chairman of House committees and subcommittees—might as well have been Republicans, a voting study shows.

Eight of the 21 chairmen of full committees and 34 of 93 subcommittee chairmen voted against their party's national position more than they voted with their party.

In fact six committee chairmen and 34 subcommittee chairmen were more opposed to Democratic programs than the average Republican. As a group, they opposed their party's position 92 percent of the time on key votes, while Republicans averaged only 76 percent opposition.

The documented charge was made by the Democratic Study Group, an organization of liberal House Democrats. The DSG measured the record of 247 House Democrats on 30 key votes during the 90th Congress. The votes included such issues as housing, education, appropriations, civil rights and consumer protection.

The study found that 75 Democrats voted against their party more than they supported it—and that this group included a disproportionate number of committee chairmen. Chairmanship of congressional committees and subcommittees is determined by seniority—and some of the most senior House Democrats come from "safe" southern districts.

The eight full committee chairmen with more votes against than for their party's position were listed as: William M. Colmer (Miss.), Rules Committee; John L. McMillan (S.C.), District of Columbia Committee; L. Mendel Rivers (S.C.), Armed Services; Richard H. Ichord (Mo.), Un-American Activities; W. R. Poage (Tex.), Agriculture; Wilbur D. Mills (Ark.), Ways & Means; Olin E. Teague (Tex.), Veterans' Affairs, and George H. Mahon (Tex.), Appropriations.

Of this group, all but Mahon and Teague had worse voting records than the Republican average. Colmer, in fact, voted against his party's position on every one of the 30 issues.

The study showed that the 145 members of the DSG voted for the Democratic position on 91 percent of the key issues, while the 102 non-DSG Democrats supported their party only 31 percent of the time, only slightly better than the 24 percent support from Republicans on the key issues.

The DSG study also cited an analysis by Congressional Quarterly, an authoritative non-partisan publication, which showed that the number of Democrats voting more in opposition than in support of Democratic positions has been steadily increasing over the past 16 years.

The 90th Congress had a record high of 53 Democratic House members who voted with Republicans more frequently than with the majority of their Democratic colleagues on 171 roll call votes. Of this group, 30 were committee or subcommittee chairmen.

Musicians Vote On Pact for Commercials

New York — The Musicians agreed to new contract terms covering members' services in radio and television commercials, subject to a ratification vote by about 2,000 members.

AFM Pres. Herman Kenin said the terms of the pact—negotiated with the Association of National Advertisers and the American Association of Advertising Agencies—will not be announced until after the ratification vote. Results of the election are expected at the end of March.

Negotiating sessions in January and early March led to the agreement, Kenin said. The AFM negotiating team included the union's executive board and AFM staff and local representatives from New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Memphis and Toronto.

Eligible to vote on the contract are members who had at least six basic commerical taping sessions during the year ended last June 30.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, March 22, 1969 | No. 12

'Moderate' Living Budget Priced at $9,076 a Year

Vote Reform Plan Pushed By Meany

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany pressed labor's campaign for direct, popular vote election of the President at the Senate's constitutional amendments hearings.

Meany urged quick action by Congress to initiate a constitutional amendment so that by the 1972 election "only the winners of the popular vote can be elected President and Vice President of the United States."

There is no reason to replace "the present complicated and erratic mechanism" for choosing the President "with one even more complicated and erratic," Meany told the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Constitutional Amendments.

The direct, popular vote election proposal backed by the AFL-CIO is also the one electoral reform "favored by the vast majority of the American people," Meany said.

He told the Senate panel, as he had the House Judiciary Committee earlier this month, that labor does not share Pres. Nixon's belief that a direct election amendment would be too controversial to win ratification from three-fourths of the states.

"If the proposal for direct popular election cannot be adopted," Meany said, "there is little reason to believe that any other plan can."

Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO associate general counsel, accompanied by Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, presented Meany's testimony at the Senate hearings.

The House committee concluded its hearings and moved into closed door discussions after hearing Attorney Gen. John N. Mitchell testify for the Administration.

Mitchell told the committee that Pres. Nixon will support a direct popular election amendment if Congress approves one. That is the plan, he said, that would be the personal preference first choice of the President.

Nevertheless, the attorney general said, the Administration is urging some form of a proportional distribution of a state's electoral votes.

"It's not a question of the principles we believe in," he told the committee. "It's a question of the proposition that's attainable."

Meany had told the House committee that the chances for adoption of a popular vote constitutional amendment would be even better if the President would actively support it.

The trouble with the proportional

(Continued on Page 8)

4th Quarter Profits Post New Record

America's corporations made more money than ever before during the last quarter of 1968—both before and after paying taxes.

The Office of Business Economics of the U.S. Dept. of Commerce said the fourth quarter profits rose to an annual rate of $95.8 billion before taxes and $52.9 billion after taxes.

The after-tax profit was $1.7 billion or 3.3 percent higher than the third quarter of 1968. And it was an impressive 5.2 percent more than the same three months of the previous year—despite the extra bite taken by the 10 percent tax surcharge.

Company profits before taxes, the government report showed, were 12.2 percent higher than in the final quarter of 1967.

For the calendar year 1968 as a whole, before-tax profits rose 13 percent from the previous year and, after all federal, state and local taxes were paid, the profits were 6 percent higher than in 1967.

Stockholders shared in the corporate profits boom. They received $24.6 billion in dividends, up 7 percent from the previous year.

The Wall Street Journal quoted a government economic analyst as reporting that the profit outlook for the current quarter "continues to appear to be pretty good."

The Commerce Dept. report said the big profit gains during the fourth quarter of 1968 "occurred among durables manufacturing industries, particularly auto and nonelectrical machinery."

MILESTONE of 3 million young widows and children on the social security benefit rolls was marked when Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball presented Mrs. Andrew G. Kuttner, Beltsville, Md., and her children, Michelle, 5, and Charles, 7, with their first benefit check. Under Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare John G. Veneman is at right. Mrs. Kuttner's husband recently died in an automobile accident. Survivors' benefits cover children of widowed mothers and orphaned children until they are grown and through school.

Standards Listed For 39 Areas

By Duane Emme

An annual income of $9,076 was needed by a four-person city worker's family in the spring of 1967 to maintain a "moderate" standard of living, the Labor Dept. has reported.

To maintain an "austere" standard at that time such a family required income of $5,915 annually. For a fuller, more expansive life, income of $13,050 was needed.

These income requirements, representing national urban averages, and breakdowns of what they will buy in this era of rising living costs, were developed in a study just released by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, "Three Standards of Living for an Urban Family of Four, Spring 1967." It covered 39 metropolitan areas, plus non-metropolitan areas representative of the country as a whole. (Table, Page 7.)

Since 1946, BLS has periodically issued a "City Worker's Family Budget" to show costs of a moderate living standard, but this marks the first time that costs of goods and services have been developed at three levels.

The common size family used to measure living needs and patterns is made up of a 38-year old full-time worker, a wife not employed outside the household, a boy of 13, and an 8-year old girl.

Arnold Chase, assistant BLS commissioner, emphasized at a press briefing that the family chosen as a yardstick was "not typical" but "meaningful."

Since the budgets were established, BLS noted, there have been increases in what the family must pay for food, housing, transportation, clothing and personal care, medical care and other consumption items.

(Continued on Page 7)

Over 5-Year Extension:

Showdown Expected On Aid to Education

By David L. Perlman

A labor-backed aid to education bill won committee approval and is expected to provide the first test of strength between liberal Democrats in the House and the Nixon Administration.

The House Education & Labor Committee voted 21-13 to extend the basic education aid program another five years. Its key provision is federal grants to help elementary and secondary schools meet the special educational needs of children from the poorest families.

Testifying for the five-year extension, the AFL-CIO had warned that city school systems "face disaster" if the program is scuttled.

The committee turned down the Nixon Administration's request that the extension be limited to two years.

Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Robert H. Finch conceded that the Administration had nothing better to propose at the moment. But he said it planned to come up with its own program sometime in the future.

After a Republican motion to substitute a two-year extension was voted down, two GOP members joined with the Democratic majority to approve the five-year bill. It is scheduled to reach the House floor before the Easter recess—the first item of social legislation acted on by a congressional committee.

Republicans have served notice they will try to rewrite the bill on the House floor.

One committee Democrat, Rep. Edith Green of Oregon, abstained from the vote on the bill. Mrs. Green, who in the past has sup-

(Continued on Page 8)

Radiation Standards Hailed as Life-Saver

The AFL-CIO and affiliated unions representing the nation's uranium miners told Congress that the federal government's new radiation safety standards will save the lives of a significant number of miners.

George Taylor, secretary of the AFL-CIO Staff Committee on Atomic Energy & National Resources, said industry has the technological ability to make uranium mines safe for workers.

The cost of complying with the new regulations would not be prohibitive, he said. And in any event, he stressed, the overriding factor in deciding the level of radiation concentration allowed in mines must be the health and lives of the miners.

Taylor testified before the congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy on behalf of the AFL-CIO, the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, the Steelworkers and the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept.

The committee does not have any legislation before it. But it is looking into the diversity of government standards applying to uranium mine safety and industry claims that the added costs of new ventilating equipment would be burdensome and unnecessary.

Three federal agencies have a role in setting standards.

The Labor Dept. has statutory authority under the Walsh-Healey Act because all uranium mines sell their entire production to the Atomic Energy Commission—and

(Continued on Page 6)

TWU Wins 25% Hike In 3-Week Airline Strike

A three-week strike by 13,500 Transport Workers produced contract gains for American Airlines employes after 10 months of negotiations. The gains included a top wage of $5.21 an hour for mechanics—the highest that the TWU has negotiated in any of its airline contracts.

TWU mechanics, inspectors, fleet and ground service crews and communications employes removed picket lines and returned to work Mar. 20 in 52 American Airlines cities after a membership referendum. The vote was 7,300 in favor, 2,407 opposed.

The airline had halted all flights when the walkout started Feb. 27. Members of other AFL-CIO unions honored the TWU picket lines voluntarily.

TWU Pres. Matthew Guinan said American is the first major carrier to "break the $5 barrier" for skilled mechanics in wage scales negotiated by his union. The new top mechanic rates go from $4.16 an hour to $4.59 immediately, and to $5.21 by

(Continued on Page 3)

3-Year Pact Settles Long Piano Strike

Holly, Mich.—A small but determined local of Furniture Workers voted to end a 24-week strike against the Grinnell Piano Co. and accept a new three-year contract with wage increases of 34 to 47 cents an hour.

The strikers held out, in bitterly cold weather, with the support of sympathetic union members elsewhere and the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer expressed thanks in a letter to Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the Union Label Dept. for contributing "in great measure to the successful conclusion of a long, drawn-out strike" with a vigorous consumer education campaign.

It took determination on the part of the workers, most of them women, to walk the picket line since Sept. 16, 1968, "through one of the bitterest winters on record," Pizer said. Also it took the knowledge that the strikers had the support of the international union, its Michigan District 7 and the labor movement in general, he wrote Lewis.

Members of UFWA Local 434 voted to strike when Grinnell management refused modest contract improvements. The picketing was extended to the company's 37 stores in Michigan and others in North Carolina, Kentucky and Rochester, N.Y., with the help of other unions. The union "don't buy" campaign was called off when the strikers returned to work.

The firm makes pianos under the Grinnell, Holly, Clayton and Leonard labels here and also sells other musical instruments and supplies at American Music Stores and outlets under varied names—all wholly owned by Grinnell.

DETERMINED APPLICANTS waiting to pick up entrance forms for apprenticeship program conducted by Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 34 in Chicago, camp in at the local's auditorium. Some stayed in the auditorium all one weekend so they would not lose their place in line. They had queued up outside the union hall, but were invited inside because of severe weather conditions.

2 Candidates Withdraw, IAM Vote Unnecessary

The withdrawal of two candidates for vice president of the Machinists has made a union-wide election in April unnecessary, the IAM notified all local lodges.

Two nominees who withdrew their names from the election ballot were John A. Heidenreich, Milwaukee, and Charles E. Edwards, Los Angeles. That left nine vice presidential posts uncontested and led IAM Pres. P. L. Siemiller to rule that any further balloting is unnecessary.

Siemiller declared the following candidates lawfully elected without a contest: incumbent Vice Presidents William W. Winpisinger and L. Ross Mathews, Washington, D.C.; Gilbert Brunner, New York City; Charles F. West, Seattle; Robert Simpson, Los Angeles; George L. Watkins, Dallas, and Mike Rygus, Ottawa, Ont.

Two new vice presidents are Fred J. Purcell, Utica, N.Y., and Francis P. Meagher, San Francisco, who will take seats to be vacated June 30 by Vice Presidents Floyd E. Smith of Cleveland, O., and Eugene Glover, Chicago.

Smith and Glover are unopposed for president and secretary-treasurer, respectively, succeeding Siemiller and Sec.-Treas. Matthew DeMore, retiring in June.

DeMore said referendums have been unnecessary only three times in 64 years—1953, 1965 and this year. He said the latest withdrawals came in time to save the IAM a printing bill and other costs in excess of $100,000.

Also elected without opposition were five members of the IAM committee on law; three delegates to AFL-CIO conventions, and one Canadian Labor Congress delegate.

Highway Safety Drive Enlists Labor's Aid

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has called on the federation's state central bodies to work with the National Safety Council in securing passage of minimum-standards highway safety programs by state legislatures.

In a letter to state AFL-CIO presidents where legislatures meet in 1969, Meany emphasized that increasing highway "carnage" greatly concerns all union members and their families.

He enclosed a copy of a letter from Howard Pyle, president of NSC, appealing for labor's aid in getting states to adopt recommendations from the National Highway Safety Bureau pursuant to the Federal Traffic Safety Act of 1966.

The bureau has proposed that each state enact or update safety programs to include 16 minimum standards that relate to the driver, the vehicle, the highway and enforcement of traffic codes and ordinances.

Among other things, the standards provide for periodic inspection of cars and trucks, up-to-date vehicle registration, driver education, uniform driver licensing and standard chemical tests to determine misuse of alcohol by drivers.

Federal financial help is given to states to advance their safety programs by including the standards. Although some states have adopted certain standards, no state is yet completely in line with the bureau's proposals.

Pyle explained that the council has established a program known as STATES (Safety Through Action to Enlist Support) which will coordinate the activity of many organizations in securing passage of the standards.

He noted that while the standards come from the federal government "they are in truth, an accumulation of standards previously developed by states. In other words, state needs have evolved into national needs."

Meany pointed out that 55,000 persons lost their lives and some 2 million others suffered disabling injuries through traffic accidents last year— and "about half of these deaths and injuries occurred to American workers."

"The money cost is well up in the billions," Meany said, and "the cost in blood and agony, orphaned children, broken homes and permanently disabled workers is incalculable."

"The sheer magnitude of the loss in any terms you care to use," he added, "is such that we must exert ourselves, in every way we can, to reduce this carnage."

Urging the state federations to join in the STATES program and "use every effort" to get passage of the standards, he concluded: "We can do no less in this matter than give our full, wholehearted support."

Labor Board Promotes Coast Trial Examiner

The National Labor Relations Board announced that William E. Spencer has been named head of the trial examiners' branch office in San Francisco, with Louis S. Penfield as his chief assistant.

Spencer, who has served the NLRB for 29 years, fills a vacancy left by the recent death of Wallace E. Royster. Penfield is a trial examiner who became an NLRB attorney 30 years ago.

2 Pamphlets Collect Federationist Pieces

Two new AFL-CIO publications—"Man and His Environment" and "Adjusting to Automation," are available from the federation.

The publications contain completely updated and revised articles that originally appeared in the AFL-CIO American Federationist. The 26-page environment pamphlet, Publication No. 143, contains articles dealing with air and water pollution, land use and energy. The 36-page automation adjustment pamphlet Publication No. 144 contains seven articles dealing with various approaches and programs.

Single copies of the pamphlets are available without cost. For orders of up to 100 the price is 40 cents each. For orders of one hundred or more the price is $35 per hundred.

The pamphlets can be ordered from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division, 815 Sixteenth Street NW, Washington, D.C. 20006.

Triggered IAM Lockout:

Court Hits Airline On Crew Cutback

Miami—National Airlines has been ruled guilty of violating federal law in an incident which triggered a company lockout of more than 1,000 Machinists across the nation.

U.S. District Court Judge C. Clyde Atkins ruled that the airline violated the Railway Labor Act when it ordered aircraft taxi crews at Kennedy Intl. Airport in New York City reduced from three men to two late last year.

National acted illegally, the court said, when it changed working conditions after the management and IAM District 145 had exchanged notices of intent to bargain on new contract terms.

The law that regulates contract bargaining on the airlines and railroads requires the company to maintain the status quo in working conditions after notices have been exchanged, the court noted.

Judge Atkins changed a mild restraining order against management's use of two-man taxi crews to a much stiffer preliminary injunction. The airline has been using three-man supervisory crews to taxi Boeing 727 jet aircraft around the crowded airport since the restraining order was first issued.

Three IAM mechanics at the airport were suspended by National in mid-January when they refused to move planes from terminal to hangar with two-man crews, as management unilaterally had decreed.

That resulted in a work stoppage by more than 1,000 IAM members at New York and Miami. The work stoppage became a lockout Jan. 21, the IAM said, when management ordered the employes to return or be fired.

National has since been flying on reduced schedules with light passenger loads, using supervisors, some new hires and a few regular employes to maintain the planes.

Recently the IAM asked the New York City labor commissioner to see whether National is violating child labor laws. The union asked specifically that working conditions for youths under 18, employed by National on its flight line, be investigated.

In the meantime there has been no bargaining between union and company. The National Mediation Board assigned a mediator to the dispute 72 days after the case was first docketed. This followed an IAM petition for a court order to force the NMB to assign a mediator.

The IAM Executive Council has approved a union-wide appeal by IAM District 145 for aid for the locked-out machinists. Members at New York, Newark, Philadelphia and Miami have been picketing and performing related duties, and are drawing IAM lockout benefits and food chits.

Transit Union Wins 60 Cents In St. Louis

St. Louis—Striking bus drivers and mechanics ratified an improved contract with the Bi-State Transit System and voted to end a three-week work stoppage.

The contract offer, approved by a vote of 834-614, was the company's third offer since the strike began Feb. 28. Two other offers had been rejected as inadequate by members of Transit Union Local 788.

The 30-month settlement was reached after 11 hours of continuous negotiations in the office of Mayor Alfonso J. Cervantes.

It assures wage increases totaling 60 cents an hour in these steps: 25 cents retroactive to Mar. 1; 10 cents next Mar. 1, 15 cents on Sept. 1, 1970, and a final 10 cents additional on Mar. 1, 1971.

The strikers also won a cost-of-living escalator clause; a fifth week of vacation for those with 24 years of service this year, 23 years of service in 1970; and other improvements.

The company has about 1,000 buses serving St. Louis city and county and Illinois suburbs across the Mississippi River.

W. L. McFetridge Dies, Led Service Employes

Chicago—William L. McFetridge, one-time apartment janitor who rose to high union and community office, died here at 75 after a six-week illness and was buried after final public tribute in St. Jerome Catholic Church.

McFetridge helped draft the 1955 merger agreement that produced the AFL-CIO, and was a vice president of the former AFL and the merged federation from 1940 to 1965.

He served as president of the Service Employes Intl. Union from 1940 to 1960 and of the Chicago Flat Janitors Union from 1927 until his death.

He was vice president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor for 11 years, commissioner of the Chicago Park District, member of the state Public Building Commission, the Chicago Police Board, the Railroad Terminal Authority and other public service agencies.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said in a message of sympathy to Mrs. Barbara McFetridge and Mrs. Theodore Krueger, their daughter, that McFetridge's "long list of accomplishments in the labor movement, his years as president of SEIU, his service as a vice president of the AFL and the AFL-CIO benefited his fellow workers, the whole of the labor movement and . . . all mankind."

Born in Chicago in 1893, McFetridge joined SEIU Local 1 in 1923 and became its president in 1937. His public service began in 1929 with a governor's appointment to the State Mediation & Conciliation Dept. During World War II he was director of salvage for the Chicago area.

McFetridge represented labor in several free world conferences, including the Intl. Labor Organization at Geneva in 1949, when he served as an AFL consultant.

New York Furriers Win $1.47 Package

New York—Members of the Meat Cutters employed in the New York City fur industry have approved a new three-year agreement providing a wage and benefit package valued at $1.47 an hour. The agreement was negotiated by the union's Furrier's Joint Council.

Trails Other Fields:

Teachers' Pay Lags Despite AFT Gains

Union teachers have made "very distinct" salary gains but U.S. teachers still lag well behind other trained professionals in the pay envelope, the American Federation of Teachers reported.

In general, teachers have "made unimpressive gains toward achieving the kind of financial reward necessary to build toward nationwide educational excellence," the AFT said in releasing its 20th annual salary survey.

The 1968 survey reached the conclusion that the "intolerable gap" between salaries paid for teaching in U.S. public schools and other professional occupations has not improved.

The average salary paid the classroom teacher was $6,830 for the 1966-67 school year, compared with $11,697 as of March 1967 for all heads of families with a college degree, the survey noted.

The union's research department mailed questionnaires, as it does every year, to 1,200 school districts with 6,000 or more pupils enrolled. It received replies from 750 districts, including 82 of the 91 big-city districts and 46 of 65 county and consolidated districts. Some 100 replies were unusable, so the survey hinged on 650 districts.

The survey director, AFT researcher John Oliver, reached these conclusions:

- The "startling" regional and sectional differences in teachers' pay "have not been significantly improved." Starting salaries for the holder of a bachelor's degree range from $4,400 a year in Louisiana to $7,500 in Michigan.
- The beginning teacher is no better off today than the beginner a year ago, considering inflation and higher taxes.
- Salaries, fringe benefits and other benefits add up to an income that is lower, by 30 to 40 percent on the average, than the Dept. of Labor's recommended income for a moderate standard of living for an American family of four persons.

Among brighter aspects of the survey, Oliver listed sizable salary gains in areas where the AFT bargains for teachers. A comparison of the seven largest AFT and National Education Association cities "places the AFT ahead in every salary lane by $488 to $951 a year," Oliver said. His survey lists salaries and living costs in AFT cities—New York, Chicago, Detroit, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Cleveland, compared with seven cities where NEA affiliates have contracts—Milwaukee, Denver, Cincinnati, Newark, N.J., Buffalo, Jersey City and Madison, Wis.

In more than 20 districts with AFT contracts, salaries rose an average of 9 percent last year, the survey reported. It concludes:

"Despite these gains, won by increased teacher militancy, they are wholly inadequate when we consider the constant erosion caused by inflation and higher taxes at all levels of government, and the persistent gap between teachers' salaries in public education, and other professional and clerical workers" in private business.

A BUST OF SAMUEL GOMPERS is presented to Samuel Gompers School in Philadelphia as part of the 150-year observance of public education in the city and Pennsylvania. The bust of the American Federation of Labor founder was donated by Teachers Local 3. From left are Pres. Edward F. Toohey of the Philadelphia AFL-CIO; Lawrence Stoltz of the Philadelphia Hotel, Motel & Club Employes; Pres. Frank Sullivan of Teachers Local 3; Gerald Gleeson, Jr.; Dr. Jack Sessions of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, and Assistant Supt. Robert Pointdexter of the Philadelphia school district.

Oil Workers Launch Boycott As Shell Stalls on Bargaining

Denver—Pres. A. F. Grospiron of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers announced that the OCAW executive board has voted unanimously for a worldwide consumer boycott of Shell Oil and Shell Chemical Co. products.

Grospiron said "we have tried for months to negotiate a Shell contract equivalent to those granted by virtually all other oil companies."

While agreement was reached at some locations, Shell "refuses to be fair and reasonable in contracts covering more than 2,000 workers" in California facilities of Shell, he declared.

Shell employes went on strike Jan. 4 with about 56,000 other oil workers in the United States. Strike settlements were reached beginning Jan. 11 with all firms except Shell on the West Coast; Standard Oil Co. of Ohio at Toledo and Lima; Continental Oil Co. at Wrenshall, Minn., and smaller firms employing about 1,000 workers.

Shell is owned by the Royal Dutch Petroleum Co. of the Netherlands and Shell Transport & Trading Co. of Great Britain. Grospiron cited these Shell tactics:

"The company seeks to penalize our members for striking. It seeks to fire 10 of them and to suspend 15 others. It wants to deny 1969 vacations to more than 200 of them because of their strike action."

Shell employes who were still on strike voted Mar. 15 to return to work unconditionally, without a contract, pending further negotiations. Of this action Grospiron said:

"We removed picket lines and the men began returning to their jobs. Now we are turning to our friends and the public for help.

"We are asking them not to buy Shell products. We are requesting them to return their Shell credit cards to the company."

Grospiron said world assistance would be sought through the Intl. Federation of Petroleum & Chemical Workers, a federation of more than 100 unions with 2 million members in more than 70 countries.

In this hemisphere, the "don't buy" drive will be coordinated with the AFL-CIO and the Canadian Labor Congress and their affiliated unions.

In February the AFL-CIO Executive Council voted at its Florida meeting to call on all affiliated international unions, and state and local central bodies, to "render every possible assistance to those oil workers who remain on strike."

"Every influence available to the labor movement must be brought to bear," the council declared. "We support the men on the picket lines and, if called on to do so, we will support any consumer boycott that may be declared."

Merger 'Redress' Nets Rail Clerks $8-12 Million

The Railway Clerks have negotiated a multi-million dollar payment to compensate some 2,000 workers who lost their jobs or seniority rights when the Southern Railway took over the Central of Georgia Railroad in 1963.

Workers who were adversely affected by the takeover will have their full seniority restored, with retroactive payments and other cash benefits of up to a year's pay.

The total package of "redress payments" is estimated at between $8 million and $12 million. A special arbitration panel will resolve any disputes over application of the agreement.

C. L. Dennis, the union's president, termed the settlement a "historic step toward protecting railway employes from economic and social hardship when companies merge operations."

He said it "rights a six-year wrong" committed by the former management of the Southern Railway. Dennis praised the railroad's new officers for their "willingness to correct a past wrong."

While the clerks were hit hardest by the takeover, other Central of Georgia workers were also affected and the Railway Labor Executives' Association has reached a basic agreement on restoration of job rights. Negotiations are continuing on implementing agreements affecting members of other rail unions.

The rail union had to go to the Supreme Court in order to get the Interstate Commerce Commission to rule on whether the basic Washington Job Protection Agreement protecting workers involved in rail mergers applied to the "acquisition of control" of the Central of Georgia.

Finally, in late 1967, the ICC ruled that protective features of the Washington Agreement—a nationally-negotiated compact—were binding in the case.

Then came the difficult negotiations to try to remedy the injustices and restore lost job rights.

The Railway Clerks began direct negotiations with the new management of the Southern Railway last July and the union said the resulting agreement "testifies once again to the value of free collective bargaining in the American spirit between labor and management."

The 20-page agreement which emerged sets up a seniority date and rank for all clerical employes affected by the merger—and gives each person on the list the right to claim any job on the roster to which his seniority entitles him.

Other provisions cover reimbursement of those who have already taken higher paying jobs, payment of necessary moving expenses, payment for lost insurance benefits and reimbursement for workers no longer on the payroll because of retirement, resignation or other such reasons.

California Union Rolls Pass 2 Million Mark

San Francisco—The number of union members in California rose to a record 2.03 million in 1968, the state's Dept. of Industrial Relations reported.

A 39,000 increase continued a steady rise since 1962. The state survey showed the biggest growth in the public employe field.

Memorial March Slated for Dr. King

A memorial march will be held Apr. 4 in Memphis, Tenn., to mark the first anniversary of the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Plans for the march were announced jointly by Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes and Dr. Ralph Jackson, a Memphis minister who heads Community on the Move for Equality (COME).

When Memphis garbage workers, members of SCME Local 1733, were forced to strike last year, COME rallied to the support of the strikers. Dr. King went to Memphis to aid the cause and was assassinated as he prepared to lead a march in support of the strikers, nearly all of them Negroes.

"This march will be a rededication to the principles for which Dr. King stood," Rev. Jackson declared.

TWU Wins 25% Hike In 3-Week Airline Strike

(Continued from Page 1)

Aug. 15, 1970, the last stage in the two-year agreement.

All covered employes are assured wage increases totaling 25.2 percent in five six-month steps, starting with 5 percent retroactive to last May 1, another 5 percent retroactive to Jan. 1, 1969, a third raise of 5 percent next Aug. 30 and two 4 percent raises in February and August 1970.

Other improvements include wage premiums of 5 to 10 cents an hour for licensed mechanics, a new provision; shift differential increases of 10 cents an hour; five weeks of vacation after 20 years of service; and one more paid holiday—Columbus Day—for a total of nine.

The airline agreed to major improvements in the pension plan, including a new minimum monthly benefit of $15 yer year of participation; full vesting after 10 years of service, and credit for all service back to 1942 for employes retiring on or after Jan. 1, 1969.

Among other gains are improved group insurance, emergency outpatient health care, maternity benefits and in patient care. The airline will pay the cost of employe parking fees up to $5 a month, plus the cost of shuttle bus service.

The union won new terms for settling long-standing grievances over sick leave, union representation and weekend work. Also it achieved protection for the jobs of all present communications employes, and guarantees on subcontracting and overtime.

The strike was the first for the union against American since 1950. It was settled with the aid of the National Mediation Board.

Bakery Union Fills Two Board Vacancies

The American Bakery & Confectionery Workers named two new members to its international executive board. Leroy B. Sweat of Phoenix, Ariz., was named a vice president succeeding Archie Goodman, who retired at 65. Henry Molloy of Dallas, Tex., was named to fill a board vacancy caused by the death of Claude Blakely.

Goodman was named vice president emeritus. He is the first of five founding members of ABC to retire. Still in office are the other four members of the union Integrity Committee— Pres. Daniel E. Conway, Sec.-Treas. Curtis R. Sims, Executive Vice Pres. John DeConcini and Vice Pres. Amos Miller.

The Income Gap

THE LABOR DEPT.'S carefully designed and researched budget on the cost of a moderate standard of living for a family of four in the spring of 1967 raises as many questions as it answers—not on the standard of living but how many Americans can achieve it.

The budget drawn by the Bureau of Labor Statistics is based on a one-wage-earner, established family with two children. It can be adjusted for other ages and numbers of dependents and it has two other levels—lower than moderate and higher than moderate. Any number of combinations can be put together.

From the income side, however, some noticeable gaps develop. The urban average cost of the BLS moderate budget is $9,076. The average wage in the total private economy would yield about $6,000 a year for a full year's work. About half the workers make more than this and half make less.

How then to reach the $9,000 level, to say nothing of the higher budget of $13,000? The answer is not very complicated: either drop below the standards for food, housing, clothing, medical care, etc., set out in the budget or increase the income by having the wife go to work.

For those making less than the median wage the problem would be to reach the lower-than-moderate standard of living, a level that takes about $5,900 a year.

These figures, of course, are all keyed to the wage earner with about 15 years of work experience and an established household.

THERE ARE MANY of these families in the nation who are currently described as the "working poor" who are below the government-defined poverty level of $3,200 a year. These working poor make up an estimated 50 percent of those defined as living in poverty. Should the $3,200 figure be scrapped in light of the BLS findings that it takes $5,900 a year to provide something less than a moderate standard of living for a family of four?

There is no question that those currently earning the minimum wage of $1.60 an hour cannot possibly reach the lower budget level without a sharp reduction in the basic standards for life's necessities or additional income from sending members of the family out to work.

Even on the high side of the budget standards there is room for concern. If a family of four can meet the $13,000 higher than moderate level it should be able to set aside a few dollars for savings or for college costs for the children. There are no such provisions in the BLS budget.

As a matter of fact there is no provision in any of the budgets for either savings or the cost of borrowing money to purchase items via the installment buying route.

BLS, in the release announcing publication of the budgets, cited the varied needs for the material by various groups in the country —a very real need if we are to establish a decent standard of living for all Americans. The release noted that social scientists may "find the budgets useful for evaluating the adequacy of family income. . . ."

A very preliminary evaluation can only highlight the lack of family income for millions of American families to reach the living standards spelled out by the new budgets.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President

WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller

Managing Editor: John M. Barry

Assistant Editors: Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006

Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, March 22, 1969 No. 12

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO

A Long Way to Austerity

A Word Edgewise:

Coalition for Volunteer Army Makes Strange Bunk Buddies

By John P. Roche

ONE OF THE MOST interesting coalitions in American politics today involves anti-Viet Nam liberals and ideological conservatives in support of a "volunteer army."

This is a polite way of saying that our defense should be entrusted to professionals, the draft should be ended, and the children of the well-to-do relieved of responsibility and anguish. A number of political figures have, I'm sure, endorsed the volunteer army simply to get articulate and affluent constituents, and their activist children, off their backs. Pres. Nixon has even paid ambiguous deference to the idea, adding that we must first settle affairs in Viet Nam.

A conservative such as the unnervingly logical Prof. Milton Friedman, who is one of Newsweek's most stimulating contributors, can make this pitch with a clear conscience. But when liberals pick up the cause, I find it simply preposterous; it is a classic example of using any stick to beat a dog—the dog being the war in Viet Nam.

A number of my former colleagues in Americans for Democratic Action became quite annoyed a couple of years ago when I suggested there was a simpler solution: that they should advocate a revival of the Civil War system permitting a rich, unhappy draftee to purchase a substitute. As usual, nobody appreciated my humor, but I insist quite seriously that the creation of a volunteer army has precisely that impact. Except that everybody pays for the substitute.

I was admittedly less than overjoyed when I received a letter from Gen. Lewis B. Hershey back in 1942, but in my judgment the obligation of members of the community to serve the common weal is the cornerstone of a democratic society. And, while I concede my fallibility as a liberal dogmatist, I am convinced that liberals who abandon this position have traded their heritage for a mess of pottage.

The present draft is inequitable, but a volunteer army would be worse. Particularly since there is an alternative that would eliminate the evils of the present system: universal service.

Note that I did not say universal military service. What I have in mind is a program much like that in Israel where every young man puts in three years of service to the nation at age 18.

While the Israeli Defense Force serves as the administrative center for this service, the jobs cover the whole spectrum from farming a frontier kibbutz to social work. Illiterates are educated, there is job training, and defense needs are met. There are no college deferments (except on a temporary basis for essential professions) and all military officers rise from the ranks.

U.S. defense officials, curiously enough, have taken a dim view of this sort of universal mobilization. All they want are well-trained personnel; the least of their ambitions is to become a social agency. (There was quite a battle before they agreed to accept illiterates in the draft, though subsequent experience indicated that the Army could do an effective job of basic education.) They prefer a volunteer army not (as some alarmists seem to think) because they have dreams of a coup, but because it creates minimal administrative problems. The thought of having to deal with three or four million 18-year-olds understandably terrifies them.

THIS BRINGS US to the core of the problem: the size of the contingent and the logistics of administering such a huge program. (To say nothing of the impact on colleges and universities of a sudden two-year gap in students!)

There are various ways of coping with these difficulties. The program, for example, would have to be phased in over a period of years, using existing military and non-military (VISTA, Peace Corps, etc.) organizations as the base. Those in college could initially be deferred with an ironclad arrangement that upon graduation they would put in their two years, with the additional benefit of their skills.

Men with better organizational talents than mine can work out the details. I am concerned with the principle. Living as we do in a period of affluence and having been spared a major war for almost a generation, our society has tended towards atomistic selfishness.

The credit-card revolutionaries on our campuses are one manifestation of this cop-out, but they have a certain innocence. Far worse are those who right now are industriously trying to swindle the federal and state governments on their income taxes. To paraphrase Justice Holmes, service and taxes are the price of civilization.

Council Calls for Action:

Double Income Tax Standard Needs Immediate Reform

Following is the text of the statement on tax reform adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council on Feb. 21, 1969.

THE BASIC INEQUITIES in the federal tax system can be simply stated:

1. Many of the wealthiest individuals in the United States pay not one single cent in federal income taxes, but

2. Many of the poorest individuals in the country, who live in what the government defines as poverty, are forced to pay federal income taxes.

In the opinion of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, this is a reprehensible situation which must be corrected. We can no longer tolerate a double standard of taxation, which heaps an unfairly great part of the burden of running the federal government on the shoulders of America's middle-income families, many of whom are trade unionists.

We insist America must achieve a standard of tax fairness and we are therefore pleased that the House Ways & Means Committee has announced its intention of conducting a full-fledged tax reform investigation.

Major reform of the federal tax structure has been talked about for many years. Yet on April 15, 1969, those who receive billions in capital gains from stock market and real estate transactions, from tax-free interest on state and local bonds, from oil and other unjustifiable mineral depletion allowances and from other forms of unearned income, will still enjoy special tax shelters.

Some will use their "foundations" and family trusts as tax-dodging schemes and tax loopholes will still be a major crop of many operators of large farm enterprises. The transfer of large sums by gift and at death will still be accomplished by evasions that make taxation based on ability to pay a sham. Fast depreciation will provide real estate operators with tax-free bonanzas, which are also major factors in the rise of land costs and rents.

Some wealthy individuals will don the mantle of philanthropy, but they will use the unlimited charitable deduction loophole and the federal government will honor their pledges.

In 1967, 21 individuals who reported incomes above $1 million and 155 who reported incomes of $200,000 or over, paid not a dollar of federal income tax.

In contrast, some 2.5 million persons whose incomes fell below the government's "poverty line" paid $100 million in federal income taxes.

These loopholes of special privilege for wealthy people and corporations take their toll of the public's confidence in the federal income-tax structure. They are also expensive in dollars.

Just three major loopholes—capital gains, exemption of state and local bond interest, and tax windfalls to oil, gas and other mineral operations—cost the Treasury approximately $7 billion in 1968.

The 7 percent tax credit for investment in machinery and equipment produces over $2 billion for corporations. Moreover, this special tax privilege contributes to difficulties in the money market and adds to upward pressures on interest rates.

Most of these loopholes have developed over a quarter century of horse-trading for special privileges, frequently under the guise of promoting or encouraging an activity in the national interest. Unfortunately, the cost of these special privileges in terms of dollars, inequity, wastefulness and taxpayer confidence have far outweighed any benefits.

Yet despite this sad record, it is becoming increasingly fashionable in some circles to advocate additional tax loopholes for wealthy people and corporations in the guise of panaceas for virtually every national ill that can be identified.

There is talk of adding new tax gimmicks for real-estate operators, many of whom are now more accurately considered in the business of constructing tax shelters rather than shelters for people. And there are tax forgiveness proposals ranging from those which supposedly would provide incentives to industry for on-the-job training and inner-city industrial development to those which would encourage gold mining.

Those who make these proposals would further reward those who already more than adequately share in America's affluence and use as their excuse the plight of those who are today in trouble because they do not have their fair share.

WE VIEW SUCH SCHEMES as haphazard, costly and wasteful approaches to meeting the nation's goals. Tax forgiveness has the same impact on the federal budget as a direct expenditure. Yet, through such gimmicks, the federal government relinquishes budgetary control to the wealthy investors and businesses which reap most of the benefits. When a privileged few are provided shelters that enable them to avoid their fair tax share, others must reach deeper into their pockets.

We believe that the nation's interest cannot be served through tax forgiveness schemes or other forms of "no-strings" federal aid that are not subject to the congressional scrutiny of specific programs, whose funds must be used in line with national priorities, under federal performance.

The Congress and the new Administration must assign top legislative priority to substantial and thorough-going reformation of the federal income tax structure.

We call for:

1. Elimination of the loopholes of special tax privilege for wealthy families and corporations.

2. A minimum tax on all income over a total which would provide protection for legitimate small investors but which would require at least some tax payment from those whose huge incomes are now preferentially taxed or totally tax-exempt.

3. Removal of the impoverished from the federal income-tax rolls.

4. Reduction in the relative tax burden for low and moderate-income families.

5. Rejection of proposals for new tax loopholes, which would provide additional benefits for wealthy people and businesses and create even more inequities in the federal tax structure.

6. Unequivocal dismissal of all proposals for a federal retail sales tax. Whether such proposals are called "value-added" taxes or offered clearly as a tax on consumers, the effect is the same—those who can afford it least bear the brunt of the burden.

7. Repeal the provision of double depreciation on all new construction, except low- and moderate-rental housing and the 7 percent tax credit for business investment in machines and equipment.

Government's Responsibility:

Labor Warns of Over-Reliance On Role of Voluntary Agencies

VOLUNTARY AGENCIES cannot do it alone, the director of the AFL-CIO Community Services Activities said as he cautioned against "over-emphasis on voluntaryism" for such basic national needs as health, housing and job training.

Vital as they are to the overall effort, voluntary agencies are "incapable" of providing the tremendous sums needed to do the total job, said Leo Perlis. Funding must be the "fundamental responsibility" of government, he said on Labor News Conference.

Pointing out that organized labor is the nation's "largest voluntary organization," Perlis drew this profile of AFL-CIO volunteer activity:

- Members of AFL-CIO unions account for one-third of all Red Cross blood donations.
- Twenty percent of all the adult leaders in scouting programs are AFL-CIO union members.
- One-third of total United Fund and Community Chest contributions comes from AFL-CIO organized companies.
- The AFL-CIO has 180 fulltime community service staffers in towns and cities and will expand that activity to six more cities this year.

PERLIS STRESSED the importance of voluntaryism's role in education to enlist citizen-support of government health, housing, welfare and employment programs, and the recruitment of volunteer manpower to "assure that they are implemented for the benefit of all of the people."

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE WHITE HOUSE has announced that Pres. Nixon has sent 94 directives to various top officials of his Administration "calling for action and recommendations on a wide range of domestic concerns."

The subjects on which the President wants these recommendations range from tax reform and federal expenditures to health care and welfare programs. All of them, of course, are of importance to organized labor, but a number of them are in the field of direct labor legislation.

Because they indicate the issues that the President is thinking about, they are worth listing. Here are those referred to Labor Sec. George P. Shultz:

- A report on the advisability of establishing a labor court to help deal with labor-management problems. The labor court is a favorite scheme of anti-union business groups which complain that the National Labor Relations Board is pro-union and that the only way management can get a break is to abolish the NLRB and set up special labor courts which, presumably, will be tough on labor. Sec. Shultz has said that he doesn't think much of the labor court idea.
- Establishment of a national system of job vacancy statistics.
- Recommendations concerning a pilot government program designed to encourage the unemployed to move to locations where jobs exist.
- Draft legislation for a comprehensive manpower bill along with an appraisal of the expected costs and benefits of implementing such a program. This, of course, would open the way to implementation of the Nixon proposals to bring private enterprise into the job and training picture more than it now is, perhaps by giving tax breaks to corporations that involve themselves in the project.
- Recommendations concerning the proposed increase in the minimum wage and its impact on employment opportunities. Shultz already has made it clear that he currently has reservations about the $2 minimum for which organized labor is calling.
- A report on the advisability of placing farm workers under the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act. Organized labor has long called for this as the only way to assure farm workers of their right to organize. Shultz has been quoted in the press as having expressed doubt on the grounds that they are too scattered and that there is a question of calling strikes during harvest peaks.
- Establishment of a special task force to develop a basic policy with regard to public employes' labor disputes. Public employe unions are deeply concerned that government management groups are reluctant to deal with their organized labor on a fair basis; the "right to strike" is still highly controversial, and the techniques of free collective bargaining are far from adequate.
- A report on the deficiencies of the current system of unemployment compensation, and recommendations as to how these shortcomings can be corrected. Such matters include uniformity among the states on compensation, the rate at which benefits should be paid, and the question of unemployment benefits for strikers.
- An appraisal of the present supply of skilled construction workers and the membership practices of construction unions, together with recommendations concerning this issue.
- An evaluation and recommendations concerning the role which the Davis-Bacon Act may have played in increased construction costs. This is somewhat of a surprise issue. Davis-Bacon provides for prevailing wages on government construction and it is not quite clear why the government should want to pay less than prevailing wages even to save money.
- Recommendations concerning new occupational safety legislation. Organized labor has been fighting steadily for federal legislation to meet the shocking death and accident rate in American industry. Business has been fighting to keep safety legislation on the state level where it has been woefully weak.

WARNING AGAINST "over-emphasis on voluntaryism," AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis, center, declared that voluntary agencies alone can't meet basic national needs in health, housing and job-training. He was questioned on Labor News Conference by Sam Sharkey, left, of the Newhouse Newspapers and Alex Uhl of Press Associates, Inc. The AFL-CIO-produced program is heard on Mutual Radio, Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m.

NEGRO JOURNEYMEN—the first inducted by the Sheet Metal Workers—accept their new membership status with the union's Local 28 in New York City. They had been in an apprentice training program, coordinated by the A. Philip Randolph Institute and Workers Defense League, since January 1965. Seated from left are Charlie Saunders, William Murphy, Bennie Newton, Robert Alston and Christopher Wiley. Standing are Herbert Hall; Charles Brenner, assistant program director; Ernest Green, program director, and Scott Green.

Repression of Unions Charged:

ILO Slates Probe Of Greek Arrests

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization's Governing Body has appointed a three-man commission to investigate charges that the Greek government has been repressing trade union rights.

The 48 worker, government and employer delegates to the Governing Body, the ILO's executive board, set up the commission during a three-day meeting here over the objections of the military dictatorship now in power in Athens.

In a note to the ILO, the Greek government attempted to sidestep the charges made by western worker delegates at the last ILO conference that it had dissolved trade unions and jailed their leaders in defiance of its ILO obligations.

"We are not aware of the arrest of any trade unionists," Greek authorities asserted. "In any case," the note continued, "anyone arrested and held in detention has been carrying on Communist and not trade union activities."

But Jean Moeri, chairman of the worker delegates, brushed aside on behalf of the workers' group the Greek objections to the appointment of the commission. He said that Athens "should have no fear of any impartial investigation if it has a clear conscience."

The proposal to hold the investigation was adopted without a vote after Moeri had reminded the board that "human rights are worth defending." The commission is to be headed by Lord Devlin, a longtime British jurist.

Worker delegates again led the defense of human rights when they challenged the inclusion of Morocco among the countries invited to send worker, government and labor representatives to an ILO meeting in October on the leather and footwear industry.

Rudolph Faupl of the Machinists, the U.S. worker delegate, speaking for all the workers, denounced the sending of an invitation to a country "where free trade unions do not exist."

This was an allusion to the sentencing to a year's imprisonment of the Moroccan worker delegate to last year's ILO conference because of a speech criticizing the government.

Announcing that the workers would not vote for the invitation to Morocco, Moeri told the board that it was "inadmissible" that a worker delegate should be arrested for a speech made at an ILO conference.

The Governing Body approved for submission to the June assembly a budget of $60,999,200 for the years 1970 and 1971.

It is the first time that the ILO has budgeted for a two-year period. The new practice was adopted to enable better planning of the ILO efforts to promote higher living and working standards the world over.

The new budget represents an annual increase over that for the current year of 7.1%.

Worker members of the Governing Body also launched a drive to have their chairman elected president of the ILO's 50th anniversary conference in June.

The election of Moeri, the Swiss head of the ILO's workers group since 1961, would be just recognition of the contribution of trade unionists to the first 50 years of ILO activities, the group said.

Key Labor Dept. Posts Filled by Administration

Art Fletcher, a special adviser on urban affairs to Washington's Gov. Daniel J. Evans (R), has been named by Pres. Nixon as Assistant Secretary of Labor for Wage & Labor Standards.

The President also announced nomination of Laurence H. Silberman as Solicitor of the Dept. of Labor. He is a lawyer with the appellate division, general counsel's office, National Labor Relations Board.

Fletcher, subject to Senate confirmation, will succeed to the post held in the Johnson Administration by Esther Peterson, now a legislative representative with the Clothing Workers.

Fletcher and James Farmer, Assistant Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, are the highest ranking Negroes in the Administration so far.

An unsuccessful candidate for lieutenant governor in Washington last year, Fletcher became known for organizing black self-help projects in the state, initially in East Pasco, Wash. In 1967-1968 he served as a city councilman in Pasco.

Prior to coming to Washington, he was a legislative assistant to former Kansas Gov. Fred Hall (R) and later a teacher and special project director in the Berkeley, Calif., school system.

Fletcher received a bachelor of arts degree from Washburn University in Kansas in 1950. At Washburn, he won small college All-America honors in football. He later played professionally with the Los Angeles Rams and Baltimore Colts.

Hawaii Attorney

Before joining the NLRB in 1967, Silberman practiced law in Honolulu. He was admitted to the bar in Hawaii in 1962.

He has specialized in labor-management law in his practice and also has handled cases dealing with corporate problems and administrative law. He has lectured in labor law and legislation at the University of Hawaii.

A native of York, Pa., Silberman received a bachelor of arts degree from Dartmouth College in 1957 and a law degree from the Harvard Law School in 1961.

Upon confirmation as Solicitor, he will be the Labor Dept.'s chief legal officer and will supervise its legal activities including proceedings under the laws administered by the department.

Other recent nominations by the President include:

- Randolph W. Thrower of Atlanta, a tax lawyer and former instructor on taxation at Emory University law school, to be commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service. He succeeds Sheldon S. Cohen, who has resigned.
- Joseph H. Blatchford to replace Jack Hood Vaughan as head of the Peace Corps. Blatchford is executive director of Americans for Community Cooperation in Other Nations, a private community development organization working in Latin America.

Skills Training Pays Off With Higher Wages

Training for new skills taken under Manpower Development & Training Act programs brings most of the trainees sizable increases in their pay checks, the Labor Dept. concludes.

Its conclusion is based upon a study of the "before and after" earnings of more than 100,000 persons who completed MDTA training during 1965 and 1966. A report on the study reveals that median earnings for employed graduates of training went to $1.73 per hour, compared to $1.44 before training.

This is an increase of 20 percent in the average earnings level, and substantially greater than the average increase in wage levels in the overall economy during the same two-year period, the report points out.

Earnings of more than one-third of the graduates ranged from $2 to $3 per hour after completing training—more than 50 percent greater than the comparable portion of pre-training earnings.

The report noted that training courses helped a large number of workers at the bottom of the wage ladder—under the $1.25 an hour minimum wage at the time—climb to higher wage levels.

In other areas, the study found that three out of every five training graduates gained wage increases and the boosts for family heads generally were higher than for graduates with no family responsibilities.

New Trainees Seen Victims Of Job Cuts

The progress that government, employers and unions have made in placing hard-core unemployed in jobs and job training would be menaced by a rise in the overall jobless rate, a union leader told the National Alliance of Businessmen.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Sullivan, representing Federation Pres. George Meany, stressed the importance to the nation of a full employment economy.

"A rise in unemployment would hit the most vulnerable workers hardest," he said, "those most recently hired, the least skilled, and particularly Negroes, other minorities and young workers."

Sullivan, who is president of the Service Employes, spoke of labor's efforts to bring the disadvantaged into the mainstream of employment, including the "buddy system" program of individual help.

He told the businessmen that upgrading—promotion opportunities on the job—"must also be on the agenda of any program designed to make effective use of the manpower potential of the nation."

And, Sullivan added, "for those who cannot fit into private employment, there is a need for a federal job creation program to provide jobs in the public sector in needed public services."

Pres. Nixon stopped in at the conference to tell the participants that the National Alliance of Businessmen's program to find jobs for the hard-core unemployed, started during the Johnson Administration, has "the complete, unqualified support of this Administration."

Nixon suggested that the program, now operating in virtually every major city, should be expanded into smaller cities and towns with unemployment problems.

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz said the federally-financed training program operated by the businessmen's alliance, "is turning many of the jobless, the hopeless, into productive, self-respecting citizens."

He said the average disadvantaged person who is placed in a productive job:

- Will contribute $10,000 a year to the gross national product through his work.
- Will pay federal income taxes of about $241 in the first year of work.
- Will increase purchasing power for goods and services by $3,400.

New Safety Standards On Radiation Praised

(Continued from Page 1)

under federal law must continue to do so until 1971.

All government departments with any interest at all in radiation or atomic energy are represented on the inter-agency Federal Radiation Council. The council recommends safety standards to protect both workers and the public.

Additional Standards

In addition, the Interior Dept. issues its own standards under the Metal & Non-Metalic Mine Safety Act. When the government ceases to be the sole buyer of uranium concentrates, the Interior Dept. regulations would apply to mines selling to private industry.

After several years of controversy over what the standards should be, all three federal bodies acted in January, shortly before the change of administration.

The Labor Dept. adopted the standard which had been strongly urged by the AFL-CIO.

The technical term describing it is 4 Working Level Months (WLM). That is a means of measuring both the concentration of radiation and the period of exposure, based on a 40-hour week for a one-year period. The previous standard was 12 WLM, allowing mines to be exposed to three times as much radiation.

Defending the new standard, Taylor told the committee that a study of some 25.000 persons with an average of eight years employment at this concentration of radiation exposure showed no more cases of cancer than could be expected among the population at large.

By contrast, he said, miners working at higher concentrations have been found to have a much higher percentage of lung cancer than would be expected from the general population.

The Federal Radiation Council and the Interior Dept. also adopted a 4 WLM standard.

However, their standards would allow mines until Jan. 1, 1971, to reach that level. Until then, they could continue at the higher 12 WLM rate.

The Labor Dept. Walsh-Healey standards are immediately effective. However, a mine may be given an exemption until 1971 if it comes up with a plan to bring the exposure down to the 4 WLM standard by that date.

Taylor noted that the differences among the standards "are more apparent than real" and the adoption of the 4 WLM standard has been "long overdue."

The industry, he suggested, should have no difficulty in meeting the new standard well before the 1971 deadline.

Taylor noted that other industries have been required to go to some expense to meet federal, state and local regulations governing pollution. Thus the uranium mining industry, he suggested, has no cause to feel "unjustly singled out" because it is required to spend money to protect the lives and health of its workers.

Urban Family of Four:

$9,076 Budget Set For Moderate Living

(Continued from Page 1)

In addition, taxes have increased as a result of the federal income tax surcharge, higher social security taxes and higher state and local income taxes.

Government officials could not say how much more the budgets would be raised if updated to take account of these increases, but Labor Dept. records show that consumer prices have risen by about 7.5 percent since spring 1967.

Even without precise comparisons, other BLS studies show that earnings of the average worker fall considerably short of the moderate budget's income requirements, and in many cases even below the low budget's needs.

In March 1967—a month corresponding to the study period—average earnings for rank and file workers on private non-farm payrolls were $99.41 a week. On an annual basis, this amounted to $5,169, or $3,907 short of the moderate budget and $746 short of the low budget.

Area Costs Vary

The Labor Dept. emphasized that costs in each of the budgets vary widely depending on geographic location and size of the city. BLS supplied a breakdown of costs and separate budgets for each of the areas surveyed.

Chase defined the low budget as an "austere" one, but did not characterize the others. In the past, BLS has described a moderate budget as providing "a modest but adequate standard of living."

All three budgets assume "that maintenance of health and social well-being, the nurture of children, and participation in community activities are desirable and necessary goals."

In keeping with the government's position that cigarette smoking is "hazardous" to health, the budgets did not allow expenditures for cigarettes. There are allowances, however, for pipe tobacco, cigars and alcohol.

The department said that its studies show that "the lower the budget the larger the proportion of costs devoted to the necessities of life."

Basic Needs Listed

Consumption expenditures—food, housing, transportation, clothing, medical care, gifts, education and recreation—account for 82 percent of the low budget, 79 percent of the moderate budget and 76 percent of the higher budget.

When food and medical care costs are combined, they make up 35.9 percent of the low budget, 28.5 percent of the moderate budget and 23.6 percent of the higher budget.

The low budget provides less variety in food, more potatoes and dried beans, less fruit, less expensive cuts of meat, and fewer and cheaper restaurant meals than allowed in the moderate and higher budgets.

All three budgets provide for group hospital and surgical insurance, but only the high budget specified major medical insurance, which supplements basic hospital-surgical coverage.

Food costs averaged $1,644, $2,105 and $2,586 in the low, moderate and higher budgets. Medical care costs were set at $474, $477 and $497 respectively.

Here's how the budgets differ in other major categories:

Housing — Housing costs were $1,303 in the lower budget, which allowed for rental only without air conditioning, $2,230 in the moderate budget and $3,340 in the higher budget. Home ownership was assumed for a majority of families in the moderate and higher budgets.

Transportation—Costs averaged $446 in the low budget, $872 in the moderate budget and $1,127 in the higher budget. The differences resulted largely from the proportion of automobile ownership specified for each budget, the age of cars and how often they are replaced.

In addition, the low budget permits no out-of-town travel on planes, trains or other public vehicles, and no comprehensive insurance.

Clothing—Costs were $538 in the lower budget, and $767 and $1,139 in the moderate and higher budgets respectively. Clothing allowances varied slightly in quantity but considerably in quality.

Social security, taxes—Social security payments averaged $265 in the low budget and $303 in both of the other budgets. Taxes were $474 in the lower budget, $1,062 and $1,969 in the moderate and higher budgets.

The most expensive of the 39 areas covered in the study was Honolulu, priced at $7,246, $10,902 and $16,076 for the three budgets. The most economical was Austin, Tex. with budgets of $5,237, $7,952 and $11,299.

For a moderate budget, the most expensive areas, following Honolulu, were Boston; New York-Northeastern New Jersey; Hartford, Conn.; San Francisco-Oakland and Buffalo. If Fairbanks, Alaska, had been included in the survey it "undoubtedly" would have topped Honolulu, Chase said.

Maritime Unions Ask Congress To Plug Tax Leak of 'Runaways'

The AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. has asked Congress to plug a major tax loophole exploited by "runaway" shipowners to deprive the United States of large amounts of tax revenues and at the same time injure the U.S. merchant marine.

O. William Moody Jr., administrator of the department, made the request in testimony presented to the House Ways & Means Committee.

Moody assailed the tax exemption allowed to runaway ship operators—U.S. corporations which organize foreign subsidiaries, chiefly in Liberia and Panama, to engage in international trade involving the United States. The practice has become a matter of "great concern" to the AFL-CIO maritime group, Moody said, "because of the detrimental impact it has had upon the national economy, the maritime industry and the workers who must depend upon it for a livelihood."

"The operation of foreign flag ships to carry cargoes from a foreign subsidiary of a U.S. corporation to the U.S. parent company has become a major tax avoidance problem," Moody told the congressmen.

He cited the following advantages enjoyed by runaway flag vessels and their owners:

"1—The earnings of the runaway flag ships are wholly exempt from taxation in the United States and, in fact, are excluded in computing the gross income of the foreign corporation.

"2—The runaway avoids payment of wages to American seamen at the U.S. scale and dodges U.S. safety and other maritime regulations, along with taxes.

"3—The runaway is enabled to use the money he has made at the expense of the American taxpayer and American wage earner to build ships abroad where wages are substandard. Then he operates more ships under foreign flags while we watch our own merchant fleet evaporate."

Moody asked the committee members to take note that at the present time major U.S. oil companies alone operate 314 tankers under foreign flags, and 63 other runaway ships currently operate in the bulk ore trade with the U.S. steel, aluminum and gypsum industries owning most of them.

"These runaways," Moody testified, "not only represent a net tax loss to the United States; they then turn around and act as modern-day 'commerce raiders' by undercutting the American-flag fleet in the carriage of U.S. export-import trade.

"At the end of 1968, foreign-flag vessels were carrying some 93 percent of our exports and imports. Many of the foreigners were American-owned runaway vessels."

For practical reasons, Moody did not propose outright repeal of the exemption. However, he told the congressmen:

"There is no reason why the exemption could not be limited so as not to exempt the earnings of ships or aircraft under foreign registry which are directly or indirectly owned by U.S. citizens or U.S. corporations.

"This would mean that the tankers, ore carriers and other special cargo ships registered in Liberia and Panama would be taxable under the rules applicable to other foreign subsidiaries where the stock of the foreign shipping firm is owned or controlled by U.S. corporations. It would eliminate the runaway flag and limit the exemption strictly to foreign-owned ships and aircraft."

Moody concluded: "Our concern is for all workers as well as union members who must suffer if they are forced to pay a disproportionate share of taxes to make up for losses made possible in the high income brackets because of deficiencies in the law."

Three Budget Standards For Metropolitan Areas

The annual cost of living in 39 cities for a four-person family on three economic levels in the spring of 1967:

	Lower Budget	Moderate Budget	Higher Budget
Honolulu	$7,246	$10,902	$16,076
New York	6,021	9,977	14,868
Boston	6,251	9,973	14,568
Hartford	6,422	9,833	13,814
San Francisco-Oakland	6,571	9,774	14,079
Buffalo	6,083	9,624	13,679
Milwaukee	6,104	9,544	13,636
Seattle	6,520	9,550	13,486
Minneapolis-St. Paul	6,058	9,399	13,348
Cedar Rapids, Iowa	6,223	9,358	13,307
Chicago	6,104	9,334	13,325
Los Angeles	6,305	9,326	13,645
Champaign-Urbana, Ill.	6,257	9,257	13,199
Cleveland	5,915	9,262	12,997
Indianapolis	6,124	9,232	13,111
Washington	6,133	9,273	13,419
Portland, Me.	5,951	9,195	12,660
St. Louis	6,002	9,140	12,813
San Diego	6,002	9,209	13,461
Denver	5,905	9,080	13,011
Philadelphia	5,898	9,079	13,131
Detroit	5,873	8,981	12,911
Green Bay, Wis.	5,714	8,955	12,944
Kansas City, Mo.	5,957	8,965	12,732
Lancaster, Pa.	5,823	8,960	12,610
Wichita, Kan.	5,978	8,907	12,595
Bakersfield, Calif.	5,779	8,882	12,765
Cincinnati	5,702	8,826	12,283
Pittsburgh	5,841	8,764	12,551
Baltimore	5,820	8,685	12,728
Durham, N. C.	5,570	8,688	12,431
Dayton, Ohio	5,796	8,636	12,392
Atlanta	5,597	8,328	11,846
Baton Rouge	5,402	8,348	12,375
Dallas	5,607	8,345	12,157
Nashville	5,677	8,388	12,055
Houston	5,542	8,301	11,897
Orlando, Fla.	5,419	8,227	12,024
Austin, Tex.	5,237	7,952	11,299

Conductors Net 12.5% Package In Rail Accord

Cleveland—Railroad conductors represented by the United Transportation Union will receive a wage-benefits package valued at 12.5 percent over 18 months under terms of a settlement announced here.

UTU Pres. Charles Luna said the union has reached agreement in a 20-month-old dispute involving more than 20,000 employes on the nation's railroads. The workers formerly were represented by the Conductors & Brakemen, now part of UTU.

The union said wage increases for conductors on a daily wage basis are to be applied in increments of 5 percent retroactive to July 1, 1968, 2 percent retroactive to Jan. 1, 1969, and 3 percent on July 1, 1969. Conductors paid on a mileage basis will get 3 percent in the first increment, with other increments the same as those granted daily-rate employes.

In addition, the equivalent of a 1 percent pay increase plus 32 cents an hour will be added to the basic daily rates as of July 1, 1969, and 40 cents an hour will be added on that same date to the pay of conductors on certain hourly paid runs.

The settlement, UTU said, also includes improvements in vacations and paid holidays, plus increases in carrier-paid liability insurance.

Luna noted that the agreement follows the lines of an emergency board's recommendations, which he had urged as a basis for settlement.

Over 5-Year Extension:

Showdown Expected On Aid to Education

(Continued from Page 1)

ported Republican proposals to substitute "block grants" to states instead of earmarked funds for the neediest school districts, said she had "serious reservations" about the bill.

Some minor changes were made in the bill, the most controversial of which would add children from families living in public housing to the "impact" aid program. This is the program, popular with Congress although not with the Executive Branch, which provides extra money for schools attended by children of government employes and servicemen.

A Republican attempt to limit the impact program by excluding from the count families of government employes above specified income levels was rejected.

The extension bill would authorize about $5 billion a year for the aid to education programs, up somewhat from the present limit. That figure can be misleading, however, since the budget requests and the congressional appropriations for the existing program have consistently been less than half of the amount authorized.

The AFL-CIO, in its testimony, strongly urged that Congress fully fund existing programs before trying to add on new proposals. Walter G. Davis, the federation's education director, said available funds have been "spread too thin," resulting in "a case of too little money and too many poor children."

In House floor action, Democrats made Republicans sweat a bit before approving an Administration-sought bill raising the limit on the national debt.

Such legislation is periodically necessary to meet the fluctuations in the government's cash on hand, but during the Johnson Administration Republicans voted nearly solidly against every such bill.

This time the shoe was on the other foot. Pres. Nixon appealed to Congress to vote a $12 million increase in the debt limit "as promptly as possible" so the government can continue to pay its bills. The Republican leadership urged GOP members at a party caucus to back the President's request.

House Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) noted pointedly that during the eight years of the Johnson Administration, on 10 roll-call votes, there were only 21 Republican votes for lifting the debt ceiling. And some Democrats noted bitterly that their Republican opponents in campaigns had used their votes for temporary increases in the debt limit to attack them as "spenders."

With the Democrats in the majority in Congress, they could have retaliated. But, McCormack told the GOP, "I like healthy conversions," and the bill was passed, 313-92. Some Democrats held back their votes until they were sure most Republicans were recorded for the increase.

The House also followed through on pay increases for members of Congress and top government executives by boosting the pay of the Vice President and Speaker of the House to $62,500 a year, and raising the majority and minority leaders of the House and Senate and the president pro tempore of the Senate to $55,000. The increase was in line with raises given other top officials on the basis of recommendations from a presidential commission.

The Senate had little business before it, after having voted 83-15 ratification of the treaty to ban the spread of nuclear weapons.

Its committees were active, however, with hearings on a broad range of subjects including a number of consumer issues.

Testimony was heard on proposals to establish a Dept. of Consumer Affairs, on coal mine health and safety, on drug prices, on reform of the Federal Trade Commission and on product guarantees.

At a Senate Appropriations subcommittee meeting, Agriculture Sec. Clifford M. Hardin said he hoped to send to Congress soon a bill to expand and liberalize the food stamp program. He said he could not give the details yet.

Hardin told the subcommittee that between 6 million and 14 million Americans suffer from malnutrition. Although there has been no official announcement, it has been widely reported that a cabinet-level committee headed by Hardin has recommended to Pres. Nixon that funds to feed the hungry be increased by about $1 billion over the next four years.

GOOD HEALTH DAY is a day off with pay for these Amalgamated Laundry Workers from Sullivan County, N.Y. They used it to visit their union's Joint Board health center in New York City and take the medical and physical examinations called for by their ACWA contract. Shown at the center, above, are members of Laundry Workers Local 326 from three laundries in Monticello, Liberty and Woodridge, N.Y. They are among 17,000 ACWA members covered by the unusual "health day off" benefit.

Parley Set on Labor's Role In Community

The 14th annual AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Services will be held at the Shoreham Hotel, Washington, on May 18-22, the federation announced.

More than 700 delegates and observers—union officers, leaders in the areas of health and welfare and 150 full-time AFL-CIO Community Services representatives—will spend the four days exploring the role of labor in a changing community.

Probe Community

Speakers, workshops and discussion groups will put the American community under examination.

Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities, said the conference will seek answers to:

"What are the guidelines for developing community service leadership from the ranks of labor that will benefit the entire community? When new services are needed—can new agencies be organized and ineffective ones dissolved—and through cooperation or through conflict?"

The conference's objective is to come up not only with answers, but with plans for implementing them "through sound community organization and constructive social action," he said.

Credit Crunch Tightens As Prime Rate Climbs

The cost of borrowing money soared again as the nation's largest banks increased the interest rate they charge on loans to their richest and most credit-worthy customers, usually large corporations.

This "prime" interest rate was boosted from 7 to 7.5 percent first by Morgan Guaranty Trust Co., New York's fourth largest bank, and within hours by other banks in large cities across the nation.

It was the fourth increase in less than four months. On Dec. 2 the prime rate was upped from 6.25 to 6.5 percent; on Dec. 18 it was raised to 6.75 percent; and on Jan. 7 it went to 7 percent.

Most commercial banks announcing the rate increase did so without explanation. However, some bankers contended that the action was taken because available lending funds have dwindled in the prevailing tight money situation.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its midwinter meeting, pointed out that increases in prime rates "raise interest rates all along the line—to medium-sized and small businesses, to home-buyers, farmers, consumers and the government."

These high costs for borrowed money, the council said, "are being built into the price structure, from manufacturer to retailer and consumer—to the profit of the banks and other lenders."

"In addition," it added, "these high interest rates, accompanied by the Federal Reserve's squeeze on bank credit, threaten a sharp slowdown of economic activities."

The reaction to the latest increase in the prime rate was mixed.

Asked at the White House about the hike in the bellwether bank lending charge, Ronald Ziegler, Pres. Nixon's press secretary, said the Administration wants to attack the causes of inflation rather than a "result," such as the prime rate rise.

Rep. Wright Patman (D-Tex.), chairman of the House Banking Committee, called on the Administration to act to roll back the rate increase, which he compared to "legalized robbery."

Sen. John J. Sparkman (D-Ala.), chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, announced that the committee would hold hearings to find out if the Administration has any plans to "get interest rates back to a normal and reasonable level."

Chairman Paul McCracken of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, termed the rate increase a "perfectly normal" response to mounting inflation.

Following a speech in Washington, McCracken refused to answer a question as to how long he thought the Federal Reserve Board's 5.5 percent discount rate "might survive" in light of the prime rate increase.

Some economists contended that the new prime rate would "cool" the economy and help control inflation. But others stressed that it would add to pressure on prices.

3-22-69

Meany Asks Amendment Drive For Direct Election of President

(Continued from Page 1)

plan and all other alternatives that have been proposed, Meany said, is that they could result in electing a President who received fewer votes than an opponent.

At the Senate hearings, Meany endorsed the proposal by Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.) and 40 other senators. It would provide that the winner of a nationwide popular vote be elected President if he receives at least 40 percent of the total vote. If no candidate received 40 percent of the vote, there would be a runoff election between the two top candidates.

Meany stressed that the amendment should also authorize Congress to adopt uniform age and residency requirements for voting and eligibility requirements for getting on the ballot. He reiterated labor's belief that all persons 18 or older should be eligible to vote.

Three times in the nation's history, Meany noted, the loser of the popular vote has been chosen President. The "compromise" that gave the 1876 election to Rutherford B. Hayes over Samuel J. Tilden, Meany said, involved a deal "that paved the way for the deprivation and postponement of equal voting and civil rights for Negroes and other minorities for a period of nearly 90 years."

It was just such a "deal," he added, that third party candidate George Wallace "dreamed of" in the 1968 election.

As for the Electoral College, Meany said, the AFL-CIO agrees with both Presidents Nixon and Johnson that "whatever else is done, the individual electors should be abolished."

On the present procedure of throwing the election into the House of Representatives if no candidate receives an electoral majority, with each state having a single vote, Meany commented:

"It is hard to imagine how a more archaic or totally unrepresentative system could have been devised."

As for a proposal to allocate electoral votes by congressional districts instead of giving all of a state's votes to the popular vote winner in that state, it would have resulted in the election of Nixon over John F. Kennedy in 1960.

Nixon would have had a 278-245 majority in electoral votes, even though his popuar vote total was lower.

The only way to carry out the intent of the American people in presidential elections, Meany emphasized, is through direct, popular vote election of the President.

James Reynolds Heads Shipping Association

James J. Reynolds, former Under Secretary of Labor, has been named president of the American Institute of Merchant Shipping, a trade association representing primarily the shipping companies receiving federal subsidies.

U.S. Standards Backed for Job Injury Benefits

The AFL-CIO thanked the chairman of the House Education & Labor Committee for sponsoring a bill to establish federal workmen's compensation standards and expressed hope that hearings can be held soon.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote Committee Chairman Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) that the AFL-CIO "for many years" has strongly favored federal standards for state workmen's compensation programs.

He noted that the Perkins bill would require that state laws meet the benefit standards in the federal Longshore & Harbor Workers' Act. While this is a "worthwhile approach," Biemiller noted, "I would want to call your attention to the fact that we think the Longshore & Harbor Workers' Act itself needs some improvement" and bills are pending to raise its benefits.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, March 29, 1969 | No. 13

Nixon to Cut Back Budget, Calls for Surtax Extension

Real Wages Show Drop Over Year

By Duane Emme

The purchasing power of rank-and-file workers' pay checks in February dropped below the year-earlier level for the first time in 13 months, the Labor Dept. reported.

The decline in real spendable earnings—from January and over the year—occurred as the Consumer Price Index rose four-tenths of 1 percent to 124.6 percent of the 1957-59 base period.

The February CPI, up 4.7 percent from a year ago, means that it costs $12.46 to buy goods and services that cost $10 in the 1957-59 period.

Gross average weekly earnings of production and nonsupervisory workers rose an average of 37 cents over the month to $111, as a result of a 1-cent advance in average hourly earnings.

Weekly take-home pay for the worker with three dependents averaged $97.25 in February, a gain of 28 cents over January. For the worker with no dependents, take-home pay increased 28 cents to an average of $88.31.

Real spendable earnings—take-home pay adjusted to account for price increases since 1957-59—averaged $78.05 a week for the worker with three dependents in February, and $70.87 for the worker with no dependents. These figures were down 9 and 6 cents respectively from January.

For the worker with three dependents, real earnings were down 11 cents from February 1968, and for the worker with no dependents they were 91 cents below a year ago.

Real earnings advanced in mining, construction and several other industries on a year-to-year comparison, but these increases were more than offset by declines in

(Continued on Page 6)

LAS VEGAS SHOWGIRLS and entertainers dump their picket signs after the Guild of Variety Artists negotiated a 50 percent increase in wages and benefits to avert a strike. (Story, Page 3.)

Hill-Burton Overhaul:

Major Shifts Urged In Hospital Aid Plan

The AFL-CIO called for a "fundamental revamping" of the 23-year-old Hill-Burton hospital construction program and the Nixon Administration urged a "radical redirection" of the program.

But the similarities didn't go much beyond that in testimony before a House Commerce subcommittee.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told the subcommittee that the program should be expanded to meet the urgent need for comprehensive health care in urban poverty areas.

The quarter-million people in the Watts area of Los Angeles, he cited as an example, now must depend on the distant county general hospital for both in-patient and outpatient medical care.

Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Robert H. Finch said the government should end direct aid for hospital construction and substitute a program of loan guarantees. This wouldn't cost the government anything unless a hospital defaulted on its loan.

A considerably smaller amount of money could then be turned over to the states in "block grants," Finch said. The states would be able to use the bulk of the money as they saw fit for outpatient clinics, neighborhood health centers, nursing homes and other medical services.

Finch said continuation of direct hospital construction aid along with other expanded programs in a bill by Commerce Committee Chairman Harley O. Staggers (D-W. Va.) would be too costly.

It would, he said, "have an impact on the federal budget which is not consonant with this Administration's efforts to stem inflationary forces and establish patterns of greater federal fiscal responsibility."

(Continued on Page 7)

Meany Warns on Slashing Programs

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Nixon told Congress the federal budget must be cut and high taxes continued "to counter the upward spiral of prices and wages."

He urged continuation of the 10 percent tax surcharge and extension of excise taxes. Even though this alone would result in a budget surplus, Nixon said he will propose cuts to bring federal spending "significantly below" the Johnson Administration budget and return even more money to the treasury.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany served notice that labor will oppose "any meat-axe approach to budget-cutting."

There are "vital" government programs "which must not be cut," Meany said, and "many others where expenditures must be increased." In the latter category, he said, "are those expenditures designed to meet America's urban crisis, for relief in this area can no longer be delayed."

If the surtax needs to be extended, Meany said, it should be accompanied by major tax reforms to make it "fair." He listed these priority reforms:

- "The surtax on corporations should be double that placed on individuals. The profits of American corporations are the key source of inflation in 1969.
- "An immediate minimum tax should be applied to the large amounts of personal and corporate income that now escape federal taxation. . . . The same rate as the surtax should be applied to excluded income that results from major loopholes — capital gains, oil and mineral depletion allow-

(Continued on Page 8)

Construction Unions Push Safety Bill

More workers were killed in the construction industry last year than in any other U.S. industry, the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. said in urging Congress to enact a proposed construction safety bill.

Since 1959, there has been no year in which fewer than 2,300 construction workers were killed on the job, nor less than 209,000 such workers disabled, Department Pres. C. J. Haggerty told the Senate Labor subcommittee in a statement presented by Department Legislative Dir. Walter J. Mason.

Pointing out that 2,800 additional workers have died since Haggerty testified last year before the House Labor Committee, his statement asked "how many construction workers must be killed . . . to see safety legislation enacted?"

Haggerty noted a Bureau of Labor Statistics report that 42 million man-days of work were lost in 1967 because of work stoppages. But construction workers alone had almost

(Continued on Page 8)

NLRB Rules Strikers Retain Voting Status

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that economic strikers whose jobs have been filled remain part of the bargaining unit and have the right to vote in unit elections within a year after the start of the strike.

The board noted that the ruling revised its "approach to this matter" to conform with the intent of Congress in the Landrum-Griffin Act.

It ordered C. H. Guenther & Son, Inc., doing business in San Antonio, Tex., as Pioneer Flour Mills, to negotiate new contract terms with Brewery Workers Local 110 and to return union strikers to the jobs filled between May 3 and Aug. 4, 1967, by "new untrained employes."

During 1966 negotiations on a new contract the union went on strike. Of 96 employes in the bargaining unit, 79 actively supported the strike, 16 con-

(Continued on Page 6)

Senate Unit Issues Call For Farm Union Rights

There is "no logical reason" why farm workers should be denied the legal right to organize and bargain collectively, a Senate Labor subcommittee emphasized.

Until farm workers are given that right, it added, there will be ever-increasing "strife" in the agriculture industry and Congress must assume major blame for the situation.

In those terms, the annual report of the Senate Subcommittee on Migratory Labor called for inclusion of agriculture under the National Labor Relations Act as the first of a series of recommendations.

In other areas, it proposed:

- Extending for five years the Migrant Health Act and expansion of its services. The law, which allows federal grants toward upgrading health services for migrant workers, expires next year.
- Revamping or extending federal food-assistance programs to reach the migrant poor, or developing entirely new nutrition programs to combat hunger, and malnutrition among migrants.
- Stronger enforcement of existing housing codes governing health, sanitation and environment at migrant labor camps.
- A full-scale survey of the Economic Opportunity Act with a view toward increasing the number

(Continued on Page 7)

Timber Output Lag Threatens Housing, Jobs

The nation's timber production must be increased as rapidly as good conservation practices permit in order to bring down the sky-high price of lumber, a Carpenters' officer told Congress.

Peter E. Terzick, treasurer of the Carpenters, said the shortage of timber has hurt both the union's 80,000 members directly employed in the lumber industry and carpenters working in the construction industry.

He told a House Banking subcommittee that the shortage of timber to meet both domestic and export demand sent lumber and plywood prices up nearly 70 percent last year—even though wages in the industry rose less than 6 percent.

Wrongly Blamed

He cited the disparity, Terzick said, because "too often labor is made the most convenient whipping boy in situations of this kind."

Recently-enacted restrictions on exports of logs to Japan "should help to ease the pressure on log supplies," Terzick said. But beyond that, he urged, the federal government should act to increase timber production on federal lands—with rigid conservation controls and without infringing on scenic areas.

Terzick told the subcommittee that some 30 mills in Oregon and Washington have been forced to close in the past few years because of the timber shortage. And the added cost of building materials has hit the housing industry. "Whatever tends to increase the cost of construction also tends to shrink the volume of building," he noted.

Hearst Voting Favors Unions By 62-1 Margin

Los Angeles—It was unions 1,560, Hearst 25 when the National Labor Relations Board finally counted the ballots of striking and locked-out employes of Hearst's Herald-Examiner newspaper here.

The ballots, cast in a Dec. 12-14 election nearly a year after the strike-lockout started, were counted after Hearst dropped a court suit and ballot challenges. The count showed that members of eight unions voted in favor of continued union representation by a 62-1 margin.

The elections, sought by the unions and opposed by Hearst, preserve bargaining rights for a year from the date of certification.

The vote count showed the Newspaper Guild won in its bargaining unit, 664-19; Printing Pressmen, 266-3; Typographical Union, 248-0; ITU Mailers, 243-1; Stereotypers, 90-2; Paper Handlers, 27-0; Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, 10-0; Machinists, 12-0.

A spokesman for the unions said the election "removes all doubt that Herald-Examiner workers want union representation." Hearst "should now realize that he cannot get rid of the unions" and should "promptly enter negotiations in good faith" to settle the dispute, he declared.

The paper has attempted to operate with the aid of strikebreakers since Dec. 15, 1967—the date the Guild and the IAM struck and Hearst locked out members of the other unions.

AIR POLLUTION control requires diligent effort by union members in their communities, Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel stressed at a USWA conference on air pollution in Washington. John J. Sheehan, seated, the union's legislative director, was chairman.

Strike Insurance Plan Weighed by Contractors

A proposed strike insurance plan under which building contractors would be indemnified for work stoppages due to any type of labor dispute was reported by the Bureau of National Affairs in its Daily Labor Report for Mar. 19.

The publication said representatives of contractors and a non-U.S. firm affiliated with Lloyd's of London will meet in the British capitol in May to work out final details.

Daily Labor Report said that "if no hitch develops in the planned time table," a program open to all employers and companies "allied with the construction industry" will be in operation by next January.

Insurance purchasers would be indemnified for project interruptions up to 60 days a year growing out of stoppages caused by any type of labor dispute — strikes, picketing, boycotts and lockouts, on the job-site as well as off.

The insurance will be open for purchase by contractors whether union or non-union; subcontractors, suppliers, project owners, construction equipment manufacturers and others, the publication said.

Only individual polices will be sold. There will be no multi-employer group insurance. The proposed plan defines a labor dispute as one involving union organizing, union recognition, jurisdictional disputes, primary, secondary and consumer boycotts, area standards picketing, lockouts conducted by multi-employer groups.

Premiums would be geared to the amount of daily indemnity preferred by the insured. No indemnities would be paid during the first 10 days of a work stoppage but would begin on the 11th day and continue to a maximum of 60 days in any one year, according to Daily Labor Report.

The BNA publication said the plan was revealed to members of the Associated General Contractors of America at its 50th anniversary convention Mar. 17-20 in Washington. It was the product of a study by a subcommittee set up by AGC 18 months ago.

The subcommittee, headed by J. N. Matich of the Matich Corp., Colton, Calif., contractors, was instructed to investigate the feasibility of an effective strike insurance plan to "help correct the imbalance at the bargaining table."

The subcommittee was dissolved after its final report was accepted by AGC's executive committee and board of directors, Daily Labor Report said.

New Mexico Senate Kills 3rd R-T-W Bid

Santa Fe—A final attempt to put over a "right-to-work" law in New Mexico was soundly beaten just before the 1969 session of the state legislature adjourned.

A move to attach the union shop ban to a human rights bill was defeated in the Senate, 30-12. Earlier, a House committee had attached "right to work" to the same bill but it was knocked out, 41-29, on the House floor.

The House earlier rejected a measure to bring "right to work" before the electorate in either a general or special election as a constitutional amendment.

Abel Presses Union Role:

Steel Union Spurs Air Pollution Fight

Air pollution "can be controlled" and Steelworkers' members must play a major role in helping to control it, USWA Pres. I. W. Abel emphasized to union representatives in Washington.

Abel addressed 250 district and local union officers at a two-day conference on air pollution sponsored by the Steelworkers in cooperation with the National Air Pollution Control Administration.

The NAPCA was set up under the Air Quality Act of 1967 which provides for establishment of air-quality control regions and makes states within these regions responsible for setting pollution control standards.

Conference workshops, panels and speakers discussed ways in which the union's members can best participate in public hearings that will precede the adoption of standards in the various regions.

Abel said that Steelworkers must become "personally involved" in the hearings because "in many cases our various plants are the greatest cause of air pollution in our communities."

Pointing to an "even more compelling reason" for union members to get involved, he added, "The ruination of our health may well be the risk which will be taken for the lack of action."

Abel pointed out that the type of standards to be set will depend upon the extent to which the public and workers participate in hearings since "those who are the cause of the pollution will also participate."

"If you do not participate," he warned, "then the standards may well be determined . . . by those who have a vested interest in the industrial facilities."

John T. Middleton, commissioner of the NAPCA, explained the provisions of the act and pointed out that the conference was well-timed since nearly all of the hearings are still to get under way.

He said Steelworkers are strategically located to participate because most steel is produced in about 20 large metropolitan areas and by the end of 1969 most of these areas will be included in control regions.

George Taylor of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research noted that the conference was in keeping with the federation's "deep concern over air pollution as a national menace." He added, "We hope that your example will become contagious."

The AFL-CIO, Taylor said, had wanted an even stronger air pollution control program than is provided for in the 1967 law and is now seeking amendments to the act.

Taylor said these changes should give the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. authority to set standards for the emission of pollutants from power plants, steel mills and refineries; strengthen the law's enforcement powers and provide for more research on developing electric powered vehicles.

Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.) told the conference that Congress must strengthen air pollution control programs and provide adequate funds to carry them out. "Our record must be better in the future than it has been in the past," he declared.

Mayor John B. Nicosia of East Chicago, Ind., described air pollution control equipment now being installed by Inland Steel Corp. and Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. in his city.

Nicosia was instrumental in getting the companies to act after he won election in 1963 on a platform that included a pledge to do something about air pollution.

Labor Dept. Names 2 Manpower Aides

Arnold R. Weber, Assistant Secretary of Labor for Manpower, has announced the appointment of Joseph A. Pichler as his special assistant and David O. Williams as special assistant to Manpower Administrator J. Nicholas Peet.

West Virginia Highway Laborers Sue Governor Over Mass Firings

Charleston—West Virginia State Roads Commission employes filed suit in federal court here accusing Gov. Arch A. Moore (R) of violating their constitutional rights to join a union.

The 3,500 highway workers, members of the Laborers, went on strike Mar. 3 after the state refused to recognize the union, establish a seniority system or provide machinery for appeal of grievances.

The governor announced in a television broadcast Mar. 11 that roads commission employes are "hereby released for neglect of duty."

The suit was filed by the Laborers District Council of West Virginia and employes from each of the roads commission's 10 districts when the Moore administration refused a mediation plan offered by the union.

The Laborers charged that the firing of the highway workers was a "drastic, illegal action" in reprisal for their union activity. It charged also that the administration then "set about trying to break the strike by hiring strikebreakers" to man the highway department.

"But those efforts have failed," the Laborers said. "The picket lines have held. The strike remains 90 percent effective."

The lawsuit charges that the constitutional rights of employes were violated by the governor because the U.S. Constitution "grants public employes the right to join" or form a union of their own choice.

"This doctrine was laid down," the union said, "in two recent federal court decisions—in St. Louis, Mo., and Charlotte, N.C. Both rulings held that public employes have a right, under the 1st and 14th amendments, to join unions."

In St. Louis, the court said "the guarantee of the right of assembly protects more than the right to attend a meeting; it includes the right to express one's attitudes or philosophies by membership in a group or by affiliation with it, or by other lawful means. . . ."

The union statement noted that the St. Louis court also ruled that under the Civil Rights Act of 1871, employes can sue if their constitutional rights are violated.

The state employes charged that the governor, in addition to violating the civil rights of road employes, also had no authority under state law to fire the employes.

The suit asks back pay for the employes from the date of their discharge and an order directing Moore and the roads commission to meet with the union to discuss employes grievances and working conditions.

The mass firings rallied statewide support behind the strikers, their union said. It reported that demonstrations are being held daily by union members, university students, and others.

Edward Modes Dies, Pilots' PR Director

Edward C. Modes, public relations director for the Air Line Pilots and editor of the union magazine since 1946, died of a stroke in Cheverly, Md., at 52. Funeral services were scheduled Mar. 28 at Laurel, Md., with burial in Catonsville, Md.

Born in Richmond, Va., Modes graduated from William Jewell College with a journalism degree and was a reporter for United Press, the Detroit News and other papers. He was a member of the Intl. Labor Press Association, the Public Relations Society of America, the Aviation & Space Writers Association and other groups.

First Six-Day Week:

Vegas Entertainers Win 50% Increase

Las Vegas, Nev.—With the Las Vegas labor movement united solidly behind them, 600 entertainers have negotiated a new three-year agreement with the plush hotels here, winning a 50 percent boost in wages and fringe benefits plus their first six-day week.

Settlement came at a gruelling 18-hour negotiating session in the face of a threat by the American Guild of Variety Artists to strike the multi-billion-dollar hotels lining the Las Vegas "Strip."

The Southern Nevada Trades & Labor Council had given official sanction to the proposed AGVA strike, and had served notice on management that some 18,000 unionists—employed as musicians, stagehands, culinary workers, bartenders and the like at the hotels—would refuse to cross AGVA picket lines.

The new contract provides a first-year basic minimum of $228 weekly for a schedule of 13 shows in six days. The previous rate was $193 for 15 shows in seven days. This represents an increase of 36 percent in the first year. The contract also calls for 4 percent boosts in the second and third years, bringing the minimum to $237 in 1970 and $246 in 1971.

The contract calls for payment of an additional $17.54 per show for all shows over 13 in the course of the six-day week, with double premium of $36.48 for each show on the seventh day. These per-show minimums increase by 4 percent in each of the succeeding years. The agreement sets a basic six-hour work day for five days, and an eight-hour day on the sixth day, and provides for time-and-one-half for all hours beyond those ranges.

Entertainers also won supplemental pay of $50 per week in those cases where chorus performers are also called on to perform specialty numbers, an increase in rehearsal pay to $125 from the former level of $60 for a 35-hour week, and an end to the practice whereby management was allowed to demand six free hours of "brush-up" rehearsal weekly.

The contract also contains the first vacation and sick pay provisions in AGVA's history here. Under the terms of the agreement, 1 percent of earnings will be set aside for vacations and another 1 percent for sick pay in the second year, with these amounts rising to 2 percent for each fund in 1971.

In the final hours of bargaining, the rank-and-file union negotiating committee held firm for contractual language to guarantee entertainers the right to respect the picket lines of fellow unionists at the Strip hotels. First such provision ever to appear in an AGVA collective bargaining agreement, it was included in the Las Vegas contract in recognition of the fact that the entertainers could not have won so sweeping a victory had it not been for the support of other unions which have bargaining agreements with the hotels.

Sec.-Treas. Ted Lawson of the Central Labor Council and James Gildea, assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, sat in on the marathon negotiations. Heading the union bargaining team were AGVA's second vice president, Penny Singleton, the former "Blondie" of movie fame, and General Counsel Howard Schulman.

VISITING GRAPE STRIKERS are treated to free haircuts by members of Barbers Local 548 in Chicago. The United Farm Workers Organizing Committee team is in Chicago to press the boycott of California table grapes. The barbers are, from left, Jose Medellin, Jesus Hurta and Fernando Estralla, owner of the shop. The farm workers are Eliseo Medina, Jorge Robles, Alfredo Deavila and Roy Mendez.

Job Blacklisting Service Linked To Right-Wing 'Church League'

The right-wing Church League of America has been charged with operating a "blacklisting business" that gives employers a secret check into the background of job applicants.

The charge was made by the Institute for American Democracy (IAD), a non-profit organization which exposes extremists on both the left and right. Its board includes leaders in labor, religion, business and government.

Details of the blacklisting service were explained by Charles R. Baker, IAD's executive secretary, in an article in the March issue of the organization's newsletter, Homefront.

This is how the setup works, based on letters and a flyer being sent to businessmen in the Chicago, Philadelphia and New York areas, Baker said:

For as little as $5 a head, prospective employers can get a check into what the Church League terms the "philosophy of life" of job-seekers.

The individual job applicant has no way of knowing about the check and there is no defense against wrong identification.

Employers are told that for a $1,000 "donation," they can get checks on 50 names, with additional checks at $5 each. Even if they don't use the service, employers can write off the "donation" as a tax deductible contribution, CLA says.

Name checks are made against the Church League's files, which the organization claims "are the most reliable, comprehensive and complete, and second only to those of the FBI."

According to Baker, the Church League has boasted that it has file cards of nearly 3 million persons, groups and publications "which serve the Communist cause," and has claimed to have a working relationship with law enforcement groups.

Prospective clients are sent a promotional letter warning that "our working forces include more than a few radicals, socialists, revolutionaries, Communists and troublemakers of all sorts."

"Colleges and schools are educating thousands more who will soon be seeking employment," the letter adds.

The Church League points out that while employers can easily check the "educational and professional background" of job seekers, little is being done to learn their "philosophy of life," which is "of paramount importance."

Baker identified the Church League of America as a right-wing group that provides a "library function" for a variety of other right-wing outfits. It lists Major Edgar Bundy as its executive secretary.

The Church League's catalog, Baker noted, features materials from the John Birch Society and the Carl McIntyre complex. Last winter, Bundy was a guest on Birch member Dean Manion's Radio and TV Forum.

In 1967, the last year for which reports are available, the tax exempt Church League reported an income of $280,195, largely from contributions, Baker said.

Supreme Court Lifts State Curb on Pickets

Railroad unions won a round in their six-year-old contract dispute with the Florida East Coast Railway when the Supreme Court ruled that state governments and state courts may not interfere with peaceful picketing.

By a 4-3 vote, with two justices not participating, the court reversed a Florida District Court of Appeals decision, made in 1966, that the Railroad Trainmen and other unions could not picket the Jacksonville, Fla., terminal except at one reserved gate. The terminal is owned by the FEC and two other railroads.

The high court opinion, by Justice John H. Harlan, noted that the case arises out of the nation's longest railroad labor dispute. Rail unions, on strike against the FEC since Jan. 23, 1963, began picketing the terminal in Jacksonville two years ago when the railroad unilaterally changed the pay, work rules and working conditions of operating employes.

A U.S. District Court injunction against picketing was dissolved by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals as a violation of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The Supreme Court affirmed the appeals ruling. The railroad then got injunctions from Florida state courts which led to the latest Supreme Court ruling.

Justice Harlan said that since Congress has not furnished the courts with a "usable standard" to apply in the type of picketing involved, the "least unsatisfactory" solution is to allow the parties to the dispute to "employ the full range of whatever peaceful economic power they can muster."

Three justices dissented—William O. Douglas, Hugo L. Black and Potter Stewart. Justices Abe Fortas and Thurgood Marshall did not take part in the case.

Seidman Named To HEW Panel

AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman has been named by Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Robert H. Finch to a select committee to review the report of an HEW task force on prescription drugs.

The task force's main recommendation was that prescription drug costs be included under Medicare. Other findings dealt with drug costs, drug quality and the role of government in furnishing physicians with information on drugs.

Dr. John T. Dunlop, professor of political economy at Harvard University, is chairman of the 16-member committee which will report within six weeks. Executive Dir. William R. Hutton of the National Council of Senior Citizens also is a member.

Farmers' Group Supports Boycott

Hot Springs, Ark. — The National Farmers Union convention unanimously adopted a resolution supporting the boycott of California grapes until the growers grant bargaining rights to workers.

NFU Pres. Tony Dechant said in comment: "We do not believe the public interest is served when large corporate farms such as these can run rough-shod over the rights of their employes."

The convention also adopted a resolution calling for extension of the National Labor Relations Act to agriculture so that its workers will have legal bargaining and organizing rights.

Grape Growers Enlist High-Powered PR Firm

San Francisco—California grape growers have hired the public relations firm of Whitaker & Baxter to counter the worldwide boycott of table grapes.

The selection of the high-powered PR firm for an undisclosed fee indicates the growers feel the time has come to make a massive counter-move to the growingly effective boycott led by the AFL-CIO Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

Whitaker & Baxter first attracted national attention when the firm received a reported $1 million back in 1948 to block former Pres. Truman's push for national health insurance. That nationwide campaign was so successful that it wasn't until 1965 that Congress finally got around to passing Medicare.

More recently and less successfully, W&B was hired to mastermind the nationwide lobby campaign for a constitutional convention to circumvent the Supreme Court's one-man, one-vote ruling.

W&B was accused by several senators of deceptive and misleading practices and of failing to comply with federal lobbying laws. The charges were denied by Senate Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen (R-Ill.) who was pushing the campaign in the Senate to get around the Supreme Court ruling.

The first public effort of W&B on behalf of the grape growers was to publicize a challenge to the integrity of Look magazine's recent interview with Cesar Chavez, head of UFWOC.

E. L. "Ted" Barr, Jr., president of the California Grape & Tree Fruit League, was quoted by the PR firm in news releases sent around the country as saying:

"It is a frightening and shocking thing when in face of the record a responsible national magazine such as Look gives the credibility it does to the false 'non-violent' preachments of Cesar Chavez [who] has been hacking away with his phony campaign for so long now that thousands of people have come to believe him. . . ."

The AFL-CIO union official had called for continuation of non-violence as a vital part of the union effort to organize farm workers.

Next, W&B helped publicize a speech by Clarence G. Adamy, president of the National Association of Food Chains, who promised growers that "grocers of the nation intend to resist steadfastly what are sometimes extreme pressures to accede to mob rule" growing from the grape boycott.

Profits as Usual

INTEREST RATES have zoomed to the highest level in the past 100 years; the supply of money for borrowing is tighter and tighter; the Administration proposes extending the surtax and excise levies for another year and says it will trim federal spending sharply.

All this has taken place, or is proposed, in the interest of stopping inflation, of cooling the economy. It is accompanied by the feelingly expressed hope that it will not result in a recession, in a case of applying the brakes too sharply to the nation's economic growth.

Trouble is that the world of business and industry is not paying much attention.

While the high interest rates take their toll of consumers trying to buy homes, automobiles and other goods and services—driving many of them out of the market or stretching their limited resources to the breaking point—business is planning to increase its investment in new plant and equipment by 14 percent over last year.

Those highest-in-100-year interest rates apparently don't faze the business world, not even a 7.5 percent prime interest rate for the best customers with the best credit ratings. And it's easy to see why not.

Corporate profits continued to smash all existing records in 1968, according to government figures. Profits before taxes were up 13 percent over 1967 and in the final quarter of last year they were running at an annual rate of $52.9 billion after taxes.

It's fairly obvious that many corporations don't have to worry much about high interest rates—their tremendous profits and the added funds stemming from the 7 percent tax investment credit and double depreciation write-offs on new plants will easily finance their new plants and equipment.

But it is precisely this new capital investment boom that helps keep prices rising with more and more of the income siphoned off into profits.

The willingness to invest large sums in new plant and machinery is not only geared to sopping up existing profits but to increased profitability by speeding the introduction of new technology and automated processes.

If the economy is to be cooled, if inflation is in fact to be stemmed, some new weapons need to be designed to slow the capital goods boom and the continuously upward surge of profits that is throwing the entire economy out of balance.

Ending Highway Carnage

THE AFL-CIO has long been involved in the campaign for a safe America—in the plant, at home and on the highways. It has fought for legislation at all levels to protect Americans from needless death and disability.

This year, along with its continuing drive for federal standards for occupational health and safety, the federation has called on all state AFL-CIO bodies to push for minimum standard highway safety programs in the state legislatures.

The need is real and grim. Last year more than 55,000 persons lost their lives on the highways and some 2 million others suffered disabling injuries. About half of those deaths and injuries involved American workers.

In Pres. Meany's words "we must exert ourselves in every way we can to reduce this carnage."

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, March 29, 1969 No. 13

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO

Get Him Off the Road

A Word Edgewise:

'Rediscovery' of Poverty Tied To Progress Toward Affluence

By John P. Roche

ONE SOMETIMES gets the impression that poverty in America began about 1963 as an exclusive condition reserved for Negroes. The facts, of course, are that at least four-fifths of the poor are white and that—without in any way denying the special plight of the Negro—the "culture of poverty" is an old American phenomenon. We think of it as contemporaneous because only in the last five years has the American national government launched a major campaign to eliminate it. (Similarly, as I have noted before, civil rights have hit the headlines not because we have become vicious, but because we have developed concern for events once taken for granted.)

I have been meditating on this a good bit recently because in my teaching I have encountered for the first time a generation of youngsters who have been denied, or spared, membership in the tradition of poverty. Franklin D. Roosevelt is a folk hero in a vague sort of way, but the Great Depression and World War II are located somewhere in medieval history. The consequence of their lack of a historical umbilical cord is naturally enough a passionate conviction that because they find war, discrimination and poverty, the United States is a depraved society sliding downhill to total degeneration.

Basically, as I have suggested to them, this apocalyptic posture is a luxury item, an outgrowth of their affluence rather than of a general decline in national standards. The poor have little time for posturing. They are busy trying to escape, and it is clear that today escape is far more feasible than at any previous period in our history. But this leaves us still with the problem of how to convey a sense of the immense distance we have traveled.

I recall as a 10-year-old my mother desperately invoking the vision of the "Poorhouse," where we were all going to end up if my father couldn't find a job. She was already a bit out of date (although I didn't know it and was terrified), but she had grown up in the old American tradition, which was right out of Charles Dickens.

In fact, my grandfather's experience is interesting as an example of what went on in the 19th century culture of poverty, and—since he was born just a century ago—let us celebrate his centenary by pulling back the drapes from Victorian America. He lived a long, full life—almost from Andrew Johnson to Lyndon Johnson—and by his talent and wits made his escape, but what an escape it was!

His father died when he was five, leaving a penniless widow and six children, the oldest eight years old. My great-grandmother returned to her family in Brooklyn and shortly met a prospective second husband who liked her but took a dim view of her brood. The condition of her remarriage was simple: "Get rid of the boys." So in 1876 my grandfather and his two brothers (both crippled: one born with two club feet and the other twisted up by what was presumably polio) were dumped in the old St. John's Orphanage in Brooklyn.

THERE THEY REMAINED until in their teens when they were sent out to work for a farmer in Newburgh, who according to Grandpa's account (which may have been embellished a bit) was a brutal drunken rascal. Somewhere along the way he picked up a rudimentary education including, oddly enough, the ability to write microscopic and beautiful copperplate.

Somehow at 16, still with one brother leaning on each shoulder, he managed to make it back to New York, got himself a job and within ten years had made a fortune as a contractor—the first of many which, alas, he lost almost as fast as he made. In the best tradition, he proposed to Grandma, who was a seamstress, on the Staten Island ferry.

Grandma was a tough lady who, not unreasonably, held her mother-in-law (who had rediscovered her son when he hit the jackpot) in low regard. One of the great episodes in family history occurred on Alice Court in Brooklyn, where my grandparents had bought a house. Great-grandma showed up one day and talked her tenderhearted son into letting her have the third floor, but Grandma soon put an end to this: she simply threw her mother-in-law's bed out the window into the street!

Grandpa escaped physically, but emotionally he lived his 94 years in the savage, ruthless environment of his childhood. In his 90s, with a computer memory, he would talk of those who befriended him as a youngster, and a listener would suddenly get a sense of the gaslight jungle in which no one even bothered to count the poor.

To say that things have improved over the past century is no excuse for present inequities, but surely we do have a right to take pride in the distance that we as a nation have traveled.

Analyzing the Rebels:

Campus Disturbances Linked To Deep Student Discontent

The following is excerpted from testimony by Dr. Bruno Bettelheim, professor of psychology and psychiatry at the University of Chicago, to the House Special Subcommittee on Education.

I DO NOT THINK that the rebellious students in and by themselves are a serious danger to the country, though they are a real danger to the universities. The danger I feel is that the disgusting behavior of a very small group of students may lead to a fascist type of backlash.

To prevent chaos, repressive measures might be embraced which would be dangerous to our democratic institutions. But the students can be dealt with constructively if measures are taken to do away with the causes of their widespread discontent.

In order to understand this discontent, one has to realize that so many more go to college than ever before, and hence many more are much less well prepared for this experience. Taking advantage of college requires a considerable amount of self-discipline and a high degree of satisfaction with what can be derived from developing one's intellect. Present-day education, both in home and school, teaches very little self-discipline compared to even very recent times. The expectation is that education can hand over knowledge and skills, and this nearly instantly.

There is widespread feeling that if students do not do well in school, this is the failing of the educational system, not of their lack of application. With each year in school, this feeling becomes stronger in those who do not do well academically. And the system becomes the enemy which deliberately withholds from them what they believe could so easily be given to them by it.

In my opinion, there are far too many students in college who essentially have no business to be there. Some are there to evade the draft; many others out of a vague idea that it will help them to find better paying jobs, though they do not know what jobs they want. And again, many go to college because they do not know what better to do and because it is expected of them. Their deep dissatisfaction with themselves is projected against the institution of the university first and against all institutions of society secondarily.

To make matters worse, our institutions of higher learning have, under public pressure for more education for everybody, increased enrollment beyond reason. The result is far too large classes. Many classes in our large universities are taught by teaching assistants, some of whom, out of their own dissatisfaction and insecurity, tend to side with the rebellion. All this leads to the impersonal nature of student-faculty contacts about which many students rightly complain.

And since many of them are not interested in the intellectual adventure, the knowledge which the faculty can convey to them is not what they want. They want group therapeutic experiences which will help them to become mature, secure, to find themselves. But colleges are not mass therapeutic institutions and hence disappoint the students with the greatest need.

Also, the old rituals which enhanced student life and bound them to each other and to their college, such as football rallies, homecomings, etc., have lost most of their meaning and have not been replaced by anything but the excitement that sit-ins and rebellions provide. The spirit of intimate comradeship that used to prevail in a fraternity house is now found by all too many students in their sit-ins, in doing things together which they deep down know they do also for the emotional satisfactions they derive from being together, whatever high-sounding issues they think are motivating their actions.

I think, from these remarks, it should be obvious what I believe may be some of the remedies. First, all too many who now go to college have little interest, ability and use for a college education. They would be better off with a high-level vocational education linked to a work program which gives scope to their needs for physical activity and tangible achievement.

As for the very small group of leaders of the student rebellion, there has always been a small percentage of persons bent on destroying society. The reason why the present brand of campus revolutionaries is more dangerous is that they can point to success after success of their disrupting tactics. And they gain their success by arousing a sizable number of students through the tactics of confrontation, and by universities' fear of such confrontations.

CONFRONTATIONS have one important aim: to use the reaction of those they provoke to generate a feeling of new unity among the demonstrators.

This has been used in its most direct form by militants who stand in front of policemen, denounce them as pigs and wait until the man in uniform hits out. The art then lies in seeing that the blows are directed against the less-committed demonstrators and, if possible, against completely uninvolved persons. This provides the mass following they need for their success.

It has been observed that most of the small group of leaders of the radical left come from well-educated, very liberal families. Those whom I got to know might be characterized as having had their intellectual abilities developed very highly at much too early an age, but at the expense of their emotional development. Very bright as they often are, emotionally, some of them remained fixated at the age of the temper tantrum.

Essentially, these militants must want to destroy the universities because they do not want to be students, because to be a student means to prepare oneself to do something more worthwhile in the future. The militant student's cry is for action now, not preparation for action later. In this real sense, he is no longer a student at all, since he clearly rejects knowledge as a precondition of any meaningful activity.

Truth, moreover, is no longer sought, but "revealed"; the contempt for free speech and free thought is demonstrated as much in his actions as in his words. Were he ever to capture the university, it would cease to be a university at all.

Consumers Bear Brunt:

Tax Breaks Aid Corporations To Skirt U.S. Inflation Curbs

ORGANIZED LABOR'S chief economist charged that the real inflationary pressures in 1969 are massive investment in new plants and equipment, wide profit margins and mounting corporate profits.

Tight money and interest rates, reportedly the highest in a century, hit consumers and homeowners hard, but have little effect on corporate spending, investment and borrowing, according to Nathaniel Goldfinger, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

Goldfinger cited U.S. predictions that business investments would shoot up 14 percent this year, adding that this big jump comes "in a period when we are supposed to be clamping down on inflation." He appeared on Labor News Conference, a public affairs interview.

The union economist charged that special tax breaks, like the 7 percent tax credit on investments in new equipment and double depreciation on new construction, lessen the impact of high interest levels on business. Workers and consumers, he said, have no such buffers.

GOLDFINGER CALLED for repeal of investment tax credit and double depreciation "except for construction of low and moderate-income housing." He also urged a clamp-down on soaring corporate profits that keep firms "loaded with cash."

Goldfinger also hit the "distribution of the gains of economic progress" in recent years. He said that "from 1960 to 1968, after-tax profits moved up 91 percent and dividend payments to stockholders went up 84 percent."

But in the same period, he emphasized, "the after-tax take-home pay of the average non-supervisory worker increased only 31 percent, and buying power only 11 percent.

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE POPULATION EXPLOSION, which has reached serious proportions in India, many areas of Southeast Asia and Latin America, is one problem we do not have in the United States.

On Jan. 1, 1969 the population of the United States was estimated at 202,253,000—a growth of 2,012,000 since the previous Jan. 1.

The increase in the population over the year was 1 percent, the lowest annual percentage gain since 1940. Since 1956 the annual growth rate in this country has decreased every year.

This picture is reported in new population estimates by the Bureau of the Census from 1940 to 1969. The bureau also provides this fascinating profile of the U.S. population as of Jan. 1, 1969:

- Of the total population, including armed forces overseas, 177,482,000 or 87.8 percent was white.
- The non-white population of 24,771,000 included an estimated 22,547,000 Negroes or 11.1 percent of the total.
- The sex ratio (males per 100 females) was 96.5 on Jan. 1 with 99,339,000 males to 102,914,000 females.
- During the calendar year of 1968 there were 3,507,000 births and 1,950,000 deaths—a birth rate of 17.4 to a death rate of 9.4.
- Net civilian immigration in 1968 was 444,000, about the same as in 1967.

While this profile is of great interest, the trends in population change tell us much more.

In 1957, for example, the birth rate in the United States was 25.2 per 1,000 of the midyear population. In 1967 it had dropped to 17.9 and to 17.4 in 1968.

On the other hand, the death rate at 9.6 per 1,000 population shows a leveling off. It increased from 9.3 in 1967. The leveling off in the death rate started in the mid-1950s. Census Bureau population experts discount the impact of the Viet Nam war as a major factor, pointing out that the 17,500 members of the armed services who died overseas in 1968 accounted for less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the total 1968 death rate.

Another set of statistics offered by the Census Bureau is the fertility rate or the annual number of births per 1,000 women 15 to 44 years of age. At 85.8 in 1968 it was still well above the depression low fertility rate of 76.3 in 1933.

BIRTH RATES have continued to decline for all classes of the population but there are differences by race and color.

The birth rate for the total population, including armed forces overseas, was 17.4 in 1968. The rate for the white population was 16.3 and for Negroes 25.8.

The 1968 death rate was 9.6 per thousand for both white and non-white population. The death rate for Negroes was 10.1. In recent years the difference between the white and non-white death rates has been small.

However, if the death rate is determined on the basis of age, there are greater differences between races and sexes. For example, in 1967, age-adjusted death rates for resident population were as follows: white, 6.9; non-white, 10.2; male, 9.4; female, 5.5.

Immigration has fairly well stabilized in recent years although now it is somewhat higher than the early 1940s. At current levels it is not a statistic that should worry the experts.

Summing up the entire picture, we see that the birth rate, which rose during the 1940s and 1950s, is now back down to the general level of the 1930s. The death rate and the net immigration rate have not greatly changed over the years.

The net growth rate, which was 8.0 per 1,000 in 1935, rose to 18.1 in 1956, and has since declined steadily until it reached 10.0 in 1968.

In this picture there may be some trends that concern the census experts, but taken altogether the population explosion is not a U.S. problem.

MOUNTING CORPORATE profits, wide profit margins and massive plant and equipment investments are the real inflationary dangers in 1969, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger, center, charged on Labor News Conference. He was questioned on the Mutual radio broadcast by Hobart Rowen, left, of the Washington Post and Lee Cohn of the Washington Evening Star.

GROUP DISCUSSIONS such as these occurred frequently as the Human Resources Development Institute (HRDI) held a week-long training conference at Piney Point, Md., for its manpower representatives from 32 cities. They advanced plans for HRDI's across-the-nation drive to recruit, train and employ the hard-core unemployed. Top, Charles Bradford, St. Louis, left; Paul Flynn, Boston, third from left; and Herbert Prestwidge, Baltimore, right, confer with AFL-CIO Urban Affairs Dir. John E. Evans. In the bottom photo, Edward Lee, Oakland, Calif., left, and Frederick Martinez, San Diego, right, chat with HRDI Pres. Julius Rothman.

HRDI Primed In Key Role of Job Training

Piney Point, Md.—Staff members of the AFL-CIO's Human Resources Development Institute were called upon to help make the labor movement "the conscience of America's manpower training efforts."

The challenge was set forth by Julius Rothman, HRDI president, in opening a five-day session attended by institute manpower representatives from 32 cities where a severe hardcore unemployment problem exists.

HRDI is a non-profit corporation set up by the AFL-CIO, with the aid of a Labor Dept. $1.5 million grant, to recruit, train, employ and upgrade the unemployed or underemployed in 50 cities. Plans are to have the program in full operation by mid-April.

Rothman, who also is associate director of the AFL-CIO's Dept. of Urban Affairs, stressed particularly the importance of getting local unions involved "in meaningful manpower programs."

Merlin Taylor, HRDI's executive director, told the staff members their task is three-fold—"to become experts on manpower programs, to understand the needs of the disadvantaged community and get unions to participate in the overall training effort."

Other conference speakers included AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis, AFL-CIO Urban Affairs Dir. John E. Evans and AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Donald Slaiman. Also participating were Robert McGlotten of the Dept. of Civil Rights and Lynn MacGowan of Community Services Activities.

The conference was held on the Seafarers' schoolship "Charles S. Zimmerman."

Worker Buying Power Shows Drop Over Year

(Continued from Page 1)

manufacturing and trade, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said.

Chief contributors to the February jump in living costs were higher prices for homes, cars, clothing and consumer services.

Housing costs rose five-tenths of 1 percent with home ownership costs such as mortgages, insurance and maintenance going up. Rents, furniture and household textiles also rose.

Arnold Chase, BLS assistant commissioner, said the effects of the recent increase in interest rates for FHA-VA home mortgages—from 6.75 to 7.5 percent—will begin to show up on his charts in March.

Used car prices advanced 6 percent between January and February, but remained below last year. Clothing prices climbed by four-tenths of 1 percent. Prices of restaurant meals and other food consumed away from home rose by three-tenths of 1 percent.

Consumer Costs Up

A five-tenths of 1 percent increase in the consumer services index was spurred by boosts in home repairs, housekeeping services, auto insurance premiums and medical care.

Food was the only major item on the index to show a decrease from January. It dropped one-tenth of 1 percent.

The Wholesale Price Index—usually a forerunner of price increases—rose by four-tenths of 1 percent in February, mostly because of a five-tenths of 1 percent increase for industrial commodities.

Chase said the preliminary data for this month indicate continuing price increases. "Early figures point to a five-tenths of 1 percent increase in wholesale prices in March," he stated.

About 69,000 workers will receive cost-of-living pay raises based on the February Consumer Price Index, BLS said, with about 39,500 of them employed in the aerospace and chemical industries receiving 2- or 3-cent hourly increases.

Another 23,700 workers in communications and automotive equipment industries will get increases ranging from 1 to 8 cents an hour. Other workers will receive raises ranging from 3 to 5 cents an hour.

Leadership and Hard Work:

Survey Reaffirms Organizing Basics

An impartial California survey has reaffirmed the time-tested union formula for organizing workers—a seasoned organizer, a group of strong employe committee leaders, and "plenty of hard work from both."

This was the conclusion of AFL-CIO Organizing Dir. William L. Kircher based on findings of the survey which he reports in the March issue of the American Federationist.

Kircher, in an article titled "Yardstick for More Effective Organizing," writes that at the request of his department, the Los Angeles-Orange Counties AFL-CIO Organizing Committee asked the San Fernando Valley State College political science department in 1968 to conduct an impartial, in-depth survey and evaluation of the attitudes of 500 voters in National Labor Relations Board elections over a two-year period in that two-county area.

Graduate and upper division students were enlisted for the sampling in the political science and government departments of San Fernando Valley College and California State College at Los Angeles.

The survey—believed to be the first of its kind for a union organization—led Mrs. Ellen Studhalter, political science instructor at San Fernando, to observe that "few organizations welcome such scrutiny and fewer still seek it."

The survey report produced these descriptions of typical voter characteristics: the pro-union voter in NLRB elections is likely to be a stable, well-informed individual who has been on his present job from six to 10 years; the typical no-union voter is indecisive, conservative, and usually uncertain about what a union can do for him.

Survey findings not only confirmed what most seasoned organizers had learned by experience but also punctured some myths "concocted by some social experts," Kircher notes.

For example, younger workers voted for a union at a rate within 4 percent of the over-all pro-union average.

More of those working on a job for less than one year reported voting for a union than against it.

The pro-union vote of women interviewed—half of them married—was 14 percent higher than that of male workers who voted for union representation.

These California findings, the article says, augment the findings of a 1967 survey by professional pollster John Kraft that women members were the strongest supporters of all major issues on which the AFL-CIO took a stand.

Pollsters asked some questions dealing with personal characteristics. Those who said they voted anti-union often showed themselves to be "waverers" who switched from one side to another before the election.

Workers with conservative views seemed more inclined to vote with management than those holding what the magazine called progressive political ideas.

Interviewers found that pro-union voters were more likely to know their legal rights in an organizing drive than those who voted no-union. The union supporters more often described themselves in positive terms—"strong" Democrats rather than "usually" Democrats.

Interviewers also found that married workers are slightly more pro-union than single workers. Those with more than 10 years of work experience are more inclined to vote for a union than against. Workers with more than one year of experience but less than five are more likely to be opposed to a union than those in any other category.

Previous union membership also was a factor. A third of those who said they voted for a union also said they had benefited from previous union membership.

On the techniques used by unions and management to influence decisions, all groups of voters agreed that face-to-face contact was the most effective element. Union voters gave the highest ratings to meetings called by a union, and talks with fellow employes on the organizing committee.

Both pro-union and non-union voters rated union handbills and leaflets as the third most effective technique, and home talks with organizers in fourth place as the least effective of union devices.

All groups rated "captive audience" speeches at meetings called by top management executives as the most influential company technique. Second place went to talks by supervisors or foremen with small groups of employes. Rated third were letters, some containing management "threats," to employe homes.

NLRB Rules Job-Displaced Strikers Retain Voting Rights in Unit Election

(Continued from Page 1)

tinued to work and the company hired 46 replacements for the strikers.

The strike ended Feb. 6, 1967 and most union members offered unconditionally to return. Management recalled 21 strikers that month, employed two strikers as new employes five months later, but refused to reinstate any others even when job vacancies occurred.

Late Doubts

The union filed charges and later that year, at an NLRB hearing, management "for the first time raised the issue of its good faith doubt of the union's majority as the reason for its failure to deal with the union," the board noted in upholding an examiner's findings.

The company based its defense on the claim that on Feb. 6, 1967, the appropriate bargaining unit consisted of 46 employes hired as permanent replacements for strikers, and 16 non-strikers. Therefore, the employer argued, it had reasonable grounds for believing the union no longer represented a majority of employes and thus it was justified in refusing to bargain with it.

The board rejected this reasoning. Management's reliance on the number of replacements as the basis for questioning the union's majority was "misplaced," the NLRB said, because the 79 strikers who offered to return to work "maintained their status as economic strikers and would have been permitted to vote in an election" conducted under the law.

The NLRB said that in counting the economic strikers as part of the bargaining unit, "we realize . . . that we are departing from the standard used in Stoner Rubber Co., Inc.," a 1959 case in which replaced economic strikers were excluded from the unit.

The law was amended by Congress in the Landrum-Griffin Act later that year and now reads: "Employes engaged in an economic strike who are not entitled to reinstatement shall be eligible to vote . . . in any election conducted within 12 months after the commencement of the strike."

In addition, the NLRB said, the legislative history of the 1959 Act "strongly suggests" that it was the intent of Congress that strikers in an economic walkout of 12 months duration or less be considered members of the bargaining unit for the purpose of determining the union's majority status.

Hill-Burton Overhaul:

Major Shifts Sought In Hospital Aid Plan

(Continued from Page 1)

Biemiller praised the Staggers bill for recognizing the need for federal help in building facilities for "outpatient and preventive care and long-term care as well as hospitalization."

He endorsed the priority assigned to expanding outpatient facilities in low-income metropolitan areas and urged that a similar priority be given for basic hospital construction and modernization.

Some provisions of a bill sponsored by Rep. Paul G. Rogers (D-Fla.), dealing with interest subsidies and the federal share of construction costs, should also be incorporated in the legislation, Biemiller said.

He told the subcommittee that the AFL-CIO strongly supports a three-year extension of a $60 million-a-year program of research and demonstration grants designed to improve the quality and scope of health services and seek to reduce costs. In fact, he suggested, the amount could well be increased.

Finch told the committee, however, that the Administration would like the committee to hold off on any extension of the research and development programs. He said the program is currently being evaluated and no decision has been made as to its future.

Biemiller cited to the subcommittee a resolution adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its mid-winter meeting which said the time has come "to update Hill-Burton to provide grants-in-aid for the development of complete health services and not just health facilities."

Thanks to the Hill-Burton Act, the council said, the number of hospital beds per 1,000 population has nearly doubled.

"Although new hospitals may be needed in some areas," the statement continued, "the more urgent need today is to modernize or to replace obsolete facilities, particularly in urban areas and in the poverty ghettos."

The Johnson Administration budget proposal called for $258.4 million for the Hill-Burton program in the coming fiscal year, a slight increase over the current appropriations.

The Nixon Administration plan would reduce federal spending to $150 million, of which $120 million would be handed over to the states as block grants and $30 million would be earmarked for specific projects.

PRES. LOUIS STULBERG of the Ladies' Garment Workers wears an academic cowl as he is inducted as a fellow of Brandeis University during a dinner in New York City. The event also was marked by the establishment of the Louis Stulberg Chair in Law and Politics at the university. From right are former Vice Pres. Humphrey, Stulberg and Brandeis Pres. Morris B. Abram.

Defects Scored in Draft On Nursing Home Rules

"Serious defects" have been detected in federal regulations now being drafted that cover nursing homes under Medicaid.

The draft regulations "would not raise, but actually lower the standards for skilled nursing homes," the AFL-CIO said in a letter to Sec. Robert H. Finch of Health, Education & Welfare.

Finch was urged to take steps to assure that the final form of the regulations would improve nursing care standards.

Amendments to the Social Security Act adopted in 1967 were designed to upgrade qualifications for skilled nursing homes, AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman noted in the letter to Finch.

Seidman further pointed out that under terms of the 1967 handbook on the skilled nursing facilities, that either a professional registered nurse or a licensed practical nurse would have to be on duty at all times after Jan. 1, 1969.

But the current draft regulations would permit waiver of this requirement for more than two years—until July 1, 1971, Seidman said.

"Moreover, an institution obtaining such a waiver would not have to meet the requirement for an indefinite period and would nevertheless be eligible for reimbursement as a skilled nursing home," he said.

The draft regulations, he stressed, also ignore provisions in the 1967 amendments which set standards for upgrading skilled nursing homes requiring "sufficient nursing and auxiliary personnel to provide adequate and properly supervised nursing services."

This was intended, Seidman said, to correct a gap in the 1967 requirements that the number of nursing and auxiliary personnel relate directly to the number of patients.

To correct the defects, Seidman said the AFL-CIO urged that changes be made in the proposed regulations that call for:

- Adequate nursing and properly administered services including a full-time nurse and a specific ratio of nursing and auxiliary personnel to the number of patients.
- Waivers of requirements only if they will not jeopardize the safety and health of the patients and not to exceed six months, with immediate attempts to correct the substandard conditions and with reimbursements less than for fully-qualified skilled nursing homes.
- Establishment of minimum requirements for intermediate nursing homes as intended in the 1967 amendments.

Seidman said the AFL-CIO supported the 1967 amendments in the expectation that they would bring about a speedy improvement of nursing home conditions for Medicaid patients. Yet, he observed, the regulations under consideration have the opposite effect.

Extended Use Of Food Stamp Plan Pressed

A committee of the National Planning Association has proposed extending the food stamp program to every city and county in the nation.

The NPA's Agriculture Committee also suggested liberalizing existing rules for the food stamp program, taking the program out of the Agriculture Dept., and providing free food stamps for the very poorest families—those with incomes less than one-fourth the poverty level.

For other low-income families, the committee proposed what it termed a "variable" food stamp plan, which would allow families to buy as few stamps as they wish instead of compelling them to purchase a quantity predetermined to be their full food budget for the month.

The NPA committee said a uniform, federal food stamp program should replace the direct distribution of surplus food by the Agriculture Dept.

Senate Panel Backs Farm Union Rights and scope of programs to combat poverty among migrants and their families.

(Continued from Page 1)

The subcommittee declared that "this entire report evidences the inequality" in the bargaining position of farm workers and the need for extending to them the protections of federal labor law.

Periods of unemployment, continuous mobility and fluctuations in labor demand, it said, "make too many farm workers the pawns of those employers who use low wages and unacceptable living . . . to their personal advantage."

Under these conditions, it added, workers who are trying to organize have shown "remarkable fidelity to their pledge of nonviolence."

Recalling that last year it had advocated extending coverage of the NLRA to farm workers, the subcommittee observed that labor-management relations in agriculture are on a "collision course" that affects workers, the industry and the public.

"The cause of the strife was—and still is—the agriculture industry's refusal to recognize the employes' interest in self-organization and collective bargaining."

The report pointed to the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee's boycott of grape growers as an example of the increasing "confrontation" between farm workers and employers who refuse to permit a union.

It said the boycott, supported by civic and church groups, is having a "severe impact" on the wholesaling, retailing, distribution and warehousing of non-union California grapes.

Legislation to give farm workers organizing and bargaining machinery, the report said, "does not guarantee any success" to workers in their efforts to organize, but merely gives them "the opportunity to help themselves within the framework of our federal laws."

The bill now before Congress to include farm workers under the Act, it pointed out, "offers no subsidy to farm workers, carries no appropriation, and is not special interest legislation."

"It offers the one simple proposition that the agriculture industry, which is so heavily subsidized by our federal government (over $5 billion in 1967), ought to have the same responsibilities and protections for labor-management relations as all other industries."

Labor Urges Renewal Of Appalachia Program

The Appalachian regional development program should be continued because of both "what has been done and what remains to be done," the AFL-CIO told Congress.

Miles C. Stanley, testifying for the federation, said the regional development pattern of federal, state and local cooperation is necessary to make up for "decades of neglect" which isolated the area from the nation's economic progress.

Stanley, who is chairman of the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council and president of the West Virginia AFL-CIO, testified before the House Public Works Committee.

He told the committee that the AFL-CIO's consistent position has been that no section of the nation should be left to decay and stagnation because of shifts in the national economy or because its resources are undeveloped.

Evaluating the progress made under the regional development program, Stanley testified:

"The planning and building in the areas of transportation, education, health, housing, land reclamation and all related areas under an overall design and strategy is, beyond any question, the most significant step taken in developing and conserving this region in our lifetime. Its continued existence, therefore, with sufficient appropriations to carry out its objectives is essential."

Stanley stressed labor's insistence on "full protection of labor standards" in all aspects of the program and its opposition to "plant piracy" and "runaway employers." Thus far, he said, there have been no real problems on these matters under the program.

The Appalachian program, Stanley added, "has served well as a laboratory in which to test the validity of the concept of regional development."

Its success, he said, suggests that this type of regional cooperation could "become an integral part of national economic planning."

At the same time, he stressed, Appalachia can prosper only "as the entire economy moves forward." He said labor views the program as one part of a total national effort to eliminate poverty and generate full employment.

'Best Wishes' Sent Israel's Premier

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has expressed the "best wishes" of the federation and "my high personal regard" in a letter to Mrs. Golda Meir, the new premier of Israel.

Pointing to "close and abiding ties" between American labor and Israel, Meany said, "We share a common concern for mankind, a common devotion to democracy, a common determination that freedom must remain the essential ingredient in the lives of men and nations."

"You must know," he added, "that our prayers go with you as you seek lasting peace and freedom for your nation—and the Middle East."

Dock Strikers In Boston Vote On New Pact

Boston—Striking Longshoremen and their employers have agreed on terms for ending the 98-day dock strike in this key port, the new head of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service announced here.

FM&CS Dir. J. Curtis Counts, assigned by Pres. Nixon to help mediate the long dispute, said settlement terms will be voted on by 1,500 ILA members who have been trying since Dec. 20 to get an acceptable contract.

Membership approval would make Boston the last East Coast port to settle. Talks still are going on between union and management groups in Galveston, Houston and other Gulf of Mexico ports west of New Orleans, where ILA Pres. Thomas W. Gleason heads the union negotiating team.

All other ILA locals have concluded negotiations along lines of the New York agreement reached last Jan. 14. Latest to settle were locals in Baton Rouge, La., Cambridge, Md., Searsport, Me., New Bedford, Mass., and Providence, R.I.

The New York settlement provided a package of benefits that included wage increases totaling 98 cents over a three-year period.

It also provided for yearly work guarantees and protection against job losses due to containerized freight.

Meany Warns on Program Slash:

Nixon to Cut Budget, Asks Tax Extension

(Continued from Page 1)

ances, and interest from state and local bonds.

• "To curb the inflationary-demand pressures of business investment—the only major pressure point at the moment—Congress should repeal the 7 percent investment tax credit and double depreciation on all new construction except low and moderate rental housing."

Meany said the two yardsticks that should be used to judge the need for continuation of the surcharge are the level of expenditures for the war in Viet Nam and the trend of unemployment.

Nixon, in his message, said the Administration "remains committed to a more equitable and more efficient tax structure." He said "the first specific proposals" for tax reform will be made in April.

He told Congress that higher interest charges and other factors will reduce the estimated surplus in the Johnson Administration's budget proposals from $3.4 billion for the fiscal year starting July 1 to half that amount.

Such a "thin" $1.7 billion surplus wouldn't be enough to cool off inflationary pressures, Nixon said.

The President did not spell out the exact amount of the spending cut he will seek, merely saying that a "strong budget surplus" is needed.

Administration officials indicated that budget reviews are still going on and that the cuts will be spread "pretty widely" among both domestic and military programs.

There definitely will be a cutback in federal employment, although the Administration anticipates that this can be accomplished by not filling job vacancies rather than by layoffs.

Neither the President nor his aides went beyond a "psychological" explanation of how budget cuts and high taxes would curtail the wage "spiral."

"Courageous government action will modify the inflationary psychology which now afflicts business, labor and consumers generally," the President said.

More Tight Money

Besides the tax and budget actions, Nixon said, the government should continue its policy of "monetary restraint." He held out the hope that once inflation has been curbed, "ultimately" there can be a reduction in "the restrictive interest rates forced on us by past policies."

It "will not be easy," Nixon acknowledged, to "cut expenditures while maintaining revenue."

But, he asserted, "this ordering of our economic house— distasteful as it is in many respects—will do much to slow down the rise in the cost of living."

The President does not plan to submit a complete new budget to Congress. Instead, as appropriations committees take up agency and program budgets, the President will be sending in revisions of the Johnson Administration proposals. The revisions will also indicate revised priorities so that, as one official put it, "the new Administration can be off and running to fill its commitments."

Meanwhile Congress gave the Administration a bit more leeway in its current spending by approving a temporary increase in the national debt ceiling.

Democrat Wins House Contest In Tennessee

"The choice is clear. You can elect a man who supported Hubert Humphrey or you can elect a man —me—who supports the George Wallace movement."

That's the message William Davis broadcast repeatedly during the special congressional election campaign in the largely rural 8th District of Tennessee—a district Wallace handily carried in his presidential race.

Wallace himself staked his prestige on the race. For the first time, he campaigned in a congressional election. At a big rally and on television, he urged the election of Davis.

The voters turned him down—by a big margin.

They elected a COPE-supported Democrat, former state Agriculture Commissioner Edward Jones, by a 2-1 margin. A Republican who had party leaders, including House Minority Leader Gerald Ford, campaigning for him polled nearly as many votes as the Wallace candidate.

Jones will fill out the term of Robert A. (Fats) Everett, a conservative Democrat who died in January.

Across the country, Republicans captured the previously evenly-divided California Senate in a special election.

The Democratic candidate, George Miller III, failed to win the seat vacated by the death of his father. Republican John Nejedly won, 82,934 to 61,102. Miller, who is 23, said his age turned out to be a handicap in the election.

FEATURED SPEAKERS at the annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House in Washington included Eleanor Holmes Norton, American Civil Liberties Union; Harold C. Fleming, president, Potomac Institute, center; and Bayard Rustin, executive director, A. Philip Randolph Institute, second from right. AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis, right, was a panel chairman and Jacob Clayman, left, co-director of the Industrial Union Dept., is Clearing House chairman.

Rustin Sees 'Community Control' Unable to Solve Ghetto Problems

Efforts by Negroes to gain "community control" of schools and other institutions will not solve the problems of the ghettos, a veteran civil rights leader declared at a Washington conference.

Bayard Rustin, director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute, called upon black Americans to "address themselves to how the real world operates."

This means, he told the annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, that blacks must join with labor, churches and other forces in pressing Congress for funds for jobs, education, housing and health.

Community control was one of several topics that the two-day conference focused on. Other issues included crime and justice, civil rights legislation and campus disorders.

There was no attempt to develop a consensus among the speakers or the 250 participants. The 21-year old liberal coalition was set up to spur public discussion rather than adopt policy statements.

The conference did take one unanimous action. It stood in silence in memory of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., and resolved that "his dream must continue to be America's dream and it must very soon become reality."

Rustin spoke at a session that discussed attempts by Negroes to secure "control" of local school units, a subject that gained national attention during the recent New York teachers strike.

The walkout followed the firing without cause of 19 teachers by the Ocean Hill-Brownsville school district in Brooklyn, an experiment in decentralized school control.

"I'm not against decentralization of the schools," Rustin said. "I just know that it's an impossibility as far as improving the schools or solving ghetto problems."

Society is "too complex" and there is too much interdependence among community, state and national forces to make community control effective, he suggested. Further, he noted, quality of education depends primarily upon available money.

"The fundamental reason children are learning in Scarsdale"—a wealthy New York suburb—"is that they're spending $1,800 a child there, while in New York City less than $600 a child is being spent," Rustin declared.

He also warned that if blacks insist on control of school districts in which they are the majority to the exclusion of whites, then "by the same logic" white suburbanites or southerners will control schools to the exclusion of blacks.

"Trying to gain control of a community's institutions is not the way for blacks to solve their problems, but community and political participation is," Rustin said.

Sen. Gale McGee (D-Wyo.), addressing a conference dinner meeting, warned that extremism and unlawfulness among college students can only damage their efforts "to resolve honest grievances" because the reaction will be increasing demands for conformity.

"The extremist on the left strengthens the hand of the right wing, drives genuine dissenters away and causes the lines between our people to harden," McGee declared.

He cited moves to bar controversial speakers from college campuses and widening demands to deny assistance to students involved in demonstrations, even without their being convicted, as examples of enforced conformity.

At the same time, McGee stressed that students are asking "tough questions, good questions" and are trying to correct shortcomings in college curricula and administration. He said adminstrators must listen and act where necessary.

Vernon E. Jordon, Jr., director of the Southern Regional Conference's voter education project, reported that the struggle to register Negroes to vote in the South "is far from won." He said the Voting Rights Act of 1965 must be extended before it expires in 1970.

Patrick V. Murphy, director of public order and safety for the Urban Institute, told a panel on crime and justice that the nation will be faced with increasing crime until it deals with "root causes"—poverty, unemployment, poor housing and poor schools.

Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., is chairman of the Civil Liberties Clearing House and presided over several conference sessions. AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis was chairman of the panel on community control.

Construction Unions Push Measure To Reduce Job Death, Injury Toll

(Continued from Page 1)

as many days lost—33.5 million—because of disabling injuries, he observed.

A bill introduced by Subcommittee Chairman Harrison Williams (D-N. J.) provides that on federal construction work no laborer or mechanic would be required to work in surroundings "or under working conditions which are unsanitary, hazardous, or dangerous" to health or safety.

Williams opened hearings on the bill with a declaration that "the men who risk their lives erecting the buildings that house the government, who build our roads and bridges, our state universities and hospitals, do not have the benefits of protective legislation. There are no requirements that safe and healthful working conditions prevail for them."

He said the bill "breaks no new ground" but does provide remedies for years of oversight for workers who are "subjected to very high work injury and death rates."

Introduced at the hearing were National Safety Council reports of an accident frequency rate of 12.24 per million man-hours worked by the building trades in 1966—a rate almost twice the all-industry rate of 6.91.

Also presented were Labor Dept. reports showing rates of 20.7 per million man-hours in electrical work, 24 in heavy construction, 28.8 in general building and 43.9 in roofing and sheet metal work.

Separate figures were not given for accidents on federal construction, but Haggerty's statement noted that "well-conceived and well-enforced safety standards are about as rare on federal jobs as they are in the rest of the construction industry" and are almost non-existent on federally financed and federally assisted work.

Safety Dir. Alan F. Burch of the Operating Engineers testified for the B&CTD Standing Committee on Safety. He said safety is a greater problem in construction than in industry generally because in a plant, safety measures can be economically justified more often than under the "ever-changing conditions" of a construction site.

2 Labor Officials Win Ohio Honors

Two veteran Ohio union leaders were among a group of prominent Ohioans honored by Gov. James Rhodes (R) for having "contributed invaluably toward enhancing the prestige of the state."

Frank King, president of the Ohio AFL-CIO and former Democratic leader of the state Senate, and Sec.-Treas. Martin F. Graham of the Ohio State Building & Construction Trades Council were honored at the annual banquet of the Ohio Newspaper Association.

Rhodes presented each of them the Ohio Governor's Award plaque.

3-29-69

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, April 5, 1969 | No. 14

Labor Asks 'Tax Justice,' 'Loophole Set' Crackdown

GIRL PICKETS at Toronto, Ont., do a take-off on the Hanes Corp. "nude look" in hosiery to demonstrate their opinion of the firm's "no raise in five years" policy. The 175 members of the Textile Workers Union of America are striking for a first contract.

System 'Rigged,' Meany Charges

By David L. Perlman

American labor called on Congress to restore fairness to the federal tax system by plugging tax loopholes and easing the burden on people in the low and middle income brackets.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said union members are willing to pay their "fair share" of taxes. But they are tired of subsidizing those "whose income is greater and whose taxes are lower—the 'loophole set' in today's society."

Meany charged that the present federal tax structure is "rigged" against persons whose income comes from wages and salaries.

He told the House Ways & Means Committee that there has been a loss of confidence in the fairness of the tax system because of glaring "loopholes and gimmicks" favoring those whose money comes from unearned income such as investments.

Meany gave this example of the abuses labor is protesting:

"A married taxpayer with $8,000 in capital gains pays a tax of $354 while an $8,000 married wage earner is taxed $1,000."

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger presented Meany's testimony at the House hearings. The AFL-CIO proposals were also supported "wholeheartedly and in their entirety" in separate testimony from the federation's Industrial Union Dept.

If enacted, the AFL-CIO "tax justice" proposals would close loopholes which cost the government an estimated $15 to 17 billion a year in revenue. (Highlights on Page 6.)

This would permit "much needed and long overdue" tax relief for Americans in the low, moderate and middle income brackets.

Meany proposed specific changes in standard deductions and tax rates which would lower taxes for everyone, with the biggest percentage reductions in the lower income brackets.

Under the AFL-CIO formula, the tax paid by a married worker with two children would be reduced 42.1 percent if he made $5,000 a year and 15.9 percent on a salary of $15,000 a year.

All of this would take only $6.7 billion of the revenue gained by closing loopholes. The remaining $8 to $10 billion, Meany said, could be used for "full funding of essential federal programs to strengthen society."

The AFL-CIO told the committee that it was submitting its proposals on behalf of "the largest organized group of taxpayers in America"—union members who "pay their taxes regularly, payday after payday, through the payroll withholding program."

Labor's program of tax justice,

(Continued on Page 7)

Liberals Push Bill to Continue Poverty Battle

Congressional liberals have opened a drive to salvage the Office of Economic Opportunity — and keep in it the broad range of anti-poverty programs that OEO administers.

Chairman Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) of the House Education & Labor Committee has introduced a bill calling for a five-year extension of the OEO—and has already had more than a week of hearings on it.

The Nixon Administration has not yet presented its legislation to implement a presidential message proposing a one-year extension of OEO's life and the spinoff of its

(Continued on Page 8)

Textile Contracts Scored:

Job Bias Hearings Prod Administration

A panel of high-level Administration officials was warned at a Senate hearing there is growing public concern that the government is not moving firmly enough to eradicate race discrimination in employment.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), who chaired the hearing, said he didn't question the "personal commitment to equal opportunities" of the three officials—Deputy Defense Sec. David Packard, Labor Sec. George P. Shultz and Transportation Sec. John A. Volpe.

But he said changes their agencies have made in dealings with government contractors give the impression that the Administration places a "low priority" on civil rights.

Kennedy was especially critical of the Defense Dept.'s award of contracts to three southern textile firms found to have discriminated against Negroes. The companies had refused to sign a written pledge of "affirmative action" to open up job opportunities to Negroes and merely gave what Kennedy described as an oral "gentleman's agreement."

Both Packard and Shultz had defended the action, which bypassed the Labor Dept.'s contract compliance office, declaring that if the "conciliatory" approach failed, contracts could still be cancelled.

Packard told Kennedy that he now has a written memorandum from Burlington Mills, one of the three firms, confirming the "oral agreement." The other textile firms receiving multi-million dollar contracts on the basis of oral promises were J. P. Stevens and Dan River Mills.

Volpe was questioned about changes in the non-discrimination pledges required of highway construction contractors. The transportation secretary said the new procedure allows more flexibility

(Continued on Page 8)

Poverty Haunts Elderly As Income Gap Widens

A special Senate report emphasizes that the nation must take actions "going far beyond those taken in recent years" to resolve a worsening retirement income crisis.

Most needed, the report said are substantial increases in social security benefits which "have failed to keep up with the rising income needs of the aged."

The report was prepared for the Senate Committee on Aging by a task force of four prominent social scientists.

Task force members were Juanita M. Kreps, Duke University; James H. Shulz, University of New Hampshire; Agnes W. Brewster, an economics consultant; and Harold L. Sheppard of the Upjohn Institute for Employment Research.

Their study found that three out of 10 people 65 and older lived below the government's defined poverty-level income in 1966, and another one of the 10 "was on the poverty borderline."

Of older people living alone or with nonrelatives in 1967, half had

(Continued on Page 3)

Democrat Scores Upset For Laird's House Seat

Wausau, Wis.—A 30-year-old Democratic liberal won an upset victory in a special Wisconsin congressional election which his Republican opponent had labeled a referendum on the Nixon Administration.

David R. Obey, backed by a coalition of labor and family farmers, is the first Democrat ever sent to Congress from the 15-county 7th District, an area of dairy farming, paper mills and a scattering of industrial enclaves.

He captured the seat long held by Melvin R. Laird, who resigned to become Secretary of Defense. Laird had been re-elected by a nearly 2-1 margin last November; Obey defeated Republican Walter J. Chilsen, 62,901 to 59,292. He took the oath of office Apr. 3 as the district's new congressman.

It wasn't the only upset of the day. Off in Los Angeles, the once-unbeatable Mayor Sam Yorty finished a poor second to Thomas Bradley, a Negro city councilman and a liberal Democrat. Bradley, who ran strong in white as well as black areas, polled about 42 percent of the vote to 26 percent for Yorty. The two will meet again in a May 27 runoff.

There will be a runoff on Apr. 29 in another California race—a congressional contest in a normally Republican Los Angeles County district where Barry Goldwater, Jr., son of the Arizona senator, led the balloting and labor-backed Democrat John Van de Kamp will oppose him.

In the Wisconsin congressional battle, former Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey campaigned for Obey,

(Continued on Page 7)

GEN. DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER participated in many noted labor events during his eight years as President of the nation. Above, he inspects the massive mural in the lobby of the AFL-CIO building during dedication ceremonies in 1956. Top right, he speaks at the issuance of a stamp saluting American labor, as former Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell and Federation Pres. George Meany listen in the White House Rose Garden. Bottom right, the late President trowels mortar with the help of Meany during the cornerstone laying at the AFL-CIO building in 1955.

United Aircraft Hit on Violation Of IAM Pact

Hartford, Conn.—A federal District Court judge ruled that United Aircraft Corp. failed to carry out the terms of a strike-ending 1960 agreement on reinstatement of striking Machinists in certain respects and directed the corporation and the union to negotiate the amount of lost pay due to former strikers. As many as 2,000 workers are involved, the union said.

U.S. Judge T. Emmet Claire ruled that the big aircraft and rocket engine firm is liable for losses suffered by individual strikers in five of seven categories at Pratt & Whitney Aircraft plants in East Hartford and Manchester, Conn., and Hamilton Standard Division plants in Broad Brook and Windsor Locks, Conn.

The plants were the locale of a nine-week strike that ended with a return-to-work agreement and new contracts ratified in August 1960 by members of IAM Lodges 743 and 1746. Later the union charged the company with discriminating against strikers. It filed suits for damages, along with charges still pending before the National Labor Relations Board.

Judge Claire upheld some union claims and rejected others. He held that "except in limited areas" where specific contractual violations were found, United "exercised good faith in its overall performance of the strike settlement agreements."

IAM attorneys said the union plans to appeal unfavorable aspects of the decision. These include denial of union charges that United deliberately reduced its work force below its usual level to avoid recalling more workers, failing to find that United broke the law by treating new employes as permanent replacements, and failing to uphold union charges that management concealed information needed by the union to police the settlement agreement.

The court found United guilty of violating the agreement by allowing strikers to waive recall to inferior jobs in order to remain in line for their pre-strike jobs, then transferring other workers and ignoring strikers' rights to those jobs.

Other violations included transfer and promotion of trainees and junior employes into jobs for which strikers held recall rights.

Apprenticeship Rate Up 19% For Minorities

The increase of minority group apprentices in 1968 was more than double the increase of all registered apprentices, Labor Sec. George P. Shultz reported.

While the total number of apprentices registered with the Labor Dept. and state apprenticeship agencies rose 9 percent, the participation by minority groups jumped 19 percent from 1967.

Overall, the number of registered apprentices on Jan. 1 was estimated at 240,000. This is a 20-year high and a net gain of 20,000 over Jan. 1, 1968.

Apprentices from minority groups numbered 15,600, compared with 13,200 a year earlier. Minority apprentices account for 6.5 percent of the total, the Labor Dept. said.

Negroes, with more than 9,360 registered apprentices, represent nearly 4 percent of the total. At the start of 1968, there were 7,320 black apprentices, or 3.3 percent of all registered.

Apprentices with Spanish surnames rose to 4,320, or 1.8 percent, from 3,900 on Jan. 1, 1968. American Indians registered in the programs rose to 960 from 880 during the 12-month period. The remainder of the increase in minority apprenticeships was mainly among Orientals.

Expressing confidence that the rate of minority apprenticeships would continue to rise, Shultz noted that since the start of 1967 minority group participation has risen 68 percent. The total number of apprentices has increased 16 percent during this period.

Afro-Asian Institute Marks 10th Year

Tel Aviv—The Afro-Asian Institute for Cooperative and Labor Studies, founded by Histadrut, the Israeli Federation of Labor, is celebrating its 10th anniversary.

More than 1,700 men and women from 78 countries have participated in the Institute's programs which cover classes in English and French and a wide range of subjects on the cooperative and labor movements.

In a story on the institute and its education of students from Africa and Asia, the Israel Labor Bulletin noted that many AFL-CIO unions have contributed scholarships at the recommendation of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, including the council itself.

Samuel Appointed To Manpower Unit

Vice Pres. Howard D. Samuel of the Clothing Workers has been appointed by Sec. of Labor George P. Shultz as a member of the National Manpower Advisory Committee.

The ten-member committee—composed of representatives of labor, management, agriculture, education, training and the public—was set up in 1962 under the Manpower Development & Training Act.

The committee advises the Secretary of Labor on his administration of that law. By mutual agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, it also advises that department on its activities under the law.

Samuel succeeds Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers, who resigned in December.

Labor Mourns Death Of Gen. Eisenhower

Organized labor joined the nation and the world in mourning the death of former Pres. Eisenhower.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a statement:

"Dwight David Eisenhower gave his nation everything any man could be expected to give—courage, devotion, loyalty and leadership.

"He was a very young man when, at West Point he took an oath to defend this nation and its Constitution. Throughout his lifetime, he was faithful to his word.

"History will note that he was both one of our greatest generals and one of our truly peace-loving presidents. He was a man people trusted and it was a trust to which he was always true.

"To his widow and his family, and to the nation he served so well, I extend the sincerest condolences of America's workers."

The AFL-CIO building, as were most other union headquarters, was closed to permit the staff to pay tribute to the late President's memory.

Eisenhower, as President, participated twice in ceremonies relating to the AFL-CIO headquarters.

In May 1955, he joined Meany and other union officials in laying the cornerstone of the then AFL building. The two presidents joked with a member of the Bricklayers about their skill or lack of skill.

On June 4, 1956, Eisenhower, accompanied by Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell and Press Sec. James C. Hagerty, joined AFL-CIO officials in ceremonies dedicating the headquarters building.

In his address, Eisenhower paid tribute to the "glorious record" of the labor movement, declaring that labor, like government, must always be "dedicated to the service of the people."

He observed that "vast new opportunities" are open to the labor movement but that this is "accompanied by a vast increase in responsibility." He added:

"The great essayist, Carlyle, said 'labor is life.' In that great essay he pointed out that labor brings order out of chaos, that it leads to true knowledge. Labor creates patience and courage. Labor makes men great. That is why he said, 'Labor is life.' "

Eisenhower's allusion to Carlyle was in direct reference to the huge mosaic mural in the lobby of the AFL-CIO headquarters.

Summing up his view of labor, Eisenhower declared:

"Labor is the United States. The men and women who, with their minds, their hearts and hands, created the wealth that is shared in this country—they are America."

Trade unionists and trade union leaders always felt a warmth and gratitude for Eisenhower, the general who led the victorious allied forces in World War II in Europe.

The AFL and the CIO, when they were separate, did not endorse him for President in 1952, giving their support to Adlai Stevenson. The merged AFL-CIO supported Stevenson in 1956, too.

Organized labor had some fundamental disagreements with the Eisenhower Administration on many economic and social issues but it always held high its respect for Eisenhower the man, Eisenhower the General, and Eisenhower the President.

Taft-Hartley Injunction Rule Used 29 Times

The government invoked the Taft-Hartley Act's national emergency disputes procedures 29 times between 1947 and 1968, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

These are the procedures which permit the enjoining of industry-wide strikes for an 80-day "cooling off" period.

Five of the disputes were resolved without a work stoppage and 13 were settled during the "cooling off" period. In three other cases, an agreement was reached without a strike after the 80-day period had expired.

In seven cases, six involving longshoremen on the Atlantic or Gulf Coasts, workers struck after the 80-day injunction had expired before winning an acceptable settlement.

The Taft-Hartley Act requires that the employer's "last offer" be submitted to the workers for a vote if no settlement is reached during the 80-day period. In every one of the 12 ballots that were held and tallied, the employer offer was rejected.

3 of 10 in Poverty:

Income Gap Widens For Nation's Elderly

(Continued from Page 1)

incomes below $1,480, and one-fourth had incomes of $1,000 or less, the report said.

Moreover, the task force observed that "Americans living in retirement are suffering from an income gap that is widening in relation" to the income of younger persons.

Median income of families headed by a person over 65 was 51 percent of that for younger families in 1961, but only 46 percent in 1967.

Widows and other aged women living alone were found by the task force to be "particularly disadvantaged economically," with six of every 10 having income below the poverty line.

One chart illustrating the task force's findings, based on analysis of Social Security Administration statistics, showed that the level of living set by the Bureau of Labor Statistics' "moderate" budget for a retired couple is "well beyond the reach of most older people, especially those who retired years ago."

The average monthly social security benefit of a couple retiring in 1950 met half the BLS budget cost of $149. Although both the benefit and budget have been adjusted in the years since, that same couple's benefit in 1968 met less than one-third the updated budget's cost of $370.

Among the aged in poverty, it stressed, are many who "did not become poor until they became old."

The report pointed to a number of other problems which are becoming increasingly acute for the aged—problems associated with owning homes or renting, paying taxes and meeting rising medical costs.

The task force concluded that government programs, particularly social security, are the only real "assurance" that "the relative economic status of the aged" can be improved.

It also recommended that the government explore and support "various methods of promoting and encouraging private group pensions and personal savings as supplementary sources of private income."

Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N.J.), committee chairman, said the report "states a fundamental truth as no other document has yet done." That is, he explained, that "economic problems of old age are not only unsolved for today's elderly but also unsolved for the future elderly."

A RISING GAP - SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFIT AND MODERATE STANDARD OF LIVING FOR RETIRED COUPLES

ILA Ratifies Boston Pact To End Strike

Boston—Longshoremen voted by a 4-1 margin to accept contract improvements totaling $1.60 an hour, and returned to work after a 104-day strike of cargo handlers, clerks and counters.

That ended the ILA's 1969 bargaining quest on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, except for four small employer holdout groups in West Gulf ports—Beaumont, Port Arthur, Port Orange, Tex., and Lake Charles, La., where local issues disputes delayed settlement.

The Boston settlement, last on the Atlantic coast, was achieved with the aid of new Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service Dir. J. Curtis Counts, assigned by Pres. Nixon to head mediating teams.

For the first time in Boston, ILA members won guarantees of 2,080 hours of straight-time pay per year—a full 52 weeks' work for those with contract seniority. Also they won wage increases totaling 98 cents an hour, and an additional 62 cents in insurance, health and pension improvements.

More than 1,500 port workers held out since Dec. 20 to get the work guarantee and a clause protecting members against some job losses due to the use of containers, the union said.

WORLD HEALTH DAY will be observed April 7 marking the 21st anniversary of the constitution of the World Health Organization, a United Nations agency. The theme this year is "Health, Labor and Productivity." Efforts to curb serious hearing defects are initiated by the measuring of noise levels in a Chilean factory (top photo). The dangers of eye injury are illustrated by a worker who wears no protective welding mask (bottom photo).

Union Work Quotas Upheld by High Court

The Supreme Court ruled that unions may set limits on the amount of work their members may do for their regular daily pay, and levy reasonable fines on those who repeatedly violate the rule.

The court voted 7-1 to affirm a 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals decision enforcing a National Labor Relations Board ruling in a 1961 case. The NLRB ruled that an Auto Workers local did not violate the Taft-Hartley Law when it fined four employes of Wisconsin Motor Corp., Milwaukee, and suspended them from membership for a year, for demanding immediate pay for production over the daily quota or ceiling.

The rule, voted by a membership meeting, is that members may produce as much as they wish per day but must "bank" the difference above the quota for payment in periods when work is slack.

All but two justices joined Justice Byron White in finding that the union rule on production quotas is valid and that its enforcement by reasonable fines does not constitute the restraint or coercion forbidden by the law. Justice Hugo Black dissented, and Justice Thurgood Marshall did not participate.

The fined members refused to pay and filed NLRB charges against the union when it sued to collect.

White wrote in his decision that the union rule complied with these limiting factors: the fine was reasonable; the production ceilings were a bargainable issue; membership in the union was voluntary—employes could drop out and pay a fee for service; the fine was enforceable by expulsion from membership and a suit in a state court to collect, provided the court accepts the suit.

In another labor case, the court refused to accept a challenge by the Uniformed Sanitationmen, unaffiliated, to New York State's Taylor Act forbidding strikes by public employes. In an unsigned opinion, the court said the dismissal was "for want of a properly presented question."

The union was fined $80,000 for stopping work in New York City in 1968. Its president served a 15-day jail sentence on a charge of contempt of court, paid a $250 fine, and then asked the Supreme Court to overturn the conviction on the ground that he had not been given a jury trial.

The court apparently turned down a review of the case because the refusal of the jury trial was appealed after the sentence was handed down, not before; therefore it was not a "properly presented question."

Supply Source Links Firm to Wage-Hour Act

New York—Local construction firms that buy supplies produced out of state are subject to the federal wage-hour law even though the purchases are made locally, the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled here.

The three-judge court upheld a ruling by U.S. District Judge Jack B. Weinstein of Mineola, Long Island, that Melos Construction Co. and Americo Melo, its president, are covered by the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The ruling was one of the first in this area applying the 1961 FLSA amendments to small contractors—those doing business in a volume of $500,000 or more a year. The act was extended in 1961 to cover enterprises whose employes engage in "handling, selling or otherwise working on goods that have been moved or produced for commerce," the ruling noted.

The decision came in a civil suit by the Labor Dept. to compel Melos to pay overtime and keep time records of employes who build foundations for suburban homes in Suffolk County, L.I.

The defendants admitted they had not complied with the law but argued the act was not applicable.

All company supplies are bought locally and the corporation, therefore, is not engaged in interstate commerce, they claimed.

The appeals judges ruled that Congress specifically intended to extend coverage of the act to contractors like Melos in the 1961 amendment. Since Melos buys about $40,000 worth of lumber and cement shipped into the state from outside, it is engaged in interstate commerce under the terms of the amendments, they said, and the fact that the supplies may have "come to rest" before they were purchased is "immaterial."

GLENN E. WATTS

Senior Citizens Council Headed By Cruikshank

Nelson H. Cruikshank, former director of the AFL-CIO's Dept. of Social Security, is the new head of the National Council of Senior Citizens.

The organization announced that Cruikshank will serve as NCSC's acting president, succeeding John W. Edelman who is leaving the post for reasons of health. Edelman suffered a heart ailment last year.

The council's top officers also announced that Cruikshank's name will be placed in nomination for the presidency at the organization's national convention in June.

Cruikshank became the AFL social security director in 1944 and held the same post in the AFL-CIO from the time of the merger in 1955 until his retirement in 1965.

He played a major role in labor's drives for increases in social security benefits and was a key strategist in AFL-CIO campaigns that helped bring Medicare and disability benefits under the social security system.

Cruikshank was one of the earliest supporters of NCSC and has served as chairman of its national advisory committee. He has attended each of the seven annual conventions held by the council since it was founded in 1962.

Edelman, who becomes a president-emeritus in NCSC, was elected its president in 1964, following his retirement as Washington representative of the Textile Workers Union of America. He succeeded former Rep. Aime J. Forand (D-R.I.), the organization's first president who also now is a president-emeritus.

CWA Appoints Glenn E. Watts To No. 2 Post

Glenn E. Watts, executive vice president of the Communications Workers since 1965, has been named CWA secretary-treasurer to succeed William A. Smallwood, effective Apr. 1.

Smallwood, who served in the office since 1955, previously announced his resignation for "compelling personal reasons."

He was honored for his years of service by friends at a testimonial dinner in Washington Mar. 31.

The union's executive board, which selected Watts as Smallwood's successor, also named Gus C. Cramer, assistant to CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, to succeed Watts.

The full slate of CWA officers, including secretary-treasurer and executive vice president, will be subject to election at the union's convention in June. The assistant to the president is an appointive office.

Watts came to serve CWA full-time in 1948 as president of the union's former Division 36, comparable to the present Local 2336 which represents telephone workers in the District of Columbia.

He was elected president of CWA District 2, covering five eastern states and the District of Columbia, in 1951. He was appointed assistant to the president in 1956 and has served as executive vice president since May 1965.

Cramer also came on CWA's staff in 1948, as assistant to the president of the union's District 6, embodying five southwestern states. He became a special representative in 1951, was named assistant to an executive vice president in 1958, and has served as Beirne's assistant since 1963.

For Tax Justice

THE 13.5 MILLION members of the unions of the AFL-CIO are, almost without exception, taxpayers. They pay their taxes regularly, payday after payday, through the payroll withholding program. They are loyal Americans; they appreciate the value of government, the services of government, the need for paying for government.

They are willing to pay their fair share.

But they are tired of having to pay the share of other Americans. They are specifically tired of paying the share of those Americans whose incomes are greater and whose taxes are lower—the "loophole set" in today's society.

So it is on behalf of the largest organized group of taxpayers in America that we come here with proposals we believe are based on the doctrine of fair play. There are some who call the measures before this Committee "tax reform." We think "tax justice" is a better description and that is what we are seeking here today—tax justice.

The federal income-tax structure has drifted far afield from the American standard of fair play. It is rigged against income from work and against wage and salary earners. It is rigged in favor of unearned income. Because of these facts, confidence in our tax system has eroded. This erosion must be ended.

The program of tax justice we urge is ambitious and far-reaching, long overdue and critically urgent. There is no longer time for pause, delay, gestures or tokens.

Our program—fully adopted—would close loopholes currently costing the federal Treasury about $15 billion to $17 billion. We would put back $6.7 billion of this in much-needed and long overdue tax relief to those of low, moderate and middle incomes. There would be a net gain in revenue of $8 billion to $10 billion—to enable full funding of essential federal programs to strengthen society.

THOUGH LOOPHOLE CLOSING is utterly essential to tax reform, justice cannot be fully achieved unless the tax load simultaneously is eased for those who for too long have borne the brunt of the inequities in the tax structure.

Our tax-relief proposals would remove from the tax rolls the majority of those taxpayers whose incomes are below government poverty-income level, and provide relief to those of moderate and middle incomes.

We recommend a substantial increase in the present minimum standard and standard deductions and a sharp reduction in the tax rates that apply to the first two income-bracket levels.

The costs of government are not being shared fairly. An unwarranted limitation is placed on the effectiveness of tax policy in promoting broad goals of balanced economic growth and full employment, and public confidence is decaying.

Thoroughgoing federal income-tax loophole closing and reform would make a substantial contribution toward compensating for the unfair manner in which the burden of other taxes fall.

The AFL-CIO has three objectives in mind to achieve fair play in the nation's tax structure:

1. The loopholes of special tax privilege for wealthy families and businesses must be eliminated.

2. The impoverished must be removed from the tax rolls.

3. There must be a reduction in the relative burden for low- and moderate-income families.

—From the statement of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany on tax reform to the House Ways & Means Committee.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, April 5, 1969 No. 14

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Sorry About That'

A Word Edgewise:

Gen. Eisenhower Was Trusted Even by His Non-Supporters

By John P. Roche

IT IS SAID among the Irish that the worst insult to a man's memory is to lie about him. Out of respect for the late Dwight D. Eisenhower, I must therefore state that I did not consider him a great President, but I have always had the highest regard for him as a man and a soldier. Much has been made of his humility and simplicity, but humble, simple men do not—even in this world of weird accident—become Generals of the Army or Presidents of the United States. There was more to "Ike" than that.

What I think was distinctive about General, later President, Eisenhower was his complete lack of illusions about power. Like Ulysses S. Grant, whom he resembled in many ways, he despised violence; for him there was nothing romantic about combat or the battlefield. It was a dirty business that had to be done and done well. Grant once admitted he never looked forward to battle with "enthusiasm;" neither did Eisenhower, though both he and Grant were superb organizers of armies. Yet, both, without "enthusiasm," could unflinchingly cut the cord. The absence of martial zeal in no way impeded their powers of decision.

Pres. Eisenhower thus became the incarnation of the best aspects of the American military tradition. Americans, perhaps because ours has been such a violent land, instinctively distrust those who romanticize violence.

Contrast, for example, the public attitude toward the late Gen. Douglas MacArthur with that toward Eisenhower. MacArthur was a brilliant commander, probably a military genius, but there was something wrong. . . . The fatal flaw, as MacArthur discovered when he tried to convert his military assets into political capital, was precisely that he was a beau sabreur: he relished every moment, practiced every mannerism, squeezed every line.

Crowds would, of course, cheer him to the echo, but down deep he ran against the grain of a democratic people. He faded away.

This is a good time to recall that one night in January 1863, the President of the United States wrote a remarkable letter to Maj. Gen. Joseph Hooker, whom he had just appointed to command the Army of the Potomac. "I believe you to be a brave and skillful soldier," Lincoln wrote, "which of course I like. I also believe you do not mix politics with your profession, in which you are right. You have confidence in yourself, which is a valuable, if not an indispensable quality. You are ambitious, which, within reasonable bounds, does good rather than harm."

SO FAR, SO GOOD. Then suddenly one comes upon a passage that sets once and for all time the basic American relationship between the civilian and the military:

"I have heard, in such a way as to believe it, of your recently saying that both the army and the government needed a dictator. Of course it was not for this, but in spite of it, that I have given you the command. Only those generals who gain successes can set up dictators. What I now ask of you is military success, and I will risk the dictatorship."

The flamboyant Hooker went down in defeat on the battlefield; the glamorous Gen. George McClellan, the MacArthur of his time, though without MacArthur's talent, was defeated at the polls as the Democratic presidential nominee in 1864.

Grant, who never quite understood why people praised him so highly for doing what he took to be his simple duty, won the war and later became President: the perfect embodiment of the anti-hero. When he dreamed, it was not of dictators but of his wife Julia and the children.

"Ike," too, was the ideal anti-hero, the man whom everyone trusted because they sensed that he put little stock in the paraphernalia, the trappings of authority, and that he was concerned with doing a job rather than making a movie. He proceeded in the same fashion in the White House with the kind of inner security possessed only by that handful who realize they do not have to prove anything to anyone. (Plato once observed that only those who despise power should be permitted to exercise it.) This was the source of most of the problems of the Eisenhower presidency.

There were millions of us who voted against Ike. I doubt if there was a corporal's guard who did not trust him. Can there be any greater tribute to his memory?

Improvements Since '63:

Better Mental Health Services Bring New Benefits to Workers

The following is excerpted from "Mental Health Services in Action" by Dr. Stanley F. Yolles, director of the National Institute of Mental Health, which appears in the March 1969 AFL-CIO American Federationist.

THE DEVELOPMENT of health services in the United States has for a long time proved that "treatment follows the buck."

This certainly has been true of the treatment of mental illness. As men and women who work for wages in this country are well aware, the price tag for private psychiatric treatment has been too high for the individual wage-earner's paycheck. In most instances, if a worker became mentally ill he had no choice but to be committed by a court to a public mental hospital.

This situation has changed in the past five years within a growing number of communities in every part of the United States.

Groups of people are now sharing in prepayment or other third-party health benefit plans and slowly but surely mental health services are being included in them. As this pattern continues to develop, labor unions and other insurable groups will have the muscle to demand the kinds of comprehensive health and mental health services they want and need, rather than to accept what is made available to them through the decisions of others.

What began as a rebellion against the inadequate treatment of mental patients in overcrowded, isolated public hospitals has become a national mental health program. The old notion of mental health services has changed. It is no longer news that stomach upsets, skin eruptions and physical weaknesses of various sorts are related to emotional disturbances. Having recognized the relation of emotions to physical well-being, the problem now is to prevent mental illness as well as to treat it.

This can only be achieved if mental health services are delivered by people who understand the problems of those who come to them for help. This is the objective to be shared in the 1970s by governments, mental health professionals and allied personnel, communities, labor unions, industrial management, the insurance industry, volunteer groups and individual citizens.

There are many definitions of mental health. Perhaps the most appropriate one, for purposes of common concern, is a combination of several concepts that stress the positive state of mental and emotional well-being. It is generally agreed that among the basic indicators of mental health are, first, a person's understanding and acceptance of himself; second, his perception of the world around him and his relationships with other people; and third, his ability to handle crisis and stress.

It is, therefore, no longer enough to search for the causes of mental illness after the illness has developed. Community mental health services have broadened since 1963 to become involved in prevention as well as in the treatment of illness.

Everybody can have these services; they are not restricted to the wealthy, or the poor, or to union members and their families, or to any other group. They are community services, organized in such a way that they can become available to the entire population of any community—rural, urban, industrial or suburban. And labor unions, through health and welfare funds, contract negotiation mechanisms and other resources, can become leading participants in planning mental health services, financing them and continuing to develop prepayment insurance plans for the primary benefit of their membership and also for others.

There is no doubt that more people are beginning to understand the new scope of mental health services. Unions are currently training shop stewards and other union personnel so they can advise fellow workers where they can get physical, mental and social help.

The worker who belongs to a union whose leadership is alert to the newly-opened avenues for mental health services is beginning to realize that he and his family will not place their jobs and friendships in jeopardy if they take their emotional problems to mental health professionals.

He can visit the center before he is so sick that he has to leave his job. His kids can go there; the whole family can go there to talk out its problems. For many Americans, it is a hard life and a hard world, in which mental health services can ease the pressures, if they are provided by people who understand what the pressures are.

It is in this context that a revolution has occurred within the mental health professions themselves.

THE PSYCHIATRIST was once an isolated figure who either treated his patients alone or maintained an autocratic directorship over other therapists. This is now changing rapidly and widely.

In community mental health, it has already been proved that the only way in which individuals work as a team is when they work as equals. The psychiatrist, psychologist, social worker and nurse each has special skills and each one complements the skills of the others. From this experience, the professionals have also learned that the mental health team must include nursing aides, psychiatric aides and others who know the neighborhood or the work situation and the people who make up the community.

To provide these mental health aides, the National Institute of Mental Health training program is supporting the development of career ladders for sub-professionals in the mental health field. Results of this can be twofold; not only will these aides give service, but the new kinds of jobs will in themselves provide more job opportunities for workers who choose to train to work in the health industry.

In any case and in any part of the community mental health services program, unions have an increasing opportunity to increase the momentum, to make it possible for workers and their families to receive early mental health care at minimal cost.

U.S. Laws Lag:

Job Safety Legislation Pressed As 14,500 Workers Die in '68

ESTHER PETERSON, former assistant secretary of labor, urged passage of the Occupational Health & Safety bill to curb the mounting toll of job-related deaths and injuries. On-the-job accidents claimed the lives of more than 14,500 Americans last year.

Mrs. Peterson, now legislative representative for the Clothing Workers, said the bill would provide badly-needed uniform health and safety safeguards for the "life and limb of workers in every state," and enforcements procedures to make them effective.

Mrs. Peterson, who served both Presidents Kennedy and Johnson as an Assistant Secretary of Labor, charged that the United States now lags behind most other industrialized nations in occupational health and safety.

"We are not improving," she added, "the situation is getting worse." She appeared on the nationwide interview, Labor News Conference.

Mrs. Peterson said that stiff opposition by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and insurance companies killed a similar measure in the last Congress.

SHE REJECTED allegations that costs of the program would be high. "I am convinced that if the money is invested, we will save it in insurance, we will save it in compensation—not to mention what we save in terms of human values," she said.

Mrs. Peterson said the measure would be particularly helpful to comparatively small businesses and industries, few of which can afford good health and safety programs of their own.

"I find that these people are really concerned," she said. "They don't want to compete on the blood of workers or the lungs of workers," she declared. They want and need the kind of technical assistance and service that the Occupational Health & Safety Act would make possible, she said.

By Press Associates, Inc.

EVERY MONTH the U.S. Dept. of Labor publishes two sets of figures prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. They are the "Consumer Price Index" which tells the nation what has been happening to the cost of living for the past month and "The Employment Situation" which tells the nation not only how many Americans are employed but how many are not.

The month of February—which is the latest month for which statistics are available—has already had a considerable impact on the thinking of the Nixon Administration as revealed in policy announcements both by the President and his department heads. The month of March—statistics for which are now in preparation—is likely to have an even further impact.

Let's take the figures for February.

The Consumer Price Index confirmed what has long been apparent to the average housewife—that living costs are still climbing with no signs that they are likely to taper off in the immediate future. The CPI, as the technicians call it, was up four-tenths of 1 percent over the month and 4.7 percent over the past year. While this is not exactly a "runaway" inflationary rate, it is enough to upset the money market as well as the housewife.

Higher interest rates, "tight money," fiscal measures to "cool off" the economy, all stem from the 4.7 percent boost that has marked the past year.

Sec. of the Treasury David M. Kennedy sounded a warning that the Nixon Administration "does not intend to let inflation continue escalating prices." In a speech before the Business Council in Washington, Kennedy discussed inflation, the increased business investment expected for this year and the importance that the Administration attaches to a budget surplus this year. He ended his observations with the statement that he believed the 10 percent surtax which expires June 30 "must be retained."

That was on Mar. 21. The CPI statistics pointing up the 4.7 percent increase in living costs over the past year were published on Mar. 25 and the next day Pres. Nixon called on Congress to extend the 10 percent surtax for another year.

THE EMPLOYMENT SITUATION for February was no less an important factor in Administration thinking, although somewhat indirectly. It showed that employment has been rising "substantially" and that unemployment has remained at the relatively low rate of 3.3 percent for the past three months. This was all to the good, but it also showed that the economy is still going strong despite the 10 percent surtax, the boosts in interest rates and other fiscal measures that have been taken to slow it down.

These statistics, and what is done about them, hold a crucial danger to any administration—how much unemployment is it willing to take in its fight on inflation?

During the early days of the Nixon regime, conservative economists spoke of swapping a considerable number of jobs for a slowdown in the economy. Such talk brought denials from top Nixon officials that they were thinking in such terms.

In the same speech that Treasury Sec. Kennedy made before the Business Council, he said:

"We will not apply the economic brakes suddenly and hard, because that might bring about unacceptably high unemployment."

He didn't set the rate that the Nixon Administration would consider acceptable. "But," he continued, "we do mean to apply the brakes steadily and firmly until the economy is slowed to a sustainable rate of speed."

He underlined in his speech text "do" and "steadily" and "firmly" so that his listeners could be under no misapprehensions about the Administration's intent.

Those two Labor Dept. reports on living costs and the job situation are obviously critical guideposts for the new President and his officials. They are equally critical for American workers whose livelihood is clearly dependent on them.

FORMER ASSISTANT Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson urged Congress to pass the Occupational Safety & Health bill to curb job-related accidents that claimed 14,500 American lives last year. She was questioned on Labor News Conference by Harry Conn, left, of Press Associates, Inc., and Victor Cohn of the Washington Post. The interview is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual network.

AFL-CIO's Program for 'Tax Justice'

The AFL-CIO urged Congress to adopt the following proposals to close tax loopholes which enable many wealthy individuals and corporations to pay less than a fair share of federal taxes:

1. Capital Gains

Elimination of preferential tax treatment of capital gains for both individuals and corporations. Such gains should be taxed at regular tax rates. At the same time, the present income-averaging provisions should be broadened to include capital gains.

Approximate revenue gain: $6-7 billion.

2. Capital Gains on Property Transferred at Death

All appreciation (difference between original cost and market value) should be taxed in full on transfer at death. The tax rate should apply to all appreciation occurring after date of enactment; one-half the tax rate should apply to all gains occurring between an appropriate date as Jan. 1, 1950, and the date of enactment.

The tax should be allowed as a deduction for estate-tax purposes. It should not apply on transfers between the decedent and spouse nor to estates valued at less than $60,000.

To prevent "forced" sales of assets, appropriate installment-payment procedures should be adopted.

Approximate revenue gain: $3-4 billion.

3. Depletion

Deductions for depletion should not be permitted to be taken after the cost of the property has been fully written off.

Approximate revenue gain: $1.5 billion.

4. Interest on State and Local Bonds

All interest on state and local debt securities, issued after the date of enactment (following an appropriate transition period) should be subject to the income tax. The federal government should guarantee the bonds and pay the issuing state or local government an amount equal to one-third of the interest cost on such taxable issues. No federal guarantee or interest-rate subsidy should be permitted for industrial development bonds regardless of the amount of the issue.

There would be a net revenue gain, after taking into account the cost of the subsidy and the guarantee, of approximately $100 million.

5. 7% Investment Tax Credit

The 7% investment tax credit should be repealed.

Approximate revenue gain: $3 billion.

6. Accelerated Depreciation on Real Estate

Accelerated depreciation (depreciation in excess of straight-line) should be disallowed on all real estate except low- and moderate-income housing.

Approximate revenue gain: $700-800 million.

7. Limitation of Deductions Attributable to Farming Operations

Each dollar of nonfarm income over $15,000 should reduce the amount of farm loss that can be deducted from nonfarm income by $1. This provision should not apply to farm losses resulting from taxes, interest, casualty, drought, and sale of farm property. This provision should not apply to farmers using the accrual method of accounting.

Approximate revenue gain: $145 million.

Guess Who Wants More Tax Breaks

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce has its own program for tax reform. It contrasts sharply with the AFL-CIO position.

The business group wants to lower taxes for those with the highest incomes. It complained at House hearings that the present income tax is too steeply graduated.

A Chamber of Commerce spokesman opposed proposals for a minimum tax on income now exempt from taxation. Instead, he suggested, Congress should consider a "value added" tax. The AFL-CIO statement opposed such a tax as a retail sales tax which would fall hardest on the consumer.

8. Unlimited Charitable Contributions

The special unlimited charitable-contribution deduction should be repealed immediately.

Approximate revenue gain: $50 million.

9. Multiple Surtax Exemptions from Corporate Income Tax

Commonly controlled business enterprises should, after an appropriate transition period, be limited to only one $25,000 surtax exemption.

Approximate revenue gain: (when fully effective): $235 million.

10. Tax-Exempt Foundations

(1) Financial transactions between a foundation and its founders, contributors, officers, directors or trustees should be prohibited.

(2) Foundations should be required to spend their income within one year of receipt.

(3) Foundations should not be permitted to own 20% or more of any business unrelated to their charitable function—a reasonable time should be allowed for presently organized foundations to comply with this provision.

(4) If a donor maintains control of a business or property after it is contributed, no donation deduction from taxes should be allowed until the foundation disposes of the property or the donor's control over the property ends.

(5) Foundation borrowing to buy investment properties should be prohibited. Foundation lending should be limited to appropriate charitable functions.

(6) A limitation, such as 40 years, should be placed on the life of foundations.

(7) Congress should carefully examine the problems posed by the actual operations of foundations and the need for some degree of federal regulation of the use of the tax-exempt funds of foundations.

11. Conglomerates

The skyrocketing trend of business mergers requires detailed examination—including the anti-trust laws and the operations of the appropriate government agencies as the Justice Dept., Federal Trade Commission and the Securities & Exchange Commission.

A thorough investigation should also be conducted to determine the extent to which the federal tax structure contributes to this alarming trend of corporate mergers and acquisitions.

Among the tax provisions that should be examined are those which permit:

(1) Corporations to deduct interest payments on debt used to finance mergers and acquisitions.

(2) Capital-gains taxes to be paid in installments when stock is exchanged for debt securities.

(3) Tax-free exchanges on corporate stock transfers made for purposes of mergers and acquisitions.

(4) Corporations to "carryover" the operating and capital losses of an acquired firm.

In addition, the penalty tax provisions applying to excessive amounts of retained profits should be made workable in the light of recent experience.

12. Allocation of Deductions

Individuals and corporations should be required to allocate certain deductions between taxable and non-taxable income.

Under present law, those who receive tax-exempt income derive a double benefit. The income never appears on the tax return: hence no tax is paid. Secondly, personal or non-operating business deductions can be deducted in full from taxable income.

Before such deductions are permitted, since they are designed to define ability-to-pay, total income (taxable and exempt income) should be taken into account.

Individuals with tax-exempt income (as defined in item 13) in excess of $10,000 should be required to allocate certain personal deductions in line with the ratio their Adjusted Gross Income bears to adjusted gross income plus exempt income. The deductions that should be allocated are: interest and tax payments, casualty losses, charitable contributions, medical expenses, and cooperative housing expenses.

Corporations with such exempt income, in excess of $25,000, should be required to allocate non-operating expense deductions between net profit from operations and exempt income.

Approximate revenue gain from allocation of deductions: $250 million.

13. Minimum Tax on Exempt Income

A 25% tax should be levied on the amount of exempt income which exceeds $10,000 for individuals and $25,000 for corporations, plus any amount of deductions disallowed under allocation-of-deductions formula. The exempt income subject to this tax should include the following:

- One-half capital gains.
- State and local bond interest.
- Depletion taken after the cost of the property has been written off.
- The difference between the cost and the market value of property donated to charity.
- Depreciation on real estate taken in excess of straight-line, except low- and moderate-income housing.

Approximate revenue gain from 25% minimum tax: $1.5 billion.

Relief Where Burden is Heaviest

These are the AFL-CIO's proposals to use part of the revenue from closing tax loopholes to provide tax relief for people in the low through middle income brackets:

1. The minimum standard deduction should be increased from the present $200 plus $100 per exemption to $600 plus $100 per exemption.

This proposal would exempt from federal income tax the majority of persons below the government-defined poverty level and significantly reduce the tax payments of all persons at or near the poverty level.

The revenue cost would be approximately $1.2 billion.

2. The standard deduction should be increased from the present 10% with a $1,000 maximum to 15% and a $2,500 maximum.

This proposal would bring standard deductions closer in line with the actual deductions claimed by most taxpayers. It would simplify reporting for the great majority of taxpayers and provide tax relief for all those whose itemized deductions amount to less than 15% of income or $2,500. Most of the relief would flow to those in the $5,000 to $20,000 income range.

The revenue cost would be approximately $2 billion.

3. The first two individual-income-tax bracket rates should be reduced from the current 14% and 15% to 9% and 13% respectively.

This proposal would provide tax relief to all taxpayers, but the major portion of the tax deduction (approximately 95%) would go to those with annual incomes below $20,000.

The revenue cost would be approximately $3.4 billion.

4. Moving-Expense Deductions.

Deductible moving expenses should be broadened to include certain non-reimbursed expenses such as those related to the sale of the old residence—real-estate commissions and advertising costs and costs of settling an unexpired lease; pre-move househunting trips; and temporary lodging costs (for worker and family.) These additional costs should be subject to an overall limitation of $2,000. Present treatment of other deductible moving expenses—unreimbursed expenses of transporting the employe, his family and belongings, incurred in a job-connected move—should continue.

The revenue cost would be approximately $100 million.

Finally, all special tax-forgiveness proposals offered under the guise of "incentives" which would provide additional loopholes for the wealthy and further erode the fairness of the tax structure should be rejected. And all proposals to adopt a federal retail sales tax—whether called "value-added" taxes or offered clearly as a tax on consumers—should also be rejected.

Effect of AFL-CIO Tax Relief Proposals

Effect of the AFL-CIO tax relief proposals* on a married taxpayer with two children using the standard deduction:

Wage or Salary Income	1968 Federal Income Tax	Tax Due Under AFL-CIO Proposals	Percent of Tax Reduction
$ 1,000	—	—	—
2,000	—	—	—
3,000	—	—	—
5,000	$ 290	$ 168	42.1%
7,500	686	546	20.4%
10,000	1,114	949	14.8%
12,500	1,622	1,359	16.2%
15,000	2,172	1,827	15.9%
20,000	3,428	2,965	13.5%
35,000	8,504	7,849	7.7%
50,000	15,360	14,540	5.3%

Excludes surtax

* Increase in minimum standard deduction to $600 plus $100 per dependent. Increase in standard deduction to 15%, maximum of $2,500. Reduction in first two bracket tax rates to 9% and 13%.

Meany Charges System Is 'Rigged':

Labor Urges Tax Fairness, Crackdown on Loophole Set

(Continued from Page 1)

the statement stressed "is ambitious and far-reaching, long overdue and critically urgent. There is no longer time for pause, delay, gestures or tokens."

From a revenue standpoint, the biggest gain would come from taxing capital gains income—at time of sale of assets or when inherited—at the same rate as ordinary earnings. This would bring in about $10 billion a year.

Meany noted that one-third of all capital gains reported on 1967 tax returns went to persons with incomes over $100,000.

Congress could ease inflationary pressures and high interest rates by repealing the 7 percent investment tax credit—which allows business firms to subtract from their federal tax bill an amount equal to 7 percent of the cost of new equipment and machinery.

This amounts to a $3 billion-a-year giveaway, the AFL-CIO said, and means "the nation's taxpayers are picking up the tab so that a private firm can get a discount on the costs of its equipment."

Meany told the Ways & Means Committee that the investment tax credit and accelerated depreciation on real estate "fuel the fires of the only source of inflationary demand in the national economy—business investment in plants, machines and equipment."

He called also for an end to "the special provisions which permit oil operators, real estate investors and hobby farmers to write off non-existent costs."

Thus "the nation's 20 oil giants pay an 8.5 percent tax rate" and "a real estate operator with a total income of $7.5 million pays taxes at the same rate as a $10,000 married wage earner with two children."

In another area of tax avoidance by the wealthy, the AFL-CIO proposed a substitute for the present system of exempting from taxation the income from state and local bonds.

The present exemption costs the Treasury more than the states and municipalities gain, Meany said. He proposed, instead, that the federal government guarantee the bonds and pay one-third of the interest costs. Even with such a subsidy, the government would come out $100 million ahead in revenue.

Both the AFL-CIO and the Industrial Union Dept. urged a crackdown on tax loopholes that encourage conglomerate mergers and takeovers. IUD Administrative Dir. Jacob S. Clayman told the House committee that "the onrush of mergers can be and should be reduced" by changing the tax laws.

If all sources of presently tax-exempt income aren't fully taxed, the AFL-CIO said, Congress should at least impose a 25 percent minimum tax on exempt income.

The federation proposed two key methods of reducing the tax burden on low and middle income groups.

One would be to increase both the standard deduction that persons who do not itemize their returns can claim and the minimum standard deduction, which lowers the tax burden on the poorest families.

The other would provide relief for all taxpayers by dropping the tax rate on the first $1,000 of taxable income—after deductions—from the present 14 percent to 9 percent, and on the next tax bracket from the present 15 percent to 13 percent.

Meany urged the Ways & Means Committee to reject all proposals for tax "incentives" which, he said, "would provide additional loopholes . . . and further erode the fairness of the tax structure."

He called for rejection also of all proposals for a federal retail sales tax, no matter whether described as a "value added" tax or identified clearly as a tax on consumers.

His testimony concluded:

"There you have it, the AFL-CIO proposals which we believe would achieve tax justice, eliminate abuses, restore public confidence and bring the American standard of fair play into the tax system.

"The time for action is long overdue."

LABOR'S CASE for "tax justice" was presented in a statement by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at House Ways & Means Committee hearings. Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) leans over to welcome AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger, center, and Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller.

Threat to Jobs Stressed By Economic Committee

The annual report of the Joint Economic Committee of Congress warned that Administration monetary and fiscal policies could increase unemployment by 500,000 this year unless other steps are taken.

While the policies are aimed at curbing inflation, the report said, they provide "no real assurance that a significant reduction in inflationary trends will be achieved."

The report, authored by Democratic members of the Senate-House committee, pointed to the need for tax reform with "first priority" given to repeal of the 7 percent investment tax credit.

The report noted that the committee previously had expressed concern about the "inflationary character" of the credit which allows companies to deduct an amount equal to 7 percent of their outlays for new machinery and equipment from income tax payments.

Excessive spending on investment as a result of the credit, it added, has been "one of the most important sources of recent inflation."

"Therefore," the report said, "we are convinced that this provision of tax law should be repealed with some alternative help provided for small business."

The report set an acceptable level of 3 percent unemployment compared to the present rate of 3.3 percent. It also called for economic growth of 4.5 percent this year in terms of constant prices.

"We urge both the Administration and Congress," the report said, "to shape federal expenditure programs so as to concentrate their job-creating benefits in high unemployment areas—particularly the low-income cores of our cities.

"In this way, we could maintain our current low-unemployment rate, and perhaps reduce it, at the same time we reduce inflation."

The report opposed "any further increase in our already excessive interest rates" and urged their reduction "to a level that is less dislocative and harmful to our economy."

Republicans on the committee filed minority views, disagreeing with the report in some areas but agreeing in others.

Major areas of difference appeared to be in the minority's opposition to the report's advocacy of investment tax credit repeal and a return to wage-price guidelines, which the Administration has dropped.

Main areas of agreement were on extension of the 10 percent income tax surcharge, the need for tax reform, action to control inflation, and continued U.S. commitment to liberal trade policies.

Regional Meetings Set On GE, Westinghouse

A series of 16 "grass roots" meetings throughout the country have been scheduled by the AFL-CIO Coordinated Bargaining Committee of General Electric-Westinghouse unions.

The meetings will be conducted to explain the national bargaining goals of the Coordinated Bargaining Committee (CBC) to the 200,000 GE and Westinghouse workers involved.

James D. Compton, CBC steering committee chairman, announced that the 16 meetings will be held during the next three months, prior to the opening of negotiations with the two compaines. He said emphasis at the meetings will be on "grass roots" participation by members of the 270 locals involved and on question-and-answer periods.

In each city, a local of one of the ten unions participating will act as host for delegates from all unions. Speakers are being selected from the top leadership of the ten unions.

The first meeting will be held Apr. 21 in Louisville, Ky. The principal speaker will be Pres. Charles Pillard of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Other meeting dates and locations are: Apr. 24, Atlanta; Apr. 28, Philadelphia; May 1, Memphis; May 6, Fort Wayne, Ind.; May 8, Pittsburgh; May 13, Cincinnati, May 15, Lynn, Mass.; May 19, Newark; May 22, Columbus, O.; May 24, Pittsfield, Mass.; June 3, Cleveland; June 10, Syracuse, N.Y.; June 17, Chicago; June 20, Dallas, and June 24, San Jose, Calif.

The 10 unions participating are the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers (IUE), the IBEW, Steelworkers, Machinists, Allied Industrial Workers, Flint Glass Workers, Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, Carpenters, Sheet Metal Workers, and Technical Engineers.

Independent Union Unseated by IBEW

Beaumont, Tex.—Labor unions in this area lent a hand to help the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers unseat an unaffiliated union that had represented employes of Gulf States Utility Co. in Texas and Louisiana for 28 years. The vote in a runoff National Labor Relations Board election was IBEW 1,062, Independent Electrical Workers 990.

The independent finished in the lead and the IBEW second in a February election. With two weeks to go, the IBEW launched an intensive campaign with the help of the Texas AFL-CIO, Regions 17 and 7 of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization, and other unions in this area.

The Texas AFL-CIO used a new computerized system to send out a mailing telling the Gulf States Utility story of lagging wages to key union leaders with a request for help. The result: nearly 95 percent of all GSU employes were contacted and urged to vote for the affiliated union, the IBEW reported.

High Court Holds Firm On Eavesdropping Rule

The Supreme Court rejected a Justice Dept. plea for reconsideration of the recent decision giving some defendants the right to examine transcripts obtained by electronic eavesdropping to see if their constitutional rights have been violated.

The court on Mar. 10 held that defendants and their attorneys were entitled to disclosure in criminal cases where the defendants are the subject of surveillance or it takes place on their premises.

Specifically, the court turned down the government's plea for a defined exemption in cases involving espionage. A six-word order denying reconsideration carried no dissent and no explanation.

Overly Concerned

But in an order applying the Mar. 10 ruling to 15 cases which were sent back to lower courts for rehearing, the high court indicated it felt the government was overly concerned about the decision.

Justice Potter Stewart said careful inspection of the opinion shows that while the court acted on "illegal" eavesdropping it did not specify that surveillance in espionage cases was illegal.

The court, he said, has never ruled one way or the other on the constitutionality of using listening devices in such cases.

In the cases sent back for rehearing, the court instructed trial judges to examine transcripts in secret to decide if the eavesdropping was illegal and if the appellants have legal right to object to their use.

Only in cases where the judges conclude that the answer to both questions is "yes" will the transcripts be given to the appellants and their attorneys.

Two of the cases sent back involve criminal convictions of Teamsters Pres. James R. Hoffa. One is a Chattanooga, Tenn., federal court's conviction on jury-tampering charges in 1964 that sent Hoffa to federal prison for eight years. The other is a Chicago federal court's conviction of Hoffa, also in 1964, that carries a five-year sentence for defrauding pension funds.

Democrat Wins House Contest In Wisconsin

(Continued from Page 1)

making his first major political appearance since the presidential campaign. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) made film clips for television use in Obey's campaign.

Chilsen used television commercials showing him with Nixon and strong endorsements from Laird. He told the voters that election of Obey "would be an insult to Pres. Nixon and a slap in the face to Mel Laird."

Tax reform was a key issue in the campaign.

On the national level, Obey, hit hard at tax loopholes including the low taxation of capital gains and the oil depletion allowance. He also sharply attacked the Republican governor's proposal to increase income taxes only on the first $14,000 of earnings, with no hike in the higher brackets and no raise in corporate taxes.

Obey's support of dairy farmers and opposition to large corporate farms also won him substantially more support than a Democrat normally gets in the rural counties.

'Labor-Farmer' Support

A "labor-farmer" rally for Obey at Wisconsin Springs two days before the election brought together the area's trade union movement, the Farmers Union and the National Farmers Organization.

State AFL-CIO Pres. John W. Schmitt was chairman of the rally. Speakers included national AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, who is a former Wisconsin congressman; Al J. Hayes, retired president of the Machinists and a Wisconsin native, and Bronson La Follette, who ran strong in the district as the Democratic gubernatorial candidate last November.

It was 3 o'clock in the morning after Election Day before Obey's victory was confirmed and his opponent had conceded.

The newly-elected congressman could have celebrated or gone to bed. Instead he and his wife drove out to the Brokow paper mill. They stood at the plant gate as the workers—members of the Pulp-Sulphite union—came for the morning shift. The word from the new congressman was "Thanks for your support."

5-Year Extension Sought:

Liberals Push Drive To Keep OEO Alive

(Continued from Page 1)

main operating programs to other agencies.

On the other side of the Capitol, Chairman Ralph W. Yarborough of the Senate Labor Committee termed the Job Corps program a "remarkable success" and pledged to fight against any attempt to dismantle it or merge it with Labor Dept. manpower training programs.

Yarborough's position was supported by Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.), chairman of the committee's Employment, Manpower & Poverty subcommittee.

Nelson announced he will introduce a bill to extend the anti-poverty program three additional years and said he was "greatly alarmed" over reports that the Administration will slash the Job Corps program. About 35,000 youngsters, most of them drop-outs, are receiving training and work experience at Job Corps centers.

Perkins successfully moved a five-year extension of the Elementary & Secondary School Act through his committee last month, even though the Administration sought only a two-year continuation until it could come up with its own program.

The labor-backed bill is now scheduled to reach the House floor April 16 in one of the first tests of strength between liberals and conservatives in the 91st Congress.

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz and Under Sec. James D. Hodgson appeared before the House Select Subcommittee on Labor to testify on a labor-endosed construction safety bill.

The legislation would require government construction contractors to meet federal safety standards on the job similar to the Walsh-Healey Act requirements for manufacturing contracts and safety provisions of the Service Contract Act.

Shultz said the department favors legislation "along the general lines" of the bill but wasn't prepared to comment on its specific provisions.

Hodgson said the construction industry "is one of the most hazardous in the nation" and reiterated the Labor Dept's interest in both the industry's special problems and job safety in general.

But, he told the subcommittee, "we will need more time to work out the details of such legislation."

Job Bias Hearings Prod Administration

(Continued from Page 1)

and will apply to more contractors.

The hearings also produced a sharp clash between Kennedy and Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen.

The occasion was testimony by Clifford L. Alexander, Jr., the hold-over chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission—the enforcement body for the ban on job discrimination which is written into the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Dirksen bluntly threatened Alexander with dismissal for "harassing businessmen" with complaints about discrimination.

"Either this punitive harassment is going to stop," the Republican leader said, "or I'm going to the highest authority in this government and get somebody fired."

Dirksen said that Congress, in passing the Civil Rights Act, didn't intend that employers, "these work givers of industry and business, be harassed."

Kennedy quickly interrupted to tell Alexander:

"I hope no one has been threatened in here today because he is trying to do the job he is expected to do. I think those who threaten your job do a great disservice to the American people."

Alexander's term on the equal opportunity commission runs until 1972. However a White House spokesman, Press Sec. Ronald L. Ziegler, said he expects Pres. Nixon to replace Alexander as chairman of the commission.

He said "it is traditional" for a new President to designate new chairmen of federal commissions.

At the same time, the White House announced that Nixon has sent a memorandum to heads of federal agencies saying that the government should "lead the way as an equal opportunity employer." The memorandum dealt with the federal government's own employes, not with government contractors.

Dirksen had a strong assist from Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) when he defended the Nixon Administration approach to federal contractors. Thurmond challenged charges that the South's textile firms discriminate and charged that federal contract compliance officials had tried to set up illegal job quotas for Negroes.

Shultz Appoints Aide For Economic Affairs

John P. Gould, Jr., an assistant professor at the Graduate School of Business, University of Chicago, has been named by Sec. of Labor George P. Shultz as his special assistant for economic affairs.

Prior to becoming an assistant professor in 1966, Gould was an instructor at the School of Business and a teaching assistant.

Meany Asks Full Support For Boycott of Shell Oil

Full trade union support for the consumer boycott called by the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers against Shell Oil and Shell Chemical Co. products has been urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Meany noted that on February 18, the AFL-CIO Executive Council unanimously voted to support any consumer boycott if the OCAW felt one was necessary. The federation acted, he observed, after Shell—alone among the major oil companies struck by the OCAW—"refused to deal in a reasonable and fair manner with its employes" and sought to fire or suspend workers because they went on strike.

"In the face of this action," Meany said, "the OCAW has had no recourse but to impose a consumer boycott against Shell Oil and Shell Chemical Co. products. This boycott clearly merits the support of the entire trade union movement.

"Therefore, in accordance with the unanimous action of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, I urge every AFL-CIO member to refuse to buy Shell products and to return Shell credit cards to the company: P. O. Box 80, Tulsa, Okla."

Meany summed up:

"Until Shell treats its employes fairly and decently, it must not have the patronage of American trade unionists. I am confident, therefore, that this boycott will have the full and immediate support of the entire AFL-CIO."

Five Agencies Ordered To Reshuffle Field Units

Pres. Nixon has directed five government agencies, including the Labor Dept., to set up regional field offices in the same cities as a means of coordinating government programs dealing with urban and poverty problems.

Also covered by the presidential directive are the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, the Dept. of Housing & Urban Development, the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Small Business Administration.

The directive applies to all bureaus within the agencies and departments and calls for establishment of common regional boundaries.

An 18-month period has been allowed for the transition. Some of the regions match existing boundaries and headquarters; others will involve moving of offices and changes of jurisdiction.

When the moves are completed, the regions and their headquarters will be as follows:

Region 1, Boston — Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont.

Region 2, New York City—New York, New Jersey, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Region 3, Philadelphia — Delaware, District of Columbia, Kentucky, Maryland, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia.

Region 4, Atlanta — Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina and Tennessee.

Region 5, Chicago—Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin.

Region 6, Dallas-Fort Worth—Arkansas, Louisiana, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas.

Region 7, Denver — Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah and Wyoming.

Region 8, San Francisco—Alaska, Arizona, California, Guam, Hawaii, Nevada, Oregon and Washington.

Smaller sub-offices are expected to be maintained in the cities which will lose regional offices as a result of the reorganization.

The reshuffling, for example will affect the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training which now has 10 regional offices — in Atlanta, Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Dallas, Kansas City, San Francisco and Seattle.

The Kansas City regional office, which not long ago moved from Denver, will move back to Denver. The Cleveland office's jurisdiction will be switched to the Chicago regional office, and Seattle's to San Francisco.

Other Labor Dept. bureaus will face comparable problems. Thus the wage-hour regional office in Birmingham will come under the Atlanta office and the Nashville region will have its jurisdiction split between two other regional headquarters.

Nixon said the reorganization is needed because "the organization of federal services has often grown up piecemeal — creating gaps in some areas, duplications in others, and general inefficiencies across the country."

He noted that two federal employes working for different agencies on poverty problems in the same neighborhood might be in different administrative regions with headquarters in widely separated cities.

New Booklet Analyzes Social Security System

The AFL-CIO has published "Security in Time of Need"—a look at the current American social security system and its future possibilities—prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security and Dept. of Publications.

The 32-page illustrated publication notes that retirement—although the best known feature of social security—is only part of the social security package which includes a wide range of benefits for survivors, the disabled and health insurance for the elderly.

"Social security legislation must be thought of as a living document—one which grows and changes to meet the needs of a growing, changing nation," said Bert Seidman, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security. "Franklin Roosevelt put it well when, in signing the legislation into law in 1935, he referred to it as 'the cornerstone of a structure which is being built—but is by no means complete'."

"The working men and women of America, through their trade union institutions, helped lay that cornerstone three decades ago. Their hands have been turned constantly to the task of building the structure that has evolved since then. And their energies are devoted now toward bringing the structure nearer completion.

"Only in this way can we make sure that this social security program makes its full contribution to the enhancement of American life."

The publication further explores federal-state governed public welfare and health programs and unemployment insurance, as well as solely state-managed Workmen's Compensation benefits.

Existing injustices are noted and AFL-CIO guidelines are offered toward correcting them.

Single copies are available free from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20006. The price is 30 cents per copy in lots of up to 100, $25 per hundred for larger orders.

New Challenge Seen for Labor, Rights Alliance

Philadelphia — The labor-liberal-civil rights coalition must be maintained and strengthened because its job isn't done, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told a labor gathering here.

Biemiller spoke at a luncheon sponsored by the Jewish Labor Committee and the Negro Trade Union Leadership Council.

He called on the participants to reject the concept "that our work is done, that our great civil rights coalition is no longer relevant to the needs of modern day society."

If not the coalition, Biemiller asked, "who is going to do the work that yet needs to be done if life is to be meaningful for downtrodden people?"

Not the academicians, not conservative congressmen, not impersonal conglomerates and corporations, not the Black Panthers, Biemiller stressed.

Who but the labor-liberal-civil rights alliance, he asked, "is going to supply the manpower and money and talent and time to analyze the issues, mobilize public opinion and, finally, go knocking on congressional doors?"

Biemiller spoke of labor's legislative program in terms of the trade union movement's "historic mission to improve the lot of the poor, the exploited, and the victims of discrimination."

He outlined the AFL-CIO's legislative agenda, stressing the key role of full employment in both private and public jobs as "basic to solving the poverty problem."

Because three out of five poor people are in families headed by an employed person, a raise in the minimum wage to at least $2 an hour is essential.

Tax reform is part of this program, Biemiller said, because under present law there are millionaires who pay no taxes and several million people with incomes below the poverty line who do.

"We can no longer tolerate a double standard of taxation which heaps an unfair burden on poverty-stricken people, and dumps an even greater load on middle-income families, while wealthy people and corporations take advantage of loopholes and special privileges."

The answer to poverty in the ghetto is not "black capitalism," he said, but "the jobs-skills-education-housing measures that are essential."

4-5-69

Canadian Base Rates Up 6.6 Percent in 1968

Ottawa—Union-negotiated contracts boosted the base rate wages for workers 6.6 percent in 1968—the same increase as a year earlier, a Canadian Labor Dept. survey shows.

The study covered about 1 million workers in all Canadian industries except construction and in bargaining units of 500 employes or more.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year

Saturday, April 12, 1969

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

No. 15

Jobless Teenagers Push Rate to 3.4%

Part-Time Work Posts Sharp Rise

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's jobless rate edged up to 3.4 percent in March due to a small rise in unemployment among teenagers, the Labor Dept. reported.

The March rate compares to the 3.3 percent rate recorded for the past three months and marks a return to the 3.4 percent of last November. A year ago, the rate was 3.7 percent.

The Labor Dept.'s jobs report for March also revealed the smallest increase in non-farm payroll employment in six months as well as a sharp rise in those working part-time involuntarily.

The department, however, issued its usual warning against overinterpreting the statistical changes in a single month's report. A judgment on whether the job figures reflect the Administration's efforts to slow down the pace of economic activity must await further evidence, it added.

The report showed non-farm employment totaling 69.2 million in March. After adjustment for seasonal influences, this figure was 147,000 higher than in February, with about 30,000 of the increase linked to the return of strikers to payrolls.

"The employment increase was slightly less than half the average seasonally-adjusted gain registered in the past 5 months, but was about the same as during most of last year," the report said.

(Continued on Page 2)

Prods Nixon Program:

Congress Critical Of Legislative Lag

By David L. Perlman

Congressional leaders are telling the Nixon Administration that it had better start moving if it has a legislative program it wants Congress to act on this year.

About the only Administration bills to move through Congress have been Senate ratification of the treaty to limit the spread of nuclear weapons—a holdover measure from the Johnson Administration—approval of a routine debt limit increase, and extension of the President's authority to submit reorganization plans to Congress.

Before leaving for a 10-day Easter recess, Congress was largely marking time, waiting for the Administration to express its views on other bills.

The impatience expressed in recent congressional criticism suggested that the traditional "honeymoon" Congress gives to a new President may be nearing its end.

In a rare formal statement, House Speaker John W. McCormack complained of the slow pace of the Nixon Administration.

Until the President spells out his program and budget recommendations, McCormack said, "it is exceedingly difficult for the leadership in Congress to formulate a legislative program and timetable."

And Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.) added, "When you have an activist president who has a definite program and submits it, then you have something to get started on."

An even sharper critique came from the liberal Democratic Study Group of the House.

The DSG noted that Presidents Johnson, Kennedy and Eisenhower had all launched their Administrations with State of the Union messages to Congress, followed by a steady stream of specific legislative requests.

By contrast, Nixon passed up the opportunity to deliver a State of the Union address. Before the recess he had sent only seven messages to Congress, including some which merely promised specific proposals sometime in the future.

The White House has indicated that at least part of the President's program is being put into final shape for early presentation.

After the Easter recess, Press Sec. Ronald Ziegler told newsmen, there will be "a beginning of a flow" of legislative proposals to Congress.

What action there has been this year is largely the result of initiative by congressional committees. These are some of the areas in which committees have begun to move:

Education—The House Education & Labor Committee has approved a bill extending for five years the Elementary & Secondary Education Act, the basic program of federal aid to education. If it gets quick Rules Committee clearance

(Continued on Page 12)

AFL-CIO Clears Record On Reuther Campaign

At its February 1969 meeting, the AFL-CIO Executive Council approved publication, as an official federation document, of a report on the events and episodes leading to the disaffiliation of the Auto Workers and documentary evidence on the allegations and attacks upon the AFL-CIO by the UAW.

This publication, "To Clear the Record: AFL-CIO Executive Council Report on the Disaffiliation of the UAW," was issued and made available to the news media on Apr. 11, 1969.

This issue of the AFL-CIO News carries on Pages 5 through 8 a summary of the 40,000 word report, the full text of which was prepared under the supervision of a special committee of the AFL-CIO Executive Council consisting of Vice Presidents I. W. Abel and Hunter P. Wharton.

The AFL-CIO has, until now, refrained from responding in detail to the "two-year campaign of public vilification" of the AFL-CIO and its officers by the UAW and its president, Walter P. Reuther, the report's preface says, on the assumption that Reuther, at some point, would bring his attacks before "an appropriate forum of the trade union movement."

Repeated opportunities and invitations were extended to the UAW, the document notes, to place its charges, complaints and proposals before an AFL-CIO convention, General Board, or Executive Council meeting. The departure of the UAW, however, "has now closed off that traditional democratic method of resolving the issues raised publicly by Mr. Reuther," the report declared, adding:

"To clear the record and to properly inform the officers and membership of all AFL-CIO affiliates, it is therefore necessary to present the facts in this form."

Copies of the complete report can be obtained from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications.

EEOC Chief Resigns:

Federal Suits Attack Textile Firms' Bias

The Nixon Administration sued and was sued in cases involving race discrimination in employment.

In a related area, the holdover chairman of the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission resigned with a blast at the "crippling lack of Administration support" for efforts to end job discrimination.

One of the lawsuits was filed by the government against a southern textile chain. The other was filed by the NAACP Legal Defense Fund against top Administration officials. It accused them of failing to follow the government's own ban on giving federal contracts to firms that discriminate.

The Justice Dept. suit sought a federal court injunction to halt alleged discrimination in jobs and housing by the Cannon Mills Co., which has 16 textile plants in the Carolinas employing 24,000 workers.

The suit charged that the textile firm:

- Relegated Negro employes to "menial and low-paying job categories."
- Discriminated against Negroes in a 2,000-home company-owned town by restricting them to segregated areas where services and facilities are inferior. Rentals were at least as high as those paid by whites, the Justice Dept. said.

Cannon Mills, which specializes in towels and sheets, does not have any government contracts and the suits were brought under the equal employment section of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the open housing provision of the 1968 law.

The suit by the NAACP was based on the recent award of multimillion dollar government contracts to three southern textile firms found to have discriminated in employment.

The firms—J. P. Stevens & Co., Dan River Mills and Burlington Mills—had refused to sign a pledge of "affirmative action" to open up job opportunities to Negroes. But the Defense Dept. said they had orally agreed to comply with nondiscrimination policies and awarded them the contracts.

The NAACP charged that the action violated Pres. Johnson's 1965 executive order, which is still in effect, and asked the federal courts to bar further contracts to the companies until there is full, explicit compliance with the executive order.

The attitude of the Nixon Administration to civil rights enforcement was involved in the resignation of Clifford L. Alexander, Jr., as chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the agency charged with enforcement

(Continued on Page 10)

Rail Signalmen Set Nationwide Strike Apr. 14

The Railroad Signalmen called a strike of its 13,000 members on the nation's railroads, effective Apr. 14 at 6 a.m. local time, because of failure to reach an agreement in a lengthy wage dispute.

In announcing the strike date, Signalmen's Pres. C. J. Chamberlain emphasized that the union has exhausted all procedures under the Railway Labor Act and was legally free to strike on or after Apr. 7.

Under the law there can be no strike or imposition of new rules or wages by management for 30 days after a presidential emergency board has released its recommendations. That cycle was completed Apr. 6 in the Signalmen's case.

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz quickly announced that if the strike materializes, the Administration "will go to Congress to obtain legislation to put people back to work."

In New York, where he was attending a dinner of the American Arbitration Association, Shultz said, "The government simply isn't going to tolerate a national railroad strike."

Shultz said, however, that he

(Continued on Page 3)

STATE EMPLOYES who struck the West Virginia State Roads Commission Mar. 3 are determined to end the spoils system and win union recognition, AFL-CIO Organizing Dir. William L. Kircher tells rally at State Capitol in Charleston. Gov. Arch Moore (R) refused to rescind his firing of 3,500 highway workers after meeting representatives of the strikers following the rally. (Story, Page 10.)

CANDIDATE FOR MAYOR of Los Angeles, Thomas Bradley, renews his pledge to "wade in personally" to end the Hearst Herald-Examiner strike-lockout as he joins the picket line at the newspaper. Bradley led 13 other candidates for mayor and faces incumbent Sam Yorty in runoff. The pickets got more support when three nationally prominent Negro unionists—Bayard Rustin and Norman Hill of the A. Philip Randolph Institute and Dir. Walter W. Davis of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education—took turns toting picket signs. The three were in Los Angeles for a Randolph testimonial.

U.S. Census Undercount Causes Aberrations in Labor Statistics

Government experts know that there are more people in the labor force—both employed and looking for work—than the government's own statistics show.

They even know with reasonable accuracy the age, sex and race of these missing Americans. But the statistics the government issues every month—used by both public and private planners—don't reflect this knowledge.

An article in the March issue of the Monthly Labor Review, publication of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics, discusses some of the data—and the implications—that previously appeared only in little-read technical journals.

The article is titled, "Effect of the Census Undercount on Labor Force Estimates." Its authors are Denis F. Johnston, a sociologist, and James R. Wetzel, an economist.

Root of the problem is the difficulty of counting every person in the United States every 10 years.

In the very first U.S. census, George Washington recognized the problem, including suspicion of government by citizens and what Washington termed "the negligence of some of the officers taking the census."

The Census Bureau's own statisticians have come up with generally accepted figures on the "undercount" in the last census, in 1960.

Nearly 5.7 million people weren't counted in the 1960 census—about 3.1 percent of the total population. But while the 3.55 million whites in this group represented only 2.2 percent of the white population, the 2.14 million nonwhites made up 9.5 percent of the nonwhite population (a group that is 92 percent Negro).

Even more significantly, the undercount rises to 19 percent—nearly one out of five—among nonwhite men in the 20-35 age bracket.

How does the Census Bureau know this? The key is a bit of elementary deduction.

In simplified terms, it involves following a specified age group—say 10 to 14—over several census tallies, making allowances for mortality rates and persons serving overseas in the armed forces. When the numbers and sex ratio in a census differs significantly from the projection, the undercount is obvious and can be pinpointed.

The monthly employment and unemployment figures are based on samplings of an updated census tally. But the updating refers only to such data as mortality, birth and death figures, and the people entering and leaving the United States.

Thus, the authors of the article point out, "any errors in the basic decennial population count are transmitted directly to the official employment and unemployment figures analyzed and reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics."

And, the article continues, "since the population was undercounted in 1960, each month's estimates of population, labor force, employment and unemployment are lower than a fully accurate census would reveal."

The article allocates the missing people of working age to the employment-unemployment figures for a sample month by two alternative methods. One would assume that the uncounted persons fall into the same pattern as others of their age, sex and race. The other would assume that most of them are in poverty neighborhoods.

Under either of these assumptions, there would be no significant change in the overall unemployment rate—as a percentage of the labor force—although there would, of course, be an increase in the number of persons unemployed.

The authors note that other theories would assign a considerably higher proportion of the uncounted to the jobless category—large enough to affect the national unemployment rate. But the authors said they could not find "convincing evidence" to justify such an assumption.

They did say, however, that "a large portion of the omitted are probably employed in less desirable, low-paying occupations and industries. Thus, estimates of underutilized persons based on the official figures are probably low."

The statistical errors in the census and the employment figures do mean, however, that programs designed to attack such problems as unemployment, poverty and housing underestimate the magnitude of the task unless the planners have taken into account the errors in numbers stemming from the census undercount.

Taylor Named To Safety Post

George Taylor has been named by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as executive secretary of the AFL-CIO safety committee, succeeding John D. Connors who recently retired.

Taylor will remain in the Dept. of Research where he is an economist specializing on safety, conservation and natural resources.

Part-Time Work Up Sharply:

Jobless Teenagers Push Rate to 3.4%

(Continued from Page 1)

The job gains came in all major industry sectors except contract construction. On a seasonally adjusted basis, construction employment fell by 63,000 in March, but this followed a very large rise of 110,000 in February, the report noted.

Factory employment rose by 64,000 in March, with the largest increases coming in the transportation equipment and petroleum products industries, mainly as a result of strikers returning to payrolls.

Employment in state and local government rose by 59,000 over the month while federal jobs were almost unchanged.

Compared to a year ago, nonfarm payroll jobs were up by 2.5 million, the report said. Four-fifths of the increase came almost equally in manufacturing, trade, services and government.

On the jobless side of the picture, the unemployed totaled 2.7 million in March. This was 177,000 lower than in February, but it was less than the usual seasonal decline for the month, the report said. After seasonal adjustment, the jobless total rose by 100,000 over the month, primarily among teenagers.

The jobless rates for adults remained at low levels. The rate for adult men stood at 1.9 percent, close to the record low of 1.8 percent last December. The adult women's rate held steady at 3.5 percent for the fifth straight month, the lowest level in 15 years. Fulltime workers remained almost unchanged at 2.9 percent. Married men continued at a record low of 1.4 percent.

Unemployment among teenagers moved up in March as their job gains failed to match their entry into the labor force. Their jobless rate was 12.7 percent, up from 11.7 percent and a return to the December rate.

The Labor Dept. noted that the teenage jobless rise occurred exclusively among white youths.

The report also called attention to some progress among adult Negro workers. While the white jobless rate for the first quarter of 1969 remained unchanged from the last quarter of 1968 at 3.0 percent, the non-white rate dropped substantially—from 6.6 to 5.9 percent, the report said, adding:

"This decline was especially marked among adult workers. Although the non-white jobless rate was twice that of whites, the ratio between the two rates was at its lowest quarterly level since 1965."

On the sharp jump in part-time workers, the report said it totaled 175,000, seasonally adjusted, and represented the second straight monthly rise. Two-thirds of the March rise occurred among persons who usually work full time, the report added. Total part-time employment for economic reasons—that is, involuntary—stood at 1.7 million, up 100,000 from a year ago.

On hours, the report showed the seasonally adjusted workweek in manufacturing up five-tenths of an hour to 40.6 hours in March. This was a recovery from a sharp drop to 40.1 hours in February when adverse weather hit the Northeast, but it was still half an hour below the 1968 peak last September.

For all rank and file workers on non-farm payrolls, the average workweek edged up to 37.7 hours, seasonally adjusted, but remained below the levels of last year's May-September period, the report said.

Average hourly earnings rose by 1 cent in March to $2.98 for rank and file workers. This was 19 cents or 6.8 percent higher than a year earlier.

Average weekly earnings were up by 97 cents to $111.75 because of small increases in both the workweek and hourly earnings. Compared to March 1968, weekly pay was up by $6.85 or 6.5 percent.

Harry Bates Dies at 86, Led Bricklayers' Union

Harry C. Bates, vice president emeritus of the AFL-CIO and president emeritus of the Bricklayers, was "truly one of the great trade union leaders of our time," Federation Pres. George Meany and Sec-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said in a message of sympathy to Mrs. Bates on the death of her husband.

Bates, a close friend and colleague of Meany for many years, died in Golden Beach, Fla., where he moved following a heart attack two months ago. He was 86.

Funeral services were held Apr. 8 in St. Matthew's Cathedral, Washington, followed by burial in Gate of Heaven cemetery, Silver Spring, Md.

"Few men served the labor movement as long and as well as he," Meany and Schnitzler said. "His fellow bricklayers and trade unionists everywhere benefited from his honesty, candor and sage advice, and his complete dedication to the brotherhood of workers."

Bates was a member of the committee whose negotiations led to the merger of the AFL-CIO in 1955.

Before retiring from the AFL-CIO Executive Council two years ago, Bates had been continuously active in the administrative affairs of the federation. He had been chairman of the AFL Housing Committee since 1935, and continued in that post following the merger.

Born in Denton, Tex., in 1882, Bates took up the trade of bricklayer as an apprentice in Denton and Waco, Tex., and was 18 when admitted to membership in Waco Local 9.

He served as president of Local 5 in Dallas from 1910 to 1914; headed the Texas State Conference of Bricklayers in 1914, then served as special representative of the Bricklayers in the Southwest from 1914 through 1920.

He held office successively as international vice president of his union, treasurer, first vice president, then president in 1935. He was elected a vice president of the AFL in 1934 and of the AFL-CIO at the merger convention in 1955.

Bates served as second vice chairman of the National Housing Conference until 1968, when he was elected honorary vice chairman.

He was the author of "Bricklayers—Century of Craftsmanship," a history of the union published in 1955, and of numerous articles on housing.

During World War II and the Korean War, Bates served on several government labor boards, including the Wage Adjustment Board and the Wage Stabilization Board.

He was a delegate to the 1958 meeting of the Intl. Labor Organization in Geneva, Switzerland, and represented U.S. labor at other international conferences.

In recent years his union by convention action established the Harry C. Bates Merit Scholarship to help sons and daughters of union members attend college in the United States and Canada.

Dallas Crafts Draw Praise For Training

A Dallas congressman and former mayor took a close look at the minority group apprentice training program of the city's Building & Construction Trades Council—and came away enthusiastic.

Rep. Earle Cabell (D-Tex.) said in a press statement that the program, financed by a Labor Dept. grant, has exceeded its target.

It was expected to train 40 men at an average cost of $1,135, he noted.

But as of the first of the year, Cabell said, there were 104 apprentice trainees and the cost per man was less than $332. Currently, he noted, there are 112 persons in the program, of whom 98 are Negroes, eight Latin Americans, and six are American Indians.

Cabell noted that "before the apprentice is well into his third year, he has paid back in additional taxes all of the money that has been invested in him." In addition, Cabell said, "he has a lifetime career, a money-making skill, a position of respect."

Workers Responding:

White Collar Council Marks 2-Year Gains

By Duane Emme

The Council of AFL-CIO Unions for Scientific, Professional & Cultural Employes is "bringing the message of unionism" to workers in those fields—and getting a good response, delegates to its second biennial convention were told.

Council Pres. Herman D. Kenin observed that the organization also is "welding greater unity" among its 18 union affiliates.

Kenin, who is president of the Musicians, said the challenge now is to convert the council's "good beginning" into steady future progress.

During two days of busy sessions, the 125 delegates discussed issues involving member unions, adopted resolutions and constitution changes, and elected officers.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany congratulated the council on its achievements to date and predicted that it will "make a great contribution" in helping professional workers gain a fair share of the wealth they help to produce.

The convention elected Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes as the council's new president after Kenin announced he was stepping down so that the top office might be rotated among heads of council affiliates.

The delegates kept Kenin in a leadership role by electing him treasurer to succeed Wurf. Charles Cogen, president-emeritus of the Teachers, was re-elected vice president.

In his keynote address, Kenin described the council as a "vital organization" that has become an important part of the labor movement and "will grow to play an increasingly important role in its affairs."

That role, he emphasized, must be to organize thousands of professional and technical workers, and bring them higher wages and better working conditions in a society which they will dominate.

Professional workers "must and will" join unions, he declared, for the basic reason that they "want more of a voice in the matters that affect their jobs, their neighborhoods and their government."

A report from Jack Golodner, the council's executive secretary, showed that affiliated membership of unions in the council has grown from 314,574 in 1967 to 363,969 in February 1969, an increase of 16 percent.

But to illustrate the council's potential, he noted that professional and technical workers doubled in number between 1947 and 1964, and "are expected to rise by more than half" to nearly 14 million between now and 1975.

Delegates adopted a resolution pledging the council's "wholehearted effort" to work with the AFL-CIO in developing demonstration projects aimed at increasing union members' involvement in cultural life.

The council now has such projects under way with full-time directors in Minneapolis, Buffalo and New York. The projects, aided by the federation, have won the backing of the federal government's National Endowment for the Arts.

A companion resolution termed the Endowment, created by Congress in 1965, "a splendid example of what this nation can do to support the arts." It urged the Nixon Administration to continue and expand the program.

The convention also adopted resolutions calling for strengthened copyright laws, legislation to assure performing artists compensation for recorded work, and extension of the Fair Labor Standards Act's overtime provisions to certain engineers and other professional employes now denied such protection.

In other areas, the council backed AFL-CIO programs to advance civil rights and bolster aid to education; supported public employe drives for statutes to assure free collective bargaining; endorsed AFT organizing among college teachers and condemned attempts by local governments to impose excise taxes on admissions to theaters, museums and concerts.

Meany told the delegates that the council's success represents "concrete evidence" of the wide appeal of the AFL-CIO and refutes "subtle propaganda" often put out by businesses in an attempt to show that "unions are not interested in professional workers."

"It is now widely recognized," he added, "that professional workers have a part to play in the labor movement and labor in turn can help them just as it helps the manual workers."

He urged that the council's programs concentrate on organizing efforts and representing professional employes so as to advance the "interest of the entire labor movement and nation generally."

Sec. of Labor George P. Shultz spoke to the convention on the programs and problems of the Labor Dept. as he sees them in this first few months in office. He also answered questions from the delegates.

The "top priority problem," Shultz said, is to reduce high unemployment among Negroes and other minority groups and give them training and opportunity they need to advance on the job-ladder.

He also stressed the importance of controlling inflation without increasing unemployment, promoting improved labor-management relations and "doing a better job of evaluating" manpower, safety and non-discrimination programs.

Other speakers included Theodore W. Kheel, veteran labor arbitrator and mediator; Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N.J.), and Ralph Nader, author and safety expert.

Participating in the convention were Actors' Equity; American Guild of Musical Artists; Musicians; State, County & Municipal Employes; Teachers; Technical Engineers; Railway & Airline Clerks; Communications Workers; Insurance Workers; Theatrical Stage Employes; Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Retail Clerks; Seafarers; Operating Engineers; Office & Professional Employes; Machinists; and Broadcast Employes & Technicians.

Guyana Labor Minister Is AIFLD Graduate

Georgetown, Guyana—Winslow Carrington, Guyana's recently appointed Minister of Labor and Social Security, is a graduate of an American Institute for Free Labor Development training course.

Carrington, who is president of Guyana's Transport Workers Union, was the valedictorian among English speaking members who graduated from AIFLD's first course for Latin American union leaders in Washington in 1962.

DELEGATES FROM 18 UNIONS attending the second biennial convention of the Council of AFL-CIO Unions for Scientific, Professional & Cultural Employes in Washington heard Labor Sec. George P. Shultz discuss labor and manpower problems confronting the nation. Seated beside Shultz are Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians, the council's first president, and Charles Cogen, council vice president and president-emeritus of the Teachers.

Shultz Praised On Radiation Stand

The AFL-CIO has praised Labor Sec. George P. Shultz for his "firm position" on radiation safety standards for uranium miners.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller expressed the federation's thanks in a letter to Shultz. He noted that the AFL-CIO for many years has sought federal action to limit radiation exposure in the mines.

The safety standards set by the Labor Dept. under the Walsh-Healey Act, Biemiller said, "will provide safe conditions for workers and can be attained by the mine operators."

Rail Signalmen Set Nationwide Strike Apr. 14

(Continued from Page 1)

hopes the dispute doesn't come to the walkout point, adding that there are "good chances of averting it."

The board recommended wage increases of 3.5 percent retroactive to January 1, 1968; an additional 2 percent retroactive to Jan. 1, 1969; another 3 percent effective next July 1, plus a 20-cent an hour increase for skilled employes in the craft.

The union had sought increases of 25 percent over a three-year period, plus a 90-cent adjustment for skill, and a cost of living clause. The railroads had refused to recognize any skill claim.

Chamberlain said the average wage for skilled signalmen is $3.26 an hour, and the board's recommendations added to this would still leave these workers rates "substandard" in comparison with rates for skilled workers in other industries.

He noted that the union's general chairmen had unanimously rejected the recommendations as "wholly inadequate" and directed a strike if no agreement could be reached.

Chamberlain said that four negotiating sessions with railroad managements—on Mar. 20 and Apr. 1, 7 and 8—"proved fruitless" because the managements "refused to recognize the inequitable wage rates currently being paid our members."

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the National Mediation Board said that it has been pressing further negotiations "and will continue to keep in touch in an effort to reach a resolution of the dispute."

Shultz Appoints Panel Of Job Safety Advisers

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz has established a National Safety Advisory Committee composed equally of labor, management and public representatives to advise him on the increasing problem of on-the-job safety.

In announcing the committee, headed by National Safety Council Pres. Howard Pyle, Shultz observed that there currently is "more interest in safety legislation than there has been in the past 20 years."

He listed these 1967 statistics as among the major reasons for the high level of interest:

- More than 14,000 deaths and 2 million disabling injuries on the job.
- Costs for occupational accidents of $7.3 billion, with $1.5 billion lost in wages.
- The loss of some 245 million man-days of production because of such accidents—"many times greater than the loss resulting from strikes."

Shultz also said that occupational disease "seems to be a growing problem and we must increase our efforts to control new diseases brought on by new technology."

"Unfortunately," he added, "the nation hasn't been experiencing improvement in this area," with occupational injury rates on an "upward trend" over the past 10 years.

The committee held its first meeting with Shultz on Apr. 10 to make recommendations on new health and safety standards proposed earlier by Pres. Johnson but still under review in the Nixon Administration.

The standards, which Shultz delayed putting into effect until May 17, deal with new fire regulations, noise levels, and air contaminants. They will apply to firms covered by the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act.

Later this year, Shultz said, the Labor Dept. will probably consider a "comprehensive" occupational safety and health bill and committee members will be called upon for their views.

Labor members named to the 15-member tripartite committee are:

George Taylor of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research; Alan Burch, safety director, Operating Engineers; Steelworkers Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Burke; Brewery Workers Sec.-Treas. Arthur P. Gildea; Vice Pres. Elwood Swisher of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

Meany Urges Support For Coleman Boycott

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged all affiliates to back striking Steelworkers at the Coleman Co., Inc., plant in Somerset, Pa.

Meany wrote the federation's national and international unions and state and local central bodies suggesting they notify Coleman of labor's support and remind the company that "workers will not buy products made by strikebreakers."

"The company has rejected every proposal," Meany said, "engaged in a campaign of open harassment of the strikers and imported strikebreakers from Kansas and Canada as well as Pinkerton guards armed with billy clubs and pistols."

Meany noted that the camping equipment manufacturer depends on sales to workers going on vacations—"in most cases vacations achieved through union contracts."

He explained that the strike is over such fundamental trade union issues as moderate wage increases, dignity for workers on the job and a measure of union security.

The USWA was certified as the legal bargaining agent for employes last November.

Steelworkers' Pres. I. W. Abel notified company Pres. Sheldon Coleman of the consumer boycott in a letter which predicted that "your sales figures will soon reflect" the results of labor's "Don't Buy" campaign.

Coleman, instead of seeking an acceptable contract settlement has "embarked on what we consider an illegal campaign" to deny its Somerset employes the full benefits of unionism and the National Labor Relations Act, Abel wrote.

The company, which has a history of anti-unionism, makes sleeping bags, portable stoves and other outdoor equipment. It destroyed a union bargaining unit at Cedar City, Utah, and forced a nine-month strike of USWA members at Toronto, Ont., the union said.

The Money Squeeze

WHEN THE Federal Reserve Board fired its "double-barrel" blast as real proof that it intends to curb inflation, those in the direct line of fire were workers and teenagers.

That's the way a veteran economic writer, Joseph R. Slevin, saw the results of the tight money, high interest rate policies of the Administration.

"The hardest hit will be the workers who will be laid off and the teenagers who will not be able to land their first job," Slevin wrote. "Unemployment will rise. Cabinet members insist that the rise will be slight but this is a huge country. A 'slight' rise means that at least 500,000 people will join the unemployment rolls."

Slevin goes on to point out that the tight money policy will hurt small businessmen and especially home builders. Local communities, forced to postpone badly needed construction programs during the 1966 tight money crisis, are facing again the prospects of postponing and delaying badly needed facilities of all sorts including schools, hospitals, sewer and water projects, libraries, community recreation centers and parks.

Coupled with the Federal Reserve's hike in the discount rate to the highest level in 40 years and an increase in bank reserves is the Administration's plan to cut the budget and build a greater surplus as another tool to fight inflation.

This combination of monetary and fiscal policy—tightening money, increasing interest rates and slicing government expenditures—all spell a slowdown in economic activity and growth. And the victims, as Slevin notes, will be workers, especially those most recently hired, the least skilled, especially in minority groups, and the new, young workers.

* * *

BACK IN FEBRUARY the AFL-CIO Executive Council assailed the economic theory that in order to achieve greater price stability there has to be a rise in unemployment. "Advocates of this Neanderthal view have never explained how a million additional unemployed can possibly reduce such price pressures as physicians' fees, hospital charges, auto and property insurance rates, which have risen sharply in the past decade."

The anti-inflation weapons that the Federal Reserve Board and the Administration have chosen to employ to date do not really get to the basic cause of rising prices—the tremendous rise in profits and the continuing pressure to maintain them at exorbitant levels.

This drive for profits is behind the plans by industry and business to increase investment in new plants and equipment by 14 percent this year—a pace that Chase Manhattan Bank calls a "new kind of 'overkill' " that "could sow the seeds of another traditional feast or famine cycle in investment itself—a cycle that could make it difficult to restore a normal growth rate once the current inflationary spiral has been eliminated."

It is to this problem that the Fed and the Administration ought to direct their attention. Needed at the very least is the repeal of the 7 percent investment tax credit which is helping to fuel the current investment boom.

Tight money and high interest rates make up a formula that place the burden of checking inflation on the poor, the unskilled, the minorities and the young—those already afflicted with more than their share of the burdens of our society.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, April 12, 1969 No. 15

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Man in the Middle

A Word Edgewise:

Imposed Government in Saigon Would Be Disguised Sellout

By John P. Roche

OVER THE LAST FIFTY YEARS the Communists have developed negotiations into a weapons system with quite predictable ploys. Indeed, it is almost as stylized as classic Russian ballet. The "war of liberation," far from being a Chinese invention, goes back to Lenin and Trotsky. The model might be the "Terijoki government," known among experts as the Finnish finagle.

A group of Finnish Communists, who had been on ice in Moscow for years, suddenly popped up in Terijoki, Finland (now part of the U.S.S.R.), in November 1939. They proclaimed themselves the legitimate government of Finland and called on the Soviet Union to help them suppress the "white guards," that is, the existing government of Finland. The Soviets were most helpful and when criticized by the League of Nations, said they had not invaded Finland but entered at the request of the government.

The Terijoki "government," the Finnish version of the Vietnamese N.L.F., was retained by the Russians until they decided that they would have to end the war by doing business with the real Finns. At this point, the "Finnish Democratic Government" (composed, by the way, of Finns just as the N.L.F. has authentic South Vietnamese) quietly folded up and its members returned to the Hotel Lux in Moscow. The Finnish finagle was also used, among other places, in 1946 in northern Iran.

The fall-back position from the Finnish finagle is the Polish ploy, presently being employed in Paris by the Communists. Here, recognizing that their own puppet government cannot be imposed in one step, the call is for "coalition government."

During World War II, the Polish government-in-exile was located in London and was clearly the focus of anti-Nazi sentiment and organization in Poland. (The Polish Communist Party had been utterly discredited by the Nazi-Soviet Pact.)

In 1943, preparing for the future domination of Eastern Europe, the Russians established the "Union of Polish Patriots," which grew into the "Lublin Government." It was composed, of course, of stooges whose status was founded solely on the force of Russian arms as the war moved toward conclusion.

Premier Stalin had, however, too much respect for Anglo-American power to simply set the Lublin group up in business, though the Soviets did recognize it as the legitimate Polish government. At Yalta, he promised free elections in Eastern Europe, but it would have pushed even American innocence a little hard had he first set up puppet regimes.

So, in an act of seeming generosity, he called for a coalition between the Lublin "patriots" and the London "fascists." What right-thinking person could object to that? Roosevelt and Churchill did not, so the Yalta agreement accepted Stalin's candidates for a provisional Polish government with the proviso that "democratic leaders from Poland itself and from Poles abroad" be included.

We could not have rescued the Poles from the Soviets without war. George Kennan put it brilliantly in 1944 when he wrote in his diary, "I reflected on the lightheartedness with which great powers offer advice to smaller ones in matters affecting the vital interests of the latter. . . . I wished that instead of mumbling words of official optimism we had had the judgment and the good taste to bow our heads in silence before the tragedy of a people who have been our allies, whom we have helped to save from our enemies, and whom we cannot save from our friends."

THE POLISH PLOY was used throughout Eastern Europe with results that hardly need elaboration. But one aspect of it is relevant to Viet Nam and needs emphasis—the psychological impact of coalition. The day we forced the London Poles to accept the legitimacy of Lublin, we informed the Polish people that we had written them off, that they no longer counted. We broke the back of anti-totalitarianism in Poland.

An imposed government in Saigon at this time would have the same impact—any imposed government—and Hanoi would probably be willing to include the dictator Diem in a new coalition if he were alive. For then the message would go out loud and clear, "You have been sold!" and South Vietnamese morale would disintegrate.

Our answer to the Polish ploy is the "Greek solution": the Communist insurgents must lay down their guns and re-enter the political community as a party. It is the line that must be held unless we are prepared to accept disguised surrender.

A Summary of

To Clear the Record: AFL-CIO Executive Council Report on the Disaffiliation of the UAW

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV Saturday, April 12, 1969 No. 15

Documented Record Refutes Reuther's 2-Year Campaign

The AFL-CIO broke its long official silence on charges made against it by Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, publishing a point-by-point refutation to "a two-year campaign of public vilification."

The 40,000-word official document, entitled "To Clear the Record: AFL-CIO Executive Council Report on the Disaffiliation of the UAW," was prepared under the supervision of Vice Presidents I. W. Abel and Hunter P. Wharton and was unanimously approved by the Executive Council at its February meeting.

When the Reuther attacks began, the Executive Council voted to answer only in an "appropriate forum of the trade union movement." Reuther's refusal to avail himself of repeated opportunities and invitations to make his case within the movement "has now closed off that traditional democratic method of resolving the issues," the AFL-CIO said.

"To clear the record," the AFL-CIO published a review of the events and episodes leading up to the UAW's disaffiliation and documentary evidence on the allegations and attacks "contained in the voluminous record of UAW press releases, circular letters and public statements."

The Reuther attacks began in early 1966 "without prior notice, discussions within the AFL-CIO, or previous indications of any basic disagreement," the report noted.

Followed Convention

They followed by a few months the December 1965 AFL-CIO convention in San Francisco at which there was "no forecast" of the subsequent attacks "nor any sign of interest on the part of the UAW in the various issues and proposals for 'reform and revitalization' which were later to be fashioned into a platform for its campaign against the AFL-CIO and its leadership," the report said.

At the convention, Reuther made three public comments—supporting the economic policy and Viet Nam resolutions and endorsing full AFL-CIO support for the Kingsport Press strike.

At that time, the report noted, Reuther and other UAW officials held a "number of key policy-making posts in the AFL-CIO structure and enjoyed an extraordinary degree of recognition, scope and opportunity for influence and expression." It tabulated positions held by the UAW as follows:

Reuther—vice president and member of the Executive Council; by appointment of Pres. George Meany, chairman of the Organization and Economic Policy Committees, and member of Intl. Affairs Committee; in addition, member of the Legislative Committee and the Administrative Committee of COPE, the AFL-CIO political arm.

"The policy positions and programs of the AFL-CIO emerge, for the most part, from these standing committees. The proposals and recommendations of these committees have invariably been accepted by the Executive Council and they have been faithfully pursued by the executive officers of the AFL-CIO," the report noted.

Meany had also appointed Reuther to the boards of directors of the American Institute for Free Labor Development and the African-American Labor Committee. Reuther served also as an AFL-CIO member of the Executive Board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Reuther was also president of the Industrial Union Dept. where "he enjoyed complete freedom to embark on any activity that he wished to undertake" with "no barrier or impediment in the way" from the AFL-CIO to "any program or project," the report observed.

At the 1965 convention, Reuther served on the key Resolutions Committee, chairing its subcommittee on economic policy matters. It was in this committee that most basic policy issues were debated and resolved, subject only to the final approval of the Convention—the AFL-CIO's highest policy-making body.

Other Officers

In addition to Reuther, the report listed these other UAW officers who "enjoyed positions of influence within the structure of the AFL-CIO":

Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, UAW representative on the AFL-CIO General Board; by appointment of Meany, member of the Civil Rights and Community Services Committees; on 1965 Convention Constitution Committee.

Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock, by appointment of Meany, member of the Social Security Committee; on 1965 Convention Education Committee.

Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse, on 1965 Convention Appeals Committee.

Roy Reuther, late brother of the UAW president, was named by Meany to the COPE Operating Committee and to direct COPE registration campaigns in 1962, 1964 and 1966.

The report added that former officials and members of the UAW serve in key AFL-CIO staff capacities. Both men who headed the Dept. of Organization, John Livingston and William Kircher, had come from the UAW. Livingston, then a UAW vice president, was nominated by Reuther to the post of organizing director when the merged organization was founded and he continued in that position until his retirement in 1965. Kircher, his successor, had been Livingston's assistant in both the UAW and the AFL-CIO. Also, the report noted, Don Slaiman, the AFL-CIO civil rights director, is a former UAW member.

Shared Leadership

"Far from being shut out or deterred from effective participation in any way, the UAW and its representatives and spokesmen enjoyed in abundance the 'democratic sharing' of leadership opportunities and responsibilities within the AFL-CIO," the report said.

Against this background, the report added, "Reuther launched his campaign," without prior notice, and initially "in a more or less covert way." It charged this was done by planting "hostile and distorted" accounts of AFL-CIO international activities in the press and then circulating reprints widely at home and overseas.

These articles charged that the AFL-CIO had a "negative" attitude toward Communist bloc nations and was obstructing efforts to build "bridges of understanding" to state-controlled "trade unions" in Communist bloc nations. The report said:

"These criticisms blandly ignored the fact that the UAW president, Walter Reuther, had actively participated in virtually all phases of the international programs of the AFL-CIO, and in the formulation of AFL-CIO international policy. They also ignored the fact that the 1965 AFL-CIO Convention had unanimously, and without dissent by any UAW or other delegate, reaffirmed the long-standing AFL-CIO policy of opposition to the recognition of, or relations with, the 'labor' fronts of totalitarian regimes, whether Communist or Fascist, and of condemnation of those fronts as instruments for the control and oppression of working people."

> "You can always get a bigger headline if you are reckless and irresponsible and you are challenging what the majority is trying to do than if you support constructive policies that represent the majority. . . ."
>
> —Walter P. Reuther to the 1955 CIO Convention

The source of these stories "surfaced" during the UAW's May 1966 convention when Victor Reuther, brother of the UAW president, publicly attacked AFL-CIO international policies and activities of the AIFLD, on which his brother served as a director. The report added:

"In a telephone conversation with Mr. Reuther shortly after this story appeared, Pres. Meany referred to the interview and asked Mr. Reuther whether it would be necessary in the future for the AFL-CIO to consult Victor rather than Walter Reuther to ascertain the views of the UAW on international concerns of the AFL-CIO. Mr. Reuther disavowed responsibility, indicated his disagreement with the allegations made in the interview, and referred to its as a 'mistake' on his brother's part."

The first open attack came on June 9, 1966, following the action of the United States worker delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization, Rudolph Faupl, who walked out of an ILO annual conference in Geneva, following the one-vote election of Leon Chajn, Polish government delegate, as conference president.

Faupl, exercising his right as the delegate, walked out for the balance of the conference because "he could not in good conscience sit in a conference presided over by a representative of a government that denied basic human rights to its workers." Such protest demonstrations are the custom in the ILO. Three years previously Meany, then an adviser to the worker delegate, had walked out to protest the racial policies of the South African government.

Reported to Meany

Faupl immediately reported his action to Meany, who approved it.

Reuther protested in a letter denouncing Faupl and castigating Meany, which was given to the press before being delivered to Meany.

Meany promptly called a special meeting of the Executive Council to consider Reuther's "serious charges against me." At the meeting, Faupl and Meany reported and Reuther discussed his charges at length.

While the meeting was in session, the report recalled, UAW public relations personnel distributed to reporters the text of what purported to be Reuther's statement.

"In fact," the report said, the statement was not given to members of the council nor were significant portions touched on by Reuther, including one major charge.

"Reuther omitted this falsehood from his actual remarks to the council, but nevertheless, released it to the press," the report said.

The council, by an 18 to 6 vote, supported Faupl and Meany.

During the meeting, Reuther urged a special Executive Council meeting in the fall of 1966 to review all international policy positions. The council agreed and the meeting was set for September 1966. Subsequently, the date was changed at Reuther's request to a date of his convenience, Nov. 14, 1966. It was a meeting he later failed to attend.

At its regular August meeting, the council conducted an extensive re-examination of the AIFLD, in light of the Victor Reuther charges. After a long discussion, in which Reuther "characterized the actions of his brother as a 'mistake,' " the council commended the AIFLD and rejected "out of hand the campaign of vilification that had been waged against it," the report noted. The vote was 21 to 2, with one abstention.

At the November meeting, called at Reuther's request on a date convenient to him, but which he did not attend, the council re-endorsed "individually and collectively" past international policy decisions, adding that future ones "will continue to rest upon our unalterable devotion to freedom for all men in all places at all times."

The report then added:

"If Mr. Reuther is in basic disagreement with any specific aspect of AFL-CIO policy as expressed in council and Convention action, the council has yet to be advised as to what those disagreements are or in what particular respects he would have changes made."

Philadelphia Speech

The report said the next Reuther attack came on Nov. 22, 1966, at the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce in Philadelphia, where it charged Reuther for the first time "sought to divert attention from the question of international policy to other areas of alleged disagreement."

There Reuther said:

"You read stories in the paper about a disagreement that I may have with a certain gentleman associated with the leadership of the labor movement and all the emphasis has been on foreign policy. Now we do have differences on foreign policy. I happen to support the Test Ban Agreement. I happen to think we ought to negotiate a settlement in Viet Nam. I happen to disagree with walking out of the ILO conference and a few other things like that. But that is only a small part of the basic disagreement with this gentleman.

"Fundamentally, I disagreed because I believe that the American labor movement under his leadership is failing in the broad social responsibilities it has to the total community of America. I believe that the leaders, that the workers in the average union will respond to affirmative and constructive leadership and I believe that if they are given that leadership you can count upon their support."

The report noted:

"Mr. Reuther, of course, was fully aware that the AFL-CIO also supported the Test Ban Agreement, that Pres. Meany had testified in its support before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the AFL-CIO favored a negotiated settlement of the war in Viet Nam. Yet he sought to plant a contrary impression in the minds of his listeners."

Other Statements

The report recalled other Reuther press statements in that period and his decision to practice "brinkmanship" in withholding per capita payments to the AFL-CIO until the UAW was near the statutory deadline for suspension.

On Dec. 28, 1966, the UAW issued an "administrative letter" signed by its four principal officers entitled "A Statement Regarding UAW Relationship with the AFL-CIO," distributed to the press and otherwise widely circulated. It was not sent to officers of the AFL-CIO.

The report observed:

"In language characteristic of Mr. Reuther's rhetorical style, this statement undertook a sweeping indictment of the AFL-CIO, its leadership, its policy-making bodies, and the full range of its functions and activities. . . .

"The areas in which the AFL-CIO and the UAW were alleged to be in fundamental disagreement were: organizing the unorganized, including farm workers and the 'working poor,' national wage, economic and collective bargaining policies; labor disputes in public service industries; the improvement of public education, pension and health benefits; the war on poverty and civil rights; the use of science and technology in rebuilding cities and rural areas; conservation of natural resources and air and water pollution, relations with the 'liberal intellectual and academic community' and young people; and relations with the free world labor movement. . . .

"The public impressions that this document clearly sought to create were (1) that the leadership of the AFL-CIO had somehow suppressed efforts by Mr. Reuther or other UAW spokesmen to initiate a discussion of the alleged issues cited, and (2) that the AFL-CIO had rejected programs and proposals put forward by Mr. Reuther or other UAW spokesmen in these areas. Any such impression is entirely false."

The report added:

"Mr. Meany and Mr. Reuther's fellow members of the Executive Council were fully prepared to engage in 'creative, frank and meaningful discussions,' to 'evaluate new ideas with an open mind,' and to 'share democratic leadership responsibility in the formulation of policies and programs' whenever Mr. Reuther saw fit to initiate such discussion within the federation. They assumed that, having raised these issues, Mr. Reuther would seek to pursue them at the regular February council meeting and they refrained from responding in the press.

"As the council meeting approached, however, no such proposals or suggestions of issues for the consideration of the council were received."

Resignations Submitted

The "next communication from Detroit—and the first in some months to be conveyed directly to the officers of the AFL-CIO as well as to the press"—was a telegram on Feb. 3, 1967, in which Reuther and his fellow officers resigned from all the AFL-CIO, but not IUD, posts they then held. The UAW promised clarifying details which followed in a 6,000-word "administrative letter," which expanded on previous charges, added new accusations and charged Meany with "undemocratic administration" and violations of the Constitution and Convention mandates.

On Feb. 20, 1967, the council accepted Reuther's resignation, announced its decision not to engage in public debate except in the forums of the trade union movement and urged Reuther to bring his complaints, charges, proposals or programs, to any of a variety of official AFL-CIO bodies to be considered and acted upon.

The report added:

"Although he spent much of this period at his winter home on the west coast of Florida, Mr. Reuther did not take advantage of the opportunity to present his views and complaints concerning the AFL-CIO and its president to the Executive Council during its February meeting in Florida. Nor did he respond in any way to the open invitation set forth in the council's statement.

"He did, however, leave Florida and went to Providence, R.I., to address an audience of professors and students at the University of Rhode Island. The Providence Evening Bulletin of Feb. 24, 1967, covered his remarks rather fully, including his observation, to this audience, that: 'I happen to think it's wrong for the American Federation of Labor to be sitting in Florida right now.' "

The newspaper quoted Reuther as saying:

" 'How much money has the AFL-CIO put into supporting the grape strikers in Delano, California?' Mr. Reuther asked. 'Not a dime.' The UAW has been the main support of the striking agricultural workers, he said. . . ."

At this point in the report there is a footnote which reads:

"AFL-CIO direct cash contributions to the California farm workers, exclusive of salaries and expenses paid by the AFL-CIO, since 1959, totalled—at the time Mr. Reuther spoke—some $1½ million, and were continuing at a rate in excess of $10,000 a month, far greater than all UAW contributions."

Series of Speeches

From then on, the report noted, there were a series of Reuther speeches and administrative letters (three more, totaling an additional 21,000 words) putting forth "a variety of complaints and proposals, supported by distorted versions of the AFL-CIO history and, in a number of instances, by complete falsification of the record."

These documents were consolidated into an omnibus resolution, submitted to a special UAW bargaining convention starting in Detroit on Apr. 20, 1967. The convention adopted a resolution which directed the UAW Executive Board to submit these programs and policies to the AFL-CIO Executive Council after the auto negotiations and a copy was sent to the AFL-CIO by Reuther with the assurance that the UAW would seek such a council meeting.

While the AFL-CIO was "willing to await Mr. Reuther's pleasure for such a meeting and convene it whenever he saw fit to request it," the report said, "no such request was ever received."

Shortly thereafter there were additional developments in the UAW's financial relations with the AFL-CIO.

On May 28, 1967, Mazey told the press the UAW was withholding its scheduled contributions to COPE. On Sept. 6, the UAW struck the Ford Motor Co. and on Oct. 8, a special UAW convention adopted a temporary dues increase of $20 a month for the duration of the "collective bargaining emergency period" (which terminated in December) and a permanent dues increase from $5 a month to two hours' pay a month. But on Oct. 7, Mazey requested from the AFL-CIO a two-month exoneration in per capita because of the strike. The Executive Council was polled and on Oct. 10 adopted Meany's recommendation for exoneration. Mazey was so notified.

Ford Strike Settled

The Ford strike was settled on Oct. 22 and the UAW settled with Chrysler without a strike on Nov. 8. Six days earlier Mazey had submitted to the AFL-CIO the UAW's omnibus resolution for consideration at the December 1967 Convention.

But by Nov. 30, the New York Times was reporting the UAW would boycott the Convention.

After the newspaper stories, Meany received an official UAW letter, advising that the UAW would not attend the Convention and requesting its resolution be withdrawn, citing General Motors negotiations which it said "will be at a critical stage during the very days on which the AFL-CIO Convention will be meeting."

Meany accordingly withdrew the UAW resolution.

The AFL-CIO report said:

"Certain facts need to be kept in mind in evaluating the decision of Mr. Reuther to avoid a confrontation on his program at the AFL-CIO Convention.

"Having submitted their prolosals to the AFL-CIO Convention, the matter of arranging the timing of their other responsibilities was entirely in the hands of Mr. Reuther and his fellow officers. The decision to set a 'target' date of Dec. 14 in the GM negotiations, and to construe that as a barrier to his attendance at the AFL-CIO Convention was of his own contrivance. Negotiations with GM had been held in substantial abeyance since early September, and the basic pattern of auto settlements had been resolved at Ford and Chrysler.

"Mr. Reuther's own report to his membership on the history of the 1967 auto negotiations, published in the May 1968 issue of the UAW's journal, raises doubts as "I think that I can say that every delegate and every officer of the CIO will hope that the Transport Workers Union will take their rightful place inside the family of a united labor movement, because in the end it will not be Michael Quill or the leadership of that union that will pay the price of isolation if the TWU is outside the mainstream of the organized labor movement, but the people who pay the price will be the rank and file workers. And it is their interests that need consideration in this situation.

"I would prefer not to dignify the things that Michael Quill has said, but unfortunately in our world the newspapers and the radio and the television always play it so that they create the wrong impressions in order to exploit any small division that may appear in the ranks of labor.

"You can always get a bigger headline if you are reckless and irresponsible and you are challenging what the majority is trying to do than if you support constructive policies that represent the majority. . . .

"It is with great sadness that I have seen him conduct himself the way he has in the past several months. Out of a clear sky, without any provocation or any knowledge of the development, Brother Quill let loose a blast in New York City in which he characterized in very uncomplimentary language the leadership of CIO. . . .

"I say to Mike in all good spirit, 'Mike, you have broken with some of your former colleagues in the party but somehow the tactics linger on.'

"Where he had a chance to fight for his point of view, he didn't even, in some meetings—the record will show clearly—say three words.

"Was Mike Quill the champion of the 'rank and file'; was he down in Miami fighting there to get the kind of language that he thinks was essential?

"No, he didn't come. . . .

"Then out of a clear sky the headlines came, and I think the bigger the headlines, the more Mike was hypnotized by his own line. And the result is he got himself deeper and deeper and deeper into this where he couldn't find a way out."

Excerpts from Address by Walter P. Reuther to the Seventeenth Constitutional Convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, New York, N.Y., Dec. 1-2, 1955.

to the inability of Mr. Reuther to find the time to attend at least a part of the AFL-CIO Convention."

"Whether or not the total absence of the UAW from the AFL-CIO Convention can be justified, it scarcely reflected the sense of urgency implicit in Mr. Reuther's later demand for a special convention. Although action by a regular convention is one of the three ways in which a subsequent special convention can be called under the AFL-CIO Constitution, the UAW did not then ask for such action, or indicate any need or desire for a later special convention. On the contrary, Mr. Reuther's letter stated his intention to present his program to the Executive Council at a later date."

On Jan. 17, 1968, Mazey requested another exoneration of per capita "on grounds of miscellaneous continuing strike expense—despite the fact that the UAW's own published reports boasted the existence of a UAW strike fund in excess of $50 million at year's end," the report said, adding the exoneration request was granted.

Despite UAW official notices that it would present its resolution to the Executive Council after negotiations ended, Reuther made no attempt to bring the matter before the regular council winter meeting from Feb. 18 to 27. There were, however, newspaper stories quoting authoritative UAW sources that the "showdown" was being postponed but that the UAW would "quit the AFL-CIO after the 1968 elections."

Special Convention Demanded

Shortly after the council adjourned, Meany received a telegram from the UAW demanding a special AFL-CIO Convention 10 months later and adding that if a convention were not held, "the UAW will have no acceptable alternatives but to disaffiliate."

The report noted:

"On Mar. 7, Pres. Meany advised the UAW that the UAW communication would be placed on the agenda of the next regular meeting of the Executive Council, scheduled for May 13.

"During the next few days, prior to a scheduled convention of the Industrial Union Dept. of the AFL-CIO, Mr. Reuther initiated a series of private meetings with selected officers of certain AFL-CIO affiliated unions, ostensibly seeking their support for his demand for a special convention but, according to newspaper and other reports of the meetings, leaving the clear implication that the issue was intended to be the springboard for his departure from the AFL-CIO and that he would welcome the company of other affiliates in a secession move. There were further indications of his intent, after having carefully avoided the normal channels of the AFL-CIO, to use the IUD, a subordinate department of the federation, as a platform for pursuing his attack upon the federation.

"Under these circumstances, to bring the matter to a head, Pres. Meany called a special meeting of the Executive Council for the late afternoon of Mar. 12, 1968."

The council unanimously rejected the UAW ultimatum but offered to hold a convention at once under two conditions—that the UAW would agree to attend and would commit itself to "accept the democratically arrived at decisions of such a convention."

The next day Reuther rejected the Executive Council proposal saying the UAW would seek a special convention by campaigning for petitions from other affiliates, as provided in the AFL-CIO Constitution. Said the report:

"If, in fact, the UAW did make an effort to secure supporting petitions from other affiliates, endorsing the demand for a special convention, none was received by the AFL-CIO."

Events leading to the UAW's final action followed swiftly. On May 4, the UAW convention voted to withhold its per capita, already in arrears, placing it in an escrow account, until the Executive Council "schedules unconditionally a special convention." On May 11, the Executive Council, calling this an "attempt to coerce the decisions of a representative body of American trade unions," rejected it and voted to apply the mandatory provisions of the Constitution.

On May 15, the UAW was thus automatically suspended for nonpayment of per capita. On May 16, Meany notified the Industrial Union Dept. and AFL-CIO state and city central bodies of this fact and the constitutional requirement that the UAW was thus no longer eligible to be represented in any of these organizations.

On July 1, the UAW formally disaffiliated and on July 10 Meany responded in a letter which reviewed Reuther's actions calling them a "transparent attempt to set up the grounds and excuses to justify to your members your predetermined objective of withdrawal from this trade union movement.

"That objective, I am convinced, stemmed in turn from a condition for which the AFL-CIO has no remedy —your apparent unwillingness to live in constructive harmony within an organization in which the rights, the interests and the views of other unions and other personalities are given equal consideration with those of the UAW and its president."

Specific Allegations Answered

The second part of the AFL-CIO document deals with the UAW's specific allegations, complaints and proposals. The report noted that they "were not presented by Reuther for action by any constitutional body of the AFL-CIO either before or after the initiation of his campaign of vilification."

In addition, the report noted that certain of the Reuther proposals—a central strike fund, a data processing center and mandatory affiliation of local unions with state and central bodies—had been proposed by others and had been considered and acted upon at conventions and council meetings. The report added: "Reuther never gave those proposals his support. He joined in majority actions rejecting them."

The report noted that other Reuther proposals would transfer substantial resources and power, in the areas of organizing, collective bargaining policy and trade union government, out of the hands of individual unions and into the hands of the federation. Without passing judgment on any specific proposal, the report observed:

"The Executive Officers of the AFL-CIO have no prejudice against the management and expenditure of any additional resources that constituent unions may wish to convey to the federation nor against the exercise of any additional centralized authority over the affairs of its affiliates, if that should be the will of the organizations which comprise the federation. There is, as yet, however, little evidence of enthusiasm among international unions for such a transfer of power and resources at the present time."

Turning to personal charges against Meany, the report noted that Reuther had accused Meany of using "a heavy hand in discouraging in-depth discussion of basic policy issues" and of refusing to "share democratic leadership responsibility."

Noting there were never any limits on discussion at any meeting of any AFL-CIO body, the report said:

"Any time or word count of Mr. Reuther's own articulations on such occasions would prove that point. He has never been denied the floor, dissuaded from speaking or gavelled to silence—nor has any one else, at AFL-CIO meetings."

To the charge that Meany had not shared democratic leadership, the report pointed to the offices held by Reuther and his UAW associates and added:

"It is difficult to see what greater opportunities for leadership and self-expression could reasonably have been accorded Mr. Reuther. If he desired higher official responsibility within the federation, he had the opportunity, every two years, to seek that higher responsibility, in the traditional democratic fashion. In a democracy, after all, 'democratic leadership' is not gained by divine right, but by the electoral process."

The report moved then to Reuther's charge that Meany had violated the AFL-CIO Constitution, a charge which "rests wholly on one specific issue—the termination of the Executive Committee."

Reuther claimed the Executive Committee had the "important function of discussing and formulating policy recommendations" to the Executive Council. The Constitution does not so read, the AFL-CIO document noted, and it pointed out that the Executive Committee had a nebulous function.

"The Constitution does not intend," the report observed, "that the federation be governed, or its policies formulated, by a small elite group of super-council members."

The Executive Committee met formally 33 times in the 10 years from merger until the 1965 Convention, with Reuther absent eight times. In 1965 two committee members retired and at the next council meeting Meany asked for and received additional time to consider the makeup and role of this committee. Neither in the council meeting nor outside, did Reuther indicate any disagreement with the decision.

Council Recommendation

In September 1967 the Executive Council recommended to the next convention that the Executive Committee be abolished as a redundant and unnecessary apparatus. The Convention so voted, unanimously.

Next the report dealt with Reuther's claim that Meany thwarted the mandate of the 1959 Convention. The matter in question was the long debate that led to the establishment of machinery to resolve inter-union disputes (Article XX of the AFL-CIO Constitution).

The report took each phase of the Reuther charge, recited the facts, recalled Reuther's words and charges at the time, and detailed Meany's role in the all-night meeting of the Executive Council that led to the adoption of the plan. The report added:

"It is the view of the Executive Council that, throughout this episode—far from 'blocking' the 'mandate' of a Convention—Pres. Meany displayed, in its fullest sense, the kind of leadership that it takes to develop 'unity from diversity.' "

Many of the most serious charges made by Reuther deal with organizing unorganized workers and the AFL-CIO report devoted a major portion of its answer to this area.

Reuther contended that only 2 to 3 percent of AFL-CIO income was spent on organizing and he proposed that 25% be earmarked "in a special organizing fund for a massive organizing crusade," or $3.125 million per year.

The facts, contained in public financial reports and known to Reuther as Organization Committee chairman, are that in 1966 the AFL-CIO spent $3,171,046.-42 on organizing, or 30.21% of its general fund income and 25.04% of combined general and special purposes fund income.

Reuther's master plan for a "national organizing crusade" boils down to two essentials, the council said:

"1. Money is the primary ingredient of organizing success and money can be spent more effectively by the central federation in the organization of particular groups of workers than it can by the unions which represent such workers. All internationals should, therefore, transfer additional funds and manpower from their own organizing resources and activities to the federation so as to centralize that function more fully in the AFL-CIO.

"2. The AFL-CIO should henceforth disregard the mandates of the Constitution which guarantee that the organizing jurisdiction and integrity of each affiliate shall be protected."

IUD Campaign Cited

The report noted that Reuther's IUD organizing campaign, financed as he chose, had not been a spectacular success and added that historically and constitutionally the AFL-CIO has not engaged in competitive action where two or more affiliates with "a genuine, substantial interest" seek the same organizing objective.

Reuther also charged the AFL-CIO with a "leadership failure," claiming he had proposed a full-scale organizing program to the council in February 1961, which "was adopted in principle but never fully and effectively implemented."

This, the report said, "is a false statement."

The 1961 report was from an ad hoc committee, it was brief and recommended a policy which was immediately implemented and which continues to be the federation's organizing policy—that a paper claim (as opposed to a legitimate claim) to jurisdiction shall not block AFL-CIO organizing assistance.

The report also recommended establishment of a Standing Committee on Organization, which the 1961 Convention adopted. Meany immediately named Reuther as chairman. In that role, Reuther made two reports to the council, one in February 1962, a self-styled "progress report" which promised a later comprehensive report, and one in April 1962. This latter report, Reuther said, was filed "for the information" of the council and was entitled "Draft Proposal for a Comprehensive Cooperative Coordinated Organizational Drive."

"The basic fact is that—year in and year out—while adverse forces have chopped away at the stems and branches of our structure, new growth has always emerged and the roots of the trade union movement have extended deeply and firmly into the ground of American life.

"The essential truth is that—year in and year out—the trade unions of this country, as represented in this federation of ours, have constituted and will continue to constitute the vital main force of the progressive movement in America.

"The record will bear that out. I am proud of that record. I do not like to see it downgraded or misrepresented.

"It is not a perfect record—nor are any of us perfect. There are no saviors or supermen among us. As I have said before, we are an imperfect body of imperfect men—trying our level best to do our duty in a very complicated, imperfect and rather messy world.

"Perhaps the AFL-CIO is not doing everything it might or should in terms of humanity's broad economic and social needs and goals. But—of this I am sure—without the AFL-CIO very little would be done."

Excerpts from Address by Pres. George Meany to the Seventh Constitutional Convention of the AFL-CIO, Bal Harbour, Fla., Dec. 7, 1967.

The report added:

"Reuther specifically stated that he was not asking the Executive Council to adopt the 'draft proposal' but were merely submitting it for information, as a possible future approach. Instead, he recommended, on behalf of the Standing Committee, the initiation of a trial pilot program of joint organizing in the Los Angeles area, involving unions in manufacturing and fabrication; soft goods industries; retail and service industries; food, drink, processing and distribution; and government, federal, state and municipal."

The council adopted the pilot program, it was undertaken and fully carried out by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization, the report noted. It added that this was the last report of the committee, that Reuther called no further meetings, and that from 1962 until his resignation in February 1967, the "committee became totally inactive under his chairmanship."

Los Angeles Project

The report next dealt with Reuther's charges based on one episode in the Los Angeles project.

Involved was one union's refusal to participate in a joint campaign in the retail trade field, and the decision to set aside that area as one in which joint participation could not be secured. The report added that, "contrary to Reuther's allegation" this action "did not 'effectively veto the entire organizational program,'" which was "vigorously and effectively pursued in all of the other categories of employment that were included in the plan."

The report noted that 57 unions participated in the Los Angeles project, and that 495 NLRB elections, covering 41,000 workers, were won in four years before the national office turned the project over to local direction. In addition, it noted, voluntary recognition was achieved in 660 establishments, covering 12,000 workers and 37,000 public employes were organized into recognized units, bringing the total membership gain to 90,000.

In 1964, a similar, two-year campaign was launched in the Baltimore-D.C. area, resulting in 191 NLRB election victories, with a total of 10,765 workers, while bargaining rights for another 21,340 workers were gained in the same drive.

The report dealt with the UAW's "infantile version of the history" of trade union organization and its charges that the AFL-CIO had been unwilling "to demonstrate the will" to "commit adequate resources" to an organizing "crusade."

Organizing Factors

The report said:

"This version totally omits mention of a few factors that figured in the picture—such as the effect of the Wagner Act, World War II, the union shop, the recovery and growth of employment from the depths of the depression to the wartime full-employment year of 1945; and the subsequent contrary effects of the Taft-Hartley Act, the Landrum-Griffin Act, and the economic recessions and unfavorable organizing climate of the Eisenhower years."

To Reuther's contention that "11 years after merger the AFL-CIO represents a smaller percentage of the American workforce than before the merger," the report noted that the UAW represents a smaller percentage of the workforce in Reuther's own industry, and of the total membership of the AFL-CIO itself than it did at the time of merger.

While the AFL-CIO membership increased from 12,305,000 at merger to 12,982,000 at the time of the 1965 Convention, the UAW membership declined in the same period from 1,260,000 to 1,150,000.

But, the report said neither set of statistics proves a lack of will, vitality or leadership. To underscore that point, the report noted:

"Obviously, nothing could have saved one of the original AFL affiliates, the Horse Collar Makers National Union, from eclipse—no matter how much 'social vision, dynamic thrust, and crusading spirit' might have been injected into the veins of its leadership."

Discussing the complexities of economic life, changes in buying habits, transfers of production facilities, technological changes and other factors which have an effect on union membership, the report noted that other AFL-CIO affiliates had to recruit a total of 787,000 workers in the 10-year period cited to offset the UAW's losses and account for the total AFL-CIO gain.

Assistance to UAW

Also to set the record straight, the report cited the details of AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization assistance to the UAW (more than to any other affiliate) and the victories achieved and the number of members added to UAW rolls because of AFL-CIO activity.

In contrast, the report detailed the IUD organizing campaign, launched and led by Reuther, with no AFL-CIO obstacles in his path. Announced in 1963 as a "comprehensive, cooperative, coordinated" organizing drive, the IUD campaign spent $13,084,064.69 in five years, participated in 600 NLRB election victories, involving 95,369 employes—a total cost of $138 per member.

"At those prices," the report noted, "if Mr. Reuther's formula for organizing success were to be followed, it would take $2 billion to 'double the membership' of the AFL-CIO." The report added:

"Given the many obstacles that face trade union organizers today, the results, while modest, ought not to be ridiculed or scorned. They seem insignificant only in contrast to Mr. Reuther's own pretensions and claims, promising a doubling of the membership if only the 'will' and the 'resources' are provided."

Farm Worker Campaign

Dealing with Reuther charges about the Farm Worker campaign, the report said:

"Nowhere has the mendacity of the UAW's propaganda campaign against the AFL-CIO been more blatant than in its repeated falsehoods concerning the role of the AFL-CIO, as compared to that of Mr. Reuther, in the organization of farm workers in California."

Time after time, the report recalled, Reuther had charged that the AFL-CIO had not "paid one dime" in support of the grape strikers and the UAW had been their "main support."

The facts cited by the AFL-CIO report are:

The organizing campaign was started by the AFL-CIO in 1959, resulting in signficant improvement in wages and working conditions for the workers, but relatively few continuing union members. The end of the bracero program, in part the result of AFL-CIO lobbying, improved the organizing situation and in the fall of 1965 the then AFL-CIO farm union struck the grape growers.

Good contracts were won from the wine growers and the two farm worker organizations—an independent association and the AFL-CIO union—merged into the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee in September 1966. By that time, the AFL-CIO had spent in excess of $1,400,000.

The table grape growers refused to recognize the union and the strike continued and the boycott began. AFL-CIO help, which now includes direct spending of about $2 million, continued.

The only solid commitment made by Reuther to the UFWOC was a public pledge in 1966 of $5,000 a month, split equally by the UAW and the IUD. According to its own financial reports, the UAW contributed $30,000 to the farm workers in 1966, $10,000 in 1967, and $5,000 in 1968.

Economic, Bargaining Proposals

The report then turned to Reuther proposals for AFL-CIO action in the economic and collective bargaining areas.

Of nine identifiable items, the report said, "at least five appear to be generally consistent with and similar to programs, practices and policies already being pursued by the AFL-CIO, within the framework of a federated structure of autonomous unions who make their own basic collective bargaining decisions."

Among these is "coordinated collective bargaining" and the report noted Meany's personal involvement and leadership in the 1966 G.E.-Westinghouse negotiations, the most prominent application of this principle. Reuther, the report noted, never participated, attended a conference or meeting, but sent a staff member or subordinate official to represent him.

None of the other four issues were ever proposed by Reuther or the UAW to the AFL-CIO Executive Council or Convention. Two of these items were proposed by other delegates, but Reuther never supported these resolutions nor did any other UAW delegate.

The report dealt at some length with the latter two items—a Data Processing Center and a United Defense Fund—and cited the entire record of proceedings in which both proposals failed, with Reuther, in both cases, joining in the final action of rejection.

Discussing the United Defense Fund, the report noted, that the AFL-CIO has given financial assistance in strike situations, through cash contributions and/or per capita exoneration, to 14 different affiliates in the last three years. The total of this assistance was $1,425,000. In addition, the federation led fund-raising campaigns that raised greater sums. The report added:

"Except for the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, the affiliate receiving the greatest amount of financial aid from the AFL-CIO was the United Auto Workers. In 1967, the AFL-CIO contributed, in the form of per capita tax exonerations, a total of $377,852.30 to the UAW which had pleaded possible potential financial need as a consequence of the Ford strike.

"According to the UAW's own 1967 financial report, the AFL-CIO's contribution to the UAW in 1967 was several times greater than the UAW's total contributions to its brother AFL-CIO unions who were in need of financial assistance due to strikes."

Policy Committee Role

The other two issues were economic in character and the report, without discussing their merits, recited the record of Reuther's opportunities for presenting them to the AFL-CIO Executive Council in his capacity as chairman of the Economic Policy Committee, which met 19 times and submitted 85 reports and policy statements, all of which were adopted by the council with little or no modification.

He could, the report noted, have similarly affected economic policy at the conventions, where he was a member of the Resolutions Committee which handled all economic proposals. So, the report added:

"If he now finds anything to criticize in the economic policies and programs of the AFL-CIO, it is largely his own handiwork that he is criticizing."

The report discussed Reuther's proposals for changes in the structure of the AFL-CIO, noted that Reuther never made these at any time from the date of the merger to the date of the press release and that at least one of them (mandatory affiliation of locals with state and city central bodies) was repeatedly rejected by the UAW when proposed by others at conventions.

After detailing the Reuther record in this regard, the report noted:

"Any proposals for structural changes in the governing bodies of the labor movement are open to debate within the forums of the movement. The machinery exists within the movement for effecting such changes If and when any such proposal attracts sufficient support within the movement, it will be accomplished. It will not be accomplished by coercive tactics or propaganda broadsides."

On the subject of "labor's role in the community," and the UAW's call for active participation in housing, education, social security, health care, civil rights, economic growth, anti-poverty programs, conservation and relations with other liberal groups, the report observed:

"The AFL-CIO needs no lectures from the UAW to inform it of its responsibilities in these areas of broad public concern, and the record of the AFL-CIO on this score needs no elaborate defense. The items covered in the UAW resolution read like a listing of the AFL-CIO's own priority objectives and programs."

AFL-CIO Record Detailed

The report then detailed the AFL-CIO record on each topic and added:

"An adequate recitation of the AFL-CIO record in the promotion of broad social programs designed to improve the security and welfare of all Americans, and the quality of their lives, would require a lengthy volume of prose. It has been summed up best by the last two Presidents of the United States.

"At the 1963 AFL-CIO Convention, only a few days before his assassination, Pres. John F. Kennedy declared:

> " '. . . I think that the AFL-CIO at this Convention, looking back over the years, over this century, can take pride in the actions it has taken, pride in the stand it has made, pride in the things it has done, not only for the American labor movement, but for the United States as a whole.'

"On Jan. 13, 1969, just a few days prior to his departure from office, Pres. Johnson visited the AFL-CIO building to present the federation with a framed collection of Presidential pens symbolizing the signing of 100 major Acts of Congress into law, to indicate his appreciation of the fact that, without the strong support of the AFL-CIO, this unparalleled record of legislative achievement would not have been possible. . . .

"In making this presentation, President Johnson stated:

> " 'I know of no living single group that I think has been more responsible for the advances that have been made in this field in the last five years than the AFL-CIO, headed by George Meany, and supported by millions of men and women throughout this country.' "

Without comment, the AFL-CIO report opened with the text of a 1955 Reuther speech which contained this paragraph:

"You can always get a bigger headline if you are reckless and irresponsible and you are challenging what the majority is trying to do than if you support constructive policies that represent the majority." (See box, Page 6.)

ACLU Warns:

Basic Freedoms Threatened By Violent Campus Protests

The following is excerpted from a statement issued by the American Civil Liberties Union on campus disorders.

WE BELIEVE IN THE RIGHT and are committed to the protection of all peaceful, non-obstructive forms of protest, including mass demonstrations, picketing, rallies and other dramatic forms. However, we are deeply disturbed about some methods that some student activists have used in the attempt to achieve their ends; methods which violate and subvert the basic principles of freedom of expression and academic freedom.

Protest that deprives others of the opportunity to speak or be heard, or that requires physical take-over of buildings to disrupt the educational process, or the incarceration of administrators and others are anti-civil-libertarian and incompatible with the nature and high purpose of an educational institution.

In December of 1968, students at New York University's Loeb Student Center stopped an address by Nguien Huu Chi, the South Vietnamese Permanent Observer at the United Nations, by draping a Nazi flag across him, hurling an egg and pouring a pitcher of water over him. They then invaded another room, seized the notes of James Reston, executive editor of the New York Times, and tore them to bits. He left without delivering his address.

In January 1969, at a symposium at Northwestern University on confronting change, student activists shouted down all but the most radical speakers.

In February at Harvard University, students disrupted a course whose focus they resented.

In March, Prof. John H. Bunzel, of San Francisco State College, whose views are unpalatable to some student activists was drowned out in a flood of shouts and questions in his classroom.

At a conference on "World Problems and American Change" on Mar. 22, 1969, Arthur J. Goldberg, former Supreme Court Justice and United States Ambassador to the United Nations, was shouted down by about 30 youngsters who dumped the head of a pig on the speaker's table.

Fundamental to the very nature of a free society is the conviction expressed by Mr. Justice Holmes that "the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market." When men govern themselves they have a right to decide for themselves which views and proposals are sound and which unsound.

This means that all points of view are entitled to be expressed and heard. This is particularly true in universities which render great services to society when they function as centers of free, uncoerced, independent and creative thought and experience. Universities have existed and can exist without bricks and mortar but they cannot function without freedom of inquiry and expression.

For these reasons, the American Civil Liberties Union has from its very inception, defended free expression for all groups and all points of view, including the most radical and the most unpopular within the society and the university. To abandon the democratic process in the interests of "good" causes is to risk the destruction of freedom not just for the present but for the future, not just for our social order but for any future social order as well. Freedom, the world has learned to its sorrow, is a fragile plant that must be protected and cultivated.

It is well to remember, too, that violence and the threat of violence may be used in "bad" causes as well as "good" causes. They were employed by the Nazis in Germany and by Hungarian fascists to shut down universities or oust particular faculty members or students. They were used in the attempt to block the admission of James Meredith to the University of Mississippi and to block integration widely across the South. And there are those who today would use these methods to destroy our universities, not to reform them.

There are dangers, too, that violence and the threat of violence will breed a counter-violence and backlash that will defeat or set back the very objectives student activists seek to serve and lead to repressive counter-measures. Already under federal law enacted in 1968, any student convicted of a crime or regarded to have seriously violated college regulations, may be declared by the college authorities ineligible for two years to receive federal scholarships or loans. Under legislation enacted in 1969 any student convicted of a crime related to a campus disordor may not receive federal loans or scholarships.

In addition, no less than 80 bills are before the California legislature and the New York legislature recently adopted a law intended to curb campus violence. At least 18 other states have campus control measures under consideration.

WE ARE OPPOSED to these measures. Their imposition is not likely to quiet down but rather to inflame further the unrest. Many of them are vague and would superimpose severe financial penalties in addition to punishment already provided by law. Their thrust often would be effective only against the poor. What is more, they threaten the traditional autonomy of academic communities to govern themselves. We are pleased that Pres. Nixon has publicly recognized that the maintenance of order on campus "is fundamentally the task and responsibility of the university community." That function is more likely to be achieved if accompanied by orderly change.

We believe that the discussions between open-minded trustees and students which brought changes at the University of Pennsylvania set an admirable example. Similarly, we commend the experimentation in shared governance at Antioch College and Richmond College of the City University of New York.

In general, we are convinced that universities must draw upon the whole academic community—trustees, administrators, faculties and students—to effect desirable changes. Where existing processes are inadequate or unrepresentative, creativity and imagination must be summoned to the task of developing new mechanisms for peaceful communication and decision-making that will prove responsive to just demands.

Rock-Bottom Wages:

Workers of U.S., Mexico Hurt By Border-Jumping Companies

BOTH MEXICAN AND AMERICAN workers are being hurt as a growing number of U.S. companies move south of the border to take advantage of cheap labor and tax and duty exemptions there, a top union officer charged.

The number of U.S. plants along the border more than doubled in the past year, and jobs as far away as Kansas City and Los Angeles have been affected, declared Howard D. Samuel, vice president of the Clothing Workers.

Samuel pointed out that such "labor-intensive industries" as electronics, food processing, apparel and furniture are prime targets of Mexico's border-industrialization drive. He said that wages in the border plants run as low as 30 cents an hour.

He stressed that the "kind of companies leaving this country and going to Mexico" are those that "offer employment potentials for members of minority groups . . . particularly in the large cities" in the United States.

"THIS COUNTRY is bending a good deal of its efforts to raise employment among the unskilled and semi-skilled—the so-called hard-core unemployed from disadvantaged areas," he asserted. "The people who will be hurt the worst and hurt first" when employers shift to Mexico "are the disadvantaged," he declared on the AFL-CIO produced Labor News Conference.

The union official said that "Mexico is inviting a degree of industrial imperialism" that can harm its effort to "raise the quality of its labor, and the wages of its labor, and the conditions of its labor." It can also hurt Mexican industry, he asserted, "since American companies are going to dominate this very important area—the border area."

By Press Associates, Inc.

AN ACCELERATED DRIVE in Congress to win increased benefits for aged citizens under the social security program has been provided potent ammunition from a task force report of the Senate Special Committee on the Aging.

It spotlights a growing income gap between older Americans living in retirement and younger, active working people. It dramatizes the real hardships suffered by the elderly.

The report shows how national economic growth, while putting added dollars into the pockets of working people, increases pressures on the retirees—pressures that can only be relieved in most instances by increasing social security benefits.

But the problems of the aged are not their problems exclusively. The children and grandchildren often are called upon to supplement their incomes.

In addition, a growing number of workers today are destined to live longer in retirement than they ever thought possible some years ago. The report shows:

"Half of all people now 65 and over are about 73 or older. In the years ahead, the increase will be particularly great in the oldest ages. With the population 65 and older projected to rise 50 percent between 1960-1965, the population 85 and older may double.

Other factors of this problem cannot be ignored.

A RISING PROPORTION of the elderly are widows who are attempting in most cases to live independently, even if independence is purchased at the price of poverty.

Also, the "retirement revolution" reflects two trends. At one end is the increase in the number of very old aged and at the other is the step-up in early retirements.

Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N.J.) chairman of the committee, said, "The economic problems of old age are not only unsolved for today's elderly, but they will not be solved for the elderly of the future—today's workers—unless this nation takes positive, comprehensive actions going far beyond those of recent years."

He says these two questions must be considered:

"As a nation, what do we intend for ourselves when aged and what for those who are already old?

"How are older people, now and in the future, to share in our economic abundance?"

The report shows that three out of every 10 persons 65 years of age or older were living in poverty in 1966. An additional one-tenth of our aged are on the borderline. Many of these did not become poor until they retired.

"The social security system has failed to keep up with the rising income needs of the aged," the study says. "To a large extent, social security benefit increases in the past have resulted, not from legislation with the purpose or intent of tapping a greater part of the rising national product for older people, but rather as a secondary result of attempts to deal with the severe and potentially explosive hardship problems facing many older people.

"If old age is to be more than a period when people decline and die, some way must be found whereby the aged, who have helped in the past to provide the basis for the rising living standards, are guaranteed a share in some of the 'harvested fruits.'"

In simple terms, the report advocates "a substantial transfer of income from the working to the retired population to improve the relative economic status of aged," adding:

"Such assurance can best be provided, or can only be provided, through governmental programs, particularly the social insurance system of OASDHI, which carries commitments for the future older Americans—the workers of today—as well as for this generation of the aged."

WORKERS on both sides of the Mexican border are being hurt as a growing number of U.S. companies are lured to Mexico by cheap labor, tax breaks and duty exemptions, Clothing Workers Vice Pres. Howard D. Samuel, center, charged on Labor News Conference. Questioning him were Murray Seeger, left, of the Los Angeles Times and Stanley Levey of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers. The program is aired Tuesdays on Mutual radio.

MEMPHIS MARCH in memory of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., a year after his death was joined by 15,000 union members from many states. The marchers came not to remember the death of Dr. King but to remember his life, Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes declared in the city where Dr. King helped SCME sanitationmen win a strike for recognition. Shown with Wurf, second row, center, is SCME Sec.-Treas. Joseph L. Ames, third row.

State-County Marchers Pay Tribute to Dr. King

Memphis, Tenn.—Thousands of members of the State, County & Municipal Employes from all sections of the country marched in memory of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., on Good Friday, the anniversary date of his assassination here where he had come to help the union's striking sanitation workers.

"We're in Memphis not to remember the death of Dr. King; we are here in Memphis to remember the life of Dr. King," SCME Pres. Jerry Wurf told a gathering of more than 200 march leaders on the eve of the event.

Nearly 15,000 participated in the peaceful demonstration, providing a sea of faces on the mall and the streets surrounding Memphis City Hall.

Responding to an invitation from Wurf to participate, SCME members and leaders came from Michigan, Ohio, New York, Washington, Illinois, the District of Columbia, Maryland, Minnesota, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, Florida, Alabama, the Carolinas and other states. They came by bus, by car, by plane.

But most of the marchers came by foot — thousands of SCME Local 1733 members from all sections of Memphis.

Reflecting on the struggle for recognition and dignity by SCME's sanitation workers, Wurf observed that "we were not alone. We in our strike brought about a partnership between the black community and the white community, the black worker and the white worker. We understood that our strength was the strength of standing up in nonviolent fashion for a sense of dignity. If there were to be violence, we knew it had to come from the other side."

SCME was joined in sponsoring the march by the Community on the Move for Equality. Its leader, Dr. H. Ralph Jackson, also pointed to the failure of society—and Memphis in particular—to make Dr. King's dream a reality.

"In Memphis it is no different today than it was a year ago," he said. "We want you to know we are marching today because we are dissatisfied with rat-infested housing and children going to bed hungry."

The Southern Christian Leadership Conference was represented by Dr. King's successor, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy who told the throng that "white and black people can perish separately as fools or live together in sanity."

Federal Suits Attack Bias of Textile Firms

(Continued from Page 1)

of the Civil Rights Act's ban on job discrimination.

The White House had served notice that Alexander, a holdover appointee, would be replaced as commission chairman. It made this known after Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen had accused Alexander of "harassment" of businessmen and threatened to get him fired.

Alexander said the timing of the White House announcement that he would be replaced—tied in with the Dirksen threat—had led to an "inescapable" public conclusion that "vigorous efforts to enforce the laws on employment discrimination are not among the goals of this Administration."

Therefore, he said, he was resigning as chairman although remaining as a commission member. His five-year term runs to July 1, 1972.

Alexander said the commission's effectiveness has been impaired by "a crippling lack of Administration support."

Coordinated Talks Pay Off For 4 Unions

Renegotiation of a pioneer agreement reached via the coordinated bargaining route was announced by four unions representing 3,000 employes of the American Home Products Co.

Wage gains totaling 15 cents an hour were negotiated by the Meat Cutters, the Chemical Workers, the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union and the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

The minimum pension of $3 a month per year of service was raised to $6, with an additional $3 for each year of work before age 25. Also won was a $3 payment for each year worked in predecessor companies of American Home.

These items alone will increase retirement benefits from $65 a month to $260 for some workers, said the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., which coordinated the bargaining.

The new pact also sets up a jointly-administered pension trust. Major gains in insurance include elimination of employe contributions, a boost in weekly sickness and accident benefits from $60 to $85, and lifetime care for mentally or physically handicapped children.

The new term, replacing the original five-year agreement, runs for three years.

No Joke, Right Wing Keys Comic Book to Tax Repeal

One of the nation's kookiest right-wing organizations is counting on a comic book to achieve its key goal—a constitutional amendment that would prevent the federal government from levying any income, gift or estate tax.

The Liberty Amendment Committee, based in Los Angeles, has put out a first printing of 250,000 copies of its cartoon strip Tax Report and hopes its supporters will order 10 million more to be passed out "wherever people gather."

Its simplistic theme is that the government should sell all federal lands and property, use the money to reduce the national debt, and then stop taxing people's incomes. Without taxes to pay, workers wouldn't have to strike for more money and there would once more be "respect and affection for government in our country."

The treasurer of the organization is one of the nation's wealthiest right-wing extremists, Walter Knott.

Victims of 'Spoils System':

West Virginia Rally Backs State Strikers

Charleston, W.Va.—The message of labor support for 3,500 striking state employes came through loud and clear at an Easter Monday rally on the State House steps.

It was directed to Gov. Arch Moore by speakers representing the strikers and West Virginians United for Fairness, Justice and Equality.

The governor fired State Roads Commission employes Mar. 11 for stopping work because the state refused to recognize or deal with their union—the Laborers' District Council of West Virginia.

As state employes watched from office windows circling the Capitol steps, speaker after speaker called on the governor to stop acting like an "Appalachian dictator" and rescind the firings.

Moore did not accept an invitation to attend the rally but sent word he was willing to meet at its close with union representatives in his office. Laborers' Council Manager Lyle Kirker reported after the meeting that the governor had not changed his mind—there would be no reinstatement and no union recognition.

After the rally, the strikers went back to their picket stations and their union pledged to press the battle to end the "spoils system" under which jobs go to party "regulars."

The spoils system is the real issue at stake in the walkout, which started Mar. 3, union representatives told the Capitol rally attended by about 2,500 strikers, concerned citizens and students from state colleges.

Pres. Miles C. Stanley of the West Virginia AFL-CIO said State Road employes are determined to "put to death the inhuman system of spoils that pervades the atmosphere of state government."

William L. Kircher, AFL-CIO director of organization, was chief speaker at the rally. He and Stanley both pledged to do everything they can to put the full weight of the U.S. labor movement behind the strikers.

"The governor should sit down and read a little bit of labor history," Kircher said. "He would find that labor has made a valuable contribution to the progress of West Virginia, and citizens of the state have aided labor in the process."

It "comes at a late date," Kircher declared, "for the governor now to seek to nullify that progress."

Former Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey sent a message of support read to the cheering demonstrators. He noted that the SRC employes were not seeking special treatment. Their aim, he wrote, is to "gain union recognition, improve their lives and those of their families and end the spoils system" in public service.

Labor, Rights Coalition Presses Hospital Strike

Charleston, S.C.—A coalition of labor, civil rights groups and clergymen took the field here to help 600 low-paid hospital workers win union recognition and a better life.

The atmosphere has been hostile since 500 workers walked out Mar. 20 and began picketing Charleston Medical Hospital. An additional 100 strikers took to the picket lines Mar. 28 at Charleston County Hospital. They are members of Local 1199B of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union.

Hospital authorities got an injunction against the pickets and city police and South Carolina state troopers surrounded all entrances. Over 150 strikers and sympathizers have been arrested to date.

All the strikers are Negroes, and most of them earn as little as $1.30 an hour—$52 a week before taxes.

Nurse's Aide Mary Moultrie, Local 1199B president, said the basic issues in the dispute are the hospital employes' demand for union recognition, reinstatement of workers fired for joining the union, and equality of pay for Negro and white workers in the same job categories.

There has been one breakthrough since the hospital workers organized. A Catholic hospital, St. Francis Xavier, agreed to recognize the union if the employes make clear their desire to join. They have begun to do so, the union said.

RWDSU Local 1199 in New York has been organizing the Charleston hospital workers since last December, and the group was chartered as Local 1199B. The local has been serving two meals daily to the families of strikers, with some Charleston churches helping to underwrite the cost.

Dr. Ralph Abernathy, head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, told a rally here that SCLC will provide moral support and picket-line manpower while the struggle lasts.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People rallied behind the strikers by posting bond for jailed union members.

Administrators of the two hospitals have refused to meet directly with union representatives. They maintain that a state law—now being challenged by the union—forbids state agencies to bargain with unions.

Clothing Workers' Milton Fried Dies

New York—The Clothing Workers paid final tribute to Milton Fried, ACWA research director for 15 years, at memorial services here. His services in helping build an "enormously useful" research department, and his other qualities were cited by ACWA Pres. Jacob Potofsky in a funeral eulogy.

Fried was 53 when he died of a heart ailment at the Bethesda, Md., hospital of the National Institutes of Health. Survivors include his wife Philoine, daughter of the late Sidney Hillman, first ACWA president; two sons, and other family members.

The staff of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, in a message of sympathy by Dir. Nat Goldfinger, said of Fried, "we shall always remember his perception and devotion to the trade union movement" and shall "miss his wisdom and quiet eloquence."

In New York, Missouri Cases:

High Court Stiffens 1-Man, 1-Vote Rule

The Supreme Court ordered two states to realign their congressional districts to approach as closely as possible exact equality of population in accordance with one-man, one-vote principles.

The 6-3 ruling affected New York and Missouri directly. But by implication it also paved the way for a new round of redistricting challenges affecting congressional boundary lines in other states and districts which elect state legislators and city councils.

In effect, the court majority refused to countenance any variation from mathematical equality unless somehow a state can demonstrate that a small population variance is "unavoidable."

In Missouri, the largest district exceeded the mathematical ideal by slightly more than 3 percent—but this amounted to a population spread of about 6 percent between the state's smallest and largest districts.

New York's congressional district boundaries, drawn by a politically divided legislature interested in preserving the seats of as many incumbents as possible, had a wider spread. There was more than a 14 percent difference between the largest and smallest districts.

The challenge to the New York districting had been brought by David I. Wells, education director of the Ladies' Garment Workers.

Wells had won an earlier suit challenging a more extreme malapportionment which had been enacted by a Republican legislature. He contended that the new apportionment should be invalidated both on population grounds and because of political gerrymandering. A lower federal court rejected his contention. The Supreme Court upheld him on the population issue, and therefore was not faced with the necessity for ruling on the gerrymander issue—which Wells considered a key point.

Republicans now control both houses of the New York legislature as well as the governorship, and one GOP official told the New York Times that the legislature would be able to carve up districts of mathematical equality which would enable the GOP to pick up additional seats.

"Now it's just a question of slicing the salami," he was quoted, "and the salami happens to be in our hands."

The Democratic leader of the state Assembly termed the statement a "shocking and blatant announcement of intent to gerrymander" and called on Gov. Nelson Rockefeller to appoint a nonpartisan or bipartisan commission to recommend new boundaries.

Wells served notice that he will "move right back into court" on the gerrymandering issue if the legislature carves up the districts for political advantage.

The Supreme Court was sharply divided on the issue of exact mathematical equality. Justices John Marshall Harlan, Potter Stewart and Byron R. White vigorously dissented, charging that the ruling imposed impossible "slide rule" standards on the political process.

Justice Abe Fortas, while joining in holding that the Missouri and New York test cases exceeded one-man, one-vote standards, said the majority decision laid down impractical standards for the states.

Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., writing for the majority, said that to allow a population variance, however small, without sound justification would be an invitation to legislators to seek the maximum allowable variation rather than strive for exact equality.

As a practical matter, the time involved in court suits makes it unlikely that there will be a national wave of redistricting before the 1970 elections. After the 1970 census, all states will almost certainly be required to redistrict in accordance with new population figures and distribution.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS directors of more than 50 unions were addressed by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, chairman of the federation's Intl. Affairs Committee, during a one-day briefing in Washington sponsored by the Dept. of Intl. Affairs. They discussed the AFL-CIO withdrawal from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and other international labor affairs.

CWA Hinges Surtax Stand To Tax Reform

The Communications Workers announced opposition to extension of the 10 percent income tax surcharge and called on union members and the public "to tell Congress they have had their fill of subsidizing the rich."

The policy was set forth in a statement unanimously adopted by CWA's executive board and in letters sent by CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne to Pres. Nixon and Chairman Wilbur D. Mills of the House Ways & Means Committee.

The basis of the union's opposition is that "the Administration and Congress have not taken steps" toward meeting the conditions outlined by CWA in supporting the surcharge when it was enacted.

Those conditions were that Congress and the Administration levy taxes based more upon ability to pay, close loopholes favoring the wealthy, re-examine the 7 percent business investment tax credit and accelerated depreciation, and fulfill commitments for social programs.

Beirne told a press conference the union will remain opposed to extending the surcharge until Congress acts to "correct inequities and imbalances that have been discussed for many years."

The surcharge, he said, "does not reach any income previously escaping taxation," is "inflationary" because corporations use it as an excuse to raise prices, and this means that consumers "are helping to pay corporation taxes."

AFL-CIO Hits Proposal To Tax Benefit Plans

The AFL-CIO has urged the Internal Revenue Service to withdraw and revise proposed new regulations that "unfairly and extremely restrict" union-negotiated health and welfare plans.

The proposals, AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman told an IRS hearing, could destroy some health and welfare funds, eliminate benefits under others and disrupt the collective bargaining process.

The regulations, as published in the Federal Register, would alter the section of the Internal Revenue Code that established tax exemption for health and welfare benefits and employes' beneficiary associations.

Seidman hit at one proposal which would limit exemption to life, sick, accident, or other benefits that are "intended to safeguard or improve" health or protect against the possibility of reduced earning power.

Such a limitation, Seidman pointed out, is "contrary to the approach taken by Congress" in tax legislation as well as IRS regulations over many years.

The rule, he said, might "trigger the loss" of many benefits negotiated by unions, such as scholarships, automobile insurance, day care centers for children and jobless benefits.

Seidman also attacked proposals that would threaten the tax exempt status of benefits paid for injuries sustained from fire or automobile accidents and for deaths covered by insurance other than term insurance.

He sharply criticized another suggested regulation to define an "association of employes" qualifying for exemption as an organization whose employes "are members of a common working unit."

The phrase "common working unit" should be deleted, Seidman said, and the regulation revised to make it clear that a fund formed by several unions for a variety of workers has tax exempt status.

Seidman further called for revisions of regulations that appear to narrow the definitions of an "employe" and "income," endanger tax exemptions for funds that cover apprentices and restrict funds in several other ways.

Seidman was accompanied by Louis Sherman and Elliott Brehoff, general counsels of the Building & Construction Trades and Industrial Union departments, respectively, and attorneys Robert Mayer, Paul Berger and Stephen Hester.

U.S.-French Labor Tie Hailed for Aid to Africa

Paris—American labor is proud to be allied with free French labor in helping the developing nations of Africa, an AFL-CIO representative told the tenth congress of Force Ouvriere (FO).

Irving Brown, executive director of the African-American Labor Center, added, "It is common concern like this that unites us as forces for freedom throughout the world."

Brown spoke as the representative of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to delegates representing 1.1 million FO members. A democratic labor federation, FO was founded in 1948 with U.S. labor's help after Communist elements seized control of the General Confederation of Workers (CGT.)

In the earliest years, Brown recalled, the federation pitched in with American unions and labor movements of other nations to aid the reconstruction of Western Europe.

Now, he pointed out, FO is contributing greatly in labor's efforts "to build the trade union movement in new nations, particularly in French-speaking Africa."

"We have never wavered in our support of FO since its founding," Brown said. "For the history of your movement is the history of France, Western Europe and the entire free world ever since World War II."

He said the cooperation of labor movements in industrial nations also is vital if free nations are to resist communism and all forms of totalitarian aggression.

In this connection, he warned that efforts by the Communist-controlled World Federation of Trade Unions to make inroads in industrialized and developing nations is "part of the Soviet government's offensive to strangle the existing and emerging trade unions of the world."

"Their objective," Brown said, "is not to improve but to exploit the low economic and social standards of workers in order to advance the power drive of the totalitarian powers."

Brown expressed "fervent hope" that negotiations in Paris will lead to a peace in which the free trade union forces of South Viet Nam "will not only survive but become the standard bearer of freedom for all Viet Nam."

Mini-Skirts Can't Hide Firm's Anti-Unionism

The National Labor Relations Board called a foul on an employer who recruited four mini-skirted office employes to pass out anti-union literature at plant entrances on the day of an NLRB election.

The mini-skirts themselves were not illegal but the employer's general conduct interfered with the election, the NLRB said. It set aside the 1967 tally and ordered a new one among 318 production and maintenance employes of the Conolon Corp., which makes fishing rods in Santa Ana, Calif.

Ruling on an unfair practice charge brought by the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, three board members agreed that "by soliciting non-bargaining-unit office clericals to distribute anti-union literature" the employer interfered with the clerical employes' right not to reveal their views on unions. Member Sam Zagoria dissented.

The decision related that management, in response to union handbills referring to "mini-paychecks, mini-skirts and hi boots," conceived the idea of recruiting office girls to dress in mini-skirts and high boots and to pass out company propaganda.

"Volunteers for the distribution were solicited by the secretary to the president and vice president," the board majority noted in its report.

It ordered management to stop soliciting employes to threaten other employes with dire consequences if the union won the election.

New HUD Rules To Curb Fraud In Land Sales

Regulations to curb some of the worst abuses in mail order sale of home lots will take effect Apr. 28, Housing & Urban Development Sec. George Romney announced.

Developers of subdivisions of 50 or more lots, offered for sale in interstate commerce, will be required to furnish "property reports" to prospective buyers.

The reports will include such data as distance to nearby communities over paved or unpaved roads, present and proposed utility services and charges, number of homes currently occupied, soil and other foundation problems in construction.

The AFL-CIO had strongly urged federal legislation to guard against land sale fraud in congressional testimony. The legislation was enacted last year as part of the Housing & Urban Development Act.

Romney's announcement of the final regulations indicated some weakening in a tentative draft issued Jan. 25. It enables developers with disclosure statements on file under state laws in Florida, California, Hawaii and New York to use those statements without having them checked by HUD for completeness and accuracy.

Committees Take Initiative:

Congress Grows Impatient Over Lag in Nixon Program

(Continued from Page 1)

when Congress returns Apr. 14, it will be brought to the House floor that week. If not, it will be scheduled a week later.

The Administration's only position has been that the extension should be limited to two years. But a number of House Republicans and conservative Democrats are prepared with a battery of amendments, including some which would give the states power to decide where and how the federal money should be used and bar funds to help poor students attending religious schools.

Water Pollution—The House Public Works Committee has approved a bill aimed primarily at preventing oil spillage, whether from vessels or off-shore drilling rigs. It includes penalties and liability for damages for violators. The legislation is expected to reach the House floor either just before or just after the education bill. Meanwhile the Senate Public Works Committee is considering even stiffer legislation.

Taxes—Growing sentiment for meaningful tax reform this year is reported as a result of extensive hearings being held by the House Ways & Means Committee. The Nixon Administration thus far has asked only extension of the 10 per cent tax surcharge and existing excise taxes on automobiles and telephone calls. Treasury Sec. David Kennedy indicated the Administration will propose "a few changes" in the tax laws after the Easter recess, but is not likely to propose any major overhaul of the tax structure in time for action this year.

Committee members—Democrats and Republicans alike—appear to be sensitive to the public outcry against tax loopholes. Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), the powerful committee chairman, hasn't yet spelled out his position. But he has dropped enough hints to make it appear unlikely that the committee will content itself with merely extending existing taxes.

Labor Legislation—The House Education & Labor Committee plans hearings on the situs picketing bill, starting Apr. 22. This is the Taft-Hartley Act amendment, backed by the Johnson, Kennedy and Eisenhower Administrations, to give building trades unions the same picketing rights at construction sites that other unions have in manufacturing plants. The Administration's position on the bill presumably will be made known when Labor Sec. George P. Shultz testifies as the leadoff witness.

Anti-Poverty Program—Pres. Nixon asked Congress to give the Office of Economic Opportunity another year of life and announced plans to delegate some of its key operating programs to other agencies this summer. He promised that before the end of June he will submit to Congress "a comprehensive proposal for the future of the poverty program."

The House Education & Labor Committee decided not to wait, however. Committee Chairman Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) introduced a bill continuing the OEO anti-poverty program another five years and has already had more than a week of hearings on it.

Electoral Reform—Both the House and Senate have held extensive hearings on proposed constitutional amendments to abolish the Electoral College and choose the President by direct, popular vote. The Administration's position has been that this would be desirable but unlikely to be ratified by three-fourths of the states. Therefore it is supporting a system of allocating each state's electoral votes in rough proportion to the vote in the state for each candidate. Such a system, it has been noted, would have elected Nixon over John F. Kennedy in 1960.

Budget—The fundamental issue of domestic legislation is whether Congress will provide the funds needed to carry out the programs it has enacted over the years. Pres. Nixon said he will submit proposals cutting the already tight budget recommended by the Johnson Administration. But congressional committees are still waiting for the new recommendations.

Hospital Aid—This is one area where the Administration has made specific recommendations. It has proposed replacing the hospital construction grants under the Hill-Burton Act with a guaranteed loan program and expanding federal aid to meet needs for outpatient clinics, neighborhood health centers and other non-hospital health facilities. Committee hearings have been held.

Safety Legislation—The Administration has testified for a stronger mine safety law. However, on construction safety and general occupational safety and health legislation, its position has been that it favors the objectives of the bills before Congress but isn't yet prepared to comment on specifics of the legislation.

On other domestic issues:

- Congressional committees are tackling problems of hunger and malnutrition and considering legislation to improve the food stamp and food distribution program. The Administration has not yet made any recommendations.
- Bills have been introduced to extend the Voting Rights Act for another five years and to strengthen the employment discrimination ban in the Civil Rights Act. The President has not sent any civil rights message to Congress.
- Despite the strong emphasis on strengthened law enforcement during the presidential campaign, the White House has not yet asked Congress for any legislation in this area.

TRAINING PROJECT run by Local 478 of the Operating Engineers at East Lyme, Conn., as part of a special federal-state manpower program, impresses Sec. of Transportation John Volpe. A trainee demonstrates the operation of a road grader.

Federal Reserve Board Tightens Money Supply

The Federal Reserve Board, in what it termed a "further move against inflation," has increased its discount rate and the reserves required of the nation's banks.

The two-pronged action will be felt most directly by consumers in the form of harder-to-get credit and higher interest rates.

The "Fed" increased the discount rate—the interest charged on its loans to banks—from 5.5 to 6 percent. The rate, which had been raised one-quarter of 1 percent in December, is now at its highest level in 40 years.

The board raised by one-half of 1 percent the requirement on reserves that member banks must hold in ratio to demand deposits. The new requirements are the highest since 1960.

By raising reserve requirements, the board expects to freeze an estimated $650 million in deposits. Since reserve computations would be that much less and banks lend about four times their reserves, the theory is that money available for lending would be reduced about $2.6 billion.

In practice, however, this is unlikely to happen. The board usually eases the effect of stiffer reserve requirements by offsetting operations in its daily open-market buying and selling of government securities.

The purpose of the board's latest moves is to further tighten the money supply and credit so as to slow down economic expansion and reduce inflation.

The AFL-CIO has pointed out, however, that tight money policies tend only to increase the cost of money "all along the line"—to medium-sized and small businesses, to home-buyers, consumers, farmers and the government.

The high costs of money, the AFL-CIO Executive Council warned at its meeting in February, "are being built into the price structure, from manufacturer to retailer and consumer, to the profit of the banks and other lenders."

It called on Congress to review monetary policy with the aim of developing "a policy that is in the best interest of the nation and the American people, rather than merely the banks and other lenders."

Meanwhile, in reaction to the board's steps:

The Washington Star quoted an unidentified "high-ranking Nixon Administration official" as saying the Fed will have to ease monetary policy by mid-year or the tight-money course will lead to unemployment.

The Wall Street Journal reported that some bankers believe the boards' moves will trigger another increase in the banks' prime interest rate—the rate charged to their best customers. The prime rate is now at 7.5 percent after four successive boosts in less than four months.

4-12-69

Support Grows in Congress to Give Farm Workers NLRA Coverage

A strong drive for legislation to bring farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act is picking up momentum in both the House and Senate.

Senate hearings will begin Apr. 16, with members of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee as the opening witnesses before the Senate Labor subcommittee. Twenty senators, including Subcommittee Chairman Harrison A. Williams (D-N.J.), have sponsored a farm worker bargaining bill.

In the House, Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.) organized a group of 57 congressmen—52 Democrats and five Republicans—to sponsor farm worker legislation. A similar bill won approval from the House Education & Labor Committee in the last Congress, but never reached the House floor.

O'Hara said the goal of the legislation is to "substitute the rule of law for the law of the jungle" in relations between farm workers and their employers. House hearings are scheduled for early May.

The conservative National Farm Bureau Federation, representing the biggest agricultural employers, meanwhile served notice of a "counter-proposal" intended to keep the National Labor Relations Board away from the farms.

A Farm Bureau legislative spokesman, Matt Triggs, said he will ask that the Dept. of Agriculture, not the NLRB, be empowered to hold elections to determine whether workers on large farms want to be represented by a union.

Triggs, who will testify at the Senate hearings Apr. 17, said the Farm Bureau proposal would also prohibit strikes that would result in the loss of perishable farm products and ban what he termed "featherbedding practices" and "secondary boycotts." He said the Farm Bureau bill, which has not yet been introduced, would define "featherbedding" in "great detail."

Instead of the Labor Board procedure for hearings and rulings on unfair labor practice charges, the Farm Bureau bill would require the complaining party to file a private lawsuit in court, alleging violation of the law.

"Our bill is completely outside the Labor Relations Act," Triggs said. "It is not a supplement or amendment, and wouldn't be administered by the board at all."

The Senate Labor subcommittee has invited Labor Sec. George P. Shultz to testify on farm worker legislation but no date has been set.

During the Johnson Administration, Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz strongly advocated extension of the National Labor Relations Act to farm workers. Pres. Nixon has asked Shultz and Agriculture Sec. Clifford M. Hardin to try to come up with a joint recommendation on the issue but there has been no indication as to whether they have been able to do so.

$200 Million to Aid Urban Riot Areas

Some $200 million in federal funds will be used to help 20 cities rehabilitate riot-damaged areas, Pres. Nixon announced.

The money will be taken from lower-priority urban development projects and cities will be expected to put up additional funds for the clean-up, fix-up program. Nixon said the first federal aid will be used "to provide temporary playgrounds, parks, clean-up services, repairs to public buildings and streets, where now there is charred rubble."

Cities chosen for aid are Akron, Baltimore, Boston, Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit, Kansas City, Kan., Los Angeles, Louisville, Memphis, Nashville, Newark, New Haven, New York, Pittsburgh, Providence, Rochester, N. Y., Tampa, Washington and Wilmington.

New Adviser On Consumer Affairs Named

Pres. Nixon has named a Pennsylvania Republican, Mrs. Virginia Knauer, as his full-time consumer affairs adviser.

Mrs. Knauer, long active in GOP affairs, has headed the Pennsylvania Consumer Bureau for more than a year. The White House said she will also serve as chairman of the President's Committee on Consumer Interests and executive secretary of the Consumer Advisory Council.

Mrs. Knauer told reporters that she believed consumers need help from the government to avoid "pitfalls in the marketplace." She praised her predecessor, Betty Furness, for having done "a fantastic job" as White House consumer adviser.

Earlier Nixon had named the head of the Good Housekeeping Institute, an advertising promotion enterprise, as part-time consumer assistant. But she quit after four days under heavy criticism for conflict of interest.

Farm Workers Ask Full Union Rights

Cite Power Wielded by Big Growers

Farm workers asked Congress for legislation to protect their right to build unions strong enough to match the enormous power of the big agricultural corporations and achieve social justice and decent living standards for field workers.

Dolores Huerta, vice president of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, spoke for the ailing UFWOC Dir. Cesar Chavez at Senate Labor subcommittee hearings.

She told the subcommittee that the UFWOC has had to pin its hopes on the worldwide California grape boycott and its support by union members and consumers because the big grape growers had an inexhaustible supply of low-wage strikebreaker labor streaming across the Mexican border.

Mrs. Huerta said the power of California's "agribusiness" was so great that repeated violations of what health, sanitation and safety laws are on the books are winked at or punished by token fines—infinitesimal compared to the huge subsidies some of the agricultural corporations get from the federal government.

Only in the few places where the UFWOC has been able to get signed contracts, Mrs. Huerta told the subcommittee, have workers been able to achieve dignity and decency.

Passed By

Farm workers were passed by during the "social revolution of the New Deal" in the 1930s, Mrs. Huerta said, because they were excluded from the original National Labor Relations Act—the Wagner Act.

She urged that they now be given the same protection which enabled industrial unions to take root and grow strong during that period.

A bill merely giving farm workers bargaining rights in name only, she suggested, would not solve the farm workers' problems. Growers, she said, could "litigate us to death" and "bargain around the calendar . . . unless we are allowed to apply sufficient economic power to make it worth their while to sign."

The goal is not just recognition but "signed contracts . . . good wages . . . a strong union." For this, Mrs. Huerta said, coverage under the National Labor Relations Act should be coupled with amendments geared

(Continued on Page 5)

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV — Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year — Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. — Saturday, April 19, 1969 — No. 16

$4-Billion Cut in Budget Sets Nixon Austerity Line

A GIANT EAGLE, reproduction of the U.S. Savings Bond symbol, was so large it had to be spread out on the White House lawn when fifth grade pupils from Public School 270, Brooklyn, N.Y., who made the banner, visited Pres. Nixon. Their trip to Washington was sponsored by Operating Engineers Local 891. Leaders of the local and Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), on Nixon's left, accompanied the students on the White House visit. (Story, Page 11.)

Asks Action To Cool Off Economy

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Nixon gave Congress a sketchy outline of his Administration's legislative program and recommended chopping some $4 billion from the Johnson Administration's budget.

At least for the next year, Nixon indicated, austerity will be the Administration's byword and the government's policies will be geared to taking more money out of the nation's economy than will be paid out in benefits or services.

Nixon acknowledged that his budget program isn't "pleasant medicine" but insisted it is necessary in order to cool off the economy and curb inflation.

The President said the new programs he will propose won't cost much or promise more than they can deliver. But "in the long run," he conceded, "progress will not come cheaply" and "we must be prepared to increase substantially our dollar investment in America's future as soon as the resources become available."

The White House announcements of the budget revisions sought to present a picture of cutbacks and progress in the same breath.

The overall spending figure for the fiscal year starting July 1 would be higher than for the current fiscal year. But the cuts made in the Johnson Administration's already lean budget proposals would leave a bigger surplus in the Treasury.

About one-fourth of the claimed budget reduction—$1 billion—was arrived at by making an assumption that congressional observers consider unrealistic.

It assumes that Congress will adopt the Johnson Administration proposals to raise the taxable wage base for social security and increase

(Continued on Page 11)

'Completely Unjustified':

Meany Scores Plan To Slash Job Corps

By Duane Emme

An Administration plan for a drastic reduction in the Job Corps is "completely unjustified" in view of the program's achievements for the nation in "human reclamation," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared.

In a letter to Pres. Nixon, Meany said the AFL-CIO "strongly urges" withdrawal of the cutback so that the Job Corps "can continue to serve the disadvantaged youth of the country."

Other union officials also denounced the plan to close 59 of the existing 113 training centers by July 1 and reduce the Job Corps budget by $100 million in fiscal 1970.

Pres. Johnson's proposed 1970 budget called for $280 million for Job Corps operations and the Nixon budget would slash that to $180 million.

Congressmen, local government and community leaders, and anti-poverty groups reacted with angry protests.

The plan, as announced by Labor Sec. George P. Shultz, would lop off two-thirds of the existing Job Corps conservation centers and eliminate about one-third of the larger job-skill training centers for men and women.

Scheduled for closing are 50 conservation centers across the nation, two men's skill training centers at Camp Parks, Calif., and Camp Kilmer, N.J., and seven women's skill-training centers.

The women's centers to be closed are at Clinton, Ia.; Marquette, Mich.; St. Louis, Mo.; Omaha, Neb.; Moses Lake, Wash., and Huntington, W. Va.

Thirty smaller urban centers are

(Continued on Page 4)

Signalmen Win Rail Contract On Strike Eve

A marathon negotiating session brought agreement in a lengthy wage dispute between the Signalmen and the nation's railroads just in time to head off a threatened strike.

Details of the settlement were not announced pending a ratification vote by the union's general chairmen, who were scheduled to meet in Chicago, Apr. 18.

But Signalmen's Pres. C. J. Chamberlain said the 18-month settlement would give the union's 13,000 members "substantial" pay increases.

In another development, the United Transportation Union reached an agreement ending a five-day strike against the Illinois Central over the size of train crews.

(Continued on Page 3)

Kansas Veto Blocks Stiff R-T-W Penalty

Topeka, Kan.—A bill which threatened unions with harsh penalties under Kansas' 10-year-old "right-to-work" law has been killed by the veto of Gov. Robert B. Docking (D).

After Docking refused to sign the measure, vigorously opposed by labor, a move to override his veto failed in the state House of Representatives and the legislature adjourned shortly thereafter.

The union shop ban was adopted as a constitutional amendment in 1958 but the state has never before acted on enabling legislation.

Last year, Laborers Local 605 won a union shop contract at the Sunflower Ordnance Plant of Hercules, Inc. near De Soto, Kan., and Kansans for Right to Work focused on the pact in pressing for enabling legislation.

They ignored the fact that the plant's management and the local agreed to the contract on the basis that the plant was on federal property and was thus under federal, not state, jurisdiction.

Another factor in the "right-to-work" push was that the 1968 election gave conservative Republicans strong control of the legislature even though Docking was reelected.

The bill introduced in the legislature would have spelled out the union shop ban and imposed fines

(Continued on Page 2)

25th Graduating Class Milestone For AIFLD

By Eugene A. Kelly

The American Institute for Free Labor Development has made a valuable contribution to Latin America's social progress and economic improvement, Pres. Nixon said in extending "warm congratulations" to graduates of AIFLD's 25th training program.

"We have a special interest," Nixon said in a message read to the graduates by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, "in the welfare of the people who share this hemisphere with us and are currently seeking new initiatives to make our combined efforts more effective."

AIFLD, through its self-help projects in such fields as cooperatives and housing, and through its educational work in support of the development of free democratic trade unions, has "played

(Continued on Page 12)

Westinghouse, GE Workers Polled on Goals

The AFL-CIO Coordinated Bargaining Committee of General Electric-Westinghouse unions has launched an unprecedented study to determine the priority each member attaches to each bargaining proposal to be made of the employers this fall.

The committee sent questionnaires to 200,000 General Electric and Westinghouse workers throughout the nation. The questionnaires seek individual views on the relative priorities of proposed improvements in the 1969 contracts with the two companies. There is no precedent for such a widespread survey of the workers covered by a contract.

Accompanying each questionnaire is a letter from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who is chairman of the Coordinated Bargaining Committee.

Meany's letter explains that the purpose of the questionnaire is to enable committee negotiators to "hear directly from as many members as possible."

The questionnaire includes the list of proposals approved by representatives of the ten unions involved at a Mar. 6 meeting in Washington.

Priorities Asked

Members are asked to indicate the priorities they give each proposal by numbering them one through ten in order of importance.

Meany's letter adds, "And in case something you believe is important was somehow overlooked, there's a space for you to say so."

Deadline for returning questionnaires is May 15 when they will be studied and tabulated to determine 1969 bargaining priorities.

The AFL-CIO unions participating in coordinated bargaining are the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the Steelworkers, the Machinists, the Allied Industrial Workers, Flint Glass Workers, Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, Carpenters, Sheet Metal Workers, and the Technical Engineers.

Oil Workers Hail Support of Shell Boycott

Denver—Striking members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers are grateful to the entire labor movement for an "amazing outpouring of support" for the union's consumer boycott against Shell Oil Co. products, the OCAW declared.

OCAW has urged all labor families to stop buying Shell products because that company sought to discharge 10 employes, suspend 15 others, and deny 1969 vacations to 200 employes among the 2,000 who struck the company in California Jan. 4.

Shell also wants to wipe out traditional work rules and refuses to bargain with the union on the issue, OCAW Pres. A. F. Grospiron said.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany recently endorsed the Shell boycott in a letter to all affiliated bodies. Meany noted that the AFL-CIO Executive Council had previously voted unanimously to support any action the union found necessary in its dispute.

Shell customers are asked to mail their Shell credit cards to the company at P.O. Box 80, Tulsa, Okla., with a note urging settlement of the dispute. Shell is the only major firm which held out after other companies came to terms with OCAW in contract negotiations.

Birthday Tribute Slated For A. Philip Randolph, 80

New York—AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph celebrated his 80th birthday on Apr. 15 and Gov. Nelson Rockefeller proclaimed the day in his name throughout New York. But the most meaningful tribute is yet to come.

Friends and associates of Randolph, president-emeritus of the Sleeping Car Porters, will gather at a dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, May 6, to pay tribute to his life-long effort to advance civil rights and eliminate poverty.

The goal of the tribute, being organized by the A. Philip Randolph 80th Birthday Committee, is to raise a fund of $250,000 to carry on the Negro leader's life work through the A. Philip Randolph Institute.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and U.S. Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall are co-chairmen of the committee, whose 87 members read like a "who's who" in labor, management, government, religion, civil rights groups, education and entertainment.

J. P. Stevens Ordered To Supply Address List

Richmond, Va.—J. P. Stevens & Co. lost its fifth legal battle when the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered it to give the National Labor Relations Board a name-and-address list of employes eligible to vote in an NLRB election at Shelby, N.C.

Failure to supply the names would "impede union campaign efforts while leaving the company free to communicate its point of view to all its employes," the appeals judges agreed in an opinion written by Judge Simon E. Sobeloff.

The court rejected a claim by Stevens management, and 219 of the 600 Shelby plant employes, that giving the Textile Workers Union of America an employe list would violate their right of privacy.

Stevens, a major supplier of textile goods under government contract, has fought every union and NLRB effort to protect the rights of its employes to join TWUA. Found guilty of numerous violations in many of its plants, Stevens has lost three appeals in appellate courts and two in the U.S. Supreme Court.

A year ago TWUA filed for an election at the firm's Cleveland Cloth Mill in Shelby. The company refused to comply with an NLRB director's order to furnish a name-and-address list. It also spurned a subsequent board subpoena.

The appeals judges upheld a lower court decision enforcing the NLRB order. As they had in a similar case involving the Hanes Corp., they ruled that the board's request was an appropriate exercise of its authority over representation elections.

"Affording the union an opportunity to communicate" with employes, Judge Sobeloff wrote, does not encroach on the employes' right to remain neutral.

The court added: "An employe exercises his . . . rights most effectively by voting. . . ."

TWUA Pres. William Pollock said that even as the latest decision was being written, a "new set of illegal discharges has been taking place in a Stevens hosiery plant" at Hickory, N.C. The government, he said, can "demonstrate that Stevens is not bigger than the law" by citing its officers for contempt of court and withholding all federal contracts "until it complies with the law."

Henry Kirsch Named To UNESCO Panel

Henry Kirsch of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs has been named by Sec. of State William P. Rogers to the National Commission for the United Nations Education, Scientific & Cultural Organization (UNESCO).

The 100-member commission—composed of representatives of the public, national organizations and the government—advises the State Dept. on UNESCO matters.

2-Year Agreement:

IBEW Wins Pact For 70,000 at WE

The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers announced a new two-year agreement with the Western Electric Co. that the union said will give 70,000 members of 13 local unions benefits valued at $102 million over the contract term.

IBEW Pres. Charles H. Pillard said the new pact, negotiated by IBEW System Council EM-3 with the manufacturing subsidiary of the Bell Telephone System, provides a modified agency shop and other gains including wage increases of 5 percent this year and an additional 3.9 percent in 1970.

Management also agreed to pay hourly and salaried employes double time for work beyond nine overtime hours a week.

Wage provisions of the agreement are retroactive to contract anniversary dates in four IBEW-WE locations—Montgomery, Ill., Indianapolis, Omaha, and Columbus, O. Other locations where IBEW has bargaining rights are Kearny, N.J.; Allentown and Reading, Pa.; Cicero, Ill.; Little Rock, Ark.; Shreveport, La., and Oklahoma City.

IBEW members at Western Electric rejected a previous offer, Pillard said, because it lacked protection against the continual increase in the cost of living.

The new pact contains major wage gains and establishes union security protection for employes, Pillard said in a mesage of approval to System Council EM-3 and its president, Frank Vondra.

Veto Kills Stiff Penalties In Kansas R-T-W Law

(Continued from Page 1)

of $500 or six-month jail sentences against violators.

The "right-to-work" forces claimed that the measure would force "an open shop agreement" at the Sunflower plant even though an opinion from state Atty. Gen. Kent Frizzell (R) said it would not apply to Sunflower.

The measure was swept through the House, 76 to 40, and the Senate, 27 to 10, with the votes cast mainly along party lines—Republicans for and Democrats against.

Newspapers throughout the state drummed out a steady flow of editorials in support of the bill. Some suggested that Docking wouldn't dare veto the measure.

In a forthright veto message, the governor pointed out that "this is a proposal lacking not only in philosophical credibility, but also in defined legal purpose."

He noted the discrepancy between the proponents' contention that the bill would apply to Sunflower—a federal installation—and the attorney general's opinion that it would not.

Since the entire case for the legislation was based on the Sunflower situation and there has never been another contention of violation of the constitutional amendment, Docking said, the bill was "unnecessary."

Further, he cited the penalties, uniform for employers and unions, as being "discriminatory" since they would fall most heavily upon unions and workers.

"For these reasons," he declared, "I find this bill—if it were to become law—would be lacking in legal purpose, highly discriminatory, and disruptive of good labor-management relations."

To sign it, he added, would be to place "an albatross around the neck of management and labor and industrial development in Kansas for many years."

"The bill is negative, not constructive, and therefore, not in the public interest," he concluded.

When the vote on overriding Docking was taken in the House the next day, the final tally was 78-46—five votes short of the margin needed to override.

Court Backs NLRB Against Thomson Daily

New Orleans—Another newspaper in the chain of U.S. dailies owned by Lord Roy Thomson has been adjudged guilty of thumbing its nose at the National Labor Relations Act.

The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ordered the Lafayette, La., Daily Advertiser to obey a National Labor Relations Board order to stop the unfair practices that triggered a 1964 strike. The ruling also directed the paper to bargain with Typographical Local 832 and to reinstate all strikers with lost pay from the day they applied for reinstatement.

Other newspaper unions have run up against the hostile practices of the British and Canadian press lord, owner of more than 50 U.S. and Canadian dailies and some in the British Isles. The Newspaper Guild has been on strike at Thomson's Peterborough, Ont., Examiner since December. The Guild also has been trying for more than six months of negotiations to get a first contract with the same chain's Canton, O., Repository.

On Feb. 26, the board ordered Thomson's Dothan, Ala., Eagle, to stop trying to destroy the Printing Pressmen by refusing to bargain in good faith. Negotiations at Dothan were conducted by Thomson's national personnel manager.

On the Lafayette paper, the labor board found management guilty of causing composing room and pressroom employes to strike on Dec. 2, 1964, and prolonging the strike by illegal practices including threats and promises of improvements if the men would abandon the union and return to work.

NEW OFFICERS of the Council of AFL-CIO Unions for Scientific, Professional & Cultural Employes are sworn in by Federation Pres. George Meany at the council's second biennial convention. From left are Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes, Treas. Herman Kenin of the Musicians, Vice Pres. Charles Cogen of the Teachers, and Meany. Kenin stepped down as president to rotate the top office.

Sets 3-Year Pattern:

Textile Union Wins 46c Pact for 25,000

New York—The Textile Workers Union of America announced a new contract settlement providing a 20 percent increase in wages and fringe benefits over a three-year period for 25,000 workers in the northern cotton-synthetics textile industry.

The settlement is "the best the union ever won" in the industry, TWUA Pres. William Pollock said in a letter to members praising them for their "determination and solidarity."

The contract took shape at American Thread Co. in Willimantic, Conn., when TWUA negotiators turned down a 31-cent package. Management raised the offer to 46 cents an hour and the union agreed. It then extended the pattern to employes of other companies.

These included Berkshire Hathaway, Inc., in New Bedford, Mass.; Bates Mfg. Co. in Augusta and Lewiston, Me.; West Point-Pepperell, Inc., in Biddeford, Me.; Waumbec Mills, Inc., Manchester, N.H., and Fitchburg, Mass., Yarn Mills.

The pace-setting agreement is equivalent to a 20 percent rise in present wages and fringe benefits, Pollock said, and has become "firmly established as the pattern for new three-year contracts" with 75 industry firms.

The formula arrived at in the American Thread negotiations consists of 40 cents an hour in wage hikes, and 6 cents in improved fringe benefits, including a severance pay-pension plan which Pollock called a "significant breakthrough" in this branch of the industry.

"For the first time in the northern cotton-synthetics industry, the union has won a funded pension plan with labor having a voice in its operations," Pollock said.

"For the first time, the employe will know what kind of a pension he can get, and what he has to do to get it."

Under the terms of the settlement, an 18-cent across-the-board increase will go into effect Apr. 21, along with 3 cents an hour additional for improved insurance benefits.

Next April an additional 10 cents an hour will be added to wages on a percentage basis, with another 3 cents allocated for the establishment of the severance-pension plan.

The third installment, consisting of 12 cents applied on a percentage basis, will go into effect in April 1971. That final raise will boost the minimum rate in the industry above the $2.05 an hour mark, the union said.

Signalmen Win Accord, Rail Walkout Averted

(Continued from Page 1)

The Signalmen had called a nationwide strike for Apr. 14 after announcing that negotiations over the past two months had "proved fruitless" because the carriers "refused to recognize the inequitable wages being paid our members."

The union was legally free to strike on or after Apr. 7, having exhausted all procedures under the Railway Labor Act. Under the law there can be no strike or imposition of new wages or rules by managements for 30 days following the report of a presidential emergency board. The cycle in the Signalmen's case was completed Apr. 6.

Chamberlain stressed, however, that the union was ready to resume negotiations in an effort to avert the walkout.

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz quickly announced that if the strike materialized, the Administration would ask Congress for legislation to end it. At the same time, he said he saw "good chances" for a settlement and called the parties into negotiaions in his office.

Shultz met with both sides but left supervision of negotiations to Assistant Sec. of Labor William J. Usery, who kept the talks going over a stretch of 28 hours. The agreement came just 14 hours before the strike deadline.

Chamberlain said the settlement would give the union greater wage increases than the emergency board had recommended but that rates for its skilled members would still be "substandard."

The board's report had called for increases of 3.5 percent retroactive to Jan. 1, 1968; an additional 2 percent retroactive to Jan. 1, 1969; another 3 percent effective next July 1, plus 20 cents an hour in increases for skilled employes.

The union had sought increases of 25 percent over a three-year period, plus a 90-cent adjustment for skill, and a cost of living clause. The railroads had refused to recognize any skill claim.

The UTU strike, which had halted all passenger operations and most freight movements on the Illinois Central's 8,700-mile system, was called in a dispute over the size of train crews.

The union had been legally free to strike since early January. An emergency board had recommended a return to bargaining and this led to settlements of similar disputes on Louisville & Nashville and Belt Railway Co. without strike.

The Illinois Central strike settlement provides that the carrier restore half of its train crews—about 225—to three man size, a conductor and two brakemen. The remaining crews will be the subject of further negotiations. IC had reduced all of its crews to a conductor and one brakeman in line with a 1964 compulsory arbitration award.

The agreement, which follows a pattern reached with UTU in crew-size disputes on other railroads, was reached after the U.S. District Court in Nashville, Tenn., refused to grant the railroad an injunction.

Tax Reform Urged By Meat Cutters

Pres. Thomas J. Lloyd and Sec.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman of the Meat Cutters have charged that the present unfair tax system produces results akin to outright "robbery" of workers.

In a letter to Chairman Wilbur D. Mills of the House Ways & Means Committee, they urged that the income tax surcharge be extended only if the action is accompanied by tax reform.

Such revisions, Lloyd and Gorman pointed out, should close loopholes that allow the rich to escape taxes and "make the burden of tax payment commensurate with an individual or family's ability to pay."

The tax system, they added, should also be made to support the domestic policies of Congress and the President "instead of subverting them."

PENNSYLVANIA COPE CONFERENCE in Philadelphia heard AFL-CIO COPE Dir. Al Barkan emphasize the importance of voter registration drives prior to the 1970 elections. Seated, from left, are state AFL-CIO officers—Pres. Harry Boyer, Executive Vice Pres. Michael Johnson and Sec. Harry Block.

Pennsylvania COPE Conference Ignites Voter, Legislative Drives

Philadelphia—Pennsylvania labor, generally credited with carrying the state for Humphrey in 1968 after most polls predicted it would go to Nixon, has no intention of resting on any laurels.

That was demonstrated as 150 representatives of unions and central bodies attended a two-day, statewide COPE conference to kick off a 1969 voter registration drive.

The meeting, conducted by State AFL-CIO Pres. Harry Boyer and Executive Vice Pres. Michael Johnson, also launched a drive for passage of the federation's legislative program in the General Assembly.

One session was devoted to strategy for opposing a "right-to-work" measure which has been introduced in both houses of the assembly.

Although passage of the union shop ban "doesn't appear likely," Boyer said, "just as quick as we let up in our opposition its proponents will try to slip it through."

The registration drive will be keyed to making workers and their families eligible to vote in municipal and county elections next Nov. 4. Statewide registration opens May 26 and closes Sept. 15.

The meeting shaped plans for coordinating the registration effort on a central body basis, involving workers and their wives in registration work, setting up telephone appeals and getting people to the polls.

Johnson emphasized that 1969 registration is the key to electing local officials friendly to labor and is "critically important" as a forerunner to the 1970 general election.

In 1970, he reminded, "we not only will be electing Pennsylvania's members in the U.S. House of Representatives, we also will be electing a General Assembly that can shape our destiny for years to come."

This is so, he noted, because the state legislature elected next year will be able to realign congressional and assembly districts based on the results of the 1970 national census.

Boyer and Johnson expressed optimism over winning enactment of much of the state AFL-CIO's "people-oriented" program if workers will button-hole their state legislators in support of it.

Key parts of the program are measures to improve workmen's compensation and unemployment compensation. Bills on the latter subject would restore slashed benefits and ease tightened eligibility qualifications enacted by the 1964 legislature and signed by former Gov. William W. Scranton (R).

William F. Matson, general manager of the 175,000-member Pennsylvania Rural Electric Association, came from a meeting of his organization's board in Indiana, Pa., to announce that it had overwhelmingly voted opposition to a "right-to-work" law in the state.

Legislators who support "right-to-work" and other anti-union laws "are enemies of farmers, workers and the public," Matson declared.

Farmers must understand, he pointed out, that promoters of "right-to-work" are out to weaken the buying power "of our best customers." Further, he said, "these promoters are the same people who oppose programs to benefit farmers."

Other conference speakers included AFL-CIO COPE Dir. Al Barkan, Stanton Smith, coordinator of the federation's state and city central bodies, and Mrs. Ruth Colombo, eastern director of COPE's Women's Activities Division.

The conference, which discussed the significant role women have in labor's activities, set a goal of expanding the state AFL-CIO's WAD program until it operates in every county.

Rubber Workers Picked Over District 50

Hopewell, Va.—Workers at the Firestone Synthetic Fibers & Textile Co. dumped the unaffiliated union of District 50 and chose the Rubber Workers as their bargaining representative in a National Labor Relations Board election. The vote: URW 342, District 50 280, Teamsters 23, no union 8.

By winning, the URW knocked District 50 out of a plant where it had held bargaining rights for nine years. Assisting a workers' organizing committee were URW staff members and AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization representatives.

COPE Backs Bradley In Los Angeles Race

Los Angeles—COPE delegates have overwhelmingly endorsed City Councilman Thomas Bradley's bid to become the first Negro mayor in this, the nation's third largest city.

COPE action assured Bradley broad-based labor support for the May 27 runoff against Sam Yorty, the incumbent.

It also reflected widespread labor dissatisfaction with eight years of Yorty administration, including ineffective handling of the 18-month strike-lockout at the Hearst-owned Herald-Examiner.

In an Apr. 1 primary election, when COPE made no endorsement, Bradley pulled 42 percent of 718,678 ballots cast. Yorty got 26.5 percent, second higest in a field of seven.

Sigmund Arywitz, county AFL-CIO executive secretary, called on union members to pour contributions and manpower into the effort to elect Bradley.

"Our feeling is that he is the best suited to meet the needs of this major metropolis," Arywitz said.

He said the 51-year-old Bradley, first Negro elected to the City Council here, had the peacemaking potential to solve critical urban problems.

All major independent labor bodies also have endorsed the Bradley candidacy.

Arywitz said COPE would "take the facts" of the campaign to union members. He told a news conference that racism, an issue raised by Yorty on primary election night, was "wholly spurious."

"Los Angeles is tired of personalities and smears," Arywitz said.

Yorty had accused Bradley of emphasizing race in his primary campaign to get votes. About 20 percent of the city's registered voters are Negro.

A vote analysis published in the Los Angeles Times, however, indicated that predominantly white San Fernando Valley, for example, a traditional Yorty stronghold, deserted him in the primary election.

Bradley greeted the COPE endorsement with "delight" and said it "clearly shows that this will be a people's campaign."

Theoretically, the mayoralty race is non-partisan. Both Bradley and Yorty are registered Democrats, but Yorty supported Republican Richard Nixon for President in 1960 and was pretty much in Republican Ronald Reagan's corner when he was elected governor in 1966.

ON-THE-JOB PROBLEMS of women workers are discussed by delegates to the fourth Social Action Conference of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. Other sessions at the Rutgers University meeting were devoted to relations between the races in America. Recommendations will go to IUE executive board for action.

IUE Conference Finds Bias Hurts All Workers

New Brunswick, N.J.—Only the employer profits when workers divide along race or sex lines, delegates to the fourth Social Action Conference of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers agreed here.

Discussion on the Rutgers University campus focused on such topics as white resentment of Negro progress, employer resistance to fair employment practices, opening up previously male-held jobs to women, and what unions can do internally and in the community toward building a just society for all.

IUE Sec.-Treas. David J. Fitzmaurice told 150 delegates at the closing session that proposals made at the conference will be reviewed by the IUE Civil Rights Committee for inclusion in recommendations to the union's international executive board in June.

The conference program included a forum on problems of woman workers. Discussion was led by Staff Rep. Lynn MacGowan of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Community Services, Executive Dir. Melvin Bourne of the Clothing Workers' day care program, and Dorothy Pendergast, Boston regional director of the U.S. Women's Bureau.

In a keynote talk, IUE Pres. Paul Jennings urged participants to "tell it like you think it is"—and the delegates did so.

A recurrent conference theme was that the "system," and those who manipulate it for private gain, constitute the real enemy of black and white workers alike. The key to progress, most speakers affirmed, is unity.

One point of emphasis was that local human relations committees can be more effective if they tie together civil rights, education and political action.

Irving Levine, director of education and planning for the American Jewish Committee, provided a springboard for discussion with a talk on the impact of the civil rights revolution on the white union member.

A look at "The Meaning of Black Power" was provided by the Rev. James Woodruff of the Philadelphia Episcopal diocese.

William Gary, director of IUE's social action department, was conference general chairman. Resource aid was given by AFL-CIO staff members including Robert McGlotten of the Dept. of Civil Rights, members of the Rutgers Labor Education Center, and teachers from other universities.

Frances Perkins Story on Radio

The radio version of the original TV drama, "The Vine and the Fig Tree," which premiered last December on the NBC-TV network as part of the Eternal Light series, will be broadcast nationwide on NBC Radio, May 4.

The struggle for an industry-wide NRA code for steel and other episodes from the early days of Frances Perkins' career as Secretary of Labor under Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt highlight this production of the George Meany Foundation, an arm of the Herbert H. Lehman Institute of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America.

Network broadcast time for "The Vine and the Fig Tree" is 12:30 p.m., EDT. Local radio schedules should be consulted for areas outside New York City.

Appeal Waived By Unions in Copper Dispute

Ten unions representing Kennecott Copper Corp. employes have waived their right to appeal a decision by a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner that they had violated federal labor law by insisting to the point of impasse on three uniform goals in 1967 contract bargaining.

The Steelworkers and nine other unions, representing 14,000 Kennecott workers, decided to file no exceptions to the examiner's rulings, and the NLRB therefore put them into effect.

A spokesman for the unions said they prefer to reserve their right to appeal forthcoming decisions, should they be adverse, in other cases growing out of the 12-month copper strike that started July 15, 1967.

The unions are the Machinists, Operating Engineers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Carpenters, Painters, Boilermakers, Office & Professional Employes, Railway Carmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, now an affiliate of the United Transportation Union, and the USWA.

Examiner David Karasick ruled Feb. 8 that the unions struck unlawfully to enforce these "integrated and indivisible demands" on Kennecott: common expiration dates for all agreements; economic benefits to be applied on a company-wide basis; settlements in all company units before work could be resumed in any unit.

The strikes against the last of 11 nonferrous firms ended July 8, 1968.

Labor Press Scores Canadian Postal Rates

New York—The Intl. Labor Press Association charged that "discriminatory" postal rate increases are pricing several Canadian union periodicals out of business.

"The Canadian labor press has been hard hit by postage increases that went into effect Apr. 1," said the association, which represents over 400 publications of unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO and the Canadian Labor Congress.

"The postage bill for Canadian union periodicals has risen as much as 2,000 percent," the ILPA statement noted. "As a result, several have had to cease publication altogether while others have reduced their frequency of publication."

The statement was adopted unanimously at a meeting here of the association's 18-member executive council. It adds:

"The ILPA has been encouraging trade unionists in Canada, whether members of national or international unions, to publish their own Canadian periodicals. We are astonished that opposition to this objective should come from within Canada in the form of postage rates that are pricing freedom of expression by unions out of the market.

"We also regret the discriminatory nature of the increases and the philosophy behind them: profit-making U.S. periodicals, including Time and Reader's Digest, are subsidized by privileged postal rates which are denied to non-profit periodicals produced by unions in Canada."

The postage increases were authorized by amendments to the Post Office Act introduced by the Canadian Government and passed during the current session of Parliament.

The amendments deprive periodicals produced by trade unions, credit unions, co-operatives, local church organizations and professional associations of second-class mailing privileges they formerly held. Their postage rates have gone up from 5 cents a pound to 5 cents a copy.

'Completely Unjustified':

Job Corps Cutback Scored by Labor

(Continued from Page 1)

to be opened, but despite the addition of some 4,300 enrollees in these new centers, the Job Corps training capacity will drop from about 32,000 to 22,000.

A part of the plan, announced previously, calls for shifting administration of the Job Corps from the Office of Economic Opportunity to the Labor Dept.

A Labor Dept. statement said that "restructuring" of the Job Corps would help correct "inefficiencies" and strengthen existing centers by "integrating" them into the overall manpower program. It also argued that there are many more opportunities for youths in manpower programs now than there were in 1964 when the Job Corps was started, so the program is less important.

Opponents of the cutback disagreed sharply, emphasizing that the Job Corps is unique in its ability to take youths out of poverty, prevent them from drifting into crime and train them in occupational skills.

Meany described the cutback as "completely unjustified in view of the achievements of this program for so many of our disadvantaged young people."

The Job Corps, he noted, "has taken thousands of young people off the streets, away from the meaningless lives full of frustration and anger, and has returned them to society as useful, productive citizens."

He said that AFL-CIO unions have sponsored and operated Job Corps camps and therefore have "ample evidence" that the program is helping poor youths become "productive citizens employed at decent jobs with decent pay."

"To take away this option for a better life," he added, "would be a cruel blow directed at a group who have already known more than their share of failure and disappointment at the hands of the larger society."

Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers, which has helped provide training for equipment operators at Job Corps camps in Tennessee and Montana, wrote all members of Congress urging them to resist the proposed cut.

He attached copies of several of the many letters received by staffs at these camps from graduates of the training centers "who have gone to work to become taxpayers instead of tax eaters."

Wharton emphasized that many of the young persons who come into the Job Corps actually must be trained in reading to remove them from the "functionally illiterate" category.

"Where will they go? Our society cannot afford to carry them forever and they are not capable of caring for themselves," he said.

The Carpenters also assailed the planned cutback. Four of seven Job Corps centers in which the union is training slum youths in carpenter skills are among those slated for closing.

Charging that the cutback was "false economy," Carpenters Treas. Peter Terzick said the centers are "doing a wonderful job" in converting untrained youth into skilled craftsmen.

Among other developments in the aftermath of the Administration's action:

- The House Education & Labor Committee became a center of the fight in Congress against the cutbacks. It heard the first of what promised to be scores of witnesses opposed to the shutdown of the 59 centers.
- The committee's staff estimated that the cut in the Job Corps actually would cost $102 million—$2 million more than it is supposed to save—through losses on equipment, construction, renovation, contracts and termination of services.
- Republican and Democratic congressmen alike were angered over the lack of advance notice of centers to be closed. An aide of Rep. John P. Saylor (R-Pa.) said the oversight was typical of the Administration's "non-working relationship with the Hill."
- Youths at the Kilmer Job Corps Center, where 1,700 are being trained in job skills, conducted a peaceful march to demonstrate their opposition to the center's scheduled closing. They issued a statement asking, "If the Job Corps is closed down, where will we get our chance?"

Dock Union Wraps Up Final Gulf Coast Pacts

New York—The Longshoremen closed the books successfully on deep sea contract negotiations and turned their attention to winning similar gains for members employed by Great Lakes dock operators.

The last four Gulf ports to settle were Beaumont, Brownsville, Port Arthur and Port Orange, Tex. ILA locals came to terms with employers there on local issues and returned to work with a meaty package of benefits in line with those won earlier by ILA locals in New York and other Atlantic and Gulf ports.

The ILA went on strike at all deep sea ports Dec. 20 after a Taft-Hartley 80-day injunction expired. The injunction had halted an earlier walkout after two days.

ILA Pres. Thomas W. Gleason reported these results at the close of negotiations:

"We have received improvements in wages, pensions, welfare benefits, two weeks' additional vacation, a guaranteed annual income for the life of the contract, and other benefits. But one of the most important gains was in the field of containerization."

All ports won the guaranteed wage for experienced workers, with the amount varying downwards from the full year's work—2,080 hours—won in New York, Boston and a few other major ports.

Most ports won salary gains totaling 98 cents an hour; regular pensions of $300 a month; another paid holiday, and rules for hiring halls and the handling of container freight.

The wage sections of most contracts provide a minimum wage of $4.60 an hour by the third contract year.

A new container clause, accepted by employers in New York and a few other ports, provides that certain containers owned or leased by employer members shall be "stuffed and stripped" by ILA labor, at longshore rates on a waterfront facility under conditions agreed to by the union and management.

Backs UFWOC:

Hawaii Legislature Joins Grape Boycott

Honolulu—California table grapes are being squeezed off the Hawaii markets—much to the displeasure of the growers and their representatives.

The Hawaii state legislature—showing deep concern for the struggling California farm workers—passed a resolution of full support for the nationwide grape boycott.

This action made Hawaii the first state in the country to take legislative action backing the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee's campaign for union recognition and decent wages for the grape pickers.

The resolution was introduced in the island state's legislature through the efforts of the Hawaii Table Grape Boycott Committee, a coalition of labor, education, church and community groups.

All state-operated institutions are requested not to purchase California table grapes until the UFWOC "is successful in gaining union recognition from the California grape growers," the resolution states.

It also encourages all citizens of Hawaii "to join this nationwide boycott . . . to help restore human dignity to California grape farm workers."

Honolulu Mayor Frank F. Fasi followed quickly with the support of his office.

"I am pleased to join the mayors of New York, Detroit, Cleveland, San Francisco and more than a dozen other large cities in this nonviolent protest," Fasi said in a letter to the Hawaii boycott committee.

Fasi said he hopes Hawaii's workers—after comparing their own gains over the years with the plight of the California farm workers—would "join in an effort to bring a degree of justice to the workers in the vineyards."

"Until this is achieved," Fasi added, "we can only regard table grapes as a luxury."

Following the action of both houses of the legislature, statements of support were sent by Hawaii's Democratic Sen. Daniel K. Inouye and Rep. Patsy T. Mink. More letters came to the boycott committee from Hawaii church and community leaders.

But in the heart of California's grape growing district, the reaction to the Hawaii resolution was sour. The Kern County supervisors called for a counter-boycott of Hawaii sugar and pineapples.

A Republican assemblyman from Bakersfield echoed the proposed counter-boycott in the California legislature.

Assemblyman Kent H. Stacey said the Hawaii resolution sets a dangerous precedent and declared that Hawaii should not interfere in a California dispute.

Hawaii House Speaker Tadao Beppu retorted: "We are not telling the people of California what to do—the resolution is only directed at the people of Hawaii."

House Majority Leader Howard Y. Miyake concurred, saying that Stacey can't "close my eyes to the intolerable conditions that prevail" in the California vineyards.

Hawaii Senate Majority Leader Donald Ching observed, "I don't think Stacey speaks for the majority. It's my guess, knowing Jesse Unruh, who is speaker, that he would agree with the actions of the Hawaii legislature."

"If Hawaii were to get into a similar labor-management relations difficulty then the California assembly would have the right to pass a similar resolution," Ching added.

Hawaii Senate Pres. David C. McClung noted that he wouldn't mind California scrutiny of Hawaii pineapple fields.

"Be my guest," McClung said. "Hawaii's agricultural workers are the higest paid in the world, in contrast to the wage levels and working conditions in Mr. Stacey's district which have triggered a nationwide protest—culminating in this grape boycott."

Stuart Ho, Hawaiian House floor leader, commented that "if Assemblyman Stacey would spare his energy to correcting the abject misery of farm laborers in California instead of attempting to take on a defense against the universal condemnation of the country, then he would be rendering California high service."

The Hawaiian legislators were referring to data in the Senate Concurrent Resolution that documented the plight of the California farm workers, comparing their death rate with workers of the rest of the nation. The higher death rates in the vineyards are: infant mortality, 125 percent; maternal mortality, 125 percent; influenza and pneumonia, 200 percent; tuberculosis and other infectious diseases, 260 percent; accidents, 300 percent.

FARM WORKERS need a strong union to achieve social justice in the fields, Vice Pres. Dolores Huerta of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee tells a Senate Labor subcommittee. Subcommittee Chairman Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), sponsor of a collective bargaining bill for agricultural workers, listens attentively.

Farm Union Asks Justice For Workers

(Continued from Page 1)

to the special problems of farm worker organization.

Without a union, the crowded Senate hearing room was told, farm workers and their children are being sickened — sometimes killed — by highly toxic pesticides. And when the UFWOC tried to examine county records of pesticide application in the Delano, Calif., area, a state court injunction blocked the disclosure.

In addition to a team of UFWOC officials from California, a panel of unorganized farm workers from other areas of the nation joined in urging federal collective bargaining legislation for agriculture.

The congressional testimony was part of an all-day program sponsored by the National Campaign for Agricultural Democracy, an alliance of labor, church, farm and consumer organizations including the AFL-CIO.

The program included a reception for Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr., who chaired the Senate hearings, the 20 senators who co-sponsored his bill to extend labor law coverage to farm workers, and 56 congressmen who joined with Rep. James O'Hara (D-Mich.) in introducing similar legislation in the House.

AFL-CIO Organizing Dir. William L. Kircher, Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.) and Sen. Walter F. Mondale (D-Minn.) spoke at a concluding dinner honoring Williams, held at a Washington church.

GRAPELESS BASKET OF FRUIT is presented to Hawaii Senate Pres. David C. McClung by Mrs. Fumi Ige, AFL-CIO COPE coordinator and co-chairman of the Hawaii Table Grape Boycott Committee. Both houses of the Hawaii legislature passed a resolution supporting the grape boycott. From left are Mrs. Ige; Rev. Gene Bridges, Unitarian Church; Sen. McClung; Fred Long of the University of Hawaii; Jean King, Democratic Action Group, and Rev. Stanley E. Kain, Honolulu Council of Churches.

Agenda, Speakers Set For Bargaining Forum

New York—The agenda for a major forum here May 12-13 to take "a comprehensive look at collective bargaining in our times," was announced by the Institute of Collective Bargaining & Group Relations.

The institute, supported by both labor and management, also announced a long list of officials from labor, management, government and education who will speak at the forum.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and William F. Mays, chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers' industrial relations committee, will be the main speakers at a dinner session May 12.

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz, Chairman Frank W. McCulloch of the National Labor Relations Board and Dir. J. Curtis Counts of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service head participants from the government.

The featured speaker at a May 13 luncheon session will be George Woodcock, chairman of Great Britain's Commission on Industrial Relations and former general secretary of the Trades Union Congress of Great Britain.

Another key speaker at the forum will be Arthur J. Goldberg, former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Supreme Court Justice and Sec. of Labor. He will speak on the future for bargaining at a morning session May 12.

Presidents of AFL-CIO unions who are scheduled to speak at the sessions include I. W. Abel, Steelworkers; Paul Jennings, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; P. L. Siemiller, Machinists; Jerry Wurf, State, County & Municipal Employes; Joseph A. Beirne, Communications Workers; and Max Greenberg, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union.

AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nat Goldfinger will speak at a session on collective bargaining as it relates to the economy and Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO associate general counsel, will present a labor view of NLRB decisions and pending issues.

In announcing the agenda, the institute said the forum will be asking and seeking answers to three questions:

"What is the future of collective bargaining? How is it being affected by present social and economic conditions? How can its processes and the skills of its practitioners be improved?"

The forum, the institute added, "offers an opportunity for all in management and labor—in both the public and private sectors—to take stock of what is happening and to estimate the future course of events."

The institute was formed last year with the goal of improving the bargaining process and giving the public a better understanding of how it works and its importance in a democracy.

Lane Kirkland, executive assistant to Meany, is the institute's president, and E. T. Klassen, deputy postmaster general and former president of American Can Co., is chairman of its board.

Information on registering for the forum may be obtained from The Collective Bargaining Forum—1969, 300 Madison Ave., Ninth Floor, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Commercials Pact Ratified By Musicians

New York—Musicians who perform for television and radio commercials have accepted a new contract providing wage increases of 11.1 percent and other improvements.

The vote, tabulated by the American Arbitration Association after a secret ballot, was 825 in favor, 59 opposed. The two-year pact was retroactive to Feb. 1.

AFM Pres. Herman Kenin gave these details of the contract, negotiated with the Association of National Advertisers, Inc., and the American Association of Advertising Agencies:

For instrumental musicians, the basic scale was raised from $36 to $40 for a one-hour session, five men or more; two to four men, up from $39 to $43.30; one man, raised from $72 to $80. Employers will continue paying 5 percent pension contributions.

Side line musicians were raised from $41.56 for an eight-hour day to $46.18, and for a 1.5-hour interview, from $2 to $7.90.

For commercials made after Feb. 1, 1969, the re-use payment for the 13-week cycle after the first cycle was raised from one-third to one-half.

The agencies agreed to pay $1 per job into the local union health and welfare fund, or directly to the musician where no fund has been set up. Also they agreed to pay instrument cartage charges ranging from $4 to $14—the latter for a harp.

Wage provisions also apply to music arrangers, orchestrators, copyists and librarians. Other benefits include additional holidays for orchestrators and copyists; double time for callbacks within less than eight hours, and overtime provisions not previously included.

Randolph at 80

ON APR. 15, A. Philip Randolph marked his 80th birthday, a day of tributes and celebration for one of the greatest Negro leaders of the 20th Century.

The very essence of the man and what he stands for is perhaps best grasped by his co-worker, Bayard Rustin, in an article in The New Leader. Rustin writes in part:

I think it is part of the greatness of A. Philip Randolph that throughout his 60 years as a leader of Negro Americans, he has maintained a total vision of the goal of freedom for his people and of the means for achieving it. From his earliest beginnings as a follower of Eugene V. Debs and a colleague of Norman Thomas, he has understood that social and political freedom must be rooted in economic freedom, and all his subsequent actions have sprung from this basic premise.

He has identified with the spiritual longings of black people, but has insisted that economic security is the precondition for pride and dignity. While he has felt that Negro salvation is an internal process of struggle and self-affirmation, he has recognized the political necessity of forming alliances with men of other races and the moral necessity of comprehending the black movement as part of a general effort to expand human freedom. Finally, as a result of his deep faith in democracy, he has realized that social change does not depend upon the decisions of the few, but on direct political action through the mobilization of masses of individuals to gain economic and social justice.

Randolph thus stands out among Negro leaders of the 20th Century as a man of both principled idealism and practical accomplishment. He has stood firm against racial separatism—whether advocated in the 1920s by Marcus Garvey or in the 1960s by black nationalists—because of his belief in integration and his knowledge that separatism would mean the continued exploitation and degradation of black people.

Again, he has rejected elitism—be it in the form of W. E. B. DuBois' concept of "a talented tenth" or of a proposal for black capitalism—because of his democratic commitment and his opposition to programs that would economically benefit a minority. He has adhered to nonviolence as a moral principle and as the most effective means of political struggle.

PURSUING HIS CONVICTION that the Negro can never be socially and politically free until he is economically secure, Randolph worked to build an alliance between black Americans and the trade union movement. His first efforts met with strong opposition from Southern oligarchs and powerful business leaders who had traditionally tried to use the Negro to subvert the labor movement. Their tactic was to exploit the Negro's grievous need for employment by inviting him to scab on unionized white workers striking for just demands.

Realizing that the only benefactors of these practices were the exploiters themselves, Randolph embarked upon a crusade opposing any form of strike-breaking by Negroes, advocating instead their full integration into the American trade union movement. Today there are 2 million black trade unionists in America who have attained economic dignity, job security and protection against racial discrimination.

We are still very much in need of the guidance of A. Philip Randolph. As he reaches his 80th birthday, the freshness and the comprehensiveness of his vision remains evident.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors:
Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, April 19, 1969 No. 16

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Get Him Off My Back!'

A Word Edgewise:

White Racism Less a Problem Than Ignoring Needs of Poor

By John P. Roche

THERE HAS BEEN so much wild talk about "white racism"—and in general about the problems of the Negro in America—that it might be worthwhile to try to establish some historical perspective.

As a point of departure, let us take the recent Gallup Poll which indicated that 67 percent of the American people would vote for a Negro for President. In 1958, only a decade ago (a trifling period in the history of a nation), the figure was 38 percent. Anyone concerned with long-range trends in our society should look at this increase as an amazing indication of the decline of racial prejudice. A companion question on a Jewish President showed a leap from 68 percent to 88 percent in the same 10 years.

This fascinating poll was tucked away on page 17 of the New York Times. A while back, however, a Washington group concerned with urban problems made page 1 just about everywhere with a report alleging that "white racism" is worse today than it was a year earlier, when the Kerner Commission on Civil Disorders put the phrase into common circulation. How can one explain this variation in emphasis?

Partially it can be explained by the extremely commendable American taste for self-criticism. Historically we are a nation of critics. By British standards, for instance, the U.S. Army in World War II was in a permanent state of mutiny.

No red-blooded American can properly digest his dinner until he has heard, read, or seen on TV at least one solid attack on the Establishment. The news media, naturally enough, respond by featuring attacks rather than defenses. The ignorant observer—whether of Joe McCarthy in 1951 or Eugene McCarthy in 1968—assumes the country is on the edge of a revolution, but the fact is that, his dinner digested, the average American goes bowling, not to the barricades.

In part the difference in treatment arises from the passionate myopia of those concerned about the status of the Negro. Their task as they see it is to spur the public conscience. They are not interested in history—they want action.

From their viewpoint, history is the enemy of action, the excuse that is constantly being thrown up to explain nasty situations. They are right: history can provide no absolution for present sins. But they are also wrong because ignorance of history (or worse, deliberate distortion of the past) can blind them to the real nature of the problems they are trying to deal with.

The Kerner Report, for example, is known for two propositions: 1. "white racism is essentially responsible for the explosive mixture which has been accumulating in our cities since the end of World War II," and, 2. "the nation is rapidly moving towards two increasingly separate Americas."

Actually these points are secreted in a text of 407 pages (with appendices) which constitute one of the best official documents of our time. Some enterprising reporter, looking for a lead, spotted and underlined them. Thus the report, which emphasizes at every point the complexity of the issues before it, became famous for two simplistic aphorisms. It would be interesting to discover exactly how many people who glibly quote the two statements cited above have ever opened the report itself.

TURNING TO an examination of the two quotations, the first—about "white racism"—is by any objective historical standards a wild exaggeration. This is not to deny the existence of a significant number of "white racists," but to suggest that fundamental shifts in the economic structure of the country, rather than any anti-Negro ideology, have been the key factors in creating explosive cities.

Ironically, our greatest achievement in human economics has been the leading cause of unrest: we have created an economy in which the unskilled poor have no essential function. In other words, the problem with the poor today is not that they are being exploited, but that they are ignored and rot away on the margins of the economy.

The poor, white and Negro alike, are, in short, largely superfluous. Where a hundred years ago you couldn't build a railroad without Irishmen ("one buried for every tie" as they said about the Panama railroad), the unskilled worker today might as well be on the moon for all the economic input he contributes. Indeed, economists have suggested that if all our poor could be miraculously moved out of the country, the economy would gain.

The Alienated Majority:

Long Term Economic Squeeze Kindles Revolt of Middle Class

The following is excerpted from "The Revolt of Mr. Middle," by Gus Tyler, assistant president of the Ladies' Garment Workers. It appeared in the Apr. 14 issue of The New Leader.

CONSIDER THE ECONOMIC condition of the great American middle. The "median income of families in the United States reached $8,000 for the first time" in 1967 (before taxes), according to a U.S. Dept. of Commerce report. A "modest but adequate" family income, according to the U.S. Dept. of Labor, calls for something around $9,000 a year. Ergo, the typical family sitting at the midpoint of the American economy just doesn't make it!

That same family has been trying to make it over the last few decades, with only a modest measure of success. The median family income (in real dollars, but without allowing for taxes) has risen by about 3-4 percent a year in the last four years, yet as is evident from the above, this is not "adequate." Similarly, the half million families that moved above the poverty line in 1967 are hardly affluent. In short, most Americans are still trying to climb out of economic insecurity and continue to view the world around them in terms of the threats to their frustrated hopes.

To the extent that the middle has risen, it has done so through a dynamic of personal effort and social struggle. The personal effort has been based on the traditional virtues of work and thrift; the social struggle has centered around trade union and political action. In tandem, the two have increased incomes and securities while raising expectations and new insecurities.

For the drive to slave and save has not been tied to another ancient dictum, "Neither a lender nor a borrower be." Members of the rising middle have learned to borrow, to take out mortgages on homes, advances on cars, installment systems on everything from pots to pianos. They are not buying what they can afford, but what they expect to be able to afford as the dynamic drives them upward.

Hence, their style exceeds their stipend—a precarious circumstance for these millions of Americans who have come to live in terms of a fancied future when there will be enough to educate the kids, pay the doctor bills, meet the bank loan.

The typical American family is mortgaged to a tomorrow that, if shaken, would bankrupt the nation's "middle" both financially and spiritually. And this family now feels that the reasonably predictable verities on which it planned its future—the schools, the neighborhood and "disposable income"—are in danger.

Wage and salary gains are being whittled away by taxes and consumer prices. If union rank and filers have been voting down their leadership on contract renewals, it is due in no small part to the realization by members that a 10 percent money raise is not 10 per cent at all after income tax, sales tax, property tax, social security tax, and a higher cost of living.

The unhappiness of this wage earner is multiplied when he is told that he is to blame, because his high wages push costs up, his desire for security in old age forces deductions up, his demand for better education and wider highways and modern hospitals compels higher taxes.

The tax revolt is an economic uprising that, in many urban areas, smacks of an ethnic riot. The median family refuses to be taxed for policies that it believes—justifiably or not—are being used to endanger two pillars of its existence: the neighborhood and the school.

It sees itself caught in a squeeze: from on top by the rich with their mounting charges for living, and from the bottom by the poor with their disorders (crime or riot) and welfare costs. Blindly, it strikes out at both by refusing to pay new taxes and refusing to admit newcomers.

The fact that neither of these medicines is a cure for the ailment should not blind policymakers to the depth of mounting feeling behind these nostrums. The emotion is a fact, one that in political life is as real as a final election count.

THE GROWING FRUSTRATION cannot be pooh-poohed as transient, or diagnosed as the product of sick minds, or denounced as the affluent looking down their blue-blooded noses at the poor. It is the reaction of the American yeomanry—an alienated majority—to a circumstance it does not understand at a time when political leadership offers neither understanding nor solutions.

The natural bent of political leadership—including liberal leadership—is to fall back on past habit to solve present and future maladies. The habit in the past has been to let the middle carry the burden of progress, unaided by the top.

The American worker—blue or white collar, salesman or technician, laborer or civil servant—feels he is being called upon to underwrite highly dubious plans, while the truly rich multiply their riches through "poverty programs" involving training, housing and petty capitalism, also underwritten by the worker. The agony and anger of those workers, black as well as white, are heightened by the fact that where there is friction, frequently ethnic, over the job, the neighborhood, the school, it is the worker of "median" means—not the truly affluent—who must literally live or die in the troubled terrain.

These are the kindlings for a revolt of the middle—an unhappy and perilous situation with a sad and bloody past in American history. Out of similar conflicts arose Bacon's Rebellion, the Whisky Rebellion, the Know-Nothing Riots, and the Great Draft Riot of 1863.

On Taxes, Jobs, Schools:

Labor's Top Legislative Goals Pressed in 91st Congress

TAX REFORM and full funding of existing programs for clean air and water, jobs and urban problems are major AFL-CIO goals in the new Congress, organized labor's chief legislative representative declared.

Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the Dept. of Legislation, predicted that there soon "may be some real action" on tax reform. He said that both House Ways & Means Committee Chairman Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.) and the committee's ranking Republican, John W. Byrnes (Wis.), are determined to move on the issue.

"I think that between Mr. Mills and Mr. Byrnes, we are going to get a tax reform bill," the former Milwaukee congressman declared. He was questioned by reporters on the nationwide interview, Labor News Conference.

Biemiller said congressional hearings have "reached pretty deeply into the sore spots in our tax program," and that more people are beginning to take seriously the warning of former Treasury Sec. Joseph W. Barr that there is a "danger of a taxpayer revolt in this country" unless they are corrected.

Biemiller listed repeal of the 7 percent investment tax credit, elimination of oil depletion allowances, ending the tax-free status of state and local bonds and curbing fast depreciation on new construction—except for low- and moderate-income housing—among the key reforms organized labor seeks.

OTHER TOP AFL-CIO priorities in the 91st Congress, Biemiller said, are full funding of existing authorizations for education and health, pure air and water, job programs for the hard-core unemployed, "full rights under our nation's labor laws for farm workers," and amendment of the Taft-Hartley law to permit on-site picketing by construction unions.

"The real answer to the problem of the ghettos," he said, is the Model Cities program and meaningful jobs for all those who want and need them.

By Press Associates, Inc.

TWO THINGS have happened recently on the "one-man, one-vote" front that serve fair warning that the battle over the principle of equal representation of all Americans in the legislative halls of the United States is still very much alive.

One was the unmistakable warning of the U.S. Supreme Court that it still takes with deadly seriousness its 1964 decision that the Constitution requires "as nearly as is practicable one man's vote in a congressional election is to be worth as much as another's."

The second is that those who are opposed to this principle of elemental democracy are still determined to go back to the old days of congressional apportionment based on other factors than equality in the polling booth. This was demonstrated in a vote in the Republican-controlled Iowa Senate approving 39 to 20 the "Dirksen Amendment" calling for a Constitutional Convention to upset the 1964 decision on the state level.

The reiteration of the Supreme Court's position—perhaps even more strongly expressed than in its 1964 decision—came in two decisions on Apr. 7. Both involved the range in which one congressional district can vary from another and still be within the Supreme Court's "one-man, one-vote" edict. In both cases the court came as close as it could to laying down the thesis that there should be no variation whatever.

The first case involved redistricting in the state of Missouri which produced a difference of 25,802 between the largest and the smallest of Missouri's 10 congressional districts.

The court also rejected another effort to justify a difference in the size of congressional districts under a 1968 New York State redistricting plan. This set up seven broad regions within which the difference between districts was held to several hundreds, but it did not include 10 districts composed of whole counties with far wider variations.

Although these two decisions applied only to redistricting of Congressional districts, the court has held that the same "one-man, one-vote" principle applies to states having bi-cameral legislatures. It is here that a battle is still being waged to undercut this principle through the constitutional amendment process.

This goes back to Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R-Ill.), author of the "Dirksen Amendment" which would permit one chamber of a bi-cameral state legislature to be apportioned on some other basis than population—that is, regional interest, economy or even tradition. Many of its supporters are ready to admit that it is basically designed to maintain the traditional legislative power of rural regions against the growing urban centers.

DIRKSEN, IN 1964, sought to get the Senate to adopt legislation under which the Supreme Court ruling would be delayed until Congress could submit, and the states consider, a constitutional amendment which would permit the states to avoid the "one-man, one-vote" principle for at least one chamber. This failed and, instead, a campaign was launched to open the way to such a constitutional amendment by another procedure.

This involves a vote by two-thirds of the states calling for a constitutional convention at which the Dirksen Amendment could be voted.

The vote of the Iowa Senate—if confirmed by the Iowa House of Representatives—would mean that 33 states have now adopted legislation calling for such a constitutional convention. Only one more—in theory—would be needed. The Dirksen forces are convinced that this 34th state can be achieved. Opponents of the Dirksen Amendment are equally convinced that it will not.

They claim that there are many reasons why this is so—some states have voted for such a convention but their votes are no longer valid; other legislatures that voted for the convention route have changed politically and would repeal their original vote if necessary, and even getting the 34th state after all these years would be extremely difficult.

In any event, the two sides are obviously still lined up against each other with the big guns of the Supreme Court still thundering and the Dirksen Amendment proponents still hopeful that they can find a way to silence those guns.

"REAL ACTION" on tax reform may come soon, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, center, said on Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on Mutual Radio. Questioning him were Kenneth Crawford, left, of Newsweek magazine and Neil MacNeil of Time magazine.

How to Buy:

Fancy Labeling, Odd Shapes Add to Price Tag on Bread

By Sidney Margolius

YOU CAN PAY AS MUCH AS 45 cents a pound for "egg bread," 35 for "cheese bread" or a nickel more a loaf for "potato bread," and you know what? You'll probably be getting much the same bread as if you paid 22 to 25 cents a pound for ordinary white bread.

When it comes to bread, the public is getting a noticeable kidding. There are no standards for all the special breads. Only ordinary white bread, whole wheat bread, enriched bread, milk bread and raisin bread must meet minimum government specifications for ingredients. A baker can put as much or as little egg as he wants into an "egg bread," as much or as little butter into "butter bread," as much or as little "buttermilk" into "buttermilk bread," and so on.

You can, for example, pay 20 cents more a pound for "egg bread" that may contain only one-third of one egg, worth less than 2 cents (actually 1.8 cents).

For some unknown reason, unless because it is a different shape, you also may pay 10 or 15 percent more for some brands of "sandwich bread" than for the same baker's ordinary white bread. Or if you buy white bread in a round shape instead of oblong, you can pay 35 cents a pound instead of 25.

Moreover, the new "truth in packaging" law is not much help when it comes to bread. We found 12 different weights, ranging from 7 to 32 ounces. Except in a few states that require standard loaves, like a pound, you still have to try to compare the cost per pound of a 16-ounce loaf of white bread at two for 45 cents, with a 20-ounce loaf for 30 cents, a 22-ounce loaf for 37, a 29-ounce loaf for 51, and a 32-ounce loaf for 59.

The Food & Drug Administration itself is concerned about the lack of standards for specialty breads. There is no doubt that the public is either being fooled or is fooling itself. James O. Dunston of the FDA reports, for example, that consumers questioned in a recent survey often believed that a loaf of egg bread has two eggs. Another large group estimated one egg, and a third group, three or more eggs.

But the 17 so-called "egg breads" analyzed by FDA actually contained only one-fifth of an egg to about 1½ eggs.

In contrast, we found some brands of egg bread selling for almost twice as much as ordinary bread.

The public also is far from reality in what it thinks it gets in butter bread. The FDA found that at least one brand of "butter bread" had no butter at all. The average was slightly more than 1½ pats of butter.

BUTTERMILK BREAD is the only special bread checked, which almost approximated the amount of buttermilk the public believes it has. The consumers tended to estimate 8 ounces of buttermilk. The actual average found by FDA was 5 ounces. But you can't depend on it. Some brands had as little as one-half fluid ounce.

Twenty long years ago FDA wanted to establish standards for these various special breads. The bakers insisted on much lower standards than the government agency wanted. For example, FDA proposed at least 5 percent egg solids by weight of flour in egg bread. That's less than half an egg, and low enough. The bakers proposed no more than 2 percent, or one-sixth of an egg.

Similarly, FDA wanted at least 12 percent milk fat from butter in "butter bread," with this as the only shortening. A baker's trade organization wanted the minimum to be only 4 percent.

You see why you need decent standards both for ingredients and sizes.

Copyright 1969 by Sidney Margolius

Soup to Nonsense:

Confetti-Making Waste Basket Eliminates Luxury of Boo-Boos

By Jane Goodsell

ELECTRIC WASTE BASKET. Shreds your memos, estimates, designs—all kinds of important papers—silently, automatically, never to be read again. . . . Starts, stops by itself, no buttons to press . . . two-tone gray on steel . . . $99.00.

—Hammacher Schlemmer gift catalog

THERE MUST BE SCORES of people who'd find an electric waste basket the handiest desk accessory since the invention of the paper clip. Certainly it would be just the thing to give to friends who habitually receive sizzling love letters which would be embarrassing if they fell into the wrong hands. And should you happen to exchange birthday presents with a spy, what could make a nicer gift? An electric waste basket would relieve him of the tedious chore of chewing up and swallowing the letters from Control detailing instructions on cracking the enemy espionage ring. He could simply toss the message into his electric waste basket where it would be shredded into confetti, never to be read again.

But there are, on the other hand, some individuals who lead such hopelessly mismanaged lives that an electric waste basket would be disastrous.

When I consider the important papers that I, and my loved ones, have tossed into waste baskets by mistake, I tremble to think that those baskets might have been the automatic electric kind that immediately grind to a pulp anything and everything. Many of the most dramatic incidents in our family annals have been climaxed by a triumphant shout "I found it!" from somebody who had spent a half hour pawing through a garbage can.

There was the time I found a $25 birthday check from my uncle, wadded up in a mare's nest of excelsior. And the time Katy found the term paper on Plato which she'd stayed up until 2 a.m. writing, and then groggily dumped into the waste-paper basket. Although a few pages had to be re-typed because the remains of a Sugar Daddy had stuck to them, they mercifully hadn't been shredded out of existence.

Of course, we didn't always find what we were looking for, even in non-electric waste baskets. There was the time my husband and I had tickets for a play. We were all dressed up and ready to go when Jim said, "You have the tickets, don't you?" and I said, "No, I thought you had them." We searched the house, but the tickets simply weren't anywhere.

Finally, we changed into dungarees and took turns holding the flashlight and umbrella (I forgot to mention it was pouring down rain), and rummaged through the garbage can — coffee grounds, carrot peels and heaven-knows-what-all. No tickets.

If we'd had an electric waste basket, we'd have known it was hopeless and just sat down and cried. Since we didn't, we kept telling each other that the tickets had to be someplace. And finally, in desperation, I remembered that I'd told them to hold the tickets for us at the box office. We showered, re-dressed and arrived at the theatre halfway through the second act.

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Willingness to Buy:

Improvement Noted In Consumer Outlook

CONSUMER ATTITUDES showed improvement in the first quarter of 1969, regaining the level experienced a year ago, the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center reports. Fears of inflation have not accelerated during the last 12 months. Still, no spending boom is in sight.

The recent change in consumer sentiment resulted from the improvement in three attitudes: consumers' expectations about changes in their personal financial situation over the coming year; expectations regarding business prospects during the next year, and people's opinions about whether it is a good or a bad time to buy large household durables and cars.

Of these, the survey said, only the one regarding near-term expectations about business conditions is now much higher than a year ago. Intentions to buy cars are expressed by a similar proportion of families as a year ago.

Whether recent improvements in consumer sentiment and willingness to buy will continue or prove to be a temporary advance, the report states, may depend on future developments in several areas studied in the survey:

Money Income: Income gains were more frequent during 1968 than during either of the two previous years. No fewer than 35 percent of all family units reported income before taxes of $10,000 or more for 1968, in contrast to 32 percent for 1967 and 27 percent for 1966.

Turning to the future, the proportion expecting income in 1969 to show a gain over last year remains substantial, although not quite as large as a year ago, the economists say.

Inflation: Price increases continue to be felt strongly. Only 61 percent of those who reported making more money than a year ago said that they are financially better off. This figure was close to 80 percent in 1964.

The prospect of further inflation continues to be given by a minority (about 20 percent) as a reason for buying large durable goods and cars now. The extent of price increases expected by consumers has not increased during the last year. In February 1969, 46 percent expected price increases of less than 5 percent and 31 percent expected increases of more than 5 percent during the next 12 months.

Tax Surcharge: Overwhelmingly, American people expect that the tax surcharge will remain in effect during the entire year 1969. Few respondents say that the surcharge matters greatly.

Interest Rates: Americans appear well informed: Some 62 percent of all people and 82 percent of those with more than $10 000 income know that interest rates have increased during the last few months; a majority of them think that the interest rate increase worsens business conditions.

Viet Nam: Opinions about the effects of the international situation, and especially of the war in Viet Nam and the Paris negotiations on domestic business conditions, have improved during the last three months.

The Nixon Administration: The great majority say that the Nixon administration will influence business conditions, and the proportion expecting good effects is almost four times larger than the proportion expecting bad effects. But people's opinions are rather vague: Many say that government policies will promote business, but few mention such specific effects as a slowing down of the rate of inflation.

Recent changes in willingness to buy indicate a rather high level of spending on durable goods and other discretionary items during the next six months, the report concludes, even if real incomes should not grow as rapidly as in 1967-68. "Yet current findings do not indicate a boom in consumer spending. There is nothing in the current attitudinal data to suggest that consumers have become enthusiastic in any respect."

For Youths of Minorities:

'Outreach' Marks Progress In Recruiting Apprentices

Apprenticeship Outreach is working. It is putting youths from minority groups to work at good-paying jobs.

The proof is revealed in Labor Dept. statistics. In 1960, non-whites made up only 2.5 percent of the apprentices in the United States. But for the first half of 1968, 9.4 percent of the newly enrolled 26,-156 apprentices came from the minorities.

"Thus minority representation has tripled in eight years and continues to increase," write Robert M. McGlotten and Doris Gibson Hardesty in the April issue of the American Federationist.

Although these improvements occurred during a period of economic boom that pressed the demand for more workers and landmark civil rights legislation covering fair employment practices, much of the credit must go to Apprenticeship Outreach, the authors observe.

The Outreach program and the related Apprenticeship Information Centers focus on the complex problem of bringing the minority youths into the skilled trades of the construction industry.

The authors, both members of the staff of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, note that minority group youngsters had felt stifled in their efforts to enter the skilled trades to the point that they were not applying for existing apprenticeship openings.

Success Cited

The article cites a successful approach to resolving, the problem undertaken by the Workers Defense League in New York City.

In the spring of 1965, the WDL managed to get one Negro into the apprenticeship program of Sheet Metal Workers Local 28. He was one of 28 Negro applicants the league had tutored for the union's admission examination.

Later that year, the league's improved tutoring techniques paid off and 11 Negro and Puerto Rican applicants were enrolled after passing the entrance examination.

Today, more than 20 percent of the Sheet Metal Workers' apprentices in Local 28 are either Puerto Rican or Negro youngsters, the article notes.

The league learned early in its operations that the tutoring program was an important step in preparing its candidates for the apprenticeship entrance examinations.

It found that there is an educational lag between inner city schools of New York and their suburban counterparts. The tutoring concentrated on mathematics and reading comprehension, which many of the inner city youths lacked.

The Apprenticeship Outreach program evolved out of the Workers' Defense League efforts.

With the support of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, the league negotiated its first "Outreach" contract with the Labor Dept. This was for two years of funding to expand the WDL program in Brooklyn.

Today, there are funded Apprenticeship Outreach programs in 52 major cities across the country, the writers note.

The National Urban League initiated LEAP (Labor Education Advancement Program) in 1966 with the assistance and a $30,000 donation from the AFL-CIO Executive Council. The council renewed this grant during its February meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla.

LEAP currently sponsors Outreach programs in 21 cities.

"All Outreach programs operate with the cooperation and approval of local building trades councils," McGlotten and Mrs. Hardesty report. "Because of this, relationships between the minority community and building trades councils have improved considerably over the past three years."

The Outreach program has demonstrated the ability of the skilled trade unions to rapidly recruit more minority apprentices.

Cleveland Progress

This is documented by the progress in Cleveland, which had only six Negro apprentices in five building trades programs in 1966 before Outreach was initiated. In 1968 alone, 142 apprentices were placed through the efforts of the Outreach program.

Another by-product of Outreach is the journeymen's upgrading program that provides remedial training to help workers achieve journeyman status and meet union journeyman requirements. It now operates in four cities—Buffalo, Oakland, Boston and St. Louis—with the cooperation of the building trades councils and community-based organizations.

Negotiations are now under way for the upgrading programs in 12 of the 52 cities involved in Outreach.

The progress already achieved by Outreach has surpassed all expectations of even a few years ago, McGlotten and Mrs. Hardesty observe.

"Those concerned and involved in these programs feel they not only benefit minority workers and strengthen trade unions," the article concludes, "but that the nation gains as well."

SKILLS OF A TRADE are passed on to a youth recruited through the expanding Apprenticeship Outreach program—now operating in 52 cities across the country. He is one of many minority group youngsters who have cracked the color barrier with the help of Outreach in the past three years.

First-Time Job-Seekers Face Unfavorable Odds

Finding a job is a much bigger problem than keeping one—especially for women and young workers, according to a study conducted by the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Nevertheless, the study, "Job Losers, Leavers, and Entrants," found that "economically" the problem of the job loser is most serious.

The study, published in the April issue of the Monthly Labor Review, a BLS publication, reported that 46.7 percent of all the jobless in 1968 were "entrants," newcomers to the labor force who were unable to find jobs.

Thirty-eight percent were "job losers," persons who had lost a job and were seeking another. The remaining 15.3 percent were "job leavers," persons who voluntarily left one job and were unable to find another.

Among women over 20, entrants made up 48.4 percent of the unemployed, job losers were 34.6 percent and job leavers constituted 17 percent of the total.

Among 16-to-19 year olds of both sexes, entrants were 72.9 percent of total unemployment at that age level, while job losers and job leavers made up only 15.5 and 11.6 respectively.

Males-over-20 was the only classification in which job losers made up the bulk of the unemployed, 60.4 percent. Entrants were 22.9 percent; job leavers, 16.7 percent.

As to the seriousness of unemployment among job losers, the study noted that half of the total of 1.1 million in this category in 1968 were heads of families. One-third of the job leavers and one-sixth of the unemployed entrants were family heads.

"The job loser's low level of educational attainment creates an especially difficult situation," the article observed. On the average, the study found that the person who lost his job had about a year and a half less schooling than one who left a job voluntarily or was an unemployed entrant into the labor force.

Monthly Labor Review announced that henceforth it will carry statistics in each issue classifying the unemployed as job losers, job leavers and entrants.

VIETNAMESE CONGRESSMEN view the Washington skyline from the eighth floor balcony of the AFL-CIO building. They stopped at the federation headquarters to thank Pres. George Meany for U.S. labor's support of Vietnamese unions. From left are Phan Ngoc Nguyen, Tran Cong Quoc, Harry Goldberg of the AFL-CIO Dept. of International Affairs, Phan Huy Duc and an interpreter.

Electronic Unions Ask Voluntary Import Curbs

Three unions representing workers in the U.S. electronics industry have called for voluntary agreements between countries to reduce the flood of foreign-made products and components and help save jobs in this country and Canada.

The voluntary approach rather than rigid import quotas, was recommended by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, the Machinists, and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers following a visit to the Far East by a trade union study team. The delegation included IAM Research Dir. Vernon Jirikowic, IUE Vice Pres. George Hutchens, and George Collins and David Lasser, assistants to IUE Pres. Paul Jennings.

The trip was made after the Labor Dept. reported a drop of 48,000 jobs in the U.S. manufacture of radio and TV sets and parts from 1966 to 1968. The union delegation reported that foreign imports have wiped out domestic production of transistor radios. It said a similar pattern is in prospect for TV sets, phonographs, tape recorders and other home appliances unless solutions are found to the problem of low-wage foreign competition.

In Japan, the worker delegates met with officers of Denki Roren, representing union electrical workers, and the Japan Council of the Intl. Metalworkers Federation. Japanese union officers will visit the United States and Canada in June to complete the final phase of the study.

In Taiwan, Hong Kong and South Korea, the Americans found extensive production by U.S. subsidiary companies and special tax favors for U.S. corporations.

Companies involved in making goods overseas for U.S. consumption include General Electric Co., Westinghouse, Motorola, RCA, Philco-Ford, Sylvania, Admiral, General Instrument, Sprague, Fairchild, Lockheed, Ampex and many others, the union men said.

Furniture Firm Makes Labor's Unfair List

The strike-bound Economy Furniture Co. of Austin, Tex., has been placed on the "Do Not Patronize" list of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

The department took action at the request of the Upholsterers, whose Local 456 has been on strike since last Nov. 27. The AFL-CIO Executive Council had called for full labor support at its Feb. 18 meeting.

Bias Charged

Noting that the company refused to bargain in good faith, even after employes designated the Upholsterers as their legal bargaining agent, the council charged that management showed additional bias by "engaging in name-calling with particular emphasis on the Mexican-American ethnic background" of a majority of its employes.

The council statement deplored "the unfair, unjust and biased acts of the company" and urged all affiliates to support the strikers in any way open to them.

Economy makes three lines of wooden and upholstered furniture labeled Smithtowne Maple, Western Provincial and Built-Rite. Until the strike started, nearly 40 percent of Economy's production was bought by Montgomery Ward & Co., the union reported. Economy also makes products for the White Discount Stores, located mainly in the South.

Economy Furniture is still operating with the help of strikebreakers, the union said. "Latest reports are that 125 strikebreakers are working. Outside the plant, 385 union members are picketing in shifts, 24 hours a day, seven days a week."

FIRE FIGHTERS rescue children who were trapped in a blazing Chicago apartment building. The photo, by William Kelly of the Chicago Tribune, was the first prize entry in the fourth annual Awards Program sponsored by the Fire Fighters. The union gave awards for 24 other entries by the news media.

Fire Fighters Present News Coverage Awards

Leading news stories, photos and broadcasts that documented the achievements, problems and heroics of the Fire Fighters were singled out by the union for awards.

Two newspaper stories, a news photo, a radio editorial and a television documentary were judged the best efforts by entries from news media in the fourth annual IAFF International Awards Program.

The level of excellence of the entries in the awards contest, said Fire Fighters Pres. William H. McClennan, "is a sure indication of continued public recognition of the fire fighter's vital role in his community."

First prize winners in each category receive a $500 award. Second place awards are $250.

The top winners are:

- Jack Mosely of the Fort Worth, Tex., Press for a series of articles on the Fort Worth fire protection system and its inadequacies. It was in the category for newspapers with circulation under 100,000.
- James R. Conant of the Baltimore News American for a six-part series that detailed the duties of Baltimore fire fighters in hazardous fires, rescue operations, riots and other emergencies. This award was for newspapers of more than 100,000 circulation.
- William Kelly of the Chicago Tribune for one of a series of photos of fire fighters rescuing children trapped in a blazing apartment building.
- Dick Briggs of television station KELO in Sioux Falls, S. D., for a documentary on fire hazards, fire prevention and procedures for survival in a fire. The film also covered the work of the Sioux Falls fire department.
- Jack Dennett of radio station CFRB in Toronto, Ont., for a hard-hitting editorial supporting upgraded salaries for city fire fighters.

More Winners

Second prize winners are: Paul Gauvin and Milton Silvia of the New Bedford, Mass., Standard-Times; Dorothy Storck of Chicago's American; William P. Roesing of the Providence, R. I., Evening Bulletin; Keith Klein and Ed Roth of Chicago television station WMAQ, and John Moncrief and David Day of Fort Worth radio station KFJZ.

The union awarded special citations to Fire Fighters Locals 734 and 964 in Baltimore for "effective and responsible efforts to show their awareness of their civic responsibility."

Special citations also went to the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. of Maryland and the news media and public agencies of Dunreith, Ind.

Entries for the contest were submitted by IAFF locals throughout the United States and Canada.

Judges of the entries were Dir. Albert Zack of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Public Relations, Alan Adams of McGraw-Hill Publications and Warren Kimball of the National Fire Protection Association.

Shipbuilders Ratify Pact at Quincy Yard

Quincy, Mass.—Members of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers at the Quincy shipyard of General Dynamics Corp. voted to accept a new five-year contract with wages and other benefits totaling $1.10 an hour.

Union negotiators headed by Pres. Andrew A. Pettis secured wage increases totaling 73 cents an hour in annual steps of 20, 12, 11, 15 and 15 cents plus cost-of-living increases of up to 4 cents an hour in each of the last two years.

Other gains include the equivalent of a 10th paid holiday—a half-day each on Christmas Eve and New Year's Eve, reduction of employe hospitalization insurance payments by 50 percent this year and full company payment next year, plus increased weekly disability payments, vacation benefits and insurance.

Two-Year Industrial Relations Study:

Canadian Task Force Report Called 'Mixed Bag' for Labor

Ottawa—Canadian trade unionists are pondering a 250-page report summarizing the most intensive investigation ever made of industrial relations in Canada and proposing a number of radical innovations. The two-year study, commissioned by the federal government, was made by four prominent university professors who backed up their own probing with a series of special studies.

The recommendations range over the whole ambit of labor affairs from picketing to union participation in political matters. In one comment the task force said it could find no evidence to support suggestions that unions are the chief villain in causing inflationary trends. It suggested that a closer look be taken at some management practices and influences.

Reaction to the report by labor officials has been varied. Canadian Labor Congress Pres. Donald MacDonald described it as "a mixed bag." Most other union leaders agreed with him that while there was a good deal in the report to criticize there was also much that was favorable to labor. They voiced concern at repeated suggestions of greatly increased government intervention in internal union affairs. But they welcomed the complete rejection of any general application of compulsory arbitration.

Canada's federal labor legislation applies to only a small part of the labor force, particularly transportation and communications. Most workers come under provincial labor laws. But with a number of the provinces considering overhaul of their labor laws, the proposals of the task force assume wide implications. Federal labor legislation is also slated for a general revision, but action is not anticipated before late in the year.

Give and Take

The task force appears, to some degree, to give with one hand and take away with the other. It proposes the granting of compulsory irrevocable dues check-off automatically with negotiation of the first contract. But it then goes on to comment: "They (unions) can no longer claim the status of private associations whose internal affairs are solely their concern." It adopts the position that unions are, in effect, quasi-public and so should be subject to definite controls.

After carefully qualifying that abuses of union democracy in Canada are rare it finds that, nevertheless, there is need for the imposition of a "Bill of Rights" for union members. This, it suggests, should cover the right of a union member to be heard, to be tried by an impartial body, to be represented by counsel at any union trial, to have access to union publications in an election campaign, and to be entitled to obtain financial statements and copies of agreements.

The report suggested that the Canadian Labor Congress and any other central body should set up review boards, in consultation with the Canada Labor Relations Board, to hear members' complaints. The complainant would have the right of appeal to the CLRB.

That body would, itself, be drastically revamped and its powers greatly extended if the proposals were adopted. It is now composed of labor and management representatives who serve on a part-time basis and whose main job is the certification of unions for collective bargaining purposes.

Public Board Asked

The task force proposes a five-man "public" board composed of individuals with neither labor nor management connections who would serve full-time. This idea has come under attack on the ground that people of practical experience would be excluded.

The newly-suggested board would have authority to consolidate existing bargaining units and order multi-union, multi-plant or multi-employer bargaining. It could also concern itself with many aspects of a union's operations, extending even to whether or not the dues structure was reasonable.

While these suggestions received an unfavorable reception from most labor spokesmen there was enthusiasm for the position of the task force in rejecting the idea of regional bargaining units—a contentious issue in Canada.

The report proposes drafting of a broad new code covering picketing, clarifying workers' rights and placing the enforcement in the hands of the Labor Relations Board, rather than the courts. The task force expressed the hope that such a procedure would reduce the use of injunctions which have become a hot issue in many parts of the country.

A major part of the report was devoted to strikes affecting the public interest. The report proposed the appointment of a three-man Public Interests Disputes Commission which would have wide discretionary powers in attempting to effect a settlement. Final intervention with a compulsory settlement would be reserved for Parliament, and the task force suggested such action should be taken only in the most extreme cases.

One section of the report dealt with the place of international unions in the Canadian industrial structure. More than 70 percent of Canadian union members belong to international unions, almost all of which are affiliated to the CLC in Canada and to the AFL-CIO in the United States.

The report suggested a four-point check-list for good international union operations: A central Canadian office; election by the Canadian membership of a Canadian as a senior officer; holding of a regular Canadian policy conference to deal with the union's affairs in Canada; a competent staff to deal with the special needs of the Canadian membership.

The report endorsed the idea of union political action but laid down some firm proposals to govern union financial support to a political party. These included: approval by a representative body of the union; separation of political funds in a special account; and provision for dissenting members to opt out, either by application to the union or to the Labor Relations Board, thus protecting their identity.

CANADA will print 30 million 6-cent stamps commemorating the 50th anniversary of the Intl. Labor Organization. The unusual stamp, which is readable no matter which side is up, will be released May 21.

Project HOPE Moves To Home Front Needs

Laredo, Tex.—Project HOPE, which has brought medical care and training to developing nations around the world for 10 years, has initiated its first domestic health education program.

The program announced by Dr. William B. Walsh, HOPE's founder and president, will use teaching techniques learned abroad to better enable the community to deliver health services.

Laredo was chosen with the aim of improving health care for Mexican-Americans and other members of minority groups. If the program proves successful, HOPE expects to duplicate it elsewhere.

Local people will be trained in nursing, laboratory techniques, community health and other fields. In addition, HOPE will offer high school equivalency training and establish a Mexican-American cultural studies program.

Cooperating with the program are the University of Texas; Laredo hospitals, medical groups and schools; the Laredo Vocational Rehabilitation Office and the Texas state government.

The program is planned for a three-to-five-year period at an estimated cost of $1.5 million. Local and state agencies will assume administration of the program at the end of the period.

Project HOPE is the principal activity of The People-to-People Health Foundation, Inc., of Washington, D.C., which since 1959 has sponsored the hospital ship S.S. HOPE.

Supported by contributions, the ship has conducted medical teaching and treatment programs in eight nations on four continents. It has trained more than 5,100 physicians, surgeons, dentists, nurses and technologists.

Labor backed the project when it was first getting started and over the years AFL-CIO affiliates and members have helped provide funds. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Harry Goldberg of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs are members of the foundation's board.

In recalling the hospital ship's accomplishments, Dr. Walsh said "We now feel that HOPE should turn some of its talent and experience inward and work among our own minority groups to give them the hope and confidence to survive and progress in our society. "We know this can be done by education, particularly in the health support fields. We have trained hundreds considered untrainable and have successfully bridged the cultural gap with our approach."

$4-Billion Slash:

Budget Cutback Sets Nixon Austerity Line

(Continued from Page 1)
the social security tax rate a year ahead of schedule.

It also assumes that Congress will then vote the much smaller "cost of living" social security benefit raise that Nixon is proposing rather than the substantially higher benefit increases recommended by Johnson.

If that were done, the social security trust fund would take in as much as was contemplated in the Johnson budget but pay out $1 billion less.

There were indications however, that the Administration was marking time until new tax revenue figures are in. They are expected to show more revenue than had been anticipated in the Johnson budget and perhaps permit the claimed budget surplus of $5.8 billion to be maintained without relying on higher social security taxes.

The claimed surplus is also based on an assumption that Congress will raise postage rates and continue the 10 percent income tax surcharge—both measures recommended by the Johnson as well as the Nixon Administrations.

Congress, of course, will have the final say on spending and the White House budget revisions met the anticipated contradictory responses. House Ways & Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), who pushed through a big budget slash last year, complained that Nixon didn't cut deeply enough. Other congressmen and senators sharply protested cutbacks in domestic programs, including a $100 million "savings" through closing of scores of Job Corps camps.

Most of the cuts were less dramatic and harder to pinpoint. For example, the revised Labor Dept. budget showed less money for the Wage & Hour division, even though the number of authorized jobs remained the same.

When top department officials were asked at a press briefing how this could be, the reply was that money would be saved by leaving job vacancies unfilled.

"Wouldn't that mean that fewer places of employment would be inspected for violations of the wage-hour law?"

The reply was hesitant: "Possibly," but every effort would be made to avoid such a result.

Nixon, in his broad legislative message, said he will soon send to Congress recommendations for "an increase in social security benefits, to take account of the rise in living costs."

This, the Administration indicated, would consist of a 7 percent increase, to take effect next February, along with an amendment raising the amount of outside earnings a person over 65 can have while he is drawing social security.

Pres. Johnson's proposal had called for an increase averaging 13 percent, with at least 10 percent for everyone and a substantially bigger raise for those receiving the least. It would also have extended Medicare to nearly 2 million disabled persons between 50 and 65 and ease the restrictions on social security disability benefits.

Nixon also told Congress, without spelling out the details, that he will soon submit proposals for:

- New measures to combat organized crime and crack down on racketeers, narcotics traffickers and obscenity peddlers.
- A program of tax credits to provide "new incentives" for business to help meet social needs.
- A plan to strengthen the equal employment opportunity program.
- Some form of home rule and congressional representation for the District of Columbia.
- A "start on sharing the revenues of the federal government" with "other levels of government."
- "Far-reaching" new programs to develop airways, airports and mass transit systems.
- "A comprehensive labor and manpower program, including job training and placement, improvements in unemployment insurance, and proposals to help guarantee the health and safety of workers."
- Tax reform. "New legislation will be proposed to prevent several specific abuses this year, and plans will be set in motion for a comprehensive revision of our tax structure by 1970."

The President defended the pace of his Administration, declaring that the time lag in formulating his program has been necessary to permit a thorough review and study of the problems.

He added: "In other areas, where more time is needed, we will take more time."

In a supplementary statement on budget changes affecting urban programs, the Administration said it has sought to pinpoint the programs that weren't living up to expectations and cut back or abolish them, while making new starts on other approaches.

The statement reiterated the Administration's preference for handing over broad purpose funds to states rather than federal grants to cities and counties as well as states, earmarked for specific projects.

The Nixon budget calls for removal by Congress of the freeze it imposed on aid to needy families with dependent children. It allocates an additional $307 million to the AFDC program on the assumption that the freeze will be repealed. Congress last year postponed for another year the date on which it was to have gone into effect.

IUD Sets Conference On Job Safety, Health

A national occupational health and safety conference has been called by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., June 4 and 5, at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington.

In a letter to department affiliates, IUD Pres. I. W. Abel said, "It is our belief that the time has come for drastic reform" of health and safety standards. A detailed program for the conference will be announced later.

FIFTH GRADE PUPILS from Public School 270, Brooklyn, N.Y. were treated to a luncheon by Operating Engineers Pres. Hunter P. Wharton, right, while they were in Washington to promote the kickoff of the Treasury Dept.'s annual U.S. Savings Bond drive. The children's trip was sponsored by IUOE Local 891. Seated center is Jesse Adams, director of sales for the department's savings bond division.

Labor Viewed As Key Factor In Social Gains

Boise, Idaho—Labor's commitment "to help in the uplift of all workers remains strong and vibrant" even though unions have achieved many of their earlier goals for their members, AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis declared.

In an address to a Pacific Northwest Labor History Conference here sponsored by Gonzaga University, Davis refuted those who contend that labor is no longer a dynamic force.

Enemies Active

For one thing, he noted, labor's enemies are as busy as ever trying to weaken unions and their programs, "so if labor was as weak as some say, most of the economic and social gains of the past would be wiped out."

He noted that organized labor has been the "dominant voice" in securing higher minimum wages, strengthened civil rights laws, more aid to education, and other measures that benefit everyone, not just union members.

Labor has "moved into a larger dimension" of helping all Americans and its militancy and influence in improving society "will continue to grow," Davis concluded.

Labor Dept. to Train Jobless in Public Service

The Labor Dept. plans a start this year on a new program of job training for the hard-core unemployed in public service occupations.

It will be known as Job Opportunities in the Public Sector (JOPS) and will be a smaller-scale counterpart of the continuing Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) program.

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz said the goal will be to finance the cost of on-the-job training for some 17,000 persons who will be employed in permanent jobs in city, county and state governments and in private, non-profit establishments including hospitals.

It is not a "government as employer of last resort" approach, Shultz stressed. But he noted that public employment has been steadily increasing and is not subject to the sharp job fluctuations of private industry.

The implication appeared to be that the government would be able to shift more of its manpower training emphasis to the public sector if a business downturn curtailed entrance-level jobs in the private sector.

A large part of the funds for the new program will come from shifting money from the Manpower Administration's "new careers" program.

Shultz said the Labor Dept. will consult with unions representing public employes on the operation of the program and hopes to have their cooperation.

The Job Opportunities in the Business Sector program will not be curtailed as a result of the new public sector program, the Administration indicated. It was one of the few programs allocated as much money as proposed in the Johnson Administration budget.

Big Bond Drive 'Eagle' Brings Pupils to Capital

Forty-three fifth grade pupils from Public School 270, Brooklyn, N.Y., interrupted affairs of state at the White House. But it wasn't another student demonstration. It took place at the invitation of Pres. Nixon—and with his enthusiastic participation.

Accompanied by their principal and teachers, the children were brought to Washington by the Operating Engineers to kick off the annual Federal Payroll Savings drive of the U.S. Treasury Dept.

They brought with them a 60-by-80 foot banner, a reproduction of the campaign eagle of the U.S. Savings Bonds program. After school hours, in the gymnasium of their school, which is in the heart of the Bedford-Stuyvesant District, they and some of their parents had spent months making the banner.

Howard J. Siemers, custodian of the school and a member of Local 891 of the Operating Engineers, originated the project as an effort to develop a meaningful neighborhood activity that would produce a sense of community achievement.

Siemers had guided it almost to completion when, on Apr. 2, he suffered a heart attack which prevented him from coming to Washington. His wife and son represented him.

When the U.S. Savings Bond Division heard of the project, they asked if it would be possible to have the children come to Washington. With the assistance of IUOE Pres. Hunter P. Wharton, Executive Vice Pres. Richard H. Nolan and Local 891 Pres. Daniel F. Conlin, the arrangements were made.

It had been planned to send Pres. Nixon a two-by-three-foot framed satin reproduction of the eagle design, but the White House was so impressed with the project that it invited the entire group to meet with the Chief Executive.

The President spoke and shook hands with each of the children, Miss Rose Deering, principal of P.S. 270, and Anthony Perry, president of the school's PTA when the rain that had taken the ceremony inside let up momentarily. Nixon asked the children to lay out the big emblem on the south lawn, and he and they then posed for pictures together.

House Passes Bill to Curb Oil Pollution

The House voted 392-1 approval of legislation aimed at protecting coastal areas and inland waterways from pollution.

Its chief target is oil pollution—from off-shore wells and tankers. The bill would prohibit the discharge of oil in coastal waters and make the owners of ships or oil rigs financially responsible for the clean-up operations—up to a limit of $10 million for ships and $8 million for oil rigs.

A Senate committee is in the final stages of drafting an even stricter bill—with no limit on the financial liability.

The House-passed bill also would require all ships and boats registered by the Coast Guard to treat sewage before dumping it.

It imposes for the first time a federal curb on thermal pollution from atomic energy power plants that discharge heated water into rivers and streams. Utilities seeking a license from the Atomic Energy Commission would either have to meet state water pollution standards or, in the absence of state regulation, standards set by the Interior Dept.

The legislation, which also provides for research into ways of combatting acid draining from mines, is stronger than a token bill the House passed last year. That legislation died in a House-Senate conference deadlock.

This year, opposition to pollution controls faded in the face of public outrage over the oil pollution of a large section of the California coast. In debate before passage of the House bill, the chief criticism was from those who wanted a stronger bill.

CORRECTION

The AFL-CIO News reported Apr. 12 that Member Sam Zagoria of the National Labor Relations Board had dissented in a decision finding the Conolon Corp. of Santa Ana, Calif., guilty of interfering with an election by soliciting office employes to wear mini-skirts while distributing anti-union literature.

Zagoria actually was one of the three Board members who found that the company violated the law by its solicitation of clerical employes to distribute anti-union literature. He found, however, that the company's conduct did not interfere with the election in the production and maintenance unit.

28 Latins in Class:

Nixon Lauds AIFLD On 25th Graduation

(Continued from Page 1)

an important role by involving rank-and-file workers in its activities," the message emphasized.

Meany gave certificates of graduation to 28 union leaders from 15 Latin countries who spent six weeks studying advanced collective bargaining and related subjects at AIFLD's Front Royal, Va., Institute, and taking field study trips in Cuernavaca, Mexico; St. Louis, and New York City.

Responding to critics who believe Latin leaders should be trained on a government-to-government and business-to-business basis, Meany said "we don't buy that. It might be more comfortable that way, but there is no guarantee that the ensuing economic improvement would work its way down to the lowest rungs of the economic ladder." He added:

"I personally feel that, no matter what else happens in the Alliance for Progress, the program of education offered by AIFLD will have a lasting impact on the future of Latin America. We are going to continue this work."

No nation can build prosperity on low wages and inferior working conditions, Meany declared. A country's wealth should be measured not by roads or great edifices but on the basis of social and economic conditions experienced by the great mass of its people, he told the class.

The exercises were held in the AFL-CIO assembly room. Besides Meany, others participating were Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, AIFLD secretary-treasurer, and General Sec. Arturo Jauregui of ORIT—the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers.

Also present were Vice Pres. Norman Carigman of W. R. Grace & Co. for AIFLD Board Chairman J. Peter Grace; AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Andrew McLellan; George P. Delaney, special assistant to the Secretary of State for Intl. Labor Affairs; Robert Black of the Agency for Intl. Development; and AIFLD staff officers Angelo Verdu, Charles B. Wood and Emanuel Boggs.

Orlando E. Bustos, organizing secretary for the Textile Workers' Union of Argentina, spoke for the graduates in expressing appreciation of the institute's work.

Workers of the United States have "crossed national boundaries" in creating the institute, and "with generosity and altruism have offered to those without the same advantages the means of attaining effective education and international experience," Bustos said.

Work of this kind, he said, "is needed in all parts of the world." Even in this hemisphere, "innocent people are being struck down; overriding violence and repression still throttle those who clamor for social justice; humble people are still being punished for aspiring to live in a better world," he declared.

Class members, Bustos said, have committed themselves formally to "the fight to achieve the common good, and eradicate forever the phantoms which, in various forms, stalk America."

Jauregui told the graduation dinner audience that while dictatorships have spread in some Latin American lands, they soon lose popular support because of their denial of freedom and democracy.

The Latin labor movement has grown from a few to the point where free, democratic inter-American labor represents 28.5 million workers, "working together toward the same goal," he said.

Class students were picked to take the course by fellow unionists in Argentina, Chile, Columbia, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Panama, Peru, Uruguay and Venezuela.

In seven years the AIFLD has trained more than 700 labor leaders at Front Royal; selected labor economists in advanced training at Loyola and Georgetown universities, and more than 100,000 unionists at resident centers and regional seminars in Central and South America.

ARGENTINE union leader Orlando E. Bustos, left, receives certificate from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at graduation exercises climaxing 25th training program of the American Institute for Free Labor Development. Bustos, a member of the Textile Workers' Union of Argentina, expressed the appreciation of 28 class members for six-week course in advanced collective bargaining. Meany is AIFLD president.

Peace Corps Seeks Union Volunteers

The Peace Corps is seeking skilled volunteers to meet critical shortages in a number of crafts—mechanics, masons, electricians, draftsmen, machinists, equipment operators, carpenters, pipefitters, plumbers, welders and "you name it."

In an appeal directed particularly to union members, the Corps said, "We have not been able to sign up enough skilled workers in the past, and we don't have enough now.

"Meantime we are getting a rising number of requests from overseas asking for volunteers who have the practical skills so scarce in the poorer nations."

Interested workers may obtain more information by writing Ed Pautienus, Room 715, Peace Corps, Washington, D.C. 20525.

'Carry On!'

Hill Democrats Push Repeal of Tax Credit

House Democrats declared that the 7 percent investment tax credit is "inflationary" and called on the House Ways & Means Committee to consider its repeal.

Meanwhile legislation to achieve that purpose and other reforms in the federal tax system was introduced by the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, Sen. Fred R. Harris (D-Okla.).

The investment tax credit allows companies to deduct from their federal tax bill an amount equal to 7 percent of their outlays for new machinery and equipment.

The AFL-CIO called for repeal of the tax credit in testimony before the Ways & Means Committee earlier this month. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said the credit amounts to a $3 billion-a-year giveaway and means individual taxpayers are "picking up the tab so that a private firm can get a discount on the cost of its equipment."

Resolution Adopted

The action by the House Democrats came when a caucus of the majority party adopted a resolution offered by Rep. Charles A. Vanik (D-Ohio), a member of the Ways & Means Committee.

The resolution stated that "it is the sense of the caucus that the 7 percent investment credit is inflationary" and called upon the committee to expedite repeal if it confirmed this finding.

The resolution said the committee's action "should not be delayed by other legislative considerations." Vanik said the intent of this clause was that the committee should not hold up action on the tax credit while it considers other tax reforms.

Harris said that his legislation would suspend the investment tax credit for corporations and use the resulting $3 billion increase in revenue to reduce to 7 percent the 10 percent income surtax, which Pres. Nixon wants extended another year.

He said his tax plan—contained in three bills—also would increase tax deductions for those with low incomes while imposing a "minimum income tax" on the wealthy who now enjoy certain tax shelters.

Arthur F. Burns, a top economic adviser to Nixon, said the Administration will offer tax-reform with a "minimum tax" requirement on incomes of the wealthy. The Administration's proposal is expected to go to the Hill shortly.

Harris, who declared that his bills carry out the intent of the 1968 Democratic platform, explained his plan as follows:

1. The "minimum income tax" would impose a levy on at least half of all individual or corporate incomes at present rates, regardless of source. This, he estimated would bring in about $1.2 billion in new revenue.

2. Increased minimum standard deductions for individuals would relieve from any tax liability the majority of persons below the poverty-level standard.

3. An end to the investment tax credit would allow reduction of the surtax and at the same time remove a source of inflation.

Steelworkers Picked At Winston-Salem Plant

Winston-Salem, N.C.—The Steelworkers defeated the unaffiliated Teamsters in a National Labor Relations Board election at the Gravely Tractor Co. Results of the first major union victory here in 10 years were USWA 182, Teamsters 14, no union 67.

FDA Praised For Policy on Drug Control

The Food & Drug Administration was praised by the AFL-CIO for its most recent effort to "protect the medical consumer from drug combinations which require him to receive stronger chemicals than is necessary."

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller commended FDA Commissioner Dr. Herbert Ley, Jr., for his action in setting a 30-day deadline for drug manufacturers to demonstrate the safety of certain combinations of drugs in the treatment of diseases for which they are prescribed.

"At issue in this instance are 78 products which panels of the National Academy of Sciences—National Research Council have found dangerous as well as ineffective," Biemiller noted.

He wrote Dr. Ley that his decision "merits the support of all Americans" and added:

"The reaction of certain drug companies was predictable from the recent experience with Upjohn's Panalba and Squibb's Mysteclin. Consequently, when a grant of a stay brought 3,000 testimonials from physicians solicited by the drug manufacturers, we find your decision the more commendable and courageous."

In pledging continued vigorous AFL-CIO support of the Food & Drug Administration's protective role, Biemiller noted that the labor movement was one of the original sponsors of the legislation to establish the FDA.

"We are delighted," Biemiller said, "that the FDA from its inception has been zealous in protecting the American people from fraudulent and dangerous drugs."

4-19-69

Representation Sought For Utility Consumers

New England's labor movement gave strong endorsement to a bill in Congress setting up an independent agency to represent consumers and the public interest before federal and state utility regulatory agencies.

Thomas F. Policastro, president of the six-state New England AFL-CIO Council, urged a Senate Government Operations subcommittee to approve legislation sponsored by Sen. Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.) and 10 other senators.

The legislation would establish a utility consumers' counsel with a staff competent to deal with the complexities of utility rates and services.

Policastro, who is also president of the Rhode Island AFL-CIO, said the legislation is of particular importance to the New England states, where electric power rates are the highest in the nation.

"When we refer to the consumers," Policastro said, "I am not restricting my concern solely to the residential union member paying rates 34 percent higher than the national average. We include the commercial customer who pays 50 percent above national average, and the industrial consumers who pay a whopping 62 percent over the national average."

He quoted the president of a Rhode Island manufacturing company who said his firm is moving from New England because it found "power costs in Rhode Island are running about 66 percent more than comparable investor-owned power charges elsewhere."

Policastro charged that "almost without exception, our state utility regulatory commissions are and have been ineffective. They are simply overwhelmed by the political strength and propaganda of utilities they are supposed to regulate."

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, April 26, 1969 | No. 17

Labor Says Nixon Reforms Fall Short of Tax Justice

Victory for Conservatives:

House Trims Back Education Aid Bill

By Duane Emme

The conservative coalition in the House gave the Nixon Administration its first important victory in Congress by passing a two-year extension of the Elementary & Secondary Education Act along with changes in the basic school aid law.

The measure as previously approved by the House Education & Labor Committee would have extended the law for another five years.

But during three days of debate it became clear that the Republicans were almost solidly against the five-year extension while the House leadership was having trouble holding Democrats, particularly the Southerners, for the committee bill.

Reluctantly, Committee Chairman Carl C. Perkins (D-Ky.), who managed the committee bill on the floor, proposed a compromise to reduce the extension from five to three years. But his substitute was beaten 203-152.

The House then voted 235-184 for the two-year extension favored by Pres. Nixon in a measure that also included a limited block-grant provision for some educational aid programs.

Only nine Republicans broke ranks to support the committee bill.

The bill authorizes $5 billion in each of the two years for aid to education. But budget limitations and congressional appropriations under the program have been running less than half of authorizations in past years. The $5 billion figure merely means that Congress can't appropriate more than that amount. It can vote as little as it chooses for the education programs.

(Continued on Page 7)

Bishops' Aid Sought in Farm Dispute

The Catholic bishops of America were urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to help settle the long farm workers' strike against California table grape growers.

In a telegram to the president of the U.S. Catholic Conference, John Cardinal Dearden, Meany expressed appreciation for the support the farm workers had already received from the bishops.

On Apr. 17, at their meeting in Houston, the bishops had adopted a strong statement, wired to congressional leaders, urging extension of the National Labor Relations Act to farm workers. The bishops declared that "the right to organize must be realistically vindicated."

Meany praised this action and noted that labor wants "an early end to the strike and a halt to the boycott made necessary by the intransigence of the employers."

"We believe there is a possibility that third-party intervention with the grape growers could be of value

(Continued on Page 3)

KIDS WANT TO SWIM and the Ohio State AFL-CIO is with them all the way. The state labor federation collected 41,500 signatures on petitions protesting recently-imposed swimming fees at state parks. The petitions are rolled into the state capitol by the children of two members of the Communications Workers, Kathy Hill and Ronnie Mullins.

Trend Continues:

Jobless Rate Drops In Poverty Areas

The jobless rate continues to drop faster in poverty neighborhoods than in the nation as a whole, but there's still an unemployment gap between the fortunate and less fortunate.

That is shown by the Labor Dept.'s report on the employment situation in poverty neighborhoods in the nation's 100 largest cities for the first quarter in 1969.

The report showed that the unemployment rate in the poverty neighborhoods was 5.6 percent in the first quarter of this year compared to 7 percent in the same period in 1968—a 20 percent drop in the jobless rate.

For the nation as a whole, the jobless rate was 3.6 percent in the first quarter of 1969 compared to 4 percent in the first three months of 1968—a reduction of 10 percent.

The government noted that this marks the fourth straight quarter in which over-the-year drops in the poverty neighborhood unemployment rate have exceeded comparable declines in the national rate.

It was viewed as evidence that job programs aimed at helping the disadvantaged are reaching their targets.

Total unemployment in the big city poverty neighborhoods averaged 361,000 in the first quarter of 1969 compared to 457,000 in the period a year earlier. The drop accounted for nearly two-fifths of the 250,000 decline in total unemployment between the two periods.

Of the 361,000 unemployed in poverty neighborhoods, approximately 45 percent were adult men, 31 percent were adult women and 24 percent were in the 16-19 teenager category.

This contrasts with other urban neighborhoods where a smaller pro-

(Continued on Page 3)

Meany Hails 7% Credit Repeal Plan

By David L. Perlman

The Nixon Administration's tax reform proposal represents "a major step toward stopping inflation but a hesitant and less-clear step toward tax justice," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared.

Meany praised Pres. Nixon's call for repeal of the 7 percent tax credit, a step the AFL-CIO has long urged.

The investment credit, which requires the federal government to pay part of the cost of all new equipment and machinery purchased by private corporations, is "the most inflationary device in the economy and should be halted at once," Meany said.

He also welcomed Nixon's proposal to lift the income tax burden from the very poorest individuals and families—those earning poverty-level incomes.

But Meany protested the inadequacy of the Administration's tax loophole-closing proposals, declaring they "are just nowhere near enough to achieve tax justice."

Nixon described the Administration proposal as a "first step" toward tax reform and said he has asked the Treasury Dept. to prepare more comprehensive recommendations by Nov. 30.

In the near future, he added, the Administration will also recommend a plan for revenue sharing with state and local governments. It will also propose a new system of tax credits to encourage business firms to invest in poverty areas and to hire and train the hard-core unemployed.

Meany protested that "it ought not to be necessary for the Treas-

(Continued on Page 8)

Sharp Rise in Prices Wipes Out Pay Gains

A sharp rise in consumer prices—the largest monthly increase since February 1951—wiped out gains in take-home pay in March and left the nation's workers with less purchasing power than they had a year ago.

The eight-tenths of 1 percent spurt in living costs last month stemmed from significant boosts in interest rates for home mortgages as well as maintenance and repair costs, higher prices for used cars and gasoline and increased costs for food and clothing.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics said the March increase in the consumer price index put the cost of living 5.1 percent higher than a year ago. It noted that in the first three months of 1969 consumer prices showed the sharpest rate of advance for any three-month period since May-July 1956.

While spendable earnings averaged $97.82 in March for a worker with three dependents—an increase of $4.52 or 4.8 percent over a year ago—in terms of real purchasing power the figure was $77.88, or 20 cents lower than a year earlier.

March was the second straight month, BLS reported, that real spendable earnings were below year-ago levels.

The report showed an increase also in the wholesale price index of five-tenths of 1 percent in March

(Continued on Page 3)

Contempt Suit Filed Against J. P. Stevens

The National Labor Relations Board has asked a federal Appeals Court to find J. P. Stevens & Co. guilty of contempt of court for flouting two previous orders of the court to stop violating the rights of its employes.

Stevens, a big government cloth contractor, is the nation's most notorious union-busting firm, with a long series of NLRB findings and court orders against it.

The NLRB petitioned the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, New York City, to hold Stevens in contempt for "disobeying and failing and refusing to comply" with orders of the same court issued Sept. 1, 1967 and Mar. 26, 1968.

The contempt motion will be heard Apr. 30 by a three-judge panel. It asks no criminal penalties for disobeying court orders. But if Stevens, the nation's second largest textile chain, is found to have been contemptuous, the way will be open for future criminal contempt charges.

(Continued on Page 6)

UNIONS WERE URGED by Arthur J. Goldberg, former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, to increase their support of the UN as the best available means for achieving peace. He spoke at a Washington luncheon for labor leaders sponsored by the United Nations Association of the USA. Seated at Goldberg's left is Pres. I. W. Abel of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

Labor Backing of UN Stressed by Goldberg

Labor must maintain a "deep-rooted interest" in supporting and strengthening the United Nations as the best available instrument for securing peace, Arthur J. Goldberg, former U.S. Ambassor to the UN, declared in Washington.

Helping to make the agency succeed, he told representatives of unions, is in accord with labor's involvement in international affairs going back to Sam Gompers, who led in founding the Intl. Labor Organization.

Goldberg spoke to about 50 union leaders who attended a luncheon meeting sponsored by the United Nations Association of the USA, a non-partisan, privately supported organization to further peace and justice through the UN.

Goldberg, chairman of the board of the association, and James B. Carey, its director of labor participation, appealed to unions to continue and increase their backing of the association.

Pres. I. W. Abel of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. urged labor leaders to stimulate greater interest in the UN among union members. "We haven't taken as seriously as we should the work of the UN," he declared.

Goldberg who also served as Secretary of Labor and Supreme Court Justice, recalled his long prior career in the labor movement. That experience, particularly participation in collective bargaining conferences, "became the strongest resource I had in serving in the United Nations," Goldberg said.

There is too much a tendency for our government to use business leaders as international negotiators when union participants in collective bargaining have an "ideal background" in this area, he added.

Goldberg noted that AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Abel, Pres. Louis Stulberg of the Ladies' Garment Workers and the late Pres. George Harrison of the Railway Clerks have "all served with distinction" on U.S. delegations to the UN.

He expressed the hope that the Nixon Administration and future administrations will continue the policy of including labor leaders on these delegations.

The UN, he continued, is not a perfect instrument. But with all of its imperfections, Goldberg said, there is "no better choice" as a means of trying to bring peace and justice based on international law.

Israel Congratulated On 21st Anniversary

Congratulations were sent to the Israeli people and to Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, on the 21st anniversary of the Republic of Israel by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

"The democratic ideals to which you are dedicated and the spirit in which you have been striving to fulfill these ideals are a great inspiration to friends of freedom and peace everywhere," Meany cabled.

The AFL-CIO and all Americans, Meany added, look to the day when Israel and its Arab neighbors negotiate a lasting peace that will "enable them to cooperate in developing their homelands into healthy democracies for the promotion of human well-being."

Labor Center Brings Lithography to Kenya

Nairobi, Kenya—Students who come from all parts of East Africa to attend Kenya Polytechnic School will soon be able to learn lithography, thanks to the African-American Labor Center.

It has agreed to develop, equip and operate a new lithographic training section at the school's printing department at a cost of more than $60,000. Later, the section will be turned over to Kenya' government, which is pledged t continue to equip and operate it.

The section will fill a void since there are no other lithographic training facilities in East Africa. Students wanting to learn the craft have to travel to Europe or the United States.

Two labor organizations here, the Federation of Master Printers and the Printing & Kindred Trades Union, will be consulted on development of the project to give their members the fullest opportunity to take courses.

Initial classes in lithography will be offered to students from the Nairobi area, with further expansion planned to accommodate students from rural areas. Night classes lso are envisioned for workers now mployed in printing.

An agreement to provide the section was signed by Carl Schlesnger for AALC and Kenya's Minster of Labor E. Mwendwa and Minister of Education J. G. Kiano, for the government.

Schlesinger, of Typographical Union Local 6 in New York, is AALC's technical adviser for printing education. He will develop the project here in cooperation with Polytechnic's principal, A. N. Getao.

Mwendwa and Kiano thanked the AALC for its financial aid to the project and for helping Kenya's workers develop skills that will boost their standard of living and in turn strengthen the nation's economy.

Tally Certifies Election of Top Steel Officers

Pittsburgh—Re-election of the top officers of the Steelworkers by substantial margins in the Feb. 11 union election has been formally certified by the official tellers.

Pres. I. W. Abel, Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Burke and Vice Pres. Joseph P. Molony will begin their second four-year terms June 1.

Election results, tabulated and certified by the Honest Ballot Association, gave Abel 257,651 votes to 181,122 for Emil Narick, union staff member. Burke got 285,923 to 136,999 for Morros Brummitt. Molony, who had no opposition, got 349,336 votes.

The tellers also certified the election of seven new district directors and four incumbents in 11 regions where there were contests for the posts.

New directors are Joseph Odorcich, McKeesport, Pa., who defeated Paul M. Hilbert; Frank Leseganich, Youngstown, O. replacing James P. Griffin; Joseph J. Kender, Cleveland, O. replacing Paul E. Schremp; and Joseph Angelo, Los Angeles, replacing Lester H. Thornton.

Other new directors, who won contests in districts where incumbents were not candidates, are Mitchel F. Mazuca, Buffalo; Edward E. Plato, Baltimore; and Homer E. Bussa, Wheeling, W. Va.

Incumbent directors who won in contests were Kay Kluz, Ambridge, Pa.; Jean Garin-Lajoie, Montreal; Glenn Peterson, Duluth, and Howard Strevel, Birmingham, Ala.

Shultz Defends Plan:

Job Corps Cutback Blasted in Congress

The Administration's decision to close more than half of the nation's Job Corps centers that train poverty youth for useful work careers ran into heavy attacks in Congress.

Angry protests mounted even as Labor Sec. George P. Shultz appeared on Capitol Hill to outline and defend the plan to shut down 59 centers by July 1.

Democrats led in blasting as "false economy" Nixon's claim the cutback would save $100 million in fiscal 1970. But opposition was not confined to their party. A number of Republicans also attacked the closings.

The fight against the plan centered in the House Education & Labor Committee, headed by Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) and a Senate manpower subcommittee, under Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.). Both are holding hearings on the Nixon proposal.

Highlights of the hearings included Shultz' testimony before the House committee, a report on a study of the Job Corps conducted by pollster Louis Harris and testimony from directors of centers slated to be shut down.

Leaders of community groups, anti-poverty organizations, city and state officials joined in protesting the closings. Earlier AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a letter to Nixon, termed the shutdown plans "completely unjustified" in view of the program's achievements.

Shultz' main argument was that a "reconstructed" Job Corps will eliminate its inefficiencies by bringing it into a "comprehensive" manpower development system. The program is to be shifted from the Office of Economic Opportunity to the Labor Dept.

He promised that each Job Corpsman in a center to be closed would get an opportunity to transfer to another center.

Shultz also restated the Administration's plan for directing "part of the Job Corps' resources" into 30 new, smaller inner-city or near-city training centers for youths.

Rep. William D. Ford (D-Mich.) said he was not satisfied with Shultz' "rationale" on the plan. He noted that the 30 new centers would accomodate only 4,600 trainees while 16,500 enrollees would be dropped by the cutback, and that only 10 of the new centers would be under construction within a year.

Harris reported to the House committee and Senate subcommittee that a study conducted for OEO among more than 9,000 Job Corps graduates and employers showed "a great impact" in improving lives, earnings and opportunities.

The study, he said, found that six months after leaving the Job Corps, 75 percent of the graduates stay on their new jobs and 41 percent had received a raise.

Graduates from rural centers were averaging 55 cents an hour more than they made before entering the Job Corps; graduates of urban centers averaged 45 cents more; women graduates averaged 41 cents higher.

Noting that most of the Job Corps enrollees and graduates are Negroes, Harris said the results "give the lie to the notion that black people can't make it in our society" if given a chance.

Directors of four centers marked for closing charged that the Administration inflated figures on the costs of their operations and wrongly used "length of stay" in centers by enrollees as a measure of effectiveness.

"The question is not how long they stay," said Norman Platine, deputy director of a Huntington, W.Va., center, "but what they learn while they stay."

At the Catoctin, Md., job corps center, visiting senators found the corpsmen bitter.

"I'd like to know why they want to close the Job Corps down," one youngster asked. "There's nothing to do but go back on the streets where you come from," he said.

The youths cheered as Senators Nelson, Harold Hughes (D-Ia.) and Joseph Tydings (D-Md.) promised to fight to keep the centers open.

State Residency Rules On Relief Struck Down

The Supreme Court ruled unconstitutional state laws that require poor people to live in a state at least one year before they are eligible for welfare benefits.

In a 6 to 3 decision, the court struck down the one-year residency rule for relief in Connecticut, Pennsylvania and the District of Columbia. The ruling, however, affects all 42 states that make newcomers wait for welfare benefits.

The court declared that such laws deny dependent children and their parents the freedom to travel from one state to another.

The majority opinion by Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., states that it is "unconstitutionally impermissible" for a state to enforce a waiting period for the "purpose of inhibiting migration by needy persons into the state."

Chief Justice Earl Warren dissented, warning that the majority was opening up voting residency laws to a new attack. Most states also have similar rules that bar newcomers from voting in state and local elections before a year of residency.

Warren noted that the decision may also affect residency requirements on the right to practice a profession and to attend a state-supported university.

Brennan, in the majority opinion, stressed the right of all citizens to travel throughout the country.

The residency laws make an "invidious distinction" between needy people who had lived in a state for a year and those who had not, Brennan added.

Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Robert H. Finch said the ruling makes it "inevitable" that the federal government set national standards on welfare benefits.

Between 100,000 and 200,000 persons across the country will be eligible for relief rolls because of the sweeping court decision, government sources estimated. This would be an added cost of $125 million to $175 million.

The federal government pays about 55 percent of the total welfare costs.

Brennan was joined in the majority opinion by Justices William O. Douglas, Abe Fortas, Thurgood Marshall, Potter Stewart and Byron R. White. Besides Warren, Justices Hugo L. Black and John M. Harlan dissented.

Meany Praises Support for Bargaining Rights:

Labor Enlists Aid of Bishops In Search for Just Farm Pact

(Continued from Page 1)

in achieving a just peace in the grape fields," he told the bishops. "Recognition by the employers of the workers' fundamental rights to a union of their own choosing and to bargain collectively would end the struggle."

Persuasion Urged

Meany urged the bishops to "use their good offices to persuade the grape growers to adopt a sense of social responsibility and treat their employes as human beings."

He concluded: "We stand ready to meet at any time in any place with any group of farm owners you could convene for the purpose of achieving an honorable end to this struggle."

The bishops' telegram to congressional leaders noted that the farm workers' strike is now entering its fourth year and that "justice and promised legislation are delayed." The Catholic leaders suggested that the nationwide boycott of California table grapes being pressed by the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee does not promise "speedy solution" of the dispute, but that the workers consider it "their only strategy to awaken [the] conscience of the nation."

Urging Congress to extend the protections of federal labor law to the farm workers, the bishops declared: "The restoration of good will and order will redound to the benefit of growers and public at large."

The bishops' statement was adopted a day after the farm workers presented to the Senate Labor subcommittee their case for federal protection of the right to organize unions strong enough to stand up against the power of the big growers and achieve "signed contracts . . . good wages . . . a strong union."

Led by UFWOC Vice Pres. Dolores Huerta, the farm worker witnesses cited the hardships of working in the fields at wages that bind most of them well below the poverty line, the lack of safeguards against highly toxic pesticides, and the denial in some cases of even elementary sanitation facilities.

Mrs. Huerta suggested that farm workers today find themselves at the same level as the great masses of industrial workers in the 1930s, when enactment of the Wagner Act gave that group the path to strong unions and a better life. Farm workers, she said, want to follow the same path and should have the same protection.

The organized growers, however, as represented by the American Farm Bureau Federation, had different ideas. The federation's president, Charles B. Shuman, submitted to the subcommittee a draft bill that would give jurisdiction over farm worker unions to the Agriculture Dept. and the courts rather than the National Labor Relations Board. It would outlaw all agricultural worker strikes during harvest periods and restrain the entire labor movement from engaging in "product boycotts."

Shuman underwent sharp questioning from members of the subcommittee. He was asked by Sen. Walter F. Mondale (D-Minn.) if he agreed that "foreign workers from across the Mexican border should not be used to break strikes."

"No, because we don't believe in strikes in the first place," Shuman replied.

Should "phony, company-dominated unions" be prohibited by law?, Mondale asked.

"We don't believe there are such things," said Shuman.

'Free' to Look

When the Farm Bureau president suggested that there are more jobs than workers to fill them and that farm workers are free to shop around for the pay they want without organizing and striking, Sen. Alan Cranston (D-Calif.) demanded:

"You call that meaningful bargaining? Would growers want to bargain with their products that way—take them off the market for a year?"

Cranston, Mondale and Subcommittee Chairman Harrison A. Williams, Jr., (D-N.J.) continually pressed Shuman about the thousands of "green card" workers imported from Mexico to break strikes of U.S. farm workers.

"Can you tell me how you can organize farm workers," Mondale asked, "when one day after a strike is called strikebreakers are picked up at the Mexican border and used to break the strike?"

Shuman replied that it was "possible on a voluntary basis," but Mondale observed that if craft or industrial workers "had a ready-made group of foreign scabs waiting in the wings they would never have a union."

Mondale then told the Farm Bureau Federation chief:

"Recently I visited workers and growers in Southern California and Texas and, as one who read 'Grapes of Wrath', I'm shocked how little has changed in 30 years.

Some 'Grapes of Wrath'

"There are the same deplorable conditions—no toilets or sanitation facilities in the fields, exploitation of child labor, a complete denial of educational opportunities, and incomes of $2,000 to $2,400 a year. The tragedy of these people can't even be put into words. It is a profound moral problem.

"With this situation, don't you even want to help? All you have is a shrewd position, nothing more. You have the power to help these people live secure lives, own their own homes, get education for the children, the same advantages as most Americans. I don't see any sense of urgency in your testimony."

BRIEFCASE, hand-crafted and tooled by a former farm worker, is presented to Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), left, by Dolores Huerta, vice president of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, and Newlon Lloyd, a Tampa, Fla., farm worker. Williams is chief sponsor of Senate bill to extend federal labor law protection to farm workers.

NLRB Authority Upheld In Address List Case

The U.S. Supreme Court has upheld the power of the National Labor Relations Board to order an employer to supply, for use by the union, a list of names and addresses of employes eligible to vote in a representation election.

But while upholding the board's power on a case-by-case basis, six of the nine justices, who wrote four different opinions, expressed the view that the NLRB should have followed the Administrative Procedures Act in promulgating its general rule that employers must furnish names and addresses, instead of announcing in a particular decision (Excelsior Underwear) that it would apply such a rule in the future.

The Administrative Procedures Act requires publication of a proposed rule and the holding of hearings before its final adoption.

The court's ruling came in a case involving an appeal by the NLRB from a circuit court decision that the board should have followed the Administrative Procedures Act.

The high court, however, held in the specific case affecting the Wyman-Gordon company that the board had the right to order the company to furnish a list of names and addresses of employes eligible to vote in an NLRB election, and to subpena the list when the company refused.

The name-and-address rule, commonly known as the Excelsior rule, was set out in a 1966 board decision for future election cases.

The high court handed down four opinions in the case. Justice Abe Fortas, joined by three others, said that the rule-making procedures of the Administrative Procedures Act "may not be avoided by the process of making rules in the course of adjudicatory proceedings. There is no warrant in law for the board to replace the statutory scheme for a rule-making procedure of its own invention . . ."

Another opinion of Justice Hugo Black and two others agreed in part with Fortas and dissented in part. There were two individual dissents.

All told, eight of the justices upheld the board's power on the name-and-address issue but six found that the rule was improperly adopted.

Rise in Prices Cancels Out Gain in Wages

(Continued from Page 1)

with both commodities and farm products contributing to the higher figure. Preliminary data, the department said, point to a two-tenths of 1 percent hike in April.

In the consumer area, home ownership costs jumped 1.6 percent, the prices of used cars were up nearly 6.5 percent and gasoline prices averaged 2.5 percent higher.

Transportation costs moved up significantly as a result of higher air and rail fares, and medical care services advanced nine-tenths of 1 percent for the third consecutive month, led by higher physicians' fees and hospital services.

Food prices rose contra-seasonally in March despite a decline in egg prices. Meats and milk failed to decline as they usually do and some fresh vegetables showed large price increases.

About 35.000 workers will receive cost-of-living increases based on the March CPI, with about 28,000 in public transportation and electrical machinery receiving hourly increases ranging from 2 to 7 cents based on advance in the index over the past three months.

The BLS said that "an estimated 8,500 workers in various industries, who would otherwise receive cost-of-living increases, will not receive them this month because they have already received the maximums stipulated in their contracts."

The gross weekly earnings of workers — before taxes — reached $111.75 in March, topping the previous record reached in September 1969.

The advance, BLS said, was attributable to a two-tenths of an hour rise in the workweek and a one-cent rise in hourly earnings. After adjustment for price increases, gross earnings were up 1.4 percent over the year.

Meany Assigns McGlotten to NAB Position

Robert M. McGlotten, AFL-CIO civil rights staff representative, has been assigned to serve as the labor director of the National Alliance of Businessmen until July 1, Federation Pres. George Meany announced.

The assignment continues the AFL-CIO's cooperation with NAB in its Job Opportunities in the Business Sector (JOBS) program.

Before joining the AFL-CIO civil rights staff in April 1967, McGlotten was a national labor relations specialist for the Opportunities Industrialization Center job training program located in 25 major cities. He formerly was a public relations representative for Transport Workers Local 234 in Philadelphia.

Jobless In Poor Areas Continue to Decline

(Continued from Page 1)

portion of the unemployed were men (36 percent) and larger proportions were women (37 percent) and teenagers (27 percent).

The jobless rate for adult men in poverty neighborhoods was 4.4 percent in the first quarter of 1969, down from 5.5 percent in the first quarter last year. However, this jobless rate continued at more than twice the rate for men in other parts of these cities.

The jobless rate for adult women fell from 6.2 to 4.8 percent between the first quarters of 1968 and 1969, which was a greater rate of decline for the poor than for women in other urban neighborhoods.

For teenagers in poverty neighborhoods, the unemployment rate averaged 16.7, more than 3.0 percentage points lower than in the first quarter of 1968. The rate for teenagers in other urban neighborhoods was unchanged at 11.4 percent.

Negro teenagers accounted for most of the over-the-year drop in teenage unemployment in poverty neighborhoods, and their rate of unemployment declined from 27.3 to 20.9 percent.

However, in comparing statistics for all Negroes and all whites in poverty areas, the jobless rate for Negroes remained half again as great as it was for whites.

For whites, the rate fell from 5.7 percent in the first quarter of 1968 to 4.6 percent in the 1969 period, while the Negro rate dropped from 8.7 to 7.0 percent. Both drops amounted to 19 percent.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics defines poverty neighborhoods as the poorest fifth of the census tracts into which cities are divided. But it notes that these predominately low-income tracts may also include some middle and high income families.

In other urban neighborhoods of the 100 largest cities, the Negro rate declined over the year from 6.5 to 5.2 percent. But, BLS pointed out, "the rate for these workers continued to be higher than that of white workers living in poverty neighborhoods."

The government noted that slightly more than half of all unemployed Negro workers living in the 100 cities resided in poverty neighborhoods, compared to only about 14 percent of all white unemployed workers.

Tucson Church Council Supports Grape Boycott

Tucson, Ariz.—The Tucson Ecumenical Council, representing churches of most major religious denominations in Tucson, has given its backing to the boycott of California table grapes instituted by the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

A statement by the council's directors noted the position of the American farm worker "at the bottom of the social and economic scale," and continued:

"To help alleviate his distress and aid him in this struggle to have the UFWOC recognized as his representative in collective bargaining . . . we heartily support the boycott of all California table grapes."

Rev. James T. Weber, council president, said the boycott campaign was undertaken as a "last resort" in the UFWOC effort to gain recognition. Father Weber pointed out that the annual income of most vineyard workers is "well below" federal poverty standards.

No Time to Retreat

THERE ARE growing indications that the wide commitment of a few years ago to the war on poverty is slackening as the fund-starved programs lose their impetus and the Administration orders cutbacks and transfers that add up to further weakening.

The concern has shifted, in part, to the shocking revelations of hunger and malnutrition in parts of America and piecemeal approaches to providing elemental food needs.

But unfortunately, the clear line that hunger is a direct and immediate result of poverty is blurred, and with it the continuing necessity to intensify the drive to redeem from poverty the millions who have been bypassed or left behind.

The last Congress refused to supply the full funds authorized in legislation for the poverty program as well as housing, education, health, manpower development, etc. The present Congress has yet to act on a simple extension of the anti-poverty agency—the Office of Economic Opportunity—a move promised by the President, who has yet to send legislation to the Hill.

What the Administration has done is order a drastic cutback in the Job Corps—one of the original anti-poverty programs—and transferred it to the Labor Dept. It has failed to clarify its views on the Head Start program, shifting this program away from OEO to the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. The transfer of the programs will not necessarily impair them if their integrity and scope are maintained.

To administer the OEO operation it has named Rep. Donald Rumsfeld (R-Ill.) who is on record as having voted against the original Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 that established the poverty programs and who in 1966 voted against funding the program.

It is against this background that the plea of a former HEW secretary, John W. Gardner, a Republican, takes on added meaning. He told the Senate Anti-Poverty subcommittee that there must be an "unwavering commitment to fight the poverty battle continuously, this year and next and the year after, never relenting until the job is done. It is not an off-again, on-again kind of problem and it doesn't merit that kind of an answer."

THE POSITIVE RESULTS of the OEO and other programs, even while operating with severely limited funds, have been documented. There has been a start in the battle to wipe out poverty in a society widely celebrated for its affluence. But the job is mostly unfinished and the start is a small one.

The concern and commitment to initiate action to help the "other America" must be reasserted and the anti-poverty campaign given a top priority by Congress and the Administration.

The first steps might well be withdrawing the cutbacks in the Job Corps, extending the life of the OEO with greater funding than proposed by the Administration, moving quickly and effectively to feed the hungry and undernourished while the poverty programs take hold.

There can be no pulling back on the commitment to abolish poverty for all Americans.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors: Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, April 26, 1969 No. 17

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

LABOR PRESS AFL-CIO ASSOCIATION

'Where Do We Go From Here?'

A Word Edgewise:

Economic Barrier, Not Racism, Held Cause of Nation's Division

By John P. Roche

THE SEEMING CONTRADICTION between the Gallup Poll, indicating that 67 percent of the electorate would vote for a Negro for President, and the great hue and cry about increasing "white racism" in the United States may arise from a simple misreading of cause-and-effect relationships. It is the poor in America who are not so much discriminated against as ignored. And since a Negro is three times as likely as a white to be below the poverty line the blacks are disproportionately represented in this category.

No one will deny that, in historical terms, "white racism" put the Negroes at the bottom of the ladder, but the statistics indicate that Negroes in the United States today have roughly the same profile as earlier foreign minority groups. As Dorothy K. Newman wrote in a careful study, "the occupational structure of the Negro male work force in 1960 resembles that of all male workers in 1900 more than that of white male workers in 1960, even accounting for shifts in occupational structure." If we compare the occupational status of immigrant Italians in 1900 with that of Negroes in 1960, the parallel is striking.

But in 1900 there was a ladder. The unskilled worker, with energy, ambition, talent, and luck, could look forward to becoming a skilled worker, maybe a foreman. The slums were awful, but the expectations were there to energize the poor. And the poor clearly had a function.

Recall what building a skyscraper involved, say, in the 1930s: an incredible number of human ants, climbing up and down, carrying hods, buckets, and sundry equipment. Or think how many unskilled laborers were needed to dig New York's subways. Then walk up Fifth Avenue (and the same thing can be observed in any major city or on a college campus) and watch the new buildings going up. A handful of highly skilled workers with grotesque cranes and automated cement buckets put the structure up in no time.

This was brought home vividly by a student from Kenya who was standing on campus with me watching the foundations for a new building going in.

We counted about 40 workers in the huge hole, operating all sorts of specialized excavating equipment, and he turned, sighed, and said, "If we could put that building up in Kenya, it would eliminate our unemployment problem. We would have 50,000 people on the job!"

The U.S. economy has literally outgrown the unskilled worker. There is even a machine that irons and folds shirts, making laundries, long a bastion of the unskilled, virtually automatic.

The Negro, in other words, arrived at the foot of the economic ladder just as it was about to be kicked over. Held down for centuries by "white racism," he was turned loose just as racism was superseded by affluent callousness. Sixty-seven percent of the voters may be willing to vote for a Negro, but can anyone imagine what percentage would be willing to endorse an unemployed, unskilled worker for President?

RACISM IS the Negro's ancestral predicament (and there is plenty left around), but the problem today is how to get out of the stagnant environment of poverty.

Which brings us to the second historic quote from the Kerner Report, that "the nation is rapidly moving towards two increasingly separate Americas." This is absolutely correct, but the line of division between the two Americas is not racial; it separates the increasingly isolated poor from the rest of us. And three-quarters of the poor are white.

The flight to the suburbs, the rush for private schools in our big cities, are shared by the affluent (or better, perhaps, the non-poor) whether they are black, white, red or polka-dot. Negro youngsters, for example, fill the parochial schools of Washington.

To conclude, we face a paradox. Never in American history has the Negro been less afflicted by "white man" than he is today. Yet in 1967, 8.3 million Negroes, roughly a third of the black population, along with 17.6 million whites, suffered from the lash of poverty. Our major effort should be to get them all out of that dead-end street, not waste time arguing how they got there.

Invisible Youth:

Focus on Rebels Overlooks Non-Protesting Young Workers

The following is excerpted from "Youth: Protest and the Democratic Process," by Tom Kahn which appears in the April 1969 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

NOT ALL YOUTH are middle class; not all go to college. A good half of the young go directly from high school into the labor market. They marry, establish households, have children, go to work in factories and offices, and join unions.

Today these seem to be the Invisible Youth. Nobody writes articles about them; there are few studies of their habits, attitudes and life styles. For this there are probably several reasons.

First of all, the Invisible Youth are residentially and occupationally dispersed: they do not live in clusters and they are diffused throughout the industrial and clerical workforce.

The New Youth, on the other hand, are institutionally concentrated in colleges and universities, segregated, so to speak, by age and largely by social class. They are consequently more conspicuous—and easier to study. It also happens that they are closer, physically if not in other ways, to those who do the studying, namely, academic sociologists and other adult intellectuals.

Another probable reason for the lack of attention paid the Invisible Youth is that all of us tend to be more interested in what is new and different in our society than in what we take to be commonplace. It seems to be true that what is new and different—in the way of inventions, values and cultural styles—is acquired first by society's chief beneficiaries, the well-to-do and their children. New fashions, whether in clothes, ideas or behavior, are slower in reaching the children of workers. The latter seem to follow more closely in the familiar footsteps of their parents and are therefore presumed to be less interesting objects of study.

Yet it is possible to peer beneath the veil of darkness that enshrouds the Invisible Youth and perceive some general features. We will find that there are some characteristics that they share with the New Youth and some in which they are quite different. What they share are the products of a common generational experience; what they do not share are the products of a common class experience.

One thing that both groups share is a non-experience—non-experience of the Great Depression.

Among the New Youth, this non-experience of the Depression often takes the form of a lack of interest in the material aspirations and needs of ordinary people. Among the Invisible Youth, who generally have had a harder time of things, it takes a different form, one which is familiar to older trade unionists—a lack of identification with, and appreciation for, the past struggles and achievements of the labor movement.

These struggles and achievements were won before the young worker entered the labor market and he cannot see how his life was transformed by his union. For him, the union is simply an instrument for winning periodic wage hikes and even in this he may feel it is not doing a good enough job.

There is some evidence of a growing resentment among young workers, a feeling that they are being left out of the "affluent society." While not caught in the extremes of poverty, they feel the pressure of all the expenses that are involved in beginning a family. They feel the pinch of inflation, they have a hard time finding a home they can afford, they have no savings to fall back on in an emergency, etc.

All of this breeds a restlessness, a fear of becoming marginal to "the action," that I suspect is behind the recent tendency of many young workers to vote down contracts negotiated by their union leaders.

THIS SAME FEAR of being left behind while others are "making it" also accounts for why young workers appeared to be especially vulnerable to the demagoguery of George Wallace during the 1968 election campaign. Wallace articulated the belief of a considerable minority of less-than-securely-affluent working people that they were being made to bear the burden of financing a war on poverty and improving conditions for Negroes while their own needs were being ignored.

Whether or not this belief was grounded in fact, it is true that without sufficiently massive government programs in the fields of job creation, housing, education, health care, etc., initial efforts to alleviate poverty can touch off a scramble between the have-nots and the have-littles over scarce resources. Thus the votes that Wallace picked up from young workers cannot be attributed to racism pure and simple. They must also be seen, at least in part, as an expression of rebellion—a misguided rebellion, to be sure—against the circumstances of relative economic insecurity.

This is something the New Youth find hard to understand. Not having experienced economic hardship, they often demonstrate a cavalier insensitivity to the material aspirations of others, including the Invisible Youth. (With all the talk about the "generation gap," we are apt to forget that there are gaps within generations as well as between them.)

Similarly, it is noteworthy that many New Leftists who have joined community organizing projects among the black and white poor have not focused primarily on economic reform. Rather their goal, for the poor, has been greater "participation in the decision-making process."

Very often, the young activists seem blind to the fact that the poor are really more interested in escaping from poverty than in joining committees and experiencing the dubious pleasure of endless meetings and discussions. They are more interested in changing their economic status than in overcoming the "powerlessness" that the young radicals insist is the root of their problem.

Craft Skills Training:

Unions Extend Opportunities In Ghettos for Under-Employed

ORGANIZED LABOR'S drive to bring minority group youths into skilled crafts has moved beyond apprenticeship recruitment in 53 cities to new construction opportunities for ghetto residents, said Robert M. McGlotten of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights.

The new Model Cities program is one source of such jobs, he said, but has little funding. He said that certain construction unions are "considering sponsoring their own low-cost housing programs and hooking up training programs" under their Model Cities guidelines that allow substantial employment from within the construction area.

He said that under the unions' guidelines, three types of workers can be brought into jobs: high school drop-outs and hard-core unemployed with "no experience in the construction industry;" lower-skilled workers who need advanced training to get better jobs; and "journeymen who might need a little bit of brushing up" to handle new methods and techniques of construction.

McGlotten said this approach has a practical aspect, since housing is a "simpler form of construction" where workers can gain experience and move on to more complex commercial and industrial construction. He appeared on Labor News Conference, a public affairs interview broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual radio network.

THE RECORD SHOWS "growing activity by many international unions, not only in individual Apprenticeship Outreach programs in the communities," but in "Job Corps centers and the like, to train and to help place hard-core unemployed, who are mainly from the minority community," he said.

New construction methods and techniques are constantly raising skill and knowledge requirements, he said. The thrust of the effort to bring more minority workers into jobs is not to lower journeyman standards, he noted, but to help the youngsters start out with better backgrounds and a better chance of making the grade.

By Press Associates, Inc.

IN 1937 THE U.S. SUPREME COURT held the Wagner Labor Relations Act constitutional and, despite changes made in basic law in 1947 and 1959, the right to organize and bargain collectively remains national labor policy.

Despite this "right," though, there are millions of Americans in the labor force who have no access to collective bargaining machinery—deprived of the legal protections of the right to organize and bargain collectively.

Here is the picture:

There are almost 80 million in the civilian labor force today but less than 30 percent are currently organized.

The 80 million include self-employed, employes in private households, family employes, supervisors, management and other unlikely candidates for trade unionism.

Aside from these there are huge segments in our economic structure that are excluded from our national labor policy.

It is difficult to set precise figures, but there are some 9 million state, county and municipal employes, including teachers, more than 3 million farm workers, and at least 500,000 employes of private, voluntary groups.

In addition, there are about 3 million federal workers, who, since Pres. Kennedy's 1962 Executive Order, do have a procedure for determining union representation but no solid law that makes collective bargaining either formalized or secure.

Federal employe unions are pressing for legislation which would give them a law and it is an issue before the 91st Congress.

Among public employes and farm workers there is widespread frustration and unrest. There seems little question that millions of them want union representation but, deprived of the protection of national labor policy, they get collective bargaining only when they have the muscle to enforce their demands.

When the Wagner Act was passed by Congress in 1935, one of the prices was that farm workers had to be excluded to win the vote of the farm bloc. The expectation was that within a year or two, at the most, the second class status of farm workers would become so apparent that they too would be brought under the law.

However, the farm workers were so weak organizationally and the growers and conservative farm organizations so strong, this did not materialize.

Only today, when farm workers have the entire trade union movement and millions of others behind them, are they set to fight for what should be a routine right—protection of the labor relations law.

THOSE WHO OPPOSE placing them under the labor relations law may offer many varied and frequently fanciful explanations, but beneath is a basic opposition to trade unionism and a preference for the law of the jungle.

Employes of state and city governments, including teachers and transit workers, are faced with a campaign to curb their legitimate rights to collective bargaining, but this drive differs from the one faced by farm workers.

Many of the 50 states either have passed, or have pending, bills seeking to frustrate the entire collective bargaining process in the public sector.

Objective observers of the labor relations scene, such as arbitrator Theodore Kheel, see extreme danger in such legislation. He says that the real problems and legitimate grievances of public employes will not be met by narrowing the collective bargaining scope.

In scores of other public employe bargaining areas, workers are blatantly being denied any rights to unionism.

A prime issue this year, in Washington and throughout the country, is how long millions of American workers are going to be denied the rights and protections spelled out in national labor policy 34 years ago.

RECRUITMENT OF APPRENTICES and construction job opportunities for ghetto residents are the dual thrust of organized labor's drive to bring more minority group youngsters into skilled crafts, AFL-CIO civil rights representative Robert M. McGlotten, center, told William Eaton, left, of the Chicago Daily News and Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press on Labor News Conference. The public affairs program is heard Tuesdays on Mutual Radio.

OLD SLAVE MART MUSEUM, a Charleston, S.C., tourist attraction, is picketed by striking hospital workers to dramatize their demand for union recognition and improved wages at Charleston Medical College Hospital and Charleston County Hospital. The pickets are members of Local 1199B of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union. More than 180 of the 600 strikers have been arrested in the dispute.

180 Pickets Arrested:

Negro Leaders Swell Support Of Striking Hospital Workers

Charleston, S.C.—The nation's top civil rights leaders, including AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, have joined with five elected Negro officials to enlist support for 600 black hospital workers on strike here for "union and human rights."

They issued a statement giving full backing to the strikers, who earn as little as $1.30 an hour.

"The fact that these workers . . . should be compelled to strike for the simple right to have a union tells much about what is wrong with America today," the statement declared.

Signers, besides Randolph, included Mrs. Coretta Scott King, widow of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., and honorary chairman of the National Organizing Committee of Hospital and Nursing Home Employes set up by the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union whose Local 1199B represents the striking hospital workers.

Others are Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the NAACP; Whitney Young, executive director of the National Urban League; Roy Innis, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality; Bayard Rustin, executive director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute; Dorothy I. Height, president of the National Council of Negro Women; and George A. Wiley, executive director of the National Welfare Rights Organization.

The elected officials who joined in the statement are Rep. Shirley Chisholm (D-N.Y.), Rep. John M. Conyers (D-Mich.), Mayor Richard G. Hatcher of Gary, Ind., Mayor Carl B. Stokes of Cleveland and Julian Bond, member of the Georgia House of Representatives.

Their statement noted that "tensions are mounting" in Charleston and recalled that "the right of workers to be represented by a union is precisely the same issue that led to tragedy in Memphis last year."

They called on South Carolina Gov. Robert E. McNair and officials of the two struck hospitals "to grant the workers this elementary right as a minimal gesture of justice and humanity."

Meanwhile, as the strike at Medical College Hospital and the County Hospital entered its sixth week, members of Local 1199B carried their story to the public through rallies and marches despite the arrest of more than 180 pickets since the start of the dispute Mar. 20.

On Apr. 21, some 2,000 persons filled Morris Brown AME Church and 1,000 others thronged the streets outside to hear speaker after speaker pledge support of the strikers. Among them were AFL-CIO Civil Rights Rep. E. T. Kehrer and local union officials.

The crowd gave a tumultuous ovation to Mrs. Mary Ann Moultrie, president of Local 1199B, and 11 other strikers who arrived at the rally after spending 11 days in jail. They had been suddenly released on a judge's orders after being held without charges or trial.

The fervor of the rally carried over to a march by 1,000 persons the following day which included a large contingent of black and white ministers, Catholic priests and nuns. The march wound from the Morris Brown church to the hospitals and back.

Hospital administrators so far have refused even to discuss union recognition with the local, maintaining that a state law prohibits state agencies from bargaining with unions.

But high-ranking officials of the state government have themselves voiced concern over the hospitals' labor relations following the revelation that the Medical College had retained a lawyer as a $50-an-hour labor consultant.

The struck hospital was reported to have paid the lawyer, Knox Haynsworth, between $12,000 and $17,000 in recent months for his advice. Haynsworth's firm has represented a number of southern firms which have fought bitterly against unionization of their workers, including Burlington Industries, Deering Milliken, Dan River Mills, Greenwood Mills and the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

Retention of the lawyer by the hospitals is "definitely a matter of concern," said State Controller Gen. Henry Mills. "I would think we're going to have to look into it pretty closely," he said.

Contempt Suit Filed Against J. P. Stevens

(Continued from Page 1)

The latest NLRB petition recites specific examples of defiant action at five Stevens plants in North and South Carolina locations and asks that the corporation and six of its supervisors be found in contempt for continuing the illegal conduct that the court ordered them to stop.

The petition requests an order that the company and its supervisors "purge themselves" of contempt by offering nine fired employes "immediate and full reinstatement" to their former positions, with full back pay, and by rescinding a penalty imposed on a tenth employe because of his suspected union activity.

The NLRB petition, filed by the board's general counsel, asserts that supervisors at Stevens plants in Greenville and Rock Hill, S. C., and in Aberdeen, Roanoke Rapids and Wallace, N. C., threatened and punished employes while under court order to stop interfering with or spying on workers for attempting to organize.

On Sept. 1, 1967, the 2nd Circuit ordered Stevens management to "cease and desist" from firing or otherwise discriminating against employes in order to discourage membership in the Textile Workers Union of America. It forbade spying on workers, questioning them, threatening them, changing working conditions to defeat organizational attempts, encouraging or assisting employes to withdraw from the union, or intimidating employes for giving statements to the NLRB in accordance with their lawful rights.

The 1967 order of the court was appealed by Stevens, but the Supreme Court refused to review it and it remained in effect against the company. So did a second order of the same court, entered seven months later. But though Stevens had "notice and knowledge of its terms," the company persisted in defying the two orders through its supervisors, the board asserted. It spelled out the violations:

At Rock Hill, S. C., in December 1967, the Stevens personnel director questioned an employe about the union activities of a fellow-employe; solicited him to report anything he heard about his co-worker's union efforts, and warned that the company would fire all active unionists.

The same supervisor quizzed the second employe about his union activity, threatened him with reprisals, and encouraged him to withdraw from the union.

In February and March of 1968, other named company representatives were accused of discharging two employes for union activity, restricting the movements in the plant of a third worker, warning another employe of the "futility" of his activities for the union, giving a fifth worker a low work rating because of his activities on behalf of TWUA, and soliciting a sixth employe to spy on his fellow workers.

At Roanoke Rapids, N. C., the petition charged that a supervisor questioned an employe previously fired by Stevens and reinstated by court order; demanded that she give up a tape recording she had made on her own time of a notice posted by Stevens on the plant bulletin board, and thereby restrained her in the exercise of her right to engage in protected activities under the law.

The same employe was later given an adverse written personnel report "because of her continued union adherence," the petition charged, and was fired again Mar. 13, 1968, after being harassed and intimidated by other Stevens straw-bosses.

Other unlawful actions, including several firings, were related in the petition. They occurred in five Stevens plants in the Carolinas after the 1967 court order, and again after the 1968 order had been issued.

At the company's White Horse plant in Greenville, S. C., the NLRB said management forced a reinstated employe to quit after giving him three adverse personnel action reports and "was more exacting" of him than of other employes to force his resignation.

Stevens is a major supplier of textile goods to the government. It continues to win contract awards in spite of the fact that four courts have found it guilty of violating the law and NLRB orders. The Supreme Court has twice refused its petitions for further delays.

Complaints against its law-defying conduct have been pressed by TWUA and the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council and the federation's 1967 convention urged the government to disqualify firms which persistently violate federal labor law from receiving government contracts.

Labor's Aid Pledged West Virginia Strikers

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany pledged labor's full support for 3,500 striking West Virginia state highway workers and called on all affiliated unions to donate to the strikers' emergency relief fund.

The workers, summarily fired Mar. 11 by Gov. Arch A. Moore, Jr., were "seeking a fundamental American right," Meany said—"the right to be represented by a union of their own choosing." He added:

"Firing these workers, who have loyally and competently served the state of West Virginia, for exercising their rights as free men is a travesty on justice and on the traditions of the state of West Virginia in support of human freedom.

"Seeking to replace them with partisan political supporters is indefensible."

The Republican governor fired State Roads Commission employes when they stopped work in protest against the state's refusal to recognize or deal with their union, the Laborers' District Council of West Virginia.

The union filed suit in federal court at Charleston, accusing Moore of violating their constitutional right to organize into a union. The labor movement rallied the public to their cause at a mass meeting Easter Monday on the State House steps.

Meany, offering to help, said:

"We believe it is not too late to settle this dispute. Therefore this office is prepared to assist in any way possible in achieving that goal.

"The livelihood of these workers, and the reputation of your state for justice, makes the search for a satisfactory solution essential."

Meany told the governor that "the AFL-CIO will do everything within its power to help these 3,500 members" of an affiliated union.

"They have a right to a union," he said, "and they will have the full support of the trade union movement in their efforts to realize that fundamental right."

Meany notified all affiliated unions of the West Virginia strike, and urged them to support the fund set up for the strikers and their families.

"All of organized labor in West Virginia has rallied to their cause," Meany said, "and I urge your active support for these workers in their struggle for basic justice."

Their fight, he said, "is the fight of all public employes, exercising their right to organize into a union and to be represented by that union."

PARTICIPANTS in latest of a series of national legislative conferences sponsored by the Rubber Workers hear from Sen. William B. Saxbe (R-Ohio) at a luncheon session. Union members from all sections of the nation get a first-hand look at the federal government during the conferences.

Victory for Conservatives:

House Trims Back Education Aid Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

The measure that passed the House authorizes extra pay for teachers who serve in ghetto areas. Dropped was a provision in the committee bill for state and local advisory committees to oversee how funds are spent in low-income areas.

Dropping the committees was a concession to the Southerners who feared that the committees might seek a step up in school desegregation.

The House handily defeated an effort by Southerners to amend the bill to prevent the use of federal funds in busing students in order to achieve racial balance in schools.

As passed by the House, federal aid programs involving allotments for textbooks, library materials and other equipment would be consolidated into a single block grant to states.

However, there was no attempt made to rewrite the aid to education legislation on the floor to change the law's major section, Title I, which provides special aid to 16,000 school districts with concentrations of poor children.

Republicans had attempted to make changes in this program when the bill was in committee and they threatened to take their effort to the floor.

In a letter to all House members at the opening of debate, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller warned that any change in the basic formula of Title I would "jeopardize" critically needed money for education.

Biemiller supported the five-year extension, as the AFL-CIO did in earlier testimony, pointing out that short-term extension prevents effective use of funds and hampers school administrators in making long-range educational plans.

The federation has opposed any consolidation of aid programs into block grants that states could spend for any education programs they wished on grounds "the entire structure of federal support for education" might be destroyed.

Such grants, labor warns, would set educators to competing for already inadequate funds and could hamper the poorest school districts in getting money to meet their needs.

The substitute bill that passed the House was managed by Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.), who in the past has supported Republican moves to substitute block grants for earmarked funds. Her chief lieutenant was Rep. Albert H. Quie (R-Minn.), another leader in past moves for block grants.

Rep. Green claimed the bill was "truly bipartisan." But Perkins angrily disagreed. Pounding his fist, he described it as "a Republican bill, and don't you be misled." He warned that Democrats would have to share the blame for its shortcomings if they provided the votes for passage.

The House bill now goes to the Senate, where committee hearings have yet to be scheduled. Liberals in the Senate are expected to wage a strong battle to enact legislation without any block grant provision and a longer than two-year extension.

Rail Signalmen Ratify Pact for 16% Pay Boost

Chicago—Seventy general chairmen of the Signalmen have overwhelmingly ratified a new agreement that provides most of the union's members on the railroads with wage boosts of 16 percent over 18 months.

Signalmen's Pres. C. J. Chamberlain announced the terms of the agreement, which was reached in marathon negotiations that headed off a threatened national rail strike.

Retroactive to July 1, 1968, skill-rated signalmen will receive wage increases of 22 cents an hour plus a 3.5 percent boost following application of the 22 cents; semi-skilled employes will receive a 9 cent boost plus the 3.5 percent.

All employes, skilled and semi-skilled, will receive another 2 percent increase retroactive to Jan. 1, 1969, and an additional 3 percent raise effective next July 1.

Chamberlain said the agreement represents a satisfactory start toward "removing gross inequities that have existed in the pay structure" of the union's skilled members in comparison to rates of pay for similar skills in other industries.

The increases, he said, add up to 16 percent for skilled signalmen over the 18-month period, and 12 percent for semi-skilled members. About 10,000 of the union's 13,000 members in the United States are rated as skilled.

Louisiana Labor Hits Credit Code, Sales Tax

New Orleans—The 14th convention of the Louisiana AFL-CIO was keyed to "building a better Louisiana" and its actions over four days kept to the theme.

The 1,049 delegates representing 180,000 union members—the largest number ever to attend the state federation's annual convention—enacted more than a score of resolutions dealing with state labor and legislative issues.

The convention opposed enactment in Louisiana of the Uniform Consumer Credit Code proposed by the National Conference of Commissioners on grounds it "is not essentially a consumer statute but seeks to compromise consumer and credit interests."

A resolution charged the code permits an "excessive" rate of interest on first mortgages, 10 percent, and "fails to provide adequate protection from unscrupulous businesses."

Another resolution called for enactment of an Industrial Safety Act to set safe standards in industry as a means of reducing the toll of workers who are killed and injured by on-job accidents in Louisiana.

In other areas, the convention opposed any increase in the state's 2-cent sales tax, urged a law to give public employes bargaining rights, supported a state highway safety program and urged state aid for public and non-public schools.

Delegates pledged state labor's "all-out support" of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee "to bring arrogant California grape growers to the bargaining table."

State AFL-CIO Pres. Victor Bussie was elected to his 14th consecutive term. Sec.-Treas. E. J. Bourg, Sr., and the federation's two general vice presidents, A. P. Stoddard and Leroy Landry, also were re-elected.

HIGHWAY WORKERS PICKET the Ohio State Highway Dept. headquarters in Columbus in an effort to gain union recognition for the Laborers and Operating Engineers unions. The Joint Organizing Committee of the two unions represents 2,000 department employes, but Ohio Highway Dir. P. E. Masheter has refused to recognize the unions.

Impact of Technogical Advances Studied at Jerusalem Conference

Jerusalem—American trade unionists played a leading role at a world conference on technological changes in industry and their effect on society at large. The week-long conference took place at the Hebrew University here under the sponsorship of the American Foundation on Automation & Employment and its Institute of Collective Bargaining & Group Research.

Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists, vice chairman of the institute's board, evoked wide comment from British and Israeli delegations as well as American participants with a major address on bargaining in the technological age.

"People need not worry about new advances in labor-saving technology," Siemiller suggested. "The rewards of increased productivity can be distributed not only by means of a higher standard of living but also in more leisure for living. Unions will negotiate for a still shorter workweek, for more three-day weekends, longer vacations and earlier voluntary retirements.

"Collective bargaining between dynamic unions and clear-visioned employer groups will help bridge the transitions in an ever-advancing technology."

All the delegations included employer representatives and university specialists as well as trade unionists.

Social tensions in the United States came in for discussion through papers delivered by Bayard Rustin, director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute, and James Dumpson, dean of the New York University Social Service School.

Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO, took sharp issue with the paper presented by Dumpson on behalf of Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, the Negro sociologist and educator.

Clark declared that he was turning "in desperation" to business and industry to take over the task of promoting the education of Negro youth because, he argued, philanthropy, the church, and other groups had failed.

"Dr. Clark must be desperate, indeed," Van Arsdale observed, "if he wants to deliver Negro growth to segments of society that have never shown much concern for education, Negro or white, and at the same time dismiss with disdain the labor movement that has done the most for public education and the welfare of all disadvantaged groups—white, Negro, Puerto Rican, Mexican or what have you."

Bertram Powers, president of New York's Typographical Union Local 6, chaired one of the conference seminars. Chairman of another session was Elmer T. Klassen, Deputy Postmaster General and former president of the American Can Co., who is board chairman of the Institute of Collective Bargaining.

Among other American participants were David G. Moore, dean of the Cornell University School of Industrial & Labor Relations; Theodore W. Kheel, the noted mediator; Sec.-Treas. Matthew DeMore and Research Dir. Vernon Jirikowic of the Machinists; Rudolph Faupl, U.S. worker delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization; Jack Townsend of New York's Hotel Service Local 15; Gordon Cole, editor of the Machinist.

Histadrut, Israel's labor federation, joined the government in welcoming the delegates at a number of formal and informal receptions. Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek gave the final official farewells at a reception at the Israel Museum.

Van Arsdale Feted By Israeli Institute

Haifa, Israel—Technion, Israel's school of science and engineering, paid tribute to Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO for his role in enlisting the aid of the New York electrical industry in developing the institution.

Van Arsdale was honored at a dinner here while in Israel for the Intl. Conference on Technological Change. In his acknowledgement, he hailed the accomplishments of the school and of Israel itself, declaring:

"We have seen with our own eyes what a labor-minded society has achieved despite the hostility of neighbors on every border, despite the enormous costs involved in its defense."

City Prepares to Sue 2 Tucson Newspapers

Tucson, Ariz.—The city of Tucson is lining up with nine business firms in a suit to recover anti-trust damages from the city's two newspapers.

The City council voted to join in the federal court action after studying a report by City Atty. Dino DeConcini on the legal aspects of the city's display advertising in the two dailies. An estimated $25,000 to $30,000 in ads is involved.

Defendants are the Star Publishing Co., Citizen Publishing Co., Tucson Newspapers, Inc., and William A. Small, Jr., who runs the business departments of the newspapers. Small is publisher of the Citizen.

The plaintiffs charge them with conspiring to restrain and monopolize interstate trade and commerce by the way in which they sold the advertising.

The move to recover damages goes back to the sale of the Star to the Citizen in January 1965. Under that operation the newspapers joined to set advertising and subscription rates and to pool profits.

The Justice Dept. filed suit under the Clayton and Sherman Antitrust Acts. The combine was found guilty in U.S. District court of violating both laws. Under the Clayton Act, the court ordered that the Star, a morning publication, be reestablished as an independent operation. Under the Sherman Act, it found violations of curbs of monopolies and of restraint of trade.

Only the Sherman Act ruling was appealed. On Mar. 10, the U.S. Supreme Court in a landmark decision found the defendants guilty "beyond the preadventure of doubt" of illegal restraints on trade and of monopolies.

The city and the other plaintiffs in the new suit are seeking three times the damages they alleged they suffered.

Legislation has been introduced in Congress to exempt the Tucson agreement and similar consolidations from antitrust prosecution.

The Newspaper Guild, the Typographical Union and other newspaper unions, backed by the AFL-CIO, have opposed the measure on grounds that it would help destroy competing newspapers and ease the way to local monopolies.

The unions have called instead for a law to require that a truly failing paper be offered at a fair market price to a purchaser committed to continuing independent publication before it could be sold or merged with a competitor.

Meany Says Not Enough:

Nixon Tax Proposals Fall Short of Justice

(Continued from Page 1)

ury to take another six months to figure out how to plug up loopholes." And, he added, "we regret the President's proposal to open yet new tax credit loopholes. America has really had enough of tax gimmickry."

The President said repeal of the investment tax credit would permit the 10 percent tax surcharge to be dropped to 5 percent next January, and possibly allow its termination by June, 1970.

If the surtax is necessary, Meany said, the rate should be higher for profit-laden corporations than for individuals.

"On balance," Meany observed, "the President's message means he has come a long way. But he has just not come far enough."

Influential members of Congress, including House Ways & Means Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills, also indicated their disappointment that the Administration did not tackle many of the major loopholes which have enabled wealthy individuals and corporations to escape taxation.

Mills bluntly asked Treasury Under Sec. Charles E. Walker "how we can explain to taxpayers" that nothing is being done about such loopholes as the capital gains tax exclusion, tax-exempt bonds and other preferential treatment.

When Walker replied that these matters were still under study, Mills retorted, "There is a momentum to change the tax laws. I want to act while that momentum exists. . . . Quite frankly, I want to do something head-on in all these areas."

And the committee's senior Republican member, Rep. John W. Byrnes (Wis.), added, "I share the concern of the chairman."

Nixon proposed these major changes in the tax laws:

- The 7 percent investment tax credit would be allowed only for orders placed before Apr. 21, the date of the President's message. It could not be claimed for any future purchases.
- Some income now excluded from taxation would be subject to income tax, but the Treasury Dept. formula does not apply to capital gains income or tax-free bond interest—the two biggest loopholes. It partially covers four smaller loopholes, in this manner:

If a person has income of more than $10,000 from the four tax-exempt sources and if this exceeds the amount of his income subject to taxation, then the excess becomes taxable. Thus a person with $60,000 from the specified tax-exempt sources and $50,000 subject to tax would have to pay income taxes on $55,000 instead of the present $50,000.

Even that wouldn't go fully in effect until 1971 and there would be a five-year carry-over provision which would enable excess tax-free income from one year to be applied to reduce taxes in future years.

- Deductions claimed by taxpayers with large amounts of tax-free income would be reduced sharply. If only 20 percent of a person's income were taxable, only 20 percent of his itemized deductions could be applied to reduce his taxable income. This is a major reform, urged by the AFL-CIO, which would bring in $500 million more a year to the Treasury.
- A special formula would remove from the tax rolls some 2 million families at or below the poverty level and reduce the tax on persons just a bit above poverty income. It would help single persons earning up to $3,300 and a family of eight earning less than $6,100.
- Corporations which currently split into hundreds of subsidiaries to benefit from tax provisions aimed at helping small business would gradually lose the tax benefits of this device.
- Tax deductions for moving expenses involved in changing jobs would be liberalized to include some indirect costs.

Overall, the Treasury Dept. said, the amount of revenue gained and lost will roughly balance out. The purpose, as Nixon put it in his message to Congress, is to "lighten the burden on those who pay too much and increase the taxes of those who pay too little."

The biggest loophole-closer in the President's proposal—ending the investment tax credit—appeared to have been a last-minute addition to the tax reform package.

Just eight days before Nixon proposed its repeal, his conservative chief economic adviser, Dr. Arthur F. Burns, indicated in a television interview that the Administration wasn't planning any change in the investment tax credit.

The lure of the additional revenue that would be generated—more than $3 billion when fully effective—apparently turned the tide. It enabled Nixon to promise reduction of the surtax starting next January and suggest, if not pledge, its elimination by mid-1970.

Round-the-Clock Job

ANNUAL AWARD of the League for Industrial Democracy is presented to former Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey by Pres. Louis Stulberg of the Ladies' Garment Workers, LID vice president, second from right, during the league's annual conference in New York. At left is Dir. Bayard Rustin of the A. Philip Randolph Institute, and at right is Tom Kahn, LID's executive secretary.

Tribute to Humphrey Cites Leadership Role

New York—More than 800 leaders in American life gathered here to honor former Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey for "20 years of leadership in the struggles for civil rights, social justice and economic democracy."

The occasion was the presentation to Humphrey of the annual award of the League for Industrial Democracy at a luncheon in connection with the league's 64th annual conference.

The league is a non-partisan, private organization of trade unionists, civil rights leaders and writers which defines its purpose as "education for increasing democracy in our economic, political and cultural life."

Pres. Louis Stulberg of the Ladies' Garment Workers, a league vice president, presented the award by reading its citation, which he said summed up Humphrey's life. The citation in part read:

"When it was unpopular to espouse the cause of racial equality, Hubert Humphrey was an eloquent champion of civil rights and integration. . . .

"When it was unfashionable to talk about poverty in this land of plenty, Hubert Humphrey spoke out. . . .

"When it was common for affluent Americans to turn away from the struggles of the labor movement, Hubert Humphrey was a friend of organized workers. . . ."

In a message, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany congratulated the league for choosing well in saluting "this architect of social progress." He added, "Hubert Humphrey is that rare breed of man who has dreamed of the better tomorrow and fought to achieve it."

Humphrey, in accepting the award, called for strengthening the liberal coalition of labor, civil rights groups and religious leaders that was instrumental in securing civil rights legislation in the early 1960's.

The coalition's work now, he said, must be to press for ending "the insanity of a nuclear arms race" and the enactment of legislation in the areas of jobs, education, welfare and housing.

"The liberal coalition, all of its parts, must begin talking and acting as a movement," Humphrey said, adding: "It means stretching the political impossible and making it possible."

Aaron Henry, chairman of the Mississippi Democratic Party, delivered a testimonial to Humphrey in which he said black people are "still climbing" toward full equality because "he, more than any man I know of, has made the struggle possible."

The conference featured panel discussions, including one on "The Nixon Administration and the Democratic Left." Speakers were Michael Harrington, author and league chairman; Gus Tyler, assistant president, ILGWU, and Donald Peterson, chairman of the Wisconsin Democratic party.

Dudley Takes Post With Church Unit

Tilford E. Dudley has resigned as director of the AFL-CIO Speakers Bureau to become national affairs director of the Council for Christian Social Action of the United Church of Christ, effective Apr. 28.

The United Church of Christ is a union of Congregational, Evangelical and Reformed churches. Dudley has long been active in the work of its council. His headquarters will be in Washington.

Dudley became head of the Speakers Bureau in 1958. Earlier he served as assistant director of COPE and, before the merger, as assistant director of the CIO Political Action Committee and associate general counsel for the Packinghouse Workers.

Nixon Names Rep. Rumsfeld OEO Director

Pres. Nixon has named Rep. Donald Rumsfeld (R-Ill.) director of the whittled-down Office of Economic Opportunity. He will also serve as a presidential assistant with Cabinet rank and as a member of the President's Urban Affairs Council.

Rumsfeld will be paid $42,500 a year, the same amount he receives as a congressman. The OEO director's post had carried a salary of $30,000.

Nixon said Rumsfeld showed "great courage" in agreeing to relinquish a safe congressional seat to take on the new administrative post. The President added that he expected "no troubles" in securing Senate confirmation for Rumsfeld.

But Sen. Fred R. Harris (D-Okla.), Democratic national chairman, raised the possibility that Rumsfeld would be questioned "whether he has changed his views and now supports the program."

Democrats pointed out that Rumsfeld had voted against the original Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 that established the war on poverty programs. He also voted against funding the program in 1966.

Rumsfeld, 36, said he was not accepting the post with the "idea of disbanding OEO."

Nixon recently ordered two major OEO programs—the Job Corps and Head Start—transferred to other federal departments.

"I accept these assignments because I believe the Administration will meet the tests of understanding and leadership ahead," he added.

Rumsfeld will succeed Bertrand M. Harding, who has been acting OEO director.

4-26-69

Medical Students Spurn AMA Conservative Line

Chicago—Tradition was defied and precedents shattered when the Student American Medical Association resolved in convention here that present health care systems are "inadequate to meet the needs of society."

The medical students, long dominated by the American Medical Association, took a number of actions that ran counter to AMA policies.

The student doctors, by a vote of 48-7, endorsed prepaid group practice—a growing form of service that the hierarchy of the AMA and some state medical societies have fought.

The association, which met for four days of seminars, symposiums, luncheons and business sessions, had Sen. Edmund Muskie, Democratic candidate for Vice President last year, as keynote speaker.

Other speakers were former Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen, Sen. Fred Harris (D-Okla.); Adam Yarmolinsky of Harvard Law School, and columnist Max Lerner.

The resolution on prepaid group practice noted that, whereas several examples of successful group practice exist in the United States, the student doctors should "support the concept . . . as a model to increase the quality and quantity of health care delivery to all people."

A resolution on fee for service was amended to provide, by a 32-21 vote, that SAMA "go on record as recognizing" that the fee-for-service concept is "not the only utilizable foundation for a system that is to provide the highest quality and availability of medical care possible."

Another resolution was critical of the advertising practices of the drug industry, and acknowledged the right of students to refuse free gifts of doctors' bags and stethoscopes.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, May 3, 1969 | No. 18

Unions Call on Congress To Save Job Corps Camps

Presidential Direct Vote Plan Gains

A labor-backed constitutional amendment to abolish the Electoral College and choose the President of the United States by direct, popular vote passed its first hurdle in Congress.

The amendment won an impressive 28-6 endorsement from the House Judiciary Committee. Sixteen Democrats and 12 Republicans on the committee supported it; only three Democrats and three Republicans opposed it.

It would:

- Assure the election of the candidates for President and Vice President with the most votes if the winning ticket received at least 40 percent of the votes cast throughout the nation.
- Provide for a runoff election between the two top slates if no candidate received at least 40 percent of the popular vote.

Such an amendment was urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany when he testified before the committee earlier this year.

Meany said all other proposals for "patchwork" electoral reform were unacceptable to the AFL-CIO because they could result in election of a President who received fewer votes than his opponent.

Pres. Nixon had told Congress that his personal preference was for direct, popular election but he thought allocation of electoral votes in proportion to the votes cast in each state would have a better chance of ratification.

Nixon's Position

He later said, however, that a direct election amendment "will have my enthusiastic support" although he still has "some doubts" as to whether it can be ratified by the required three-fourths of the states.

Meany had told the House committee that "if the proposal for direct popular election cannot be adopted, there is little reason to believe that any other plan can."

House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) said he was "very confident" the amendment could receive the two-thirds majority needed in the House. The chief Senate sponsor of the amendment, Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.) said it would be a close decision in the Senate. Both the House and Senate must approve the amendment by a two-thirds vote before it is submitted to the states for ratification.

The House proposal would delay the effective date of the amendment for a year after ratification to give Congress time to set up federal voting machinery. This lessened the likelihood that it would be in effect in time for the 1972 presidential elections.

AFL-CIO SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS for 1969 are, from left, top: Gail L. Griffith, Pasadena, Md.; Harry C. White, Los Angeles; Elizabeth Krane, Washington, D.C.; Larry D. Wayt, Freetown, Ind.; Ronda Covington, Portland, Ore., and Charlotte Y. Mack, Chicago.

Extension of Anti-Poverty Drive Asked

By Duane Emme

An Administration plan to slash the Job Corps "will cost much more in the long run in crime, drug addiction and higher welfare costs" than any immediate saving of money, the AFL-CIO warned Congress.

If the cutback goes through, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said, thousands of youths "will lose a chance to learn a trade that will put them on the high road out of poverty."

He and Julius Rothman, associate director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Urban Affairs, testified before the House Education & Labor Committee against the Nixon Administration plan to "restructure" the Job Corps by closing more than half of its centers.

The committee also got a first-hand look at labor participation in the Job Corps from spokesmen for the Operating Engineers, Carpenters, Painters and the Marine Cooks & Stewards division of the Seafarers.

All of them are conducting training programs in various Job Corps centers and follow through by helping to place the graduates in good-paying jobs or in skilled apprentice training.

Hearings on measures to extend the life of the anti-poverty agency, the Office of Economic Opportunity, are going on in both the House and Senate. The legislation would continue Job Corps appropriations at its 1969 level, $280 million.

When the Administration announced the cutback, claiming it would save $100 million, the hearings became centers of angry opposition to the plan from congressmen, local government and community leaders and anti-poverty groups.

Although Labor Sec. George P. Shultz has appeared before both

(Continued on Page 8)

Haggerty Stresses Urgency:

Trades Press Case For Site Picketing

The need for passage of on-site picketing legislation is "far greater" this year than ever before in its long history before Congress, Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. declared.

In testimony before a House Labor subcommittee, he opened labor's drive for a bill to give a union the right to picket a multi-employer construction site if it has a dispute with one of the contractors there. Louis Sherman, BCTD general counsel, presented Haggerty's statement.

The on-site picketing bill has been before Congress ever since 1954 and through the years has drawn an impressive array of bipartisan endorsements, including those of Presidents Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson.

The AFL-CIO has said the measure is "vitally needed" to give building and construction workers "a right they are entitled to." Committees of Congress have agreed. But widely varying procedural devices have been used to block it from ever coming to a vote on either the Senate or House floor.

Intent of the legislation is to nullify a 1949 National Labor Relations Board ruling, known as the Denver Building Trades Case, which found picketing of a subcontractor at a common construction site to be in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act's ban on secondary boycotts.

This year a measure to accomplish that intent, supported by the building trades, has been introduced by Rep. Frank Thompson,

(Continued on Page 3)

Six Awarded Scholarships By AFL-CIO

Six high school seniors have been awarded AFL-CIO Merit Scholarship, providing up to $6,000 in financial aid during four years of college studies.

Since the program started 11 years ago, the AFL-CIO has awarded 66 scholarships to able, deserving youngsters in every part of the nation.

Federation Pres. George Meany notified the following students of their selection:

Larry D. Wayt, Freetown, Ind.; Charlotte Y. Mack, Chicago; Gail Lynn Griffith, Pasadena, Md.; Elizabeth Krane, Washington, D.C.:

(Continued on Page 7)

18 Trustees Appointed To New Labor Center

The AFL-CIO announced appointment of the 18-member board of trustees of the AFL-CIO Labor Studies Center established last February by the federation's Executive Council.

The first meeting of the board will be held in Washington on May 16. The center is scheduled to open on Labor Day, 1969. Six of the trustees are public members; 12 will represent labor.

The center, designed to develop trade union leadership through varied educational training programs, will draw its student body initially from full-time union officials and later expand its course offerings to local union officers and ultimately rank-and-file members.

The AFL-CIO created and financed center marks the first time in the history of the American trade union movement that a national labor education center has been established.

Board members from the AFL-CIO are: Pres. George Meany; Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Walter G. Davis, director of the Dept. of Education; Peter T. Schoemann, chairman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Education and president of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters.

Public members are: Former

(Continued on Page 3)

Senate Panel Asks Nixon To Keep Job Centers Open

A resolution calling upon Pres. Nixon to delay his plan to reduce the Job Corps until Congress acts on a pending bill to extend the Office of Economic Opportunity was approved 10-6 by the Senate Labor Committee.

Introduced by Sen. Alan Cranston (D-Calif.) with 23 co-sponsors, the resolution goes to the Senate floor, where Majority Leader Mike Mansfield has promised prompt action on it.

A similar resolution in opposition to the Administration's plan to shut down 59 of 113 Job Corps centers has been introduced in the House by Rep. William F. Ryan (D-N.Y.) and 44 other congressmen.

The resolutions' sponsors charged the shutdowns would do "irreparable damage" to the lives of 17,000 enrollees.

HOSPITAL MARCHERS in Charleston, S.C., kneel in prayer beside Mrs. Coretta King, center, wife of the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. The march to the state Medical College Hospital was in support of union recognition for striking hospital workers.

'For Union and Human Rights':

Meany Pledges Labor Aid In Charleston Hospital Strike

The AFL-CIO will "do all in its power" to help Charleston, S. C., hospital workers win their strike for decent wages and fair working conditions, Pres. George Meany said in a statement pledging labor support.

"We are confident," Meany said, "that with the kind of unity . . . demonstrated in Charleston, the effort to achieve the basic economic and human rights of these people must succeed."

His message heartened 600 low-paid workers who have been demonstrating almost daily since Mar. 20 "for union and human rights" at state-owned Medical College Hospital and the locally-operated County Hospital.

Most of the hospital aides and other service workers earned $1.30 an hour—about $600 a year below the federal government's poverty level—and a few earned $1.40.

Their plight brought them assistance from the National Organizing Committee of Hospital & Nursing Home Employes set up by the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union, whose Local 1199B represents the striking workers.

Mrs. Coretta Scott King, widow of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., is honorary chairman of the committee. After she addressed a rally of 7,000 persons in Emmanuel AME Church and Fourth Baptist Church in Charleston Apr. 22 the following things happened:

- Mrs. King donned a blue union hat and led 1,500 strikers and sympathizers through downtown streets to the state hospital, where the administrators have refused to meet with the union. The march was peaceful although 1,000 National Guardsmen and more than 100 state troppers and local police stood around and watched.
- Charleston Mayor J. Palmer Gaillard urged college hospital officials to sit down and talk with the union. So did the Charleston County Democratic Executive Committee, which said "the problem is grave" and "indecision can be disastrous."

Some 400 other demonstrators, including high school pupils, pledged to stay in jail until the strikers are given the right to join a union and bargain for a living wage.

Among them were the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, successor of Dr. King as head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Pres. Leon Davis of RWDSU Local 1199, New York City, and Vice Pres. Jack Bradford of Local 1199B.

Meany assured the nation that the AFL-CIO "fully supports the struggle of the hospital workers" not only for material benefits but also "for their own dignity and worth as first class citizens in their own community."

The workers are "seeking to accomplish these modest aims by organizing into Local 1199B," said Meany, adding:

"Because they had no other recourse to win union recognition and to bargain collectively, they were compelled to strike. For more than a month now they have marched on the picket lines where they have been joined by their fellow unionists, by civil rights leaders from other parts of the country, and by a growing number of Charleston citizens, white as well as black."

In Washington, two dozen members of Congress urged Pres. Nixon to intervene on behalf of the workers. The situation at Charleston, they said in a joint letter drafted by Rep. Edward I. Koch (D-N.Y.), is a vivid demonstration of the "hopelessness and helplessness . . . which lead to law violations."

Besides Mrs. King, speakers at the Charleston rally included the Rev. Martin L. King, Sr.; the Rev. Andrew Young of the SCLC; Vice Pres. Doris Turner of RWDSU Local 1199, New York City, and RWDSU Sec.-Treas. Alvin E. Heaps.

"If my husband were alive today," Mrs. King said, "he would be right here with you." While other commitments would keep her out of jail, she said "I will come back."

The nation's top civil rights leaders, including AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, have joined other Negro leaders in enlisting support for the strikers.

Transport Unions Cite Peril of Conglomerates

The rise of the conglomerate corporation poses a "real danger" to U.S. transportation industries, a rail union leader warned the Conference of Transportation Trades at its semi-annual meeting.

Pres. C. L. Dennis of the Railway & Airline Clerks stressed that control of conglomerates is "usually vested in the financial community rather than the transportation industry." Thus, he said, the power to make ultimate decisions lies with men who "have no real background or interest" in transportation.

Therefore there is a real danger that the transportation section of a big catch-all corporation "could be put out of business, not for reasons growing out of the nation's transportation needs but purely for economic advantage," with a "disastrous effect on jobs," he said.

Dennis is chairman of the conference, a grouping of 28 AFL-CIO unions representing about 4.5 million workers in land, sea and air transport.

Other speakers including Rep. Harley O. Staggers (D-W.Va.), chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee, stressed the need for unity in improving the capability of transport services such as maritime and rail.

Frank Heisler of the Machinists reported that air industry unions support a proposal that the Federal Aviation Administration develop one standard of air-worthiness for all commercial plane operations.

Pres. Andrew A. Pettis of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers reported "there is no great shipbuilding program in the offing . . . the Maritime Administration budget is so anemic that it properly belongs over in the poverty program."

Pres. Charles Luna of the United Transportation Union told the delegates that some railroadmen work as long as 32 hours continuously and a limitation on such work shifts is "essential to maintain safety" on the rails.

Reports were made also by Pres. Jerry Wurf of the State, County & Municipal Employes and Pres. John M. Elliott of the Transit Union.

Machinists Win Pacts At Two Big Airlines

The Machinists won major contract gains for 10,350 employes of Eastern Airlines and moved to get similar benefits in negotiations with other major airlines.

Eastern mechanics and ground service crewmen voted to accept the new 26-month pact following ratification of a similar two-year settlement covering 1,100 IAM members on Northeast Airlines. The two agreements were the first in 1969 contract bargaining with U.S. air carriers.

Union negotiators have been meeting separately with managements of eight major airlines in talks that began last year. The talks are being continued on Trans World and Braniff airlines. Negotiations are deadlocked on United, Northwest and Continental airlines, and mediation has been asked for.

More than 1,000 members have been locked out since Jan. 21 on National Airlines, and planes have been maintained mainly by supervisors and strikebreakers.

In Canada, Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau stirred a storm by saying he opposes wage parity for Canadian workers—the issue in a strike of 6,350 mechanics and service employes that has grounded Air Canada, federally-owned airline, since Apr. 20.

The Eastern contract will raise mechanics' rates from $4.14 to $5.50 an hour in steps that reach their peak July 1, 1971. Rates for cleaners and laborers rise similarly from $2.87 to $3.77 an hour over the term.

First raises under the new pay schedule will be 41 cents an hour for mechanics, 25 cents for cleaners, all retroactive to Jan. 1.

For the first time on the airlines, the contract provides payment of 6 percent interest on base pay raises for January and February—an innovation proposed by IAM Pres. P. L. Siemiller to speed up the notoriously slow pace of airline negotiations.

Other major features include severance pay for employes who prefer not to move in mergers or plant relocations; an improved cost-of-living escalator clause that may add up to 21 cents an hour to wages; and a 30-minute paid meal period for all afternoon and night-shift workers starting next Jan. 1—in effect, a 37.5-hour week.

Rubber Union Wins 1st Pact At Test Track

Laredo, Tex.—The Rubber Workers won a first contract at the Uniroyal Inc. test track here after a long struggle to get management to the bargaining table.

The struggle ended after a National Labor Relations Board settlement in which the company agreed to pay $6,900 to two workers who were unjustly fired, and to reinstate several others, URW Local 758 said.

The local concluded negotiations on an 18-month contract with wage increases of 30 cents an hour, plus fringe benefits valued at an additional 51 cents.

The URW reported two contract settlements:

- At the Goodyear Aerospace Corp. in Jackson, O., Local 820 negotiated a three-year pact providing wage increases of 20 to 30 cents an hour this year, 15 cents next year and 13 cents more in the final year; improved vacations, and holidays rising to a total of nine; better hospitalization and insurance benefits.
- At Rubber Latex Products Div. of Reichhold Chemicals, Inc., in Cuyahoga Falls, O., members of URW Local 263 agreed to wages and benefits totaling 73 cents an hour in a first contract. Besides wage hikes totaling 36 cents an hour over three years, the union won four-hour call-in and reporting pay; eight paid holidays; one to five weeks of paid vacation and other benefits.

Kirkland on Panel For Foundations

Lane Kirkland, executive assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, has been named to a commission of leaders in various areas of national life who will take part in a study of private foundations.

The commission, composed of 14 members with more to be named later, will try to determine how increasing government involvement in social welfare programs will affect the foundations. It also will consider their tax-exempt status.

Peter G. Peterson, board chairman of Bell & Howell Co., set up the commission at the urging of John D. Rockefeller III and other philantrophists.

Union Victor In Landmark California Vote

Los Angeles—Superior Court clerks voted nearly 5 to 1 for an AFL-CIO affiliate here in California's first election under employe relations machinery in the public sector.

The ballot was the first resulting from some 70 petitions pitting AFL-CIO unions against unaffiliated associations for representation of 60,000 Los Angeles county workers.

Court clerks voted 130 to 27 for State, County & Municipal Employes Council 49 as bargaining agent. The opposition was the Los Angeles County Employes Association.

California law gives public employes the right to organize and establishes that public management must "meet and confer" with employe groups.

But last September Los Angeles county officials adopted a special ordinance formed on the National Labor Relations Act for representation elections and meaningful collective bargaining and grievance procedures.

The legislation followed two years of turmoil in the country, including strikes by social workers and hospital employes.

Next is an election among 2,000 Probation Dept. employes, also matching SCME against the association.

Other large units to be decided involve the Service Employes and building trades unions.

Litton Scored for Plan To Liquidate U.S. Jobs

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has charged that the development of Litton Industries as a conglomerate corporation is directly responsible for the pending liquidation of Royal Typewriter Co. as an American producer and the transfer of its operations to Japan.

In a letter to Chairman Wilbur D. Mills of the House Ways & Means Committee, IUD Pres. I. W. Abel said Litton, which acquired Royal in 1965, recently closed the Springfield, Mo. plant, wiping out 1,000 jobs, and predicted that the Royal unit, employing 2,500 in Hartford, Conn., was doomed.

"I am informed that Litton openly asserts that a new plant it has built in Japan, with an annual capacity of 600,000 typewriters, will soon be the source of Royal typewriters sold in the United States," Abel said.

Abel reminded Mills that the IUD's tax testimony earlier this month had warned that conglomerates offer "special dangers" to job security, community well-being and collective bargaining. What Litton is doing to Royal "dramatically verified" that warning, he said.

"This is the kind of maneuvering that typifies the conglomerates corporation," he charged. "Litton bought Royal Typewriter, not to make typewriters—that was and is incidental—but to use it as a pawn in Litton's only business, making money.

"This is social irresponsibility at its worst," Abel concluded, "and we hope you and your committee will do your utmost to curb it by every possible means."

130 New Jobs Added:

Labor Budget Hiked To Investigate Funds

The Dept. of Labor expects to save some money during the coming fiscal year by leaving jobs of wage-hour investigators unfilled. But it will be spending more—much more than ever before—investigating pension and welfare funds.

If Congress approves the Nixon Administration's revised budget request, the Office of Labor-Management & Welfare-Pension Reports will add 130 new employes to the 450 it already has. That's a nearly 30 percent increase, at a time when the word is out to hold the line and cut the budget.

The office is the repository for the 159,000 reports received each year under the Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act and the 51,656 union financial reports required under the Landrum-Griffin Act.

But it's not an increase in record-keeping duties that has prompted the big jump in employes and a nearly $2.5 million increase in the appropriations request.

The added staff will be used for crime-fighting—specifically to try to determine whether any of the crime syndicate's financial manipulations can be traced through employe welfare or pension funds administered jointly by unions and management or by either party.

Most of the added staff will be assigned to work under Justice Dept. supervision as part of interagency task forces being set up in various cities. Pres. Nixon, in his message to Congress on organized crime, referred to the special units as "federal racketeering field offices." They will include specialists from the Internal Revenue Service, the FBI, Bureau of Customs, Securities & Exchange Commission, Post Office and other agencies.

Nixon told Congress that "through large scale target investigations, we believe we can obtain the prosecutions that will imprison the leaders, paralyze the administrators, frighten the street workers and, eventually, paralyze the whole organized crime syndicate in any one particular city."

The President said the crime syndicate "has deeply penetrated broad segments of American life" and added: "It quietly continues to infiltrate and corrupt organized labor."

The role of probing for crime links to pension and welfare funds is somewhat complicated by a provision of the Pension & Welfare Plans Disclosure Act which is intended to rule out "fishing expeditions."

Unless the Labor Dept. has "reason to believe" that there are irregularities in a plan, it is prohibited from initiating investigations on its own. And in any event, the first step it may take is to request a CPA audit of the fund.

In an apparent effort to get around that obstacle, the department plans to step up what it terms "desk audits"—careful scrutiny of reports that are filed to determine whether the information is complete or whether additional facts are necessary.

Some of this has been done on a spot check basis in the past; in the future it apparently will be more frequent.

There was no Labor Dept. announcement of the new project and the President's crime message did not list the Labor Dept. among the federal agencies enlisted in the Justice Dept. effort. But in the Labor Dept. budget summary, the big increase in jobs for the reports office stood out as the largest by far in the department.

18 Trustees Appointed to Studies Center

(Continued from Page 1)

Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz; Theodore Kheel, New York attorney and labor arbitrator; Bayard Rustin, executive director of A. Philip Randolph Institute; former Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur Cohen; former U.S. Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.); John R. Coleman, president of Haverford College.

Other labor members on the board are: Paul Hall, president, Seafarers; Joseph A. Beirne, president, Communications Workers; I. W. Abel, president, Steelworkers; Paul Jennings, president, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Frederick O'Neal, president, Actors' Equity; Hunter P. Wharton, president, Operating Engineers; Harry Van Arsdale, president, New York City Central Labor Council; Miles Stanley, president, West Virginia State AFL-CIO.

'Labor' Newspaper Published Bi-Weekly

Labor, the 50-year-old newspaper of the railway unions, has published its last edition as a weekly. Beginning with its May 10 edition, the publication will be published every other week.

The change was voted by the 14 union owners and the paper's board of directors as a means of meeting rising costs and averting an increase in the subscription rates.

Fact Sheet Spurs Drive For Just Tax Legislation

The AFL-CIO intensified its drive for tax justice by supplying 200,000 union activists with the facts on tax reform legislation currently under consideration in Congress.

The fact sheet, prepared by the federation's Dept. of Legislation, is entitled "The Urgent Need for Tax Justice." It summarizes detailed testimony presented by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to the House Ways & Means Committee.

It attacks 13 specific tax loopholes, such as capital gains, oil depletion allowances, tax-free bonds, and hobby farm tax deductions. It also calls for repeal of the 7 percent investment tax credit and proposes income tax relief for low- and middle-income taxpayers.

Individual unions and union members are urged to convey their views on tax reform to their congressmen and senators. The pamphlet concludes:

"As Americans, union members seek only a tax system that is based on fairness and justice. The time for beginning long-needed legislative reformations is now."

BRIEFING BY SEN. EDMUND S. MUSKIE, right, highlights a session of 20th annual COPE Legislative Institute for 85 delegates of the Textile Workers Union of America. With Muskie is TWUA Vice Pres. William M. DuChessi, the union's legislative director. The delegates from 17 states also met with congressmen and senators from their home states and were briefed by government and labor officials during the five-day meeting in Washington.

Congress Told On-Site Picketing Vital Need of Building Trades

(Continued from Page 1)

Jr. (D-N.J.), chairman of the subcommittee holding hearings.

Sec. of Labor George P. Shultz testified before the subcommittee in general support of situs picketing legislation but called for certain "safeguards" in it.

He said the legislation should not permit picketing for an illegal objective, should not conflict with certain state laws, must protect industrial and independent unions, permit contract-enforcing injunctions, and have a seven-day waiting period for situs picketing and a 15-day time limit on it.

Haggerty said there is a "far greater need" for legislation than ever before because "the effects of the Denver Building Trades rules have become even more inequitable" in recent years than they were in the 1950s.

This is so, he pointed out, because employers have seized upon new devices to transform hitherto legal primary picketing at a construction site into illegal picketing under the NLRB's interpretation of the Denver case.

One device singled out is a "reserved gate" which restricts building trades pickets to a gate designated by an employer at a construction site. A second device is limiting picketing only to designated "regular" work hours.

Shultz, the subcommittee's lead-off witness, did not furnish specific details on his version of needed "safeguards" but promised to do so at a later date.

In his testimony, Haggerty said labor welcomes "the addition of the Nixon Administration to the list of the prior administrations which have supported the situs picketing principle."

On the subject of safeguards, he pointed out that the Thompson bill "includes all the safeguards or limitations which the Eisenhower Administration had thought necessary," plus a few additional limitations developed in the years since.

In fact, it was noted that Thompson's bill is drawn from one introduced in 1959 on behalf of Pres. Eisenhower by Senators Everett McKinley Dirksen (R-Ill.) and Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) among others.

The department believes that "the essential safeguards and limitations" to protect the public interest are already in the bill, Haggerty said, "and we trust that this committee . . . after its study of the matter will be the same opinion."

Haggerty said the building trades share the desire expressed by Shultz in his testimony "to put this inflammatory issue behind us."

Shultz was questioned by Thompson, Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.) and Rep. Louis Stokes (D-Ohio) all of whom asked for more specific details on the "safeguards" he wanted in the bill.

Thompson expressed opposition to revising the Taft-Hartley Act to permit enforcement of contracts by injunctions. He warned this could pave the way to the old system of "government by injunction" in labor disputes.

However, all of the lawmakers withheld full judgment on Shultz' ideas until they are presented in specific terms.

Another witness before the subcommittee was the U.S. Chamber of Commerce which "respectfully" stood by its preference for the status quo. It has opposed the legislation every time it has been up in Congress.

Maritime Trades Urge Revamped Subsidy Plan

Congress was urged by the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. to extend subsidies under the nation's merchant marine program to all segments of the U.S. commercial fleet instead of restricting the aid to 14 "favored" companies.

MTD Administrator O. William Moody, Jr., presented the department's position in testimony before the House Merchant Marine & Fisheries Committee.

Moody specifically asked that the section of the maritime bill dealing with ship construction subsidies be broadened to make them available "without discrimination" to the unsubsidized two-thirds of the industry "which has been beyond the reach of this program up to now."

He urged, at the same time, that the measure prohibit the subsidized operators from reaping a "double subsidy" taking both construction and operating subsidies, which had been given them to compete with foreign operators for commercial cargo, and using them instead to compete with unsubsidized U.S. carriers for government cargo.

"We think the order of priorities has been inverted," Moody declared. "We think we should be here today discussing the ways to correct the deficiencies of our 33-year-old maritime program—and that only then should we get down to discussing the dollars that need to be appropriated to get the job done."

Describing the authorization measure as little more than a "status quo" bill, Moody observed:

"Nowhere does it reflect the need for an accelerated program of shipbuilding. Nowhere does it reflect the need for a balanced fleet. Nowhere does it reflect the need for going beyond the favored 14 berth-line operators to make operating and construction differential assistance available to all operators. Nowhere does it reflect any concern for the two-thirds of the industry which is on the brink of obsolescence."

The committee also heard testimony from the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Committee, whose executive director, Hoyt S. Haddock, urged appropriations of $678,275,000 in ship construction funds this year. Haddock based the figure on a survey of U.S.-flag operators' ship construction intentions if sufficient subsidy funds were made available. He said congressional approval of the figure would result in the building of 82 new U.S. ships at an estimated total cost of nearly $1.2 billion.

Paper Handlers Get $41 Raise In Strike Pact

St. Louis—The St. Louis Post-Dispatch and St. Louis Globe-Democrat have resumed publication after union paper handlers ended a six-day strike against the Pulitzer Publishing Co.

The Pulitzer company publishes the Post-Dispatch and prints the Globe-Democrat under contract.

In the six-day strike Paper Handlers Local 16 of the Printing Pressmen won increases in salaries and fringe benefits totaling $41 over a 39-month period.

Paper handlers voted 75 to 3 to accept the contract recommended by their negotiator.

The agreement provides for an increase of $15 a week retroactive to Jan. 1; $12.50 a week on Jan. 1, 1970; and $12.50 on Jan. 1, 1971. A seventh holiday, the employe's birthday, was added to the contract.

Coalition Against Progress

IN THE FIRST MAJOR rollcall of the 91st Congress, the conservative coalition in the House has again demonstrated its ability to water down and trim back basic social and economic programs.

The House Education & Labor Committee had voted out a five-year extension of the basic school aid bill for elementary and secondary education. The authorization measure was designed to build long-term stability into the successful program and to allow school administrators to plan future policies keyed to continuing aid funds.

As the bill moved to the floor the Republicans and their Southern Democratic allies reformed their working alliance and rallied the votes to amend the committee measure to a two-year extension with changes in some of the basic program in terms of limited block-grant provisions.

On the key rollcall the coalition came up with 235 votes to 184 for the liberal approach. The battle now shifts to the Senate.

The conservative coalition in the 91st Congress has picked up important new strength in the White House. The Administration strongly backed the reduction to a two-year education bill but offered no major proposals of its own.

The outlook for the 91st Congress, then, is that liberal proposals and programs may emerge from House or Senate committees and face the gauntlet of coalition amendments designed to trim, weaken, water down or perhaps destroy the intent and design of the legislation.

Except for the 89th Congress the GOP-Southern Democratic coalition has been a dominant force for decades. The first test of strength in the 91st Congress indicates it is still with us, hampering the drive for economic and social progress.

The Paycheck Buys Less

THE TIGHT MONEY, high interest rate policies that are being used to "cool" the economy are heating up the cost of living.

The latest Consumer Price Index disclosed that the most important factors in the eight-tenths of 1 percent increase were higher mortgage interest rates and higher prices for used cars.

The theory of higher interest rates was that they would cool the economy by dampening demand for money, including mortgage funds to build and sell new homes.

But the cost of mortgages has led the price rise, jumping 3.5 percent for conventional and VA loans alone and not including FHA-insured loans.

The net effect was to bring workers' purchasing power below the year-ago level despite gains in take-home pay.

Higher interest rates are great for banking and financial institutions; for workers they mean less purchasing power.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

David Dubinsky, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Peter T. Schoemann, I. W. Abel, Hunter P. Wharton, William Pollock, A. F. Grospiron, Joseph Curran, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, Karl F. Feller, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller, Paul Jennings, Max Greenberg, Matthew Guinan, M. A. Hutcheson, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Paul L. Phillips, Herman D. Kenin, David Sullivan, A. J. DeAndrade, John H. Lyons, C. L. Dennis

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: John M. Barry
Assistant Editors: Duane Emme, Eugene A. Kelly, John R. Oravec, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2.00 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. XIV Saturday, May 3, 1969 No. 18

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Nice Going'

A Word Edgewise:

Israel Standing Firm Against Arab Attacks, Soviet Pressure

By John P. Roche

EVERYONE THESE DAYS seems to be mad at the Israelis. For some reason or other, Israel acts as though it had won a war with a group of states intending to eliminate it from the map and refuses, despite all sorts of "great power" pressure, to say "boys will be boys" and return to the status quo before May 1967. Even though it has made them quite unpopular with the United Nations Security Council, the Israelis learned one thing from the Nazi holocaust: they will not sign their own death warrants.

It is obvious in retrospect that Israel made a serious strategic error in June 1967. Instead of stopping when their forces had occupied limited objectives, they should have gone on to Damascus, Cairo, and Amman. This would have given them some negotiating slack, some trading counters. As it stands now, they are asked to give up the improved frontier they won in 1967 in return for rights that they were already entitled to when the war broke out—free passage through the Suez Canal.

What is really quite amusing (though infuriating in Jerusalem) is that Arab leaders such as King Hussein, when they set forth their "moderate" demands, sound as though they were doing Israel a favor. Hussein spoke recently in Boston and sounded like an active candidate for B'nai B'rith's "Man of the Year" award.

In general, Hussein has suggested everywhere he spoke that he and his fellow Arab leaders would allow Israel to return to its pre-war frontiers and in return would do their best to help the Jewish state to overcome its reputation for imperialism.

The United Nations Security Council has behaved throughout the whole Middle Eastern crisis as though Israel's existence were proof of its aggressive intentions and its threat to the peace. The existence of Israel is a threat to the peace, but only because its neighbors have for a generation been determined to destroy it.

It is rather like accusing a man who was mugged of responsibility for the act, of provocation, because he had money in his wallet. The UN has consistently applied a double standard, denouncing Israel for bombing guerrilla bases in Jordan while ignoring the sabotage and terrorism spread by the infiltrators inside Israel.

Let us take a case: the recent rocketing of Elath from the Jordanian town of Aqaba. As anyone who has heard one of these Soviet rockets whoosh into Saigon can testify, they are not children's toys. Rocketing is not comparable, that is, to the angry shots of a solitary sniper.

What precisely does the Security Council want Israel to do when one of its cities is hit from a location in Jordan or Syria or the United Arab Republic? A protest to the Jordanian government will get the standard reply, that unfortunately these guerrillas cannot be controlled by Hussein's forces. Whether Hussein's forces want to control them (as long as they leave him alone) is an open question, but Pres. Nasser has made it clear that he is delighted with the guerrilla "war of liberation."

IN ESSENCE, the Arab states have mounted a split-level assault on Israel. The guerrillas are funded and equipped and sent off to make as much trouble as possible. Israel takes the necessary action to cripple guerrilla operations, which involves bombing the Arab sanctuaries. The Arab states protest to the UN against acts of war. And the Security Council—last time unanimously, with the United States and Britain abstaining—condemns Israel.

All this is done against a background of demands for a "big power" settlement which has recently led to meetings in New York between the Soviet Union, France, Britain, and the United States. If some people did not take it seriously, the presence of the Soviet Union would be humorous; it is like inviting a murderer to help settle the estate of his deceased victim.

Luckily Israel is not dead, but not because the Soviets haven't tried. As I noted above, the rockets that hit Elath were not made in Jordan by desert gnomes. And the missile that hit the Israeli destroyer of the same name was not made in the shadow of the Pyramids.

Realistically there is only one great power action that is worth discussion: a U.S. guarantee of Israel. If this is out of the question because of our present isolationist tendencies, we should at least have the decency to stand aside, keep out of collective efforts to impose a settlement on Israel and encourage this tiny free nation to stand firm in defense of its liberty and survival.

Faculties Duck Responsibility:

Campus Chaos Poses Specter Of New Class of Incompetents

The following is excerpted from "The Case for Professionalism," by Robert Brustein, drama critic for The New Republic and dean of the drama school at Yale University. The article appeared in the April 26, 1969, issue of the magazine.

MAKING AN ANALOGY between democratic political systems and the university structure, students begin by demanding a representative voice in the "decisions that affect our lives," including questions of faculty tenure, curriculum changes, grading, and academic discipline.

As universities begin to grant some of these demands, thus tacitly accepting the analogy, the demands escalate to the point where students are now insisting on a voice in electing the university president, a role in choosing the faculty, and even a place on the board of trustees.

I do not wish to comment here on the validity of individual student demands—certainly a student role in university affairs is both practical and desirable, as long as that role remains advisory.

Nor will I take the time to repeat the familiar litany of admiration for the current student generation—it has, to my mind, already been sufficiently praised, even overpraised, since for all its intrinsic passion, intelligence, and commitment, the proportion of serious, gifted hardworking students remains about what it always was.

I do want, however, to examine the analogy which is now helping to politicize the university, and scholarship itself, because it seems to me full of falsehood.

Clearly it is absurd to identify electoral with educational institutions. To compare the state with the academy is to assume that the primary function of the university is to govern and to rule.

While the relationship between the administration and the faculty does have certain political overtones, the faculty and administration can no more be considered the elected representatives of the student body than the students—who were admitted after voluntary application on a selective and competitive basis—can be considered freeborn citizens of a democratic state: the relationship between teacher and student is strictly tutorial. Thus the faculty member functions not to represent the student's interests in relation to the administration, but rather to communicate knowledge from one who knows to one who doesn't.

That the reasoning behind this analogy has not been more frequently questioned indicates the extent to which some teachers are refusing to exercise their roles as professionals. During a time when all authority is being radically questioned, faculty members are becoming more reluctant to accept the responsibility of their wisdom and experience and are, therefore, often willing to abandon their authoritative position in order to placate the young.

On the one hand, the demand for "relevance" is an effort to make the university undertake the reparations that society should be paying. On the other, it is a form of solipsism, among both black students and white. And such solipsism is a serious threat to that "disinterestedness" that Matthew Arnold claimed to be the legitimate function of the scholar and the critic.

The proper study of mankind becomes contemporary or future man; and the student focuses not on the outside world, past or present, so much as on a parochial corner of his own immediate needs. But this is childish, in addition to being romantic, reflecting as it does the student's unwillingness to examine or conceive a world beyond the self. And here the university seems to be paying a debt not of its own making—a debt incurred in the permissive home and the progressive school, where knowledge was usually of considerably less importance than self-expression.

THE SCHOLASTIC HABITS of childhood and adolescence are now being extended into adulthood. The graduates of the Core course, and courses like it, are concentrating on the development of their "life styles," chafing against restrictions of all kinds (words like "coercion" and "co-option" are the current jargon), and demanding that all courses be geared to their personal requirements and individual interests. The university student is, or should already be, a developed personality, that comes to the academy not to investigate his "life style" but to absorb what knowledge he can, and that he is, therefore, preparing himself, through study, research, and contemplation, to enter the community of professional scholars.

In resisting this notion, some students reveal their desire to maintain the conditions of childhood, to preserve the liberty they enjoyed in their homes and secondary schools, to extend the privileges of a child- and youth-oriented culture into their mature years. They wish to remain amateurs.

That the university needs improvement goes without saying. And students have been very helpful in breaking down its excesses of impersonality and attempting to sever its ties with the military-industrial complex.

But students need improvement too, which they are hardly receiving through all this self-righteous bustle over power. That students should pay so much attention to this activity creates an even more serious problem: the specter of an ignorant, uninformed group of graduates or dropouts who (when they finally leave the academic sanctuary) are incompetent to deal with society's real evils or to function properly in professions they have chosen to enter.

Long Way From Justice:

Goldfinger Cites Inadequacies In Nixon's Tax Reform Plans

THE INCOME TAX REFORM package Pres. Nixon sent to Congress is "a long, long way from tax justice," organized labor's chief economist said.

Nathaniel Goldfinger, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, said the federation's basic three-point "tax justice" program would:

- Eliminate the loopholes of special privilege for wealthy families and corporations.
- Remove the poor from the income tax rolls.
- Reduce the relative tax burden on low- and moderate-income taxpayers, who are now "getting it in the neck."

"I think that the average person in this country would be in favor of that kind of program," Goldfinger asserted, as he was questioned by reporters on Labor News Conference, a public affairs interview broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., DST, on the Mutual radio network.

Goldfinger hit the Administration's delay in pressing for immediate curbs on such "key areas of special tax privilege" as capital gains and tax-free interest on state, county and municipal bonds.

He said that with "plenty of good tax economists and tax lawyers in the U.S. Treasury Dept.," and the big store of "detailed knowledge on the subject" that is available, "they should have been able to come up with a full program of tax justice by now."

THE LABOR ECONOMIST emphasized the AFL-CIO's solid opposition to a so-called "value-added" tax. He called it just a "special and very fancy name" for what amounts to a "federal retail sales tax," which is a "most unfair form of taxation."

Goldfinger praised Pres. Nixon's move to repeal the 7 percent investment tax credit, calling it the "worst inflationary device in the economy today." He recalled that organized labor opposed adoption of the loophole in 1962. He pointed out that when investment tax credit repeal becomes fully effective, $3 billion a year will be added to the federal treasury.

Reporters questioning Goldfinger were Murray Seeger of the Los Angeles Times and Frank Swoboda of United Press Intl.

By Press Associates, Inc.

AT A TIME when all sorts of "tax reform" proposals are coming before Congress, it might be a good idea for taxpayers to keep clearly in mind the tax loopholes that really matter.

One of the best ways to keep abreast of the real loopholes is to turn to the ecstatic brochures of those who use tax loopholes as come-ons for their tax letters and reports that will make you rich and keep you rich.

The latest is called "The Executive's Wealth Report," to be issued by the Institute for Business Planning, Inc., of New York City.

It's addressed to all those who "are seriously dedicated to the accumulation of large-scale wealth"—the kind of man who wants "something more than a few hundred thousand dollars," won't be satisfied with anything less than millions and the service is guaranteed "to lift you right out of your chair."

The four-page brochure ought to be "must" reading for Chairman Wilbur Mills of the House Ways & Means Committee which is looking into tax reforms. It would lift the committee right out of its collective chair and provide it with a sure guide on what to do about taxes in "our new age of affluence," straight from the horse's mouth.

The brochure, which promises subscribers the kind of "wealth-building information" that only the "very rich have constantly available to them," lists five kinds of help "for amassing large-scale wealth under today's new set of conditions." To begin with:

(1.) Where the big new investment profits lie—They lie, says the brochure, by getting there first, by knowing "every vehicle for getting rich in our new age—whether it's the rich offbeat investments in art, or scotch whiskey, or stud horses—whether it's a new kind of convertible bond that's loaded or stock warrants" with the enormous potential of an industry about to take off.

But just getting there first isn't enough. There's:

(2.) How to use taxes to pyramid wealth. Here it isn't enough simply to save on taxes, you've got to know about "taxwealth multipliers" which are described as a "way of life" for the very rich.

These are such things as investing in a government oil lease, or putting a few thousand dollars into business real estate which can help "create substantial income virtually out of nothing," or buying up cheap land and use tax advantages until the boom comes, or turning regular dividend income from company stock into low-taxed capital gains, "one of the greatest tax benefits ever."

But you've also got to know:

(3.) How to protect your wealth. Tax experts will tell you how to use the Short Term Trust and the Living Trust and how the tax on a large estate can be reduced from 40 percent to 9 percent.

There is more, too.

(4.) How to increase your "executive payroll fortune." This will explain how company executives get their big expenses paid—tax free—how you can get big company loans at 2 percent to build your home and the right kind of option on your own company stock.

And, finally,

(5.) Increasing company wealth. Tips on management strategies bound to increase profits and pour the money in.

The report, says the Institute for Business Planning, obviously is not for the general public nor even for the general run of executives. It's getting ready for 5,000 dedicated charter subscribers at $8 a month.

And just to prove that the tax experts are insatiable and haven't overlooked a bet, the brochure points out that the $8 itself is "a tax deductible expense, of course."

Tax reform is now in the air, yet there is grave danger that a bit of bandaid will be applied to the worst abuses and the really important loopholes forgotten. "The Executive Wealth Report" ought to be a sure guide as to where the real money is and where the real loopholes are.

And, as usual, the average taxpayer foots the bill.

TAX JUSTICE will take a lot more than the reforms Pres. Nixon sent to Congress, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger, center, declared on Labor News Conference, as he was questioned by Frank Swoboda, left, of United Press Intl. and Murray Seeger of the Los Angeles Times.

Key Rollcall Vote on Education Bill

The House on Apr. 28 adopted a labor-opposed amendment to the aid to education bill, cutting the program back from five to two years and giving the states direct control over part of the federal funds.

The amendment was passed, 235-184. Right votes (R) against the amendment were cast by 175 Democrats and 9 Republicans. Wrong votes (W) for the amendment were cast by a coalition of 175 Republicans and 60 Democrats.

Numerals show congressional districts; PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—Absent and not paired.

ALABAMA
1. Edwards (R) W
2. Dickinson (R) W
3. Andrews (D) W
4. Nichols (D) W
5. Flowers (D) W
6. Buchanan (R) W
7. Bevill (D) W
8. Jones (D) R

ALASKA
AL Pollock (R) W

ARIZONA
1. Rhodes (R) W
2. Udall (D) R
3. Steiger (R) W

ARKANSAS
1. Alexander (D) R
2. Mills (D) R
3. Hammerschmidt (R) W
4. Pryor (D) R

CALIFORNIA
1. Clausen (R) W
2. Johnson (D) R
3. Moss (D) R
4. Leggett (D) R
5. Burton (D) R
6. Mailliard (R) W
7. Cohelan (D) R
8. Miller (D) R
9. Edwards (D) R
10. Gubser (R) W
11. McCloskey (R) W
12. Talcott (R) PW
13. Teague (R) W
14. Waldie (D) R
15. McFall (D) R
16. Sisk (D) R
18. Mathias (R) W
33. Pettis (R) W
34. Hanna (D) R
35. Utt (R) W
36. Wilson, Bob (R) W
37. Van Deerlin (D) R
38. Tunney (D) R

Los Angeles County
17. Anderson (D) R
19. Holifield (D) R
20. Smith (R) W
21. Hawkins (D) R
22. Corman (D) R
23. Clawson (R) W
24. Lipscomb (R) W
25. Wiggins (R) W
26. Rees (D) R
27. Vacancy
28. Bell (R) W
29. Brown (D) R
30. Roybal (D) R
31. Wilson, Charles (D) R
32. Hosmer (R) W

COLORADO
1. Rogers (D) R
2. Brotzman (R) W
3. Evans (D) R
4. Aspinall (D) W

CONNECTICUT
1. Daddario (D) R
2. St. Onge (D) R
3. Giaimo (D) W
4. Weicker (R) W
5. Monagan (D) R
6. Meskill (R) W

DELAWARE
AL Roth (R) W

FLORIDA
1. Sikes (D) W
2. Fuqua (D) W
3. Bennett (D) W
4. Chappell (D) W
5. Frey (R) W
6. Gibbons (D) R
7. Haley (D) W
8. Cramer (R) W
9. Rogers (D) W
10. Burke (R) W
11. Pepper (D) R
12. Fascell (D) R

GEORGIA
1. Hagan (D) W
2. O'Neal (D) W
3. Brinkley (D) W
4. Blackburn (R) W
5. Thompson (R) W
6. Flynt (D) W
7. Davis (D) W
8. Stuckey (D) W
9. Landrum (D) W
10. Stephens (D) W

HAWAII
AL Matsunaga (D) R
AL Mink (D) R

IDAHO
1. McClure (R) W
2. Hansen (R) W

ILLINOIS
12. McClory (R) W
14. Erlenborn (R) W
15. Reid (R) W
16. Anderson (R) W
17. Arends (R) W
18. Michel (R) W
19. Railsback (R) W
20. Findley (R) W
21. Gray (D) R
22. Springer (R) W
23. Shipley (D) R
24. Price (D) R

Chicago—Cook County
1. Dawson (D) PR
2. Mikva (D) R
3. Murphy (D) R
4. Derwinski (R) W
5. Kluczynski (D) R
6. Ronan (D) R
7. Annunzio (D) R
8. Rostenkowski (D) R
9. Yates (D) R
10. Collier (R) W
11. Pucinski (D) R
13. Rumsfeld (R) W

INDIANA
1. Madden (D) R
2. Landgrebe (R) W
3. Brademas (D) R
4. Adair (R) W
5. Roudebush (R) W
6. Bray (R) W
7. Myers (R) W
8. Zion (R) W
9. Hamilton (D) R
10. Dennis (R) W
11. Jacobs (D) R

IOWA
1. Schwengel (R) W
2. Culver (D) A
3. Gross (R) W
4. Kyl (R) W
5. Smith (D) R
6. Mayne (R) W
7. Scherle (R) W

KANSAS
1. Sebelius (R) W
2. Mize (R) W
3. Winn (R) W
4. Shriver (R) W
5. Skubitz (R) W

KENTUCKY
1. Stubblefield (D) R
2. Natcher (D) R
3. Cowger (R) W
4. Snyder (R) W
5. Carter (R) W
6. Watts (D) R
7. Perkins (D) R

LOUISIANA
1. Hebert (D) PW
2. Boggs (D) R
3. Caffery (D) W
4. Waggonner (D) W
5. Passman (D) W
6. Rarick (D) W
7. Edwards (D) PR
8. Long (D) W

MAINE
1. Kyros (D) R
2. Hathaway (D) R

MARYLAND
1. Morton (R) W
2. Long (D) R
3. Garmatz (D) W
4. Fallon (D) R
5. Hogan (R) W
6. Beall (R) W
7. Friedel (D) R
8. Gude (R) R

MASSACHUSETTS
1. Conte (R) W
2. Boland (D) R
3. Philbin (D) R
4. Donohue (D) R
5. Morse (R) W
6. Bates (R) A
7. Macdonald (D) R
8. O'Neill (D) R
9. McCormack (D) Speaker
10. Heckler (R) W
11. Burke (D) R
12. Keith (R) W

MICHIGAN
2. Esch (R) W
3. Brown (R) W
4. Hutchinson (R) W
5. Ford, Gerald (R) W
6. Chamberlain (R) W
7. Riegle (R) W
8. Harvey (R) W
9. Vander Jagt (R) W
10. Cederberg (R) W
11. Ruppe (R) R
12. O'Hara (D) R
18. Broomfield (R) W
19. McDonald (R) W

Metropolitan Detroit
1. Conyers (D) R
13. Diggs (D) R
14. Nedzi (D) R
15. Ford, William (D) R
16. Dingell (D) R
17. Griffiths (D) R

MINNESOTA
1. Quie (R) W
2. Nelsen (R) W
3. MacGregor (R) W
4. Karth (D) R
5. Fraser (D) R
6. Zwach (R) W
7. Langen (R) W
8. Blatnik (D) R

MISSISSIPPI
1. Abernethy (D) W
2. Whitten (D) W
3. Griffin (D) W
4. Montgomery (D) W
5. Colmer (D) W

MISSOURI
1. Clay (D) R
2. Symington (D) R
3. Sullivan (D) R
4. Randall (D) R
5. Bolling (D) R
6. Hull (D) R
7. Hall (R) W
8. Ichord (D) W
9. Hungate (D) R
10. Burlison (D) R

MONTANA
1. Olsen (D) R
2. Vacancy

NEBRASKA
1. Denney (R) W
2. Cunningham (R) A
3. Martin (R) W

NEVADA
AL Baring (D) W

NEW HAMPSHIRE
1. Wyman (R) W
2. Cleveland (R) W

NEW JERSEY
1. Hunt (R) W
2. Sandman (R) W
3. Howard (D) R
4. Thompson (D) R
5. Frelinghuysen (R) W
6. Cahill (R) W
7. Widnall (R) W
8. Joelson (D) R
9. Helstoski (D) R
10. Rodino (D) R
11. Minish (D) R
12. Dwyer (R) W
13. Gallagher (D) R
14. Daniels (D) R
15. Patten (D) R

NEW MEXICO
1. Lujan (R) W
2. Foreman (R) W

NEW YORK
1. Pike (D) W
2. Grover (R) W
3. Wolff (D) R
4. Wydler (R) W
5. Lowenstein (D) R
25. Ottinger (D) R
26. Reid (R) R
27. McKneally (R) W
28. Fish (R) W
29. Button (R) R
30. King (R) W
31. McEwen (R) W
32. Pirnie (R) W
33. Robison (R) W
34. Hanley (D) R
35. Stratton (D) R
36. Horton (R) R
37. Conable (R) W
38. Hastings (R) W
39. McCarthy (D) R
40. Smith (R) W
41. Dulski (D) R

New York City
6. Halpern (R) R
7. Addabbo (D) R
8. Rosenthal (D) R
9. Delaney (D) R
10. Celler (D) R
11. Brasco (D) R
12. Chisholm (D) R
13. Podell (D) R
14. Rooney (D) R
15. Carey (D) R
16. Murphy (D) PR
17. Koch (D) R
18. Powell (D) R
19. Farbstein (D) R
20. Ryan (D) R
21. Scheuer (D) R
22. Gilbert (D) R
23. Bingham (D) R
24. Biaggi (D) R

NORTH CAROLINA
1. Jones (D) W
2. Fountain (D) W
3. Henderson (D) W
4. Galifianakis (D) W
5. Mizell (R) W
6. Preyer (D) R
7. Lennon (D) W
8. Ruth (R) W
9. Jonas (R) W
10. Broyhill (R) W
11. Taylor (D) W

NORTH DAKOTA
1. Andrews (R) W
2. Kleppe (R) W

OHIO
1. Taft (R) W
2. Clancy (R) W
3. Whalen (R) R
4. McCulloch (R) W
5. Latta (R) W
6. Harsha (R) W
7. Brown (R) W
8. Betts (R) W
9. Ashley (D) R
10. Miller (R) W
11. Stanton (R) W
12. Devine (R) W
13. Mosher (R) W
14. Ayres (R) W
15. Wylie (R) W
16. Bow (R) W
17. Ashbrook (R) W
18. Hays (D) R
19. Kirwan (D) R
20. Feighan (D) R
21. Stokes (D) R
22. Vanik (D) R
23. Minshall (R) W
24. Lukens (R) W

OKLAHOMA
1. Belcher (R) W
2. Edmondson (D) R
3. Albert (D) R
4. Steed (D) R
5. Jarman (D) W
6. Camp (R) W

OREGON
1. Wyatt (R) W
2. Ullman (D) W
3. Green (D) W
4. Dellenback (R) W

PENNSYLVANIA
6. Yatron (D) R
7. Williams (R) W
8. Biester (R) W
9. Watkins (R) W
10. McDade (R) W
11. Flood (D) R
12. Whalley (R) W
13. Coughlin (R) W
14. Moorhead (D) R
15. Rooney (D) R
16. Eshleman (R) W
17. Schneebeli (R) W
18. Corbett (R) W
19. Goodling (R) A
20. Gaydos (D) R
21. Dent (D) R
22. Saylor (R) R
23. Johnson (R) W
24. Vigorito (D) R
25. Clark (D) R
26. Morgan (D) R
27. Fulton (R) R

Philadelphia
1. Barrett (D) R
2. Nix (D) R
3. Byrne (D) R
4. Eilberg (D) R
5. Green (D) R

RHODE ISLAND
1. St Germain (D) R
2. Tiernan (D) R

SOUTH CAROLINA
1. Rivers (D) A
2. Watson (R) W
3. Dorn (D) R
4. Mann (D) W
5. Gettys (D) W
6. McMillan (D) W

SOUTH DAKOTA
1. Reifel (R) W
2. Berry (R) W

TENNESSEE
1. Quillen (R) W
2. Duncan (R) W
3. Brock (R) W
4. Evins (D) R
5. Fulton (D) R
6. Anderson (D) R
7. Blanton (D) R
8. Jones (D) R
9. Kuykendall (R) W

TEXAS
1. Patman (D) R
2. Dowdy (D) W
3. Collins (R) W
4. Roberts (D) W
5. Cabell (D) W
6. Teague (D) W
7. Bush (R) W
8. Eckhardt (D) R
9. Brooks (D) R
10. Pickle (D) R
11. Poage (D) W
12. Wright (D) R
13. Purcell (D) A
14. Young (D) R
15. de la Garza (D) R
16. White (D) R
17. Burleson (D) W
18. Price (R) W
19. Mahon (D) W
20. Gonzalez (D) R
21. Fisher (D) W
22. Casey (D) W
23. Kazen (D) R

UTAH
1. Burton (R) W
2. Lloyd (R) W

VERMONT
AL Stafford (R) W

VIRGINIA
1. Downing (D) W
2. Whitehurst (R) W
3. Satterfield (D) W
4. Abbitt (D) W
5. Daniel (D) W
6. Poff (R) W
7. Marsh (D) W
8. Scott (R) W
9. Wampler (R) W
10. Broyhill (R) W

WASHINGTON
1. Pelly (R) W
2. Meeds (D) R
3. Hansen (D) R
4. May (R) PW
5. Foley (D) R
6. Hicks (D) R
7. Adams (D) R

WEST VIRGINIA
1. Mollohan (D) R
2. Staggers (D) A
3. Slack (D) R
4. Hechler (D) R
5. Kee (D) R

WISCONSIN
1. Schadeberg (R) W
2. Kastenmeier (D) R
3. Thomson (R) W
4. Zablocki (D) R
5. Reuss (D) R
6. Steiger (R) W
7. Obey (D) R
8. Byrnes (R) W
9. Davis (R) W
10. O'Konski (R) W

WYOMING
AL Wold (R) W

Waiting for Back Pay:

Darlington Textile Workers Keep Hopes Alive 13 Years

By Eugene A. Kelly

Darlington, S.C.—What is it worth to a man to wait 13 years for justice?

That was the question that cried for an answer as 400 fired workers at Roger Milliken's big old textile mill here brought their meager records to the Grand Jury room in the new County Court House.

Lawyers for the National Labor Relations Board asked them questions about where they had looked for work, and how much money they had made by picking cotton and babysitting for neighbors or commuting to other mills in the Pee Dee River valley, and beyond.

Not too many of the older workers got other jobs after directors of the Darlington mill, part of the Deering Milliken textile empire voted to dismantle the mill and sell all its equipment to the highest bidder—because its workers voted for the Textile Workers Union of America in an NLRB election in 1956.

But whatever they earned, it will be deducted from whatever amount the corporation is obligated to pay them under a Labor Board order enforced by the courts.

The total could come to $7 million, by TWUA reckoning. Or it could be considerably less as the years drag on and the older workers drop off one by one. But the workers all have a common wish to know "when will we get some money?"

Rayford Carnes, who headed the mill union when it first was organized, is 72 now. He asks bluntly: "To let something like this run for 13 years, would you call that justice?"

Carnes went to work at the Darlington mill in 1936 as a loom fixer. His wife Clara was a mill spinner, and got another job when the mill closed while her husband stayed home to look after their two children.

He never did get another job, though he went everywhere to look. There was a blacklist, and he was on it, like many others who were turned away the minute they mentioned the Darlington mill.

The mill—one of about 45 in the Deering Milliken empire—was the main source of work in Darlington when the employes rebelled against the speedup and the stretch-out of work, and got in touch with the TWUA.

Mill managers passed the word around that Milliken would shut down the plant if the union got in. TWUA won the election regardless, 256-248, and Milliken called his directors to town within a week to decide on suitable punishment.

The vote was unanimously for economic death for all the workers, "innocent" and "guilty" alike. The mill shut down Oct. 13, when everyone but a few top managers was cut off the payroll.

New equipment had been ordered, and crates of unopened looms were on the mill floor when the workers voted. On Dec. 13, 1956, every bit of remaining equipment was auctioned off.

Ever since, the case has been before the NLRB or the courts. The Supreme Court ended the first round of legal battling in January when it refused to review a Court of Appeals ruling upholding an NLRB order.

A copy of the NLRB order was received by former employes in letters from Atlanta, Ga., marked "registered mail, return receipt requested." Each letter had the legend: 10 cents postage due. The order, signed by a Deering Milliken vice president, said:

"We will not discourage membership" in TWUA by "plant closings and discharging our employes. . . ."

"We will not threaten to close down a plant or operation, or blacklist our employes if they select a union. . . .

"We will make whole all the employes who were on our payroll on Oct. 13, 1956, for any loss of pay suffered as a result of our discrimination against them.

"We will, in the event we resume operations at Darlington, S.C., offer reinstatement to all employes who were on our payroll" on the date the plant was closed.

The final payoff may be stalled for months, perhaps years in some cases, while the lawyers haggle over the amount due.

The textile chain followed up its capitulation to the courts by offering jobs in its other plants to some of the aggrieved workers. Two husband-and-wife teams got offers of jobs in widely separated plants, but management told area newspapers this was a "mistake." The couples, it said, would be offered work in the same plant, on the same shift.

One worker voiced skepticism about the final payoff. "I won't believe a bit of it until I see the money in my hand," said H. O'Neal Capps, who had been a tying machine operator 23 years when the mill closed.

Many of those put out of work "are already in the grave," said Capps. "A lot of them had worked there 40 or 45 years when they closed it down, and didn't know how to do anything else."

Union Rep. James Blackwell helped the NLRB round up the names of workers fired 13 years ago, and saw that many of them got to the Court House on time.

The mill, he remembers, "was the town, pretty much. When it closed, most of the workers were over 40 and couldn't get jobs."

Wages were low—from 90 cents to $1.50 an hour—and savings sparse. The union set up a relief kitchen, helped raise money for the destitute, and financed the legal fight against Deering Milliken—first to reverse a state finding that the laid-off workers were not entitled to unemployment compensation, then to make Milliken pay for destroying the jobs of its employes.

Some of the workers are bitter against Milliken. One said, in a soft Carolina accent: "My mother went to work at the mill when she was 9 years old. She had to stand on a box to reach the machine." Then she added:

"We love Darlington, but we don't love Mr. Milliken. He done us a damn shameful deed."

Mrs. Thelma Swann was 15 when she started in the mill. She was 56 when the layoff came, and traveled for miles to find work, with no success. But she has no bitterness in her heart, she said.

When her back pay comes, if it does, she will give 10 percent of it to her church, as she always has, because "God has been good to us."

Her son Ray sold his chicken and quail brooders, then his hunting guns, finally his fishing equipment. He despaired of finding another job but eventually, when hope was lowest, got work as an insurance salesman. So did William Johnson, a weaver who was secretary of the stillborn union.

Catherine Jackson Stocker, a widow, babysits for neighbors to help pay for necessities and to feel needed.

Carnes, the former union president, sums up for his fellows: "We do appreciate the great work the union and the NLRB are doing for Darlington. As far as organized labor, this country needs it. I would like to see every plant in the United States organized."

DEERING MILLIKEN management decreed economic execution for Catherine Stocker, 69-year-old widow, and hundreds of other workers at its Darlington, S.C., mill in 1956, when a majority voted for union representation. Unable to get other work, Mrs. Stocker babysits to meet expenses.

DOZIER TUNSTALL, 73, has no regrets over the part he played in bringing a union to the Darlington, S.C., mill of Deering Milliken. Management shut the mill down 13 years ago, now must give backpay by court order to all surviving workers, other jobs to those who can still work.

AFL-CIO Scholarships Awarded to 6 Students

(Continued from Page 1)

Ronda Covington, Portland, Ore., and Harry C. White, Los Angeles.

In his letters to the winners, Meany expressed confidence that their studies will not only further develop their own abilities, but will benefit society as well.

"Since the earliest beginnings," he wrote, "organized labor has supported the establishment and the improvement of our system of universal free public education. The challenges of the world in which we are living are so great that today we feel that free public education should be extended beyond high school to include higher education."

The AFL-CIO looks to the day, he added, "when all people will have the opportunity to develop the fullest measure of their capacity, regardless of their financial status. In the meantime, while striving to achieve this goal, the AFL-CIO is happy to demonstrate its interest in widening educational opportunities through these scholarship awards."

The winning scholars are chosen on the basis of competitive examinations given by the National Merit Scholarship program, in addition to their high school achievements and evaluation of their ability by their high school teachers.

Two winners are chosen from each of three zones into which the country is divided. At least one student from each zone must have a parent who is a member of an AFL-CIO union.

The winners can specialize in any field they wish at the college of their choosing. The amount of the grants is based on the actual costs during the scholarship recipient's college years and his financial needs.

Sketches of the scholars follow:

Larry D. Wayt will graduate in June from Brownstown, Ind., Central High School where he has been a member of the National Honor Society and the Latin and science clubs. He also is a member of the Grace United Methodist Church choir and has performed in several church plays. During the summers, Wayt has worked on local farms. "This work . . . has helped me to realize the value of hard labor," he notes. Wayt plans to major in mechanical engineering at Rose Polytechnic Institute in Terre Haute, Ind. His father, Glen Wayt, is a self-employed equipment operator and his mother, Wilma Wayt, is a member of the Clothing Workers.

Charlotte Mack plans to attend Barnard College in New York City and is considering a career in psychiatry. She will graduate from Chicago's Harlan High School in June. Her current interests are in the "new thinking in politics, 19th century philosphy and West African cultures." She plays the guitar and also played flute in her high school band and in Chicago solo and ensemble competitions. She also sang in a world premier of a jazz Mass by Charles Walker. Charlotte's father, the Rev. James W. Mack, is a minister in the United Church of Christ and her mother is a teacher.

Gail Lynn Griffith attends Pasadena, Md., Northeast High School. She works on her school newspaper and is a reporter for her school on a Baltimore television station. She also plays the flute and has participated in a woodwind quartet, orchestras and her school band. She won the "best actress" award in a one-act play competition and has participated in other theatrical productions. She plans to study at Otterbein College at Westerville, Ohio, to major in French and prepare for a career as an interpreter. Her father, Gordon Griffith, is a member of Carpenters Local 101.

Elizabeth Krane will major in liberal arts at Radcliffe College in Cambridge, Mass., with aspirations of a career in the government. Elizabeth will graduate from Washington's Woodrow Wilson High School. Until 1961, she attended school in Brussels, where her father, J. Berman Krane, was with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions before his death. She has been active in high school dramatics, the yearbook, French clubs, and international club. Her mother, Mrs. Margaret Krane, teaches at Maret School in Washington.

Ronda Covington attends Roosevelt High School in Portland, Ore. She has maintained a high grade average and has participated in numerous school activities while working after school as a waitress in a restaurant. She is a member of the National Honor Society and has held several class offices. Ronda plans to enter Mills College at Oakland, Calif., majoring either in French or English for a career in education. Her father, Eugene Covington, is a member of the Seafarers.

Harry White will graduate in June from John Marshall High School in Los Angeles. He has worked as a camp counselor and in a concession at the Los Angeles Zoo. He has been governor of the California Boys' State and has also represented California at the Boys' Nation in Washington. He plans to major in English at Stanford University that would lead to a career in teaching or law. His father, Harry C. White, is a retired Post Office Dept. employe.

At House Hearings:

Unions Speak Out To Save Job Corps

(Continued from Page 1)

House and Senate committees to explain the plan, he has not stemmed a mounting storm of protests.

Biemiller said that the "ostensible reason" being advanced for closing down 59 centers is to save money, when the basis for establishing the Job Corps was "to save lives."

"If hundreds, or thousands of untrained, poorly-educated youth drift into the stagnant pool of unemployables," he pointed out, "they will cost the nation much more in the long run in crime, drug addiction and higher welfare costs."

A recent study of the Job Corps conducted by pollster Louis Harris showing that its graduates are placed in jobs and receive pay increases "suggests the need for continuing this program at least at its current level," Biemiller said.

The AFL-CIO, Biemiller said, cannot accept as a "substitute" for the closed centers a plan by which the Labor Dept. will establish 30 new, smaller inner-city or near-city training centers for youths.

These small residential centers "with limited or no training facilities," he added, "would simply provide a place away from home on a five-day-a-week basis."

After all, Biemiller noted, one of the important assets of the Job Corps has been that it takes hard-core unemployed youths to centers away from the ghetto atmosphere "to reorient and redirect their lives."

Biemiller emphasized that the AFL-CIO strongly supports extension of OEO as "the central planning, advocacy, coordinating, evaluation and monitoring arm of the President in directing the national war on poverty."

He recalled labor's strong support for the Economic Opportunity Act when it was passed in 1964 and he traced its continuing support for OEO programs such as Head Start, Legal Service, Comprehensive Health Services, Neighborhoods Youth Corps, some 1,000 Community Action agencies and the Job Corps.

"Many poor people have benefited from these programs," he said. "Many others would have received benefits . . . had the OEO been more adequately funded."

Rothman gave the committee a breakdown of the AFL-CIO's participation and assistance in Job Corps; regional anti-poverty programs in Appalachia, New England, the Southwest and other poverty regions, and examples of individual labor leaders' participation in such programs.

The accounting, he said, "is merely intended to reflect the many ways" in which hundreds of union leaders and thousands of members try to help free the poor from poverty.

These were highspots in the testimony from representatives of the four unions:

- Reese Hammond, director of research and education for the Operating Engineers, described the union's program of training heavy equipment operators at Job Corps camps in Montana and Tennessee. He showed a film of training at the Tennessee camp.

"We don't like the cutback and we appeal to you to provide the wisdom, insight and legislative direction to continue the Job Corps conservation centers at current levels," he said.

- Leo Gable, director of apprenticeship and training for the Carpenters, urged Congress and the Administration to delay "indiscriminate" closing of centers pending a thorough study. Four of seven Job Corps centers in which the union is training slum youths in carpentry skills are among those slated for closing.

- A statement submitted by Pres. S. Frank Raftery of the Painters warned that the cutback would "sharply curtail" a program whereby union foreman-instructors train groups of boys in 38 centers. All but 17 of them are marked for closing.

William Duvall, the union's director of apprenticeship, read the statement which emphasized the shutdown would turn a dream into a nightmare "for already disillusioned and forgotten young men."

- Edward Turner, Marine Cooks & Stewards secretary-treasurer, reported on a training program being carried on by the union at Koko Head Job Corps Center in Hawaii, slated for closing.

Nixon's plan, he warned, "would amount to our government breaking a contract with 17,000 young Americans," the number now in the centers which are to be shut down. Any savings, he added, "will never pay for the loss of confidence in our nation by these young people."

When Biemiller and the union representatives completed their testimony, Committee Chairman Carl D. Perkins and committee members complimented them on their testimony. "My only regret is that this presentation was not delivered to the entire Congress," Rep. Patsy Mink (D-Hawaii), declared.

STRONG OPPOSITION to Pres. Nixon's plan to close more than half of the nation's Job Corps centers was voiced by labor before the House Education & Labor Committee. From left, Committee Chairman Carl D. Perkins, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and spokesmen for four unions conducting Job Corps training programs—Leo Gable, Carpenters; Edward Turner, Marine Cooks & Stewards; William Duvall, Painters, and Reese Hammond, Operating Engineers.

Another Goldwater Elected to Congress

Los Angeles—Barry M. Goldwater, Jr., defeated Democrat John K. Van DeKamp in a special election for California's 27th Congressional District seat.

The 30-year-old son of Sen. Barry M. Goldwater (R-Ariz.) tallied 64,675 votes to Van DeKamp's 48,933 in unofficial returns. The younger Goldwater succeeds Ed Reinecke, also a Republican, who resigned to accept appointment as lieutenant governor of California.

Sen. Goldwater said his son's election to Congress "gives our family another chance to pay a debt to the country that has done so much for us."

IUE Hits Plan On Promoting Border Plants

The Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers (IUE) has asked Pres. Nixon to immediately investigate the Commerce Dept.'s role in promoting the "twin plant" concept, which the union says tends to cheapen wages and cause unemployment.

Pres. Paul Jennings of the IUE said in his wire to the President that the Commerce Dept. is using taxpayers' money to promote the program of the "Executive Conference on World Trade" to attract U.S. manufacturers to cheap labor sources across the Rio Grande River.

The conference was held at the University of Texas at El Paso.

The "twin plant" scheme is used by U.S. firms to make parts in the United States and have components assembled in Mexico. The products are re-imported into the United States duty-free.

The concept was sharply denounced by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its mid-winter meeting earlier this year, noting that "greedy businessmen" were exploiting Mexican workers for wages as low as 29 cents an hour.

"The U.S. Dept. of Commerce has no business serving as a front for international cheap labor manipulators," Jennings added.

The IUE noted that a number of electrical and electronics plants have already been lured to Mexico by wages and tax concessions by the Mexican government. This has contributed to a loss of 48,000 jobs in the manufacture of radio and television sets and components alone from 1966 to 1968.

Biemiller Asks Tighter Foreign Investment Bar

Congress should tighten, not loosen, restrictions on foreign investment by U.S. corporations, the AFL-CIO declared.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller urged a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee to reject a resolution calling for an end to existing financial controls.

U.S. private investment abroad is a "serious problem" that is steadily worsening, Biemiller said. It is having a damaging effect "on the balance of payments, international trade and American jobs."

The resolution before the subcommittee is aimed specifically at a year-old program by which the government controls the extent to which U.S. companies may finance operations of their foreign affiliates and the degree to which profits from the affiliates may be used for such purposes.

It calls upon Pres. Nixon "to end such controls at the earliest possible date."

Advocates of the resolution, Biemiller noted, base their case on two principal arguments—that any interference with business is bad, and that the existing control program is not working well.

Replying to the first argument, Biemiller said "the AFL-CIO does not believe that all of the decisions of private business management are necessarily in the best interest of the nation and the American people."

In answer to the second point, he said that, while the program may have deficiencies, "the solution to that problem is not to remove the controls but to improve their operations."

Biemiller's testimony stressed the need for further regulations on the foreign operations of big U.S. firms whose actions serve their own interests but hurt the nation's best interests.

He cited the example of Ford-Philco Co. which is phasing out its manufacture of TV sets in the U.S. to run away to Taiwan for "only one corporate advantage—very low-wage labor." The sets are shipped back to the U.S.; consumers get no cut in prices; U.S. workers are hurt; and the firm reaps big profits.

He described the increasing runaway of U.S. firms to the Mexican side of the border to take advantage of cheap wages and U.S. tariff loopholes to finish products and ship them back into the U.S.—another scheme which takes jobs from Americans and increases profits without benefiting consumers.

Instead of considering a resolution advocating the removal of all restrictions on foreign investments, Biemiller continued, Congress should give attention to a resolution adopted by the 1967 AFL-CIO convention.

It called for restrictions on private foreign investments and an investigation of the export of U.S. capital. It also urged tax policies "to prevent avoidance and evasion of U.S. taxation on profits from foreign investment."

5-3-69

Shultz Rejects Controls for Wages, Prices

Neither wage-price controls nor wage-price guidelines are being considered as steps to combat inflation—and history shows they "haven't worked well" in the past, Labor Sec. George P. Shultz declared.

Appearing on television's "Meet the Press," Shultz said wage-price controls weren't successful during the Korean War.

As for guidelines, he pointed out, they have been tried not only in this country but also in other countries and "they didn't work either" in controlling inflation.

"I don't think there is any point on embarking on things that have a very poor track record," Shultz said, adding:

"I think we should be realistic about our approach to problems like inflation . . . and when something has been tried and found wanting, not to continue to act as though it is a solution to the problem."

AFL-CIO News

Vol. XIV | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington, D. C. 20006 $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, May 10, 1969 | No. 19

Unemployment Edges Up As Job Growth Levels Off

Drive Opens For $2-Hour Wage Floor

The AFL-CIO opened an "intensive" campaign to raise the minimum wage to $2 an hour, expand coverage and close loopholes in the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Sponsoring the legislation are the chairmen of the House and Senate subcommittees that will deal with wage-hour legislation—Rep. John H. Dent (D-Pa.) and Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.).

Their bill would bring 13 million additional workers under the law's protection and eliminate the special exemptions and incomplete coverage which have excluded many of the lowest-paid workers.

It will "fully meet the test of our time," AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller declared. He described it as "all-inclusive" and "achievable."

Williams and Dent unveiled their legislative proposals at a meeting in the Capitol attended by presidents and top legislative representatives of a group of AFL-CIO unions with special interest in the wage-hour law.

The same arguments that have been raised against every wage-hour bill since 1938 will be paraded against this bill, Williams said, "but we know we're on solid ground."

Dent stressed that the only way to bring the "working poor" out of poverty and make employment a feasible alternative to welfare is through an increase in the minimum wage.

Both expressed the hope that the Nixon Administration will get behind the effort to update the Fair Labor Standards Act and not throw up roadblocks to congressional action.

Biemiller said the AFL-CIO intends to fight "with all the weapons at our command" for passage of the legislation. "A decent job at a decent wage level is the answer to poverty," he stressed, "and that we intend to achieve in America."

The proposed legislation would:

- Immediately raise the minimum wage for those now covered at the $1.60 level to $2-an-hour.
- Continue the present step-ups for persons brought under the wage-hour law for the first time in 1966 so that they will reach the $2 level on Feb. 1, 1972.
- Eliminate the present $1.30 cutoff for farm workers so that they also will progress to the $2 level.
- Extend coverage to employes of small retail and service establishments, domestic workers and all public employes. These newly-covered workers would start with a wage guarantee of $1.45 an hour as of Feb. 1, 1970, move up to $1.60 one year later, and reach $2 on Feb. 1, 1972.

(Continued on Page 7)

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL of AFL-CIO meets with Pres. Nixon and members of his Cabinet at the White House for a wide-ranging, 90-minute discussion of national issues. Later in the day AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany met again with the President for further talks.

At 80th Birthday Tribute:

Labor, Civil Rights Coalition Reaffirms Randolph's Goals

By Saul Miller

New York—The labor-civil rights coalition gave A. Philip Randolph an 80th birthday present—a rededication to his goal of "total liberation" of the American Negro.

The leaders of the coalition turned out 1,500 strong in a vivid demonstration of unity and voiced their determination to carry on the work that Randolph had dedicated his life to.

The entire scope of the labor movement was represented, along with the religious faiths, Negro organizations, government leaders and many others. They crowded the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel to pay tribute to Randolph and add to the coffers of the A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund to finance voter education and registration projects in black communities to strengthen the labor, liberal, Negro alliance.

And at the conclusion they heard Randolph eloquently lay down the principles by which the coalition must continue to be guided:

"We must reject confrontationism, and together reaffirm the necessity for democratic means of political protest.

"We must reject violence and together reaffirm the power and the wisdom of non-violence.

"And we must reject racial separatism and together, with the conviction that one day our nation can cease to be divided within itself, reaffirm our abiding faith in integration."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, reviewing Randolph's accomplishments and the gains in the trade union movement in the battle against discrimination, declared there is "no room for complacency."

Randolph, he pointed out, in founding the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters in the face of all-out opposition of the Pullman Co., laid down the basic principle that black workers must be organized and become part of organized labor. Randolph's advice to Negro workers to get into the labor movement and win support for the fight against discrimination was critical to strengthening both the Negro and white worker, Meany said.

The American labor movement has responded to Randolph's leadership, sometimes too slowly, Meany added, but it has come a long way and is determined to wipe out the last vestiges of discrimination with renewed emphasis on job upgrading and training.

Randolph is no longer alone in the struggle as he was in the early

(Continued on Page 3)

Negroes Hit Hardest By Slackening

By Duane Emme

The nation's unemployment rate in April edged up by one-tenth of 1 per cent for the second straight month to reach 3.5 percent, the Labor Dept. reported. The increased joblessness occurred largely among Negroes, especially women, and the rate for white workers remained unchanged.

Non-farm employment barely rose over the month, posting the smallest increase in 15 months. The civilian labor force, seasonally adjusted, declined slightly.

These and other figures in the Bureau of Labor Statistics' monthly job report indicate a slowing down in the nation's economic growth, Harold Goldstein, BLS deputy commissioner, noted.

He cautioned against interpreting the statistics as pointing to any economic "turnaround" but added, "If the economy remains about level we will begin to accumulate increasing unemployment."

The increase in the jobless rate between March and April is not significant, "but the increase over two months is," Goldstein said.

The number of unemployed persons was 2.5 million in April, down 200,000 from March. But the decline was 115,000 less than usual for the month. Seasonally adjusted, unemployment increased by 225,000 between February and April.

The April unemployment rate for non-white workers reflected a sharp jump over the month from 6 to 6.9 percent. The rate for white

(Continued on Page 6)

Schnitzler To Retire From AFL-CIO Post

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler has announced his intention to retire from that post on June 30.

In a letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Schnitzler noted that he had marked his 65th birthday on Jan. 21. Meany has informed the AFL-CIO Executive Council of Schnitzler's decision. The council has the responsibility of filling the vacancy until the next AFL-CIO convention.

A native of New Jersey, Schnitzler is one of the six union leaders who resolved 20 years of labor division and achieved the merger of the AFL and the CIO on Dec. 5, 1955.

He went to work at the age of 10 on a peddler's wagon to help

(Continued on Page 3)

Shultz Asks New Agency, Policies To Govern Farm Labor Relations

The Nixon Administration told Congress that farm workers should have collective bargaining rights—but not by bringing them under the National Labor Relations Act.

Labor Sec. George P. Shultz told the Senate Labor subcommittee that a special Farm Labor Relations Board should be established because of the "unique characteristics" of agriculture. It would be made up of "members acquainted with the farm industry" and not be bound by NLRB precedents.

He said farmers need protection against strikes during the harvest season. At the same time, Shultz acknowledged, "the right to strike is basic to collective bargaining" and "an outright ban on strikes in agriculture . . . should not be imposed."

To resolve this apparent contradiction, Shultz advanced a novel Administration proposal which would permit farm employers to avoid a harvest season strike if they agree in advance to accept the recommendations of a fact-finder chosen from a panel appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Besides naming the fact-finders, the Agriculture Dept. would presumably suggest to the President the members of the Farm Labor Relations Board, Shultz indicated.

Pres. Nixon early this year asked Shultz and Agriculture Sec. Clifford M. Hardin to come up with a joint recommendation "on the advisability of placing farm workers under the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act."

The proposal Shultz presented to the Senate subcommittee, headed by Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.), emerged from the inter-

(Continued on Page 7)

Braniff Airline Pact Extends IAM Pattern

Dallas, Tex.—Two thousand members of the Machinists have approved a new contract with Braniff Airways providing a top rate of $5.50 an hour in a three-year agreement. The contract is similar to those won recently by the IAM on Eastern and Northeast airlines.

Under the new pact, a mechanic formerly paid at a base rate of $4.14 an hour will have his rate increased to $5.50 by Apr. 1, 1971. Over the same period, cleaners will move from a rate of $2.81 an hour to $3.86.

Braniff agreed to raise wages 10 percent at once, retroactive to Jan. 1 on gross earnings, another 5 percent next Sept. 1, an additional 7.9 percent in 1970, and 6.28 percent more in 1971.

As of May 1, inspectors and lead mechanics, lead cleaners and cleaners got increases adjusting their rates to the industry average. In Hawaii, a rate 10 percent above the regular schedule went into effect.

The contract contains an improved cost-of-living clause that can boost wages by as much as 21 cents an hour. Pension benefits were raised from $3.75 a month per year of service to $6.25, rising to $7 per month, fully company-paid, by next Jan. 1.

Still unsettled are IAM contracts with United, Northwest, Trans World and Continental airlines. Union members are on strike at Air Canada and locked out on National Airlines.

Two court actions are pending in the latter dispute. The union asked the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, New Orleans, to quash an anti-picketing injunction. It asked the U.S. Court for the District of Columbia to order the National Mediation Board to proffer arbitration.

Fire Fighters In Iowa Win Mediation Plan

Des Moines, Iowa—Some 330 striking Des Moines fire fighters returned to their jobs May 3 after winning agreement of the City Council to a mediation proposal.

The men, members of Fire Fighters Local 4, walked off their jobs Apr. 28, when the council refused to discuss proposals on increases in pay and better working conditions.

The fire fighters had earlier unanimously refused demands by the city administration that they return to work despite a National Guard call-up by Iowa Gov. Robert Ray and court penalties of $100 per day against the strikers and $500 a day against the local.

A local court assessed the penalties after granting a Des Moines city request for an injunction against the strike.

Ray first sent 49 Guardsmen into the city to man fire trucks, then called to active duty 10 strikers who were members of the Guard.

The fire fighters voted to strike after months of negotiation and an arbitration effort failed to bring satisfactory resolution of the dispute, and after the City Council refused to discuss the matter further.

Members of the IAFF's international staff helped bring about the mediation agreement.

The union proposed to the council that Sen. Harold E. Hughes (D-Ia.) be asked to mediate the dispute under a memorandum of agreement setting out the items to be discussed. Among points to be mediated are establishment of a grievance procedure and drafting of an "effective" collective bargaining program, as well as wages.

'It's a Funny Way of Helping!'

Labor Institute Termed Spur to Latin Progress

The American Institute for Free Labor Development has been a major force in support of the Latin American social reform programs envisioned in the Alliance for Progress, AIFLD Exec. Dir. William C. Doherty, Jr., testified.

Doherty told a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee that AIFLD, as "a unique tripartite venture" of U.S. labor and business with financial backing of the Agency for Intl. Development, has helped bring about participation by Latin American workers in the development of their nations through democratic trade unions.

It has provided leadership training, seed money for community development programs, financing for workers' housing and practical assistance in establishing credit unions, co-ops and health clinics, Doherty noted.

The AIFLD is committed to strengthening the free trade union movement, its director told the subcommittee.

The goals of the Alliance for Progress, he quoted, include "fair wages and satisfactory working conditions for all" and "effective systems of labor management relations."

These goals can be accomplished and unions can function effectively, Doherty stressed, only in a society "free of autocratic control either by despotic political parties who pervert the trade union movement . . . by military juntas . . . or by small, self-appointed cliques."

Doherty told the subcommittee, headed by Rep. Dante B. Fascell (D-Fla.) that the AFL-CIO Impact Projects Fund of more than $450,000 has developed several hundred community projects, clinics and co-ops. In Peru, he said, "the first savings and loan association in Latin America run by workers for the benefit of workers" has made more than $4.5 million in loans and now has 11,500 depositors.

Training programs and social projects to improve the condition of Latin America's farm workers—the campesinos—have been held in nearly every country.

AIFLD union leadership training has reached more than 105,000 workers in 21 countries over a seven-year period, Doherty said. In addition, 725 Latin American worker leaders have received 8-to-12 weeks of specialized training at the AIFLD center in the United States and a nine-month university-level program has helped meet the need for trained labor economists.

The work must continue, Doherty urged, because "the best hope for the future of democracy and progress in Latin America lies with the people and their ability to develop their own trade unions, political parties, cooperatives, credit institutions, business enterprises and other human institutions which will form the building blocks of a lasting democratic system."

$339 Million Held Illegally from Pay

Employers during 1968 illegally withheld $339,428,000 from the paychecks of their workers that they did not return to the U.S. Treasury.

This was reported by Sen. John Williams (R-Del.) in making what he called his "15th annual report on the inventory of delinquent taxpayer accounts."

Williams said that the illegally kept withholding taxes in 1968 represent an increase of 32 percent over 1967.

"These monies should be treated as trust funds and the government should not condone these continuous delinquencies, ofttimes the same companies," Williams said.

'Substantial Improvements':

Rail Clerks Draft Contract Program

Chicago—The Railway & Airline Clerks will seek "very substantial improvements" in wages and benefits for the union's 250,000 members on the nation's railroads over the next three years.

BRAC Pres. C. L. Dennis described the negotiating goals after they were approved by 200 delegates to an organizing and collective bargaining conference here.

Topping the list of the union's objectives is a call for three across-the-board pay increases of 12 percent to go into effect on the first days of 1970, 1971 and 1972.

Next in line are proposals for a cost-of-living clause, a longevity pay increase of one cent per hour for each year of continuous employment, and a guaranteed annual wage and job stabilization program.

The union also will ask the carriers to pay 10 cents an hour per employe in each of the three years into a special fund to "modernize the rate structure of the separate crafts or classes covered" by the agreement.

Other conference-approved proposals call for 10 instead of the present seven holidays, vacation improvements to include five weeks after 19 years service instead of the present maximum four weeks after 20 years, and revised health and welfare benefits.

Total Raise of $1.50

Dennis said that the proposals were designed to increase wages at the end of the agreement by over $1.50 an hour per employe. The present average rate for railway clerks is about $3.55 an hour for a 40-hour week.

"The proposals which BRAC is advancing," Dennis declared, "are designed to put American workers back on the road to improvements in the real value of their take-home pay."

Economic damage to living standards caused by a steady increase in the cost of living during recent years "is more than a tragedy, it is a preventable disgrace," he added.

Dennis also suggested that "the railroads can afford most easily to share their fantastic prosperity with the working people who make that corporate prosperity possible."

With rail profits climbing to new record highs, he said, "railway employes will not be satisfied with crumbs from the corporate table."

Summing up, Dennis said, "We are not making exorbitant demands; we are asking for adjustments that, while substantial, are fair and right, and well within the capacity of the carriers to pay."

BRAC's present agreements with the railways were signed on Dec. 28, 1967, with an expiration date of Dec. 31, 1969. Negotiations may start on vacations after May 1, and on other items after Sept. 1.

This is the first time in recent years that all of BRAC's national agreements covering various subjects with the railroads come up for renegotiation at the same time.

The union announced that it will serve notices of its proposals along with a request for negotiations on the managements of the individual railroads "in the near future."

In the pattern of past BRAC negotiations, the individual managements, after preliminary conferences, refer the notices to regional employer negotiating committees and the issues are later bargained on a national basis.

The forthcoming negotiations will mark the first time that BRAC will be bargaining for 35,000 members formerly represented by the Transportation-Communication Employes which merged with BRAC earlier this year.

Robert Lowery, head of BRAC's Transportation-Communication Division, participated with Dennis in the formulation and announcement of the contract goals.

Rail Union Issues History Booklet

A 40-page booklet, "Milestones of Progress—A Brief History of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes," is being mailed to the AFL-CIO union's 140,000 members in the United States and Canada.

In introducing the new publication, MWE Pres. Harold C. Crotty said, "In light of the progressively better benefits the union has won for its members over the years, the poor working conditions and low pay of earlier days seem all but incredible."

It is "these dramatic comparisons that stand out most clearly" in tracing the union's 82-year history, he added.

PLAYBOY CLUB BUNNIES confer in Cincinnati with officials of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes to formulate bargaining proposals for a new contract with Playboy Clubs Intl., Inc. Leading the planning session is union Sec.-Treas. Robert L. Diefenbach, seated, center. The Bunnies' current agreement with Playboy Clubs expires June 15.

Marks 80th Birthday:

Tribute to Randolph Reaffirms His Goals

(Continued from Page 1)

years, Meany said, and the AFL-CIO and all its affiliates are working to reach all workers at the local level to carry the message of equal rights.

Roy Wilkins, executive director of the NAACP, following the AFL-CIO president, noted that Meany has worked closely with Randolph and has worked effectively in the civil rights movement and that the AFL-CIO has been the bulwark of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights.

Mrs. Martin Luther King, Jr., told the dinner that she had come from Charleston, S.C., where she has been aiding the striking hospital workers and that Charleston has now become a national test of conscience, that the labor civil rights coaltion is a reality here and the battle must be won.

Randolph, she said, had always been a great inspiration to her late husband and a source of encouragement. Randolph gave him advice and counsel, she said, adding, "thank you for myself and Martin Luther King."

Bayard Rustin, executive director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute, served as toastmaster and introduced New York Gov. Nelson H. Rockefeller, New York City Mayor John Lindsay, and C. L. Dellums, president of the Sleeping Car Porters succeeding Randolph who retired from the post last year.

Paying tribute also to Randolph were Msgr. Gregory Mooney, for Terence Cardinal Cooke; Dr. John C. Bennett, present, Union Theological Seminary, and Isaiah Minkoff, executive vice chairman, National Community Relations Advisory Council.

The tributes were touching and emotional in spots as speakers recalled earlier days and difficult battles, stressing Randolph's "prophetic vision," his quiet determination, his courage, his inspiration and his lack of personal animosity.

It was all underscored when George Shirley of the Metropolitan Opera sang some of the lyrics of Negro poet Langston Hughes and when "Oh, Freedom" rolled out over the great hall.

In his response, Randolph expressed his gratification at the "fine representation" at the dinner from all areas of American life, cited Rustin's genius for organizing protest marches and spoke of his admiration and affection for Meany as a man who "when he commits himself to a program will work at it and carry it through. He doesn't pretend to be for something when he isn't."

In dedicating himself to the liberation of the Negro, Randolph said, his major endeavor was to establish an alliance between the Negro and the American trade union movement because the Negroes are a working people and the labor movement is the home of the working man and the only haven for the dispossessed.

The struggle of the Negro masses for social and economic equality has "become irrepressible," he observed. But in the continuing struggle "we must have faith that the society, divided by race and class, and subject to profound social pressures, can one day become a nation of equals."

Harlem Youngster Salutes Randolph

New York—The "generation gap" closed on a prolonged wave of applause here when 13-year-old Tom Powell hopped onto a chair to reach the microphones to pay tribute to A. Philip Randolph.

Tom, a member of the A. Philip Randolph Leaders of Tomorrow, a Harlem-based group of youngsters dedicated to carrying on the civil rights struggle, said simply that Randolph was a great man and his group would make sure that his work was carried on.

CLIMAX OF 80TH BIRTHDAY dinner for A. Philip Randolph came when NAACP Exec. Dir. Roy Wilkins paid tribute to Randolph and presented him with a book of letters from American and world leaders. Randolph, noting the numerous tributes and citing his long and close relationship with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, responded with an eloquent plea that the labor-civil rights coalition carry on to win "total liberation" for the American Negro.

West Virginia Unionists Assail Governor for Attack on Stanley

Charleston, W.Va.—State and national labor figures rallied behind West Virginia state AFL-CIO Pres. Miles Stanley and the 3,500 state highway workers whose strike for union recognition has his strong support.

Stanley charged in a White Sulphur Springs speech that the state employes were fired by Republican Gov. Arch A. Moore to perpetuate a political spoils system.

Moore followed with a personal attack on Stanley and suggested that "perhaps the labor movement would do well to consider a change in leadership."

Stanley was for a period an assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and serves as chairman of the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council, formed to secure relief for the problems of the poor in mountain areas of the East.

A Committee of Concerned Trade Unionists declared here that the governor's "attempt to inject himself into the internal affairs" of the state AFL-CIO was "another example of the type of high-handed dictatorial tactics he has used in dealing with working people ever since he became governor."

The committee, in a statement, asserted that any question of Stanley's ability to lead the state labor movement is "absurd." It charged that the governor's actions are "those of a man who wants to impose one-man rule" on the state and who hopes to "divert public attention from the main issue—clean up the State Roads Commission, establish job security and union recognition, and end the political jungle that now exists."

Committee members include Pres. James Wilkes and Sec.-Treas. Harry Janney of the state Building & Construction Trades Council, Business Agent Everett Sullivan of the Millwrights, Richard E. Steele and Curtis R. Oliver of the Iron Workers, and Art Gilbert of Machinists Local 656.

Labor, they said, is pledged to "use every honorable means to see that the SRC workers get fair treatment in this struggle to gain recognition and crush the spoils system" in West Virginia.

Pres. I. W. Abel of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. called the strike of state road employes "crucially important to the efforts of all public employes to attain justice on the job."

Abel urged members of IUD unions in the state to support the workers in every way, and pledged the full "moral and material support" of IUD and its 5 million members.

In firing state workers who struck in March after being denied union recognition, Abel said Moore acted "in the tradition of the coal and steel barons who ruled the state" half a century ago. Abel called the governor's attack on Stanley a "transparent attempt to divide the labor movement in West Virginia—another discredited tactic which in view of Mr. Stanley's distinguished record is a reflection on the character of the attacker."

The striking road workers are members of the Laborers' District Council. The union filed suit against Moore on a charge of violating the constitutional right of workers to form a union, held a rally on the State House steps, and sent a delegation to picket Moore at the Republican governors' conference in Lexington, Ky.

Mayor's Committee Holds Talks With Charleston Hospital Strikers

Charleston, S.C.—Community leaders sat down at the same table with striking hospital workers here for the first time since Mar. 20, when 600 employes of the state Medical College Hospital and Charleston County Hospital struck for union recognition.

Mayor J. Palmer Gaillard urged hospital officials to sit down and talk with the strikers, and when they declined, named a committee of 10 to meet with the elected leaders of Local 1199B of the Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union.

Gov. Robert E. McNair (D) declared that the committee has no authority to negotiate, but he sent an observer to the meeting.

The committee includes bankers, merchants, church leaders and a local civil rights advocate. The results of its deliberations will be reported to the mayor, but the power to act remains with the governor.

Daily demonstrations and rallies have focused statewide attention on the low-paid workers and their cause. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a statement pledging labor support that the federation will "do all in its power" to help the workers win their strike for recognition. Other labor and civil rights leaders have rallied to the cause.

The issues, Local 1199B Pres. Mary Moultrie said, are reinstatement of 12 union supporters fired when the walkouts started, union recognition, and decent wages and working conditions for all hospital workers regardless of color.

The union has rented County Hall for a Mother's Day meeting May 11, and expects an overflow crowd to join its march on the hospital. Many supporters are expected from cities in the East and Midwest.

Several hundred high school students have announced formation of Student Union Local 1199B Jr., and will march with other supporters of the strike, including leaders of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference.

The city jails, which held some 550 strikers and sympathizers including the Rev. Ralph Abernathy of SCLC, have been emptied. All have been released on bail while awaiting trial on charges of parading without a permit or unlawful picketing.

National Guardsmen with fixed bayonets patrol the hospital areas. Police are working 12-hour shifts and businessmen send out distress signals at the failure of expected visitors to arrive for the city's annual Garden Tour.

Twelve conventions have canceled scheduled dates here; one major restaurant closed its doors, and room rentals are off 70 percent, a union spokesman said.

Meanwhile pledges of support arrive to encourage the strikers. Two unions donated $1,500 to the relief fund but expenses are still slightly above income. the local reported. Local 1199B has headquarters at 655 E. Bay St., Charleston, S.C. 29403.

Frank O'Connor Dies, Former TWU Official

New York—Frank C. O'Connor, who fought with the Irish Republican Army in the Easter "rising" and later became a Transport Workers' vice president, died here at 68. He was buried after services in St. Ignatius Loyola church.

O'Connor retired as a TWU organizer in 1967 but remained a member of the union's executive council. He was a founder of the TWU local at Fifth Avenue Coach lines and helped settle an eight-day bus strike in 1949.

John Rollings Wins Conservation Award

Jefferson City, Mo.—Pres. John I. Rollings of the Missouri State AFL-CIO has been named the 1968 Missouri Conservationist of the year.

Rollings was cited by the Conservation Federation of Missouri for his work on conservation legislation and as a member of the water pollution abatement committee.

Bank's Link To Union Held Boon to Poor

The president of a union-owned bank told a congressional committee that the bank's ties to labor have enabled it to pioneer in consumer services, including small loans to workers and financing for low-cost housing.

Maxwell Brandwen, president of the Amalgamated Bank of New York, said the bank was organized by the Clothing Workers in 1923 to meet worker needs which were not being met by existing commercial banks. Since then, he said, it has combined social purpose with sound banking practices.

Brandwen said he "heartily supports" legislation to prevent excessive concentration of economic power by bank links with unrelated business corporations.

But there is no cause, he told the House Banking Committee, to eliminate the exemption for labor organizations from the provisions of the Bank Holding Company Act. One of the holding company bills currently before the committee would do this.

The union which owns the bank, Brandwen noted, "is concerned with the standards of living, security and dignity of its members and their families. It is not engaged in any business."

Currently, he noted, the Amalgamated Bank is conducting "an extensive and costly campaign to reduce the subservience of borrowers to loan sharks" and its charges for personal loans "are the lowest in all New York City." Although it is only "modest sized," its single office makes more personal loans than "any other single New York banking office, irrespective of size."

For Tax Justice

THE GRADUATED income tax is the fairest system of taxation ever devised anywhere in the world.

It is based on ability to pay, with the tax rate rising progressively as income goes up.

That's the system the United States started out with more than half a century ago.

But the tax structure has been badly rigged as, over the years, influential business groups managed to get special privileges written into the law. Today about nine-tenths of the voluminous, complicated tax code is devoted to exemptions for special interest groups.

These special interest lobbyists today are doing everything they can to block meaningful tax reform. The transcript of congressional hearings is filled with their testimony urging that the loopholes the AFL-CIO is trying to close be continued, even expanded.

It will take a mighty outpouring of public indignation to counteract their influence.

America's workers pay their taxes through the payroll deduction system. Every time our unions negotiate a pay raise, the federal government gets its share.

That's OK with us. We know taxes are necessary.

What's not OK is that we're paying more than our fair share because some taxpayers pay less than their share.

The AFL-CIO has urged Congress to make tax changes that will bring real tax justice.

